GOVERNMENT FIGHTING ILLEGAL LIQUOR

The federal government's blow against illegal liquor selling in Texas and other dry states, previously hinted, has fallen.

Every person who has sold, or is selling, liquor in violation of the state law, has been held liable for a $1000 federal excise tax, even though he has secured other required federal permits and paid other taxes; and may become liable also for an additional 25 per cent penalty for failing to make proper returns to the government.

Penalty for failing to pay this $1000 tax is a $100 fine or a year's imprisonment, or both.

The order was announced by the liquor tax unit of the internal revenue bureau of the U. S. treasury department.

It was made under the provision of the repeal of the 18th amendment which pledged federal government cooperation to maintaining the laws of dry states.

It was obvious that but few of the numerous small hard-liquor dealers would be able to pay the $1000 excise tax levy. Since sales have been going on more or less openly for several months, it was not known how much evidence federal agents had gathered in preparation for its collection of these taxes.

The order even goes to the extent of levying the $1000 tax on the manufacturer of stills. The tax will be avoided only by showing that the sales have been confined to liquor under the beer and wine amendment, or those dispensed under the medicinal provisions of the Dean law.

SEEKING LEADERSHIP

The Texas Centennial has the opportunity, instead of remaining a $5,000,000 "gimme" grab-bag proposition, to become the sponsoring and guiding spirit of a $100,000,000 public development program for the state, the creator of the state's greatest program of advancement and recovery.

The suggestion comes from Gov. Ferguson.

If this be Fergusonism, Texas can stand it.

Gov. Ferguson has said it will be necessary to call the legislature back to patch up the relief bill, to revive thousands of home loans, to collect taxes, and to create the great work projects of the Brazos and Colorado river development.

The Brazos and Colorado work programs, the governor's office pointed out, would so benefit the state as to make the $5,000,000 Centennial appropriation "fade into insignificance."

That was the cue to the Centennial sponsors.

A great Texas development, a giant stride as the state resumes its forward march, a statewide plan of marshaling Texas resources to useful purpose, is the starting point for those who would plan a great Centennial. They must share the task of finding the way to pay for it.

Cotton Board Is Speeding Up Work

COLLEGE STATION.—That 160 Texas counties have received their tax exemption certificates under the Bankhead act was announced by the cotton allotment board after a meeting held at the end of the week. A total of 333,430 applications have been received from 216 counties. Among the counties which have already received their certificates, totaling 489,818 are all the larger cotton producing counties in the state, members of the board said.

While the board was in session a request came from one of the news wire services to estimate the probable loss to Texas if the Bankhead act is discontinued in 1935. In reply the board pointed out that the Texas 1934 quota of tax exempt cotton is 3,237,000 bales; that the bureau of crop estimates has placed the 1934 Texas crop at 2,383,000 bales; which leaves Texas with an excess of 854,000 bales for which there is tax exemption but no cotton. Such tax exemption certificates have a sale value of approximately $20 per bale, the board stated, and the total possible loss to the state, therefore, if the Bankhead act is discontinued and holders of these certificates are not allowed to realize on them is approximately $17,000,000.

This loss, the board estimated, will fall first of all on the cotton grower already hard hit by the drouth, whose certificate in its sales value was a measure of crop insurance. It will fall next on the business interests of the state because the farmer would have spent his money for commodities. And in the third place it will fall proportionately on all tax payers because the hard hit man and his family will the sooner be on public relief.

The board commented also on the falling off of the cotton market due in part, according to cotton exchange reports in current newspapers, to the conference in Washington and the published statement by Senator Bankhead in relation to suspending the operation of the act. The loss on a single day amounted to $7,500,000.

 Russ does not write. Months pass and then comes word that he has been killed in a motorboat accident.
 Boots meets DENIS FENWAY, young author, and EDWARD VAN STIVER, wealthy and socially prominent. She is in love with Denis and jealous of beautiful KAY CHILLINGFORD.
 Boots gets a job in a book store and goes home to live in order to help her parents financially. Edward repeatedly urges her to marry him and finally, she agrees. On Christmas Day they go for walk in the fog and Edward is badly hurt, saving Boots from a reckless driver.
 Mrs. Raeburn learns she has a winning ticket in a lottery and plans to take her husband to California. Edward tells Boots the engagement between Denis and Kay is broken. Three days before Edward and Boots are to be married he finds a letter (never sent) from Denis telling Boots he loves her and is going away because he cannot bear to see her marry someone else.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XLVII

