ROOSEVELT ASKS FOR WORK RELIEF FUNDS

RELIEF MONEY IN TEXAS IS RUNNING LOW

Editor's Note: Relief dollars are running out of the state's treasury at the rate of $1,500,000 a month. Bread bonds soon will be exhausted. Legislators are pondering a new relief program for the state.

The men who live on doles are both swindling, too. A zoological term slipped into the strange jargon of huts and hobo jungles. It represents a "philosophy" of the unemployed.

Those two angles of Texas' relief situation are treated in separate stories. The first follows:

By VERNON A. MCGEE
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 AUSTIN, Jan. 7.—Relief for nearly 1,500,000 destitute persons in Texas, more than one-fifth of the population, jarred state government again today.

Only $3,500,000 remained in the state's $20,000,000 misery fund created by popular vote in the summer of 1933.

The federal government is expected soon to assume the full burden of relieving destitute persons able to work on public works projects.

Approximately 300,000 destitute persons, unable to work because of physical handicaps, will be removed from federal relief rolls, Feb. 1 and become the state's burden entirely.

After the misery chest is empty, what then for the state's 300,000 unemployed? Where is the end of the dole system? Legislators are wondering what must be done. The problem, not yet acute, requires attention during the regular session of the 44th legislature, beginning Jan. 8.

Sentiment for a law requiring local communities to carry part of the relief load was crystallizing rapidly. In that proposal many legislators thought they saw a definite decrease, perhaps the end, of doled relief.

"When a citizen of any community," they reasoned, "has to pay directly for feeding his fellow citizens, he's going to ascertain that his fellow citizens are actually in dire need of relief before they are permitted to get it."

In effect, each taxpayer would become a highly desirable relief worker," determined to keep deserving persons off the relief rolls in order to make his own tax burden a little lighter.

One word troubled advocates of that proposal. "How?"

John Wallace, member of the state board of control that oversees all relief administration in Texas, believes 150 or more counties cannot possibly provide for unemployed persons taken off relief rolls.

"The constitution now limits general fund revenues to 25 cents of the county tax rate. The maximum constitutional rate already has been levied in many instances.

Amendment of the constitution will be necessary to enable counties to levy new and special taxes for relief.

If the state attempts to share the relief burden with cities rather than counties, strong protests are inevitable. Drouth and depression have combined to keep many Texas cities in the red. Destitute families from rural sections have moved into cities looking for bread lines and doles.

Governor James V. Alfred is expected to point a way through those relief complexities in his first formal message to the legislature.

PASSENGERS PRAISE CREW FOR HEROIC WORK WHEN SHIP WRECKS ON SHOALS

By United Press
 MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 7.—Thirty-eight passengers from the wrecked liner Havana were landed here today. They told of heroism by the Havana crew, many of whom were aboard the ill-fated Morro Castle, after the New York-Havana liner piled up on a shoals 60 miles due east of Fort Pierce, threatening another major ship disaster.

One passenger and one member of the crew remained unaccounted for but Ward line officials insisted all passengers and all the crew were safe.

Eleven passengers were aboard the liner Peten and will be landed at Havana at noon. The survivors brought here were picked up from lifeboats.

Fifty of the 124 members of the crew were members of the crew of the Morro Castle, also a Ward liner, which burned with a loss of 124 lives. The crew of the Morro Castle was accused of cowardice by many but passengers of the Havana had high praise for its conduct.

Senate Committee Makes Report on Amount of Liquor Being Sold In Drug Stores During Six Months

AUSTIN, Jan. 7.—Since repeal of the eighteenth amendment many drug stores have been established in Texas and many old drug stores have been converted into veritable saloons. Despite state prohibition laws, a great number of Texans are getting their liquor through drug stores without even the formality of a physician's prescription.

