LIONS SEE DANGER IN GOVERNMENT RELIEF

That there is a possibility of real danger in Federal aid as it is now being administered over the county was recognized by the Lions in their convention recently closed at Lubbock. The organization does not oppose giving aid where needed but expresses a fear regarding the future of those receiving help, in that their independence and self reliance may be so impaired that they might become charges upon the government or community.

That this fear is well founded is unquestionable. In England where the dole has been handed for years this result has been noticed and has been the subject of serious discussion. The chance that similar results might obtain in this country is not so great, because relief has been administered in such a way that the recipient has given an equal value in labor in return. In an effort to offset any break down in the self reliance of needy people, the Lions voted to devote programs to discussions of this problem and to fostering an improvement of morale.

During the proceedings of the Lion's convention at Lubbock a resolution to endorse President Roosevelt's program. Much opposition developed, according to reports, because of his attitude in regard to the eighteenth amendment and 3.2 beer. A plea was made that the Lions should stay out of politics. A motion to that effect prevailed and thus the organization, which has an important part in the civic affairs of most cities and towns of the state, avoided a delicate situation.

WASTE OF TIME BY LEGISLATIVE BODIES

The present outlook is that the Texas Legislature will adjourn within the next week, possibly on May the 30th. In many respects the session has been a disappointment to the people of Texas, in that much constructive and economical legislation was expected. Some worthy measures have been enacted. Many have failed because of factionalism that has existed. Political factions have seen to it that bills that would have a tendency to add to the strength of opponent factions have not passed. At the same time, possibly as many unworthy bills and resolutions have been killed in this fashion.

Any occasional visitor at the sessions of the legislature will be impressed with what appears to be a waste of time in the proceedings; for much time is consumed in considering petty and frivolous propositions. We recall an occasion many years ago when the greater part of an afternoon was taken up in the House in the discussion of a bill introduced by the member from Anderson county purporting to make it unlawful to shoot squirrels unless they were on the opposite of a limb or tree from the hunter and peeping around at him and making it obligatory for him to aim at the squirrel's eyes.

Other states recently have spent time in the discussion of useless measures. One in point is the attempt of the Kansans to require all pedestrians to wear red tail lights; another, of New York that all industrial machinery be scrapped after five year's use; still another, of Indiana, that the zither be established as the state's official musical instrument.

Possibly bills have been introduced into the present session of the Texas legislature that were just as useless and a part of the four and one-half months of the session taken up in considering them. What Texas needs is legislators that will spend the time in serious consideration of the State's needs.

CLASP HANDS ACROSS THE LINE

Eighty-eight years ago the forces of the Baptist church of the United States were divided over the slavery question. Since then there have been the separate organizations of the Northern Baptists and the Southern Baptists. Sentiment that has existed so long was, in a measure, swept away Tuesday at the Baptist convention at Washington when Dr. M. E. Dodd, president of the southern convention, and Dr. C. Oscar Johnson, head of the northern organization, clasped hands across what Dr. Dodd termed "an imaginary Mason-Dixon line."

