A BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

TEXAS GAME WARDENS DUE TO LOSE THEIR JOBS

Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson vetoed the bill providing for fishing beyond the home county, providing for a $3 hunting fee license for hunting outside the home county, and consolidating the funds of the game and fish oyster departments. Chairman A. E. Woods of the game commission declared the veto spelled "nothing short of a catastrophe when viewed from the angle of conservation of the wild life resource of Texas."

Just now the federal government, speaking of the congress and the administration, is doing its level best to feed and clothe and shelter human life atoms who are without jobs and have the alibi that they do not know where to find jobs. Benard MacFadden, the pussiant editor and publisher of the Liberty magazine, has sounded his second warning. Writer MacFadden is positive that the country is going headlong to Hades and civilization will perish from the face of the earth unless all the unemployed are sent to the country to work out their own salvation.

BERNARD SHAW HANDS OUT SAVAGE CRITICISM

George Bernard Shaw is in the shadows of the meeting place of the world economic congress at London. He kept a gag on his tongue four days. Then he lifted the gag and erupted. This was his verdict: "In three or four days they have broken down almost hopelessly. Some day we must take things out of their hands and try to save civilization."

Then he showered the delegates from all the nations with vitriol from the Shaw tank. Speaking of the assemblage of gentlemen attending the conference he said that "not one appears to know anything whatever about economies, even of the most elementary kind."

"When you examine their qualifications you will find they are all gentlemen who have made a deplorable and hopeless mess of national affairs in their own countries and have come to the geological museum—a museum of fossils—in the hope that since they cannot get their own countries out of the mess, other countries may do so."

George Bernard Shaw as a savior of civilization is the straw that has broken the camel's back. All his life since he made his first jump above the first rung of the ladder he has been saving G. B. S. He is not a clown. He is not a circus slapstick mountebank. He is a king of satire, a high ace among the wits of the world; he plays no favorites high or low, he cauterizes the human mob from king to yoke and "he makes 'em like it."

NEW INSURANCE HIGHEST FOR YEARS

Place this cheerful little earful in the show windows of America: New life insurance written in May exceeded the total for any previous month this year, the Association of American Life Insurance Presidents reported to the public. Although production was 15 per cent under a year ago, the decrease was the smallest thus far in 1933. Speaker Henry T. Rainey of the house of representatives is not a rainbow chaser. He is a rainbow discoverer.

Too many people are prone to visualize economic and political conditions as if they were bounded by their own community.

The sales tax seems to be a hobby of many of our national law-makers. What a lot of explaining they will have to do when they return home!

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By EDSON R. WAITE, Shawnee, Oklahoma

We live in an age when men of humane outlook are the salt of the earth.

The intense commercialism of the present day may be necessary in order to maintain the burden of a democracy, but it is not always welcomed by those who look upon the welfare of humanity as a subject of more importance than politics.

We have in Washington many men who sweeten life, not only by their modesty and charm, but also by their diligence and ability to serve the people well. You will find them in both political parties; unassuming, hard-working, and their good deeds unheralded by the press. They do not seek publicity, nor do they get it. They work on faithfully and get results for which others often get credit.

They are satisfied because they know they have done their duty well.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Vast as is the scope of the administration's plan of industrial control, it is only a vital section of a large, integrated program which contains many other timbers designed as pillars and struts of economic reconstruction.

The structure has been built piece by piece, but now appears in complete form, the complement of supplementary parts dovetailing and interlocking in a legislated offensive ram the like of which has never before been seen in this world.

There is a definite attack, from one or more angles, toward each of the objectives which have long been enumerated by America's "best minds" as essential to business recovery—increased purchasing power among all classes, immediate stimulation of activity, higher commodity prices, immediate and long run relief from the burden of debt, confidence on the part of business and the public, plus price stability for both industry and agriculture.

THE farm relief act, as drastic in its field as the recovery act for industry, is not only aimed at an improvement in the condition of the farmer but is also based on the fact that the rest of the country cannot enjoy sound prosperity while agriculture is in a slump. Several immediate stimulants to production have been provided in addition to the provisions for shorter working hours and higher wages.

HOOKS and SLIDES BY BILL BRAUCHER

On Playing Jockeys

THE annual story about the jockey dominating a day's race card has been printed early this year. The jockey is Jack Westmore, a 16-year-old lad from Montana, who booted five home in an afternoon at Homewood.

When to Stop?