Attempting a cross-section of the drug store traffic in liquor, the committee analyzed the sales of 37 retail druggists, selected at random, in 18 cities and towns, representative of every section of Texas. These were the outstanding facts showing in the cross-section, from a report made by the state auditor from inspection of stores and records on file in the comptroller's office:

1. Since last April 1, these 37 stores reported sales of 690,356 pints of liquor without a physician's prescription. This was at the rate of 18,658 pints per store, or 104 pints per day, per store.
2. From this turnover, the state received, as revenue, the sum of $27, representing each druggist's payment of $1 for a permit to sell prescription whisky.
3. One retail druggist apparently sold whisky at the rate of four pints per minute. He reported sale of 373,344 pints in 90 days. None was prescribed.
4. Not a single druggist examined had enough prescriptions issued to cover all sales. Some had issued more prescriptions than reported sales but a further audit of sales showed these misleading. Most of them made no pretense of selling prescription liquor, reporting not a single sale by prescription.

It should be noted that liquor may be legally sold in Texas only by a physician's prescription or for sacramental purposes.

A further investigation of the druggist whose sales averaged four pints per minute, allowing him 16 working hours to the day, showed that he was selling to any and all persons wishing to engage in the liquor business. However, if this store's sales were subtracted from the total, it would leave the other druggists examined doing the considerable business of selling 46 pints of liquor a day, in addition

Mrs. Hamlin, 33, was found dead at her home Saturday afternoon. Her head was crushed. Officers believed she surprised burglars when she returned from a bridge party Friday night. District Attorney Grady Hazelwood issued a statement in which he asked citizens to turn in any scrap of information that might have a bearing, however remote, on the case.

REQUEST MADE IN HIS BUDGET TALK TODAY

Says Budget Is Balanced Except For Expenditures For New Jobs.

By United Press
 WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—President Roosevelt today in his annual budget message asked congress for a lump sum appropriation of $4,000,000,000 to substitute work relief for the dole in the third year of recovery.

Mr. Roosevelt estimated expenditures at $8,520,000,000 and reported he could not balance the budget as he had hoped to do in the 1936 fiscal year beginning next July 1.

The $4,000,000,000 represents the cost in the 1936 fiscal year of putting to work 3,500,000 persons now on the dole.

There was no recommendation for increased taxes. Expiring nuisance taxes are to continue.

Mr. Roosevelt said relief appropriations for the current fiscal year would be exhausted next month. He asked congress to transfer $900,000,000 for unobligated emergency appropriations to pay for relief until useful work, financed by the government, absorbs those on the dole.

The gross deficit in the 1936 fiscal year will approximate $4,000,000,000, of which $636,000,000 will represent debt retirement. Administration spokesmen assured questioners this budget was not a step toward currency inflation.

Mr. Roosevelt said the budget he presented today was in balance except for expenditures to create work for the jobless.

The 'Wizard of Oz' Becomes The Servant of Childhood

A good many children got "Wizard of Oz" books for Christmas. That has been happening every year, and it will probably go on happening for a long time to come. These Oz books have become American classics, and their readers are numbered in astronomical figures by now.

It is interesting, therefore, to discover that the late L. Frank Baum, their author, wrote them somewhat against his will while trying to do something else.

James Thurber recently told all about Mr. Baum in "The New Republic." It was this writer's great ambition to write distinctive American fairy tales. He wanted no more of ogres, enchanted princesses, fairies, and malicious dwarfs; he planned to discover the never-never land right in the middle of Chicago, or some other equally unlikely place, and he had written some 20 books when, in his forties, he wrote "The Wizard of Oz."

He wrote this one more or less as a stunt. There is nothing especially American about it, except that Dorothy, the little girl who goes wandering through the land of the Scarecrow and the Tin Woodman, comes from Kansas.

Having finished it, Mr. Baum sought to return to the task of becoming an American Hans Christian Andersen.

But at this point the children of America stepped in. They liked "The Wizard of Oz," and they began pelting him with letters demanding that he write more about this marvelous fairyland.

After getting some thousands of letters, Baum gave in and wrote a sequel. Once more he tried to go back to his chosen field, and once more the children showered letters on him.

The upshot was that he had to keep on writing Oz books until he died—and then the books remained so popular that another writer was engaged to keep the stream flowing, so that new Oz books are still coming out.

Now here, in miniature, is an excellent sample of the sort of thing that can happen to a man who creates something alive. It takes possession of him. He ceases to be his own master.

Mr. Baum was never a free agent after he had turned his famous Wizard loose among the children. He started something that was bigger than he was.