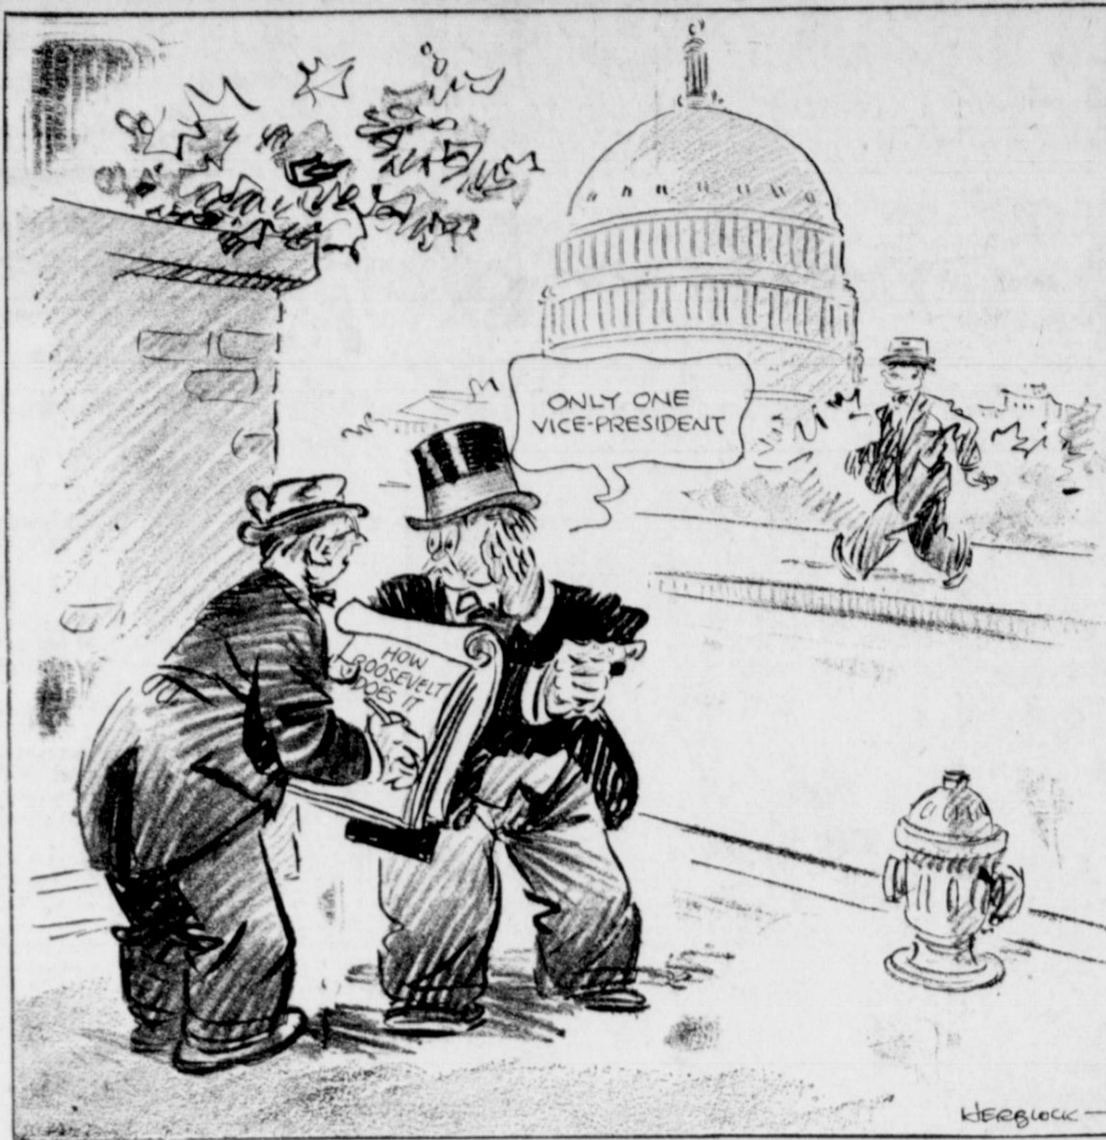

"Now forget the North and the South you rebels and you yanks, and shake hands with your neighbors," called Dr. Dodd. Then, enthusiastically singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," Northern and Southern Baptists joined in a general handshaking to symbolize the bridging of the slavery split of 1845. Just how far this section will go and what effect it will have on the two organization for the future remains to be seen. But it is evidence of the breaking down of enmity and bitterness between the two sections of the nation.

STABILIZATION COTTON SOLD AT AUCTION

Texas cotton growers who are in co-ops are reminded that the stabilization corporation disposed of virtually the last of its cotton holdings at New Orleans when it placed 19,306 bales on the auction block for sale to the highest bidder. High bids were accepted on all but 2800 bales on which unsatisfactory bids were received and will be sold privately by stabilization corporation officials.

Your city should aim to please in every way.

DARLING FOOL

The Newfangles (Mom 'n' Pop) By Cowen

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS By Blosser

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MONNIE O'DARE is going with MISS ANSTICE to the dance, to try to forget DAN and his mother. SANDRA is in a bad mood, while GERALDINE who, while pretending to be Monnie's friend, has been trying to win him from her. Dan has been in Wyoming with a party including his mother, sister and Sandra. When Monnie received a cool letter from Dan she decided to accept Miss Corey's invitation to go to Europe as her companion.

MONNIE does not know that Dan rushed home to see her, arriving just after her train left. She and Miss Anstice got to the theater in New York the night before their departure and a handsome stranger offers them his car in the rain. The stranger is ARTHUR MACKENZIE and he calls next day on the same boat they take. A message for Monnie from Dan reaches the pier too late to reach her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXIII

DAN said grumpily, "Tell her I'm out."

The new maid stood in the doorway, irresolute, as Mrs. Cardigan murmured protestingly, "Dan, you simply must get it's disgraceful."

Frowning, he arose and went to the telephone. "Hello! Yes. Oh, I've been terribly busy. I'm afraid—" There was a pause during which Dan grimaced at the table against which he was sitting. Then he said, none too graciously, "Oh, all right. Around 11? 'Bye. Be seeing you."

After the servant was out of earshot Mrs. Cardigan, majestic in her morning draperies of trailing lavender, presiding with elegance over the silver coffee pot, began lightly to take her son to task. Underneath her bantering tones Dan detected real earnestness.

"Danny, it's really too bad of you. Sandra asked you to that big dinner last Wednesday and you refused. She'll begin to think you're a boob." She smiled at him, holding out her hand for his cup.