TWO qualifications would have been necessary: it would have been necessary to play your hazy with a bookie, because you couldn't have got a dime at the tracks with so much to bet. And you had to stop at nine winners—not ten—if you wanted to ride home.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

SPEAKING of jockeys Fred Archer for the last 13 years of his life was regarded as champion jockey of the world. . . he started riding in 1858 when 11 years old, bringing home his first winner in a steeplechase at that age. . . when he was 13 years old he weighed 70 pounds. . . when he died, in 1886, he weighed around 120. . . battling with his weight, he subsisted mostly on oysters. . . contracted typhoid fever. . . and while in a delirium shot himself to death. . . in the year he died he rode in superb form, bringing in winner one-third of the number of horses he rode. . . he won the English Derby five times.

Half a Million

SUPPOSE you had started playing jockeys in 1923 and chose Earl Sande as the subject. That year Sande won with 122 of his 439 mounts, a little better than one out of four. His money winnings of that year never have been topped by another jockey, the next total being $569,394. If you had strung along with the Earl, and doubled after he had lost, you, instead of J. P. Morgan, might have been the man Washington wanted to see.

BARGAIN BRIDGE

KATHARINE HAVILAND-TAYLOR

"Can't we go again?" Barrett asked as casually as he could.

HEARTEDLY HEADED THE CAR down town into the narrow streets that are silent and open to echoes on Sundays, the same streets that hum on working days. Here and there in windows were lights, muted by the late afternoon to pale lemon, but most of the cloud-brushing buildings slept. The comparative stillness made Barrett feel alone with the girl. He doubted (the thought coming to him in a flash) whether most men in the throes of an intense love affair could be as happy as he was at that moment. He felt absurdly content. He turned the car to a bridge below which the river proclaimed itself in the thickening twilight by holding its unsteady mirror to the lights. "I've never been here at this hour. I think it's beautiful!" she said softly. Barrett thought, "I knew you would." He did not speak and he knew he did not need to. He had never felt so completely that everything was as it should be. He had a flash of misty memory; the same feeling that had been his as a very small boy with his face against his mother's shoulder. That phase had been short. She had died just after his tenth birthday and within two years his stepmother, Rita, had begun her rule. Rita had never grown quite accustomed to the hills of the northern climate and had remained heatedly Spanish to the end. She had coqueted or ignored but had never seen him as a child. "I've been lonely," Barrett realized with surprise, "and never even knew it!" He was not lonely now. "I've never talked this way to anyone before," Elinor admitted wonderingly.

was doing it again; willingly, humbly and with all her heart. "Do you remember giving me a box of candy years ago?" she asked. "No, I don't." "Well, one day I was at Aunt Ella's. There were a lot of older people there and you came in and found me sitting on a stool turning the pages—I suppose rather wearily—of 'The Loves of the Saints.' You dropped to the floor beside me to make the most amusing comments on some of the pictures. I'm sure you must have shocked Aunt Ella terribly. Then you went away and half an hour later Higgins appeared with a wonderful box of candy. For me! A pink box with a ribbon on it. I've never forgotten it!" "I'm glad to hear you say so," he murmured. "I've never forgotten it," she assured him, "and I never shall!"

ELINOR sat back against the seat, smiling. The relaxation she felt was so good. Usually people, unless she knew them well (and she knew few people well), made her tense. They passed a corner of the street where the Thropes lived. "Dear Aunt Bessie," the girl thought, "I must go to see her soon." The tenderness that was within her was spreading over wide areas. Perhaps she would never have such an afternoon as this again. Well, she could remember it as she had that rosy box of candy and its donor, a young man who had seen a little girl looking lonely and rather forlorn. It was a strange mood that had come over her—ones she did not understand. Perhaps, she reminded herself, she should be talking. Her companion might be bored by her silence. She turned toward him. "My aunt and uncle live in Brooklyn," she said. Then she flushed. That must have sounded silly. But he did not seem to think so. "The Thropes?" he asked. "Yes." "I like women of Mrs. Thrope's type," he stated. "She's really wonderful! I love her. She's been very kind to me." "They have boys?" "Yes, three of them. Getting along to college age. You'll see them at Aunt Ella's some day, I presume." Again Elinor hoped as she had a thousand times that Aunt Ella would put the Thrope boys through college. Uncle Jim never seemed to have any luck. Everything seemed to go bad for him. Sometimes Elinor, in her young way, felt that she couldn't endure it if Aunt Ella didn't give the Thropes the help they so deserved. They were so good, so kind, all of them. Another bridge. That meant not so many moments before they would reach the yawning, canopied door that would admit her to the apartment building she called home and never felt to be a home. "I've enjoyed the drive so much!" she said as the roadster nosed its way up Park Avenue. "Really?" he asked probingly. "Oh, yes. Really?" "Then can't we go again?" he asked, as casually as he could. "If you like," he assured her almost sharply. "I'd like nothing so much as to be one of your friends." "Oh," she said, "that is so kind of you!" He put his hand on hers; he could not help the gesture. Elinor returned the pressure frankly and warmly. Barrett's heart turned over. (To Be Continued)