The ambitious youth who hopes to become a writer might be warned. To write a book is to dally with a potent enchantment. It may work better than you expect—and, if it does, you are forever afterward at the mercy of someone that you yourself invented!

Economy is a fine thing when joined to wise expenditure.

THE SITUATION OF THE SAAR BASIN

OIL CONTROL BY NIRA HELD TO BE INVALID

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Oil production control provisions of the national industrial recovery act were held invalid by the supreme court today in the first test of the recovery laws to come before the tribunal.

The court, in a sharply worded opinion, held Section 9-C—of the oil control provisions of the NIRA—invalid as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to President Roosevelt.

The court's chief criticism of the legislation was based on the failure of congress to enunciate a policy for established rules to guide the chief executive in exercising control of the industry.

The opinion was read by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes to a half-empty courtroom.

AUSTIN, Jan. 7.—The state railroad commission today called a state-wide oil production hearing for Jan. 21 at 10 o'clock to fix allowable oil production in the state for February.

Tomato Plantings Showing Decrease

JACKSONVILLE, Texas. — Tomato plantings in East Texas next spring will be 40 to 50 per cent below the 1934 acreage, according to a survey conducted by the Jacksonville Daily Progress.

The reduction is due to the disastrous results of last season and the inability of growers to get financial assistance, the newspaper said. The survey also indicated that Texas tomato growers are overwhelmingly opposed to government proposals of production and marketing regulation.

Inventors Used Trial and Error

NEW YORK—A large proportion of important inventions have been made by men without scientific or mechanical training, who work on the trial and error method, depending on their native ingenuity, according to patent experts. A recent questionnaire sent to several thousand inventors revealed the fact that originality was considered by far the most important attribute for an inventor, while mechanical ability was considered only one-tenth as important. Casual inventors from every walk of life have been the most successful inventors in America, including lawyers, clerks, business men, salesmen, storekeepers, professors and others. The records show that Robert Fulton, inventor of the steamboat was a portrait painter, Edmond Cartwright, inventor of the power loom was a clerk, Richard Arkwright, inventor of the loom was a barber and Alexander Graham Bell of telephone fame a teacher of deaf mutes. The remarkable success of the so-called "Yankee Inventor" of the past, and of the casual inventor of today, is attributed to native genius for invention and the fact that the inventors are practical men in direct contact with the activities of the day. The individual inventor, however, is passing, and being superseded largely by inventors especially trained in the technique of inventing. Courses are now available in several large universities and by correspondence courses directed by the Inventors Foundation of New York, which train inventors in the technique, legal and business phases of the work. Lovable