"No more, thanks," Dan retorted. They were putting "the works" on him—his father, his mother, all of them. He was thoroughly out of temper and fed up with the whole business, he told himself. He'd half a mind to go out—go to South America—anywhere—on a cattle boat or a fruit boat. Sandra was all right. She was a swell girl if you liked the type. Dan was just out of tune with the universe ever since he'd made that quick trip back from the west to find Monnie gone. He'd sent a wire to her hotel in New York, having ascertained by telephoning to the News office where Miss Anstice Corey was to stay. But Monnie hadn't answered. Dan didn't understand that. It was, he didn't until Geraldine had dropped some of her last hints a few days later.

"I see your girl friend has gone abroad," Geraldine had crowed, waving the town paper at him.

Dan had growled, "Don't know what you're talking about." He had been furious. Geraldine had fixed her eyebrows, looking superior in that maddening way she had. Great mistake, sending that girl east to school!

"Oh, you don't?" she had drawled. "Monica O'Dare's gone to Europe. Don't ask me how or ways about it, and very effective, with her dark hair banded demurely back. Sandra was wearing the quaintest of puffed and ruffled frocks in a new shade—hyacinth blue, she said, which gave a sea-tinge to her long-lidded green eyes and made her fair skin look dazzling.

The Willistons insisted they couldn't stop over. Tad had a director's meeting in the morning and Sandra drove them to the 11:20, with Dan in the rumble seat beside the Williston girl. She was a competent looking, rather mannish individual with coal black hair cut crisply away from a broad brow and big, strong, delicate fingered hands. Dan liked her.

Demanding a cigaret, she made a gesture toward the two in the front seat.

"Nice girl, Sandra," she said briefly. "Lots of fun."

Dan agreed, impressed in spite of himself by the Willistons and their dictum. The Willistons were "big people" in his father's line. He had been hearing of them since he was a child. He could not help being impressed with the fact that Helen Williston who had seen everything and been everywhere dubbed Sandra "nice" and "lots of fun."

"Can't see why she buries herself in this little town," muttered Dan's companion.

DAN had almost begun to defend Belvedere with the heat proper to a native son of the place when suddenly he remembered that he, too, was anxious to get away. He mumbled something, thinking that Miss Williston must think him a dull fellow.

On the ride home he was unusually silent. Sandra, seemingly to sense his mood, talked in desultory snatches.

"Don't you want to come in and have a cigaret?" she asked as they approached the Lawrence place.

Dan roused himself. "Believe I will. Then I'll walk home. Need the exercise."

She ran the car into the big garage expertly, as she did everything, with a deft turn of the wheel. Dan helped her out, conscious of the fine, faint scent which always hovered about her beautifully groomed hair and skin. Sandra was well—perfection, in her way.

She slipped her cool hand into the crook of his arm. Her voice was very soft. "Worried about something, Danny?"

It was nice to know someone cared. His mother now—his mother was too busy, too absorbed in her own plans, to care in the least what Dan's private feelings were. And Monnie—well, she didn't love him any more. That was finished. You closed the door on things like that.

"Bored," Dan admitted in a troubled voice. "Wish I could light out, go some place where things happen."

"Ah, don't I know that feeling!" Sandra was all sweet sympathy.

Suddenly the girl came very close. Cool, fragrant and golden, she stood looking at him, smiling. "Can't you tell me all about it, Danny boy?" she asked.

The man hesitated. Almost before he knew what was happening Sandra was in his arms.

I suppose that I may claim to be the first Ford Dealer. I not only made cars, but sold them and frequently delivered them myself. The "drive away" is not new; often I have driven cars from Detroit to towns in Ohio or Indiana or Michigan to make delivery. There were no good roads in those days, and the people where I drove had never seen a motor car before. My first really enthusiastic customers were Country Doctors. They were the first to realize the value of dependable transportation to a widely scattered practice. Even today I occasionally hear from some of those first Ford users. We had to teach local mechanics how to care for the cars. That is how Ford Service began, which is now found everywhere in the world. We believed from the beginning that a sale does not complete our transaction with our customer — it creates upon us an obligation to see that our customer's car gives him service. Ford Dealers know their duty to the public in this respect. I can say of Ford Dealers generally that they have been and are men of character and standing in their communities. Most of them have been with us many years, which indicates that we agree on basic business principles. The Company provides that the methods used to sell the Ford car are consistent with the self-respect of the Dealers who handle it. The present Ford V-8 is the peak of our 30 years experience. We have never made a better car. Its eight-cylinder engine is powerful and smooth running. The car is admittedly very good looking and has comfortable riding qualities. It is economical in operation because of advanced engine design and low car weight. It is the fastest, roomiest and most powerful car we have ever built.