Too Much Realism In "Parachute Jumper" For Leo Carrillo

Leo Carrillo, noted stage and screen star, who has a leading role with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in the Warner Bros. picture, "Parachute Jumper," now showing at the Lyric Theatre, declares that he has never before played in a production in which the director went in for such realistic action. And, he added, he never cares to again. The action which he admits sent the cold chills up his spine, was an airplane battle in which he was a leading figure. It took place at the Metropolitan Airport at Van Nuys, Calif., which was engaged for the occasion. The scene was attempted with blank cartridges for the machine guns, for safety sake, but it was found that the guns jammed after the first shot. An arms expert who was consulted about the trouble explained that the discharge of powder in a real cartridge, released a certain amount of gas. This gas, he pointed out, acted as a means of compression to operate the gun for the next shot. With the use of blank cartridges, there was no gas to act as compression. Consequently the jamming of the machine gun. So Director Alfred E. Green ordered the airport cleared of all employees and spectators. Lead bullets were inserted in the guns and the air fairly rained lead. The men at the guns were careful with their aim, but Carrillo declares he felt his hair was turning white before the sequence was finished. Others in the cast include Bette Davis, Frank McHugh, Claire Dodd, Shelia Terry and Harold Huber. That Reminds Me (Continued from page 1) A joint meeting will be held at the Chamber of Commerce Thursday night at 8:30 to discuss plans for the coming fair. It is hoped that while this meeting is in progress that the question of a bank for Eastland will help dominate the meeting. We need a bank above everything. Then the rest won't come so hard. By all means let's have the biggest fair in history, and with such excellent work as J. C. Patterson, county agent, and Miss Ruth Ramsey, home demonstration agent, are doing, and the unusual fine season we have had this year, Eastland county can show wonders that will bring them from far and wide. CRATE OF BERRIES BROUGHT TO 10 DOLLARS By United Press ANDERSON, Mo.—The first crate of early strawberries grown here brought $10 on the local market. The berries were turned over to members of the chamber of commerce for a big shortage.

ONCE EACH DAY

By V. MARIE STEPHENS

The world judges a child by his home training and natural characteristics, a college student by his fraternity, a man by his community standing . . . and humanity by the way it conducts itself. Outside of tell-tale actions, we have only the personal word by which to judge. We do well to think a couple of minutes before beginning a three-hour discussion of topic-of-the-day trivialities. "Isn't she charming?" It was an assertion, not a question, prompted by the girl's picture in one of our outstanding university annual productions . . . the assertion being made to a student in the institution. "No, she isn't. She's terrible. Common as dirt!" His reply. Now, I don't know the girl at all, but someday I may meet someone who does. If I ever hear her name called or see her picture or recognize her sorority . . . I can't forget the judgment passed on her. It wasn't his fault. It was hers. Our glass houses make it essential that we dust the furniture and wash the dishes. We know others as they make themselves known. For it is written: man shall not live by bread alone. About the only good all this talk about inflation, bills and amendments, and economic and moral questions is going to do, is get us all so mixed up we'll forget what a mess we're in. There are times when it looks like a frame-up. Just when we adjust ourselves to a lot of beliefs and theories, somebody jumps up and nominates a new idea. And instead of moving that all such foolishness cease and we agree by acclamation, somebody else gets up and puts another bit of nonsense in the running. That begins the fight, and before there is a vote we're all so befuddled we never are quite sure which way the house is swaying. But we're so deeply involved in conditions now it really doesn't matter much. It's like tying cans to a dog's tail. After the first three or four, it doesn't make much difference. So we go yelping along, with the government putting the tin can business on a high peak . . . and our ears getting flatter against our heads with every day. In spite of it, the times are getting better. At least our faith in the times is stronger. We know conditions are improv-