ANN HOLLISTER spent her engagement to TONY MICKLE the same day that PETER KENDALL tells VALERIA BENDINI his fiancée, that everything is over between them. Ann thinks she still loves Peter and Peter believes he still loves Valeria. But when chance brings the two together and Peter asks Ann to marry him she agrees. Peter is happy there. Then Peter is recalled home. His family scolds Ann and Valeria tries to make trouble between Ann and Peter. She succeeds finally and Ann goes away, leaving no trace of her whereabouts. Peter desperately in love with her this time, grows lonelier as the weeks pass. His efforts to locate Ann are fruitless. She has found work as a governess in the home of Mrs. TRACY an artist. ALAN VINCENT, Mrs. Tracy's brother, is attracted to Ann. Valeria, scheming to win Peter back, persuades him to hire Alan Vincent to decorate the home he bought for Ann. One night Peter goes with Alan to see a new house he is decorating. She learns the house belongs to Peter and remains out of sight while Allan talks with Peter and Valeria. Driving home Peter takes Valeria in his arms. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XI. PETER raised his head. He had kissed Valeria and found her kiss dust and ashes against his mouth. He said hoarsely, "Sorry, Val, for being a damn fool." He started the car and drove recklessly, blindly while Valeria felt the tide of humiliation wash over her. Peter had kissed her and then turned away. He didn't want her kisses. If Peter had seen her eyes then he could not have missed the dangerous glow. Peter left her at the door. Valeria did not urge him to come inside. She wanted him to go. Her rage could not be held back much longer. If he stayed she would say terrible things. Let him go the old house go. Let him stay away until loneliness drove him to her arms again. Next time he would not get away! Peter went to Allan Vincent next morning, offering to settle the whole transaction for whatever the decorator thought the completed job would have been worth. "I realize this is queer business," Peter said, "but I don't want to go ahead. Neither do I want you to lose by it." "He's quarreled with his girl," Allan decided. Allan spent the rest of the morning straightening out what he called the "mess." He came home early in the afternoon, shut himself in his studio and began working on plans for another house. As the afternoon wore on Allan became conscious that the house seemed unusually quiet. Generally about this time he could look out and see Ann and the children engaged in some form of activity. The sandbox dotted with bright buckets was within range of his vision. Almost any day he could step to the window and watch a race or a golf game with the miniature equipment he had given Sonny last Christmas. Sometimes Ann would be sitting on the green bench under the tree with the children beside her. HE heard the car on the drive just then and a moment later the children racing through the house. There was a knock on the door. "Allan!" "Come in." Mrs. Tracy stood in the doorway, a worried look on her face. Sissy came, climbing into his arms. "Ann's gone," Sissy said. "Allan said nothing." "Deliver me from temperamental people, Allan!" Mrs. Tracy said petulantly. "At least from all temperamental people except myself." "Great heavens. Can't you get to the point?" "Ann's gone up her job this morning, and asked me to drive her to town. I've spent all afternoon trying to get somebody else. Was it something you did?" "Of course not. I'm in love with her. If that's what you mean." "You're in love with Ann?" "Why not? Ann is the most beautiful girl I've ever seen." "I'm afraid the artist fell in love," Mrs. Tracy said slowly. "We artists love differently—and not constantly, Allan." "If I had Ann I could get back my faith in things." "I'm afraid there's no hope." "Go ahead." "I think she's married." "Married?" "Yes. I went to her door one night and opened it without knocking. She was sitting on the bed turning a little ring, a platinum wedding band in her hand. When she saw me she closed her hand over it." He gave a short, derisive laugh. "Married! Not such an innocent as I thought!" "After a moment he asked, 'Where is she now?'" "I left her at a place called the Evans House—quite inexpensive. She said she would stay there until she decides what to do. Don't bother her right now. She's terribly upset about something." "I have a little pride. She didn't even say goodbye." "She didn't want to go by your office." "Leave any message?" "Just goodbye." He was furious. All the fun they had had together, the days of companionship had counted for nothing. That was the way with women. His rage smoldered all evening. He was sure Ann would not call his sister. He suspected she was relieved to get away. BUT Ann did call. A month later Mrs. Tracy reported to her brother, "Ann telephoned and I went to see her. She has a job in a funny little bookstore in a part of town you've probably never been in in your life. You have seen streets like it, though, where most of the goods is displayed on the outside. Think of Ann working in a dingy shop. Right next door there are trousers, shirts and what not hanging from the awning. And across the street an Italian vegetable and fruit stand. I can't see whatever possessed her." "It probably was all she could get right now. Jobs aren't picked up every day." "But she had a good place here. And to leave it to go to a bookstore!" "Evidently she didn't like us," Allan said darkly. "Could you blame her?"

Jugler, director of processing for the Utah FERA revealed. Congress shouldn't kick. Not many of us would have paid much attention to it even if Hauptmann weren't on trial. GETTING over the present was proving fearfully hard for Ann. It meant a continual battle with her thoughts, concentrating on her duties. "Another day," she thought each morning, as the dreary procession of days went by. Another... another. And then it was fall and she was hurrying into the shop out of the raw, wind-swept streets, warming her hands at the big stove in the back of the shop. Professor Barber—she still used the title he had acquired in happier days—was pleased over Ann's interest in her work and gratified over results. The shelves had never before been so clean. The books had never before been so neatly and attractively arranged. Business was picking up, too. "It was a good day for us when she came here, eh, mother?" the old man said to his wife one night. "The customers like her fine." "So pretty and kind," Mrs. Barber said. "So interested in helping people find what they want, Father. The young men all come back to buy more books. Maybe if business keeps up, we can give her a raise by Christmas. What do you say, Father?" "Maybe by the first of the year," the old German said cautiously. Ann's salary was only $18 a week. By practicing rigid economy she was able to live within it. From the $40 a week she had earned as governess to the Tracy children she had a small nest egg saved—close to $150. She was holding this intact. Her emergency fund, she called it. She might get sick, might lose her job. Anything might happen. She was trying to keep her courage. But it was hard, struggling for a place in the crowded street car. Sometimes giving up a coveted seat to someone who looked more weary and tired and worn than she. Standing in line at the cafeteria each day at noon and going home after a hard day to help Sheila Davis prepare supper. A year ago at this time she was planning to marry Tony. It seemed forever since these carefree days.

Rabies Is Common In Winter Months, Health Officer Says

AUSTIN.—Rabies is commonly supposed to prevail only during the hot months, but is in fact more prevalent in cold weather, declared Dr. John W. Brown, state health officer. More dog bites occur from April to September, than from October to March in this climate, because dogs run abroad more freely at this season of the year, and many dogs are killed needlessly. However, the heads examined at the state laboratory during the cool months show a higher number as having rabies. Rabies is primarily a disease of dogs and in this way is transmitted to man. It is kept alive in nature mainly by the dog and the dog family. Rabies in cats and skunks is comparatively rare and is but occasionally transmitted to man. The saliva of rabid animals contain the germ of rabies. Rabies may occur in persons with extremely small abrasions of the skin contaminated with infected saliva. The incubation period of rabies in man is usually from 40 to 70 days, but it may be longer up to a year. The average period in man is 40 days, though this period is usually shorter in children or following bites on the face. The closer the bite is to the brain the more dangerous it is. The disease may be controlled by means of intelligent measure directed towards the dog. It is mainly the stray dog that keeps the rabies alive. Stray dogs should be impounded and ownerless dogs killed. All dogs should be licensed and required to wear a tag. Owners of such animals should be held legally responsible for damage inflicted by them. All cases of suspected rabies should be promptly reported to health officials. Care should be exercised in killing a suspected rabid dog, not to injure the brain, for if this is done it is impossible for the Laboratory to make a satisfactory examination.

HE heard the car on the drive just then and a moment later the children racing through the house. There was a knock on the door. "Allan!" "Come in." Mrs. Tracy stood in the doorway, a worried look on her face. Sissy came, climbing into his arms. "Ann's gone," Sissy said. "Allan said nothing." "Deliver me from temperamental people, Allan!" Mrs. Tracy said petulantly. "At least from all temperamental people except myself." "Great heavens. Can't you get to the point?" "Ann's gone up her job this morning, and asked me to drive her to town. I've spent all afternoon trying to get somebody else. Was it something you did?" "Of course not. I'm in love with her. If that's what you mean." "You're in love with Ann?" "Why not? Ann is the most beautiful girl I've ever seen." "I'm afraid the artist fell in love," Mrs. Tracy said slowly. "We artists love differently—and not constantly, Allan." "If I had Ann I could get back my faith in things." "I'm afraid there's no hope." "Go ahead." "I think she's married." "Married?" "Yes. I went to her door one night and opened it without knocking. She was sitting on the bed turning a little ring, a platinum wedding band in her hand. When she saw me she closed her hand over it." He gave a short, derisive laugh. "Married! Not such an innocent as I thought!" "After a moment he asked, 'Where is she now?'" "I left her at a place called the Evans House—quite inexpensive. She said she would stay there until she decides what to do. Don't bother her right now. She's terribly upset about something." "I have a little pride. She didn't even say goodbye." "She didn't want to go by your office." "Leave any message?" "Just goodbye." He was furious. All the fun they had had together, the days of companionship had counted for nothing. That was the way with women. His rage smoldered all evening. He was sure Ann would not call his sister. He suspected she was relieved to get away. BUT Ann did call. A month later Mrs. Tracy reported to her brother, "Ann telephoned and I went to see her. She has a job in a funny little bookstore in a part of town you've probably never been in in your life. You have seen streets like it, though, where most of the goods is displayed on the outside. Think of Ann working in a dingy shop. Right next door there are trousers, shirts and what not hanging from the awning. And across the street an Italian vegetable and fruit stand. I can't see whatever possessed her." "It probably was all she could get right now. Jobs aren't picked up every day." "But she had a good place here. And to leave it to go to a bookstore!" "Evidently she didn't like us," Allan said darkly. "Could you blame her?"

Business Recovery Enters New Phase In Which Rate of Gain Shows A Cumulative Improvement, Report Says

AUSIN, Tex., Jan. 5.—Business recovery appears to have entered a new phase in which the rate of gain is showing cumulative improvement, according to Dr. F. A. Buechel, assistant director of the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research.

The other looks on it first and foremost as a commodity for human use. The first point of view is set forth in the memorial, which quotes from a Supreme Court decision: "The slight gain to the consumer from lower rates is as nothing compared to his share in the ruin which would be brought about by denying to private property its just reward, thus unsettling values and destroying confidence."

"The question of 'production for profits' versus 'production for use' as a live issue is not confined to the field of public utilities. In a recent statement regarding the outlook for business during next year Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Company, repeats for 1935 the forecast made a year ago in connection with the outlook for 1934.

There is ground for belief that the first incident referred to represents only a temporary interruption in the growing good will between business leaders and the administration; but the second brings to a focus two points of view which superficially, at least, seem difficult to reconcile.

The coming session of Congress may for a time, at least, be held: Vern Ells elected president; Estelle Williams, vice president; Othello Bishop, secretary; Lillian Bishop, assistant secretary; Myrle Bishop, personal service chairman; Florence Harris, assistant.

FIERY WAR-HORSE

Will Rogers, in the title role of George Ade's famous comedy, "The County Chairman," believes that "It's the same in love as in politics. . . Wait for the last returns!" And this seasoned campaigner knows enough of both to swing the returns his way. "The County Chairman" is a Fox Film production.

somewhat disturbing to business psychology. When the measures that will actually be passed begin to assume their final form, however, there will probably be less cause for alarm. It is believed that the President will be able to control Congress, and his wishes will probably be followed in the majority of enactments. Aims of the administration appear fairly well defined as being focussed on recovery in cooperation with industry.

"The legislative program, it is expected, will be devoted largely to readjusting and refining laws already on the books. Forthcoming Supreme Court decisions on certain phases of government control of business and agriculture may require additional legislation, modifying them to meet constitutional requirements."

ADE'S HUMOR AT BEST NOW, SAYS WILL ROGERS

Genuine humor improves with age, is the claim of Will Rogers and he cites the case of his latest picture, "The County Chairman," which comes on Thursday to the Lyric theatre.

This famous homespun play by George Ade was first presented at Wallack's theatre at 39th street in 1902, starring Maclay Arbuckle in the role of Jim Hackler. It ran for over a year at that location and then went on the road for three years more. They had tours in those days! Willis P. Sweetman, a minstrel man, created the role of "Sassafraz Livingston," now played by Stepin Fetchit, and it made him a star.

The homely humor is still rich in the American flavor. In fact if George Ade had had Will Rogers in mind when he wrote this play, he couldn't have created a more perfectly tailored story for the Oklahoma stage. Many of the situations and speeches of Rogers are his own policies and things he has talked of over the radio and written about in his daily column in the newspapers.

PLANS MADE FOR LEGIONS DISTRICT MEET

District Committeeman Lawrence S. Daniel of Abilene paid the Ranger post of the American Legion an official visit Thursday evening, at which time plans were launched for the 17th district convention to be held in Ranger, Feb. 23-24.

According to Legionnaire Daniel the reputation of Ranger as the best convention city in the district will draw one of the largest crowds that ever assembled in the 17th district.

Tentative plans call for opening of registrations at the Gholson hotel the afternoon of Feb. 23, followed by a Washington birthday dance at the Legion hall at night, with memorial services at some Ranger church at 11 o'clock, Sunday morning, and a barbecue at the Legion hall at noon, followed by a business session at 2 p. m.

A committee composed of W. C. Hickey, Dr. H. A. Logsdon and Clyde H. Davis was appointed to serve as the general committee by the post commander, and additional committees will be appointed to work out the different phases of the program.

Members of the local post are enthusiastic over the prospects of one of the largest conventions in point of attendance in the history of the 17th district, which comprises 29 posts in 12 counties.