It was a bright spring morning. Blue flags flew in the sky between cloud patches. There were tipping sailboats on the waters of the sound, and all along the shore men in rough clothes with caps pulled down over intent brows, worked at rigging, tugging at ropes, talking seams, painting hull and spar.
 "Tomorrow - tomorrow is my wedding day," thought Boots, bending to the wind, striding along the path that led among the rocks. The thought did not bring a thrill to her heart nor a flush to her cheek. This marriage was something she had promised to go into with her eyes wide open; it was a contract to be fulfilled. That the man who was to be her husband was strong and fine and honorable and young did not matter overly much. She was fond of him; that was all. He had done a fine thing, a brave thing, in risking his life for hers. When she had been poor, alone and in need of a friend he had been that friend. In return for his many kindnesses she was giving him—herself.
 She would make a go of it, she told herself seriously, as she walked along the arched, rocky promontory. If it were the only good thing in her life, she would be worthy of it.
 Just there, where the twin birch trees flung themselves recklessly over the twist of sandstone, she had sat with Denis that long ago summer morning.
 Just there they had talked; and even then she had been blindly, ignorantly attracted to him. But she had been an unketoned girl then. She had not reckoned with the winds of love nor had she known how this great emotion might rend and twist one.
 Ah, well, Denis had gone out of her life without a word or a look or a backward glance. She was surely not the sort of woman to spend the rest of her days mourning after him, regretting what might have been!
 She retraced her steps, taking the path that led homeward. For sythia was yellow on all the slopes and tulip scabbards showed green everywhere. The lilac buds were bursting on the bare branches. It seemed to her that spring had never been more heartbreakingly beautiful than it was this year. Perhaps it was that her eyes were newly opened to its loveliness.
 As she clicked open the side gate her protestations dwindled before the honesty of his dark eyes. Spangle's eyes, she had called them once, deep-welled brown, a color she w pitiless for all their laughter.

 "I was a big old not to see it before," Edward stated simply, lighting a cigaret. "I did have a sort of sort of feeling you two liked each other pretty well, although you fought pretty much of the time. But for a while he seemed to be in Kay's toils. And then I fell for you with such a bang . . . don't interrupt me," he protested with a whimsical look. "I want to get this off my chest. And then I'm through for all the ages."
 "There's absolutely nothing to it," she murmured, steadying the trembling of her lips and trying to still the beating of her heart. (But the words of that letter were written there in flame: "You've been in my blood," he had said.)
 "Nothing to it except that you're just crazy about each other and haven't sense enough to get together."
 She made a small gesture of dissent. "It looks like it, doesn't it? He ran away without even saying goodby."
 "This," Edward informed her, tapping the envelope which lay on the table between them "explains why."
 "Look, Boots," he went on, planting his elbows squarely on the chair arms and regarding her with gravity. "I want to get this straight. You're in love with Denis, aren't you? Don't try to save my feelings. Give it to me straight from the shoulder."
 She couldn't lie. Nor could she drive the blow home. But her eyes told him.
 "That's that, then."
 "It's something I couldn't help," she stammered. "It's like having a temperature. Give me time—I'll get over it. I promise you."
 An odd smile twisted his mouth. "Sorry, my child. Not good enough."
 "You mean—?"
 "Our party's off tomorrow. You're just a baby, my dear," he told her on a note of tenderness. "People are always saving you from yourself. It'll be little Rollo this time. No, you go off with your people and I'll take my cruise and when we both come back we'll be the best of friends."
 "Edward, you're the—the—" She choked on the words. He was the best person in the whole world, but how could she say it?

Miss Florida came to the dining room window.
 "Telephone," she called excitedly. Miss Florida expected thrills these days every time the phone rang. "After Mrs. Raeburn's wonderful luck," she was fond of saying impatiently, "I say you never know what may happen next."
 It was Edward calling. His voice sounded rather odd, Boots thought. Was she surely coming in for lunch, he wanted to know? Good. The Waldorf, then, at one. "But I told him I'd be there," the girl murmured to herself, going on up the stairs. "Wonder what's the matter! His voice had the most curious note in it."
 Miss Florida, observing her silently, told herself you couldn't figure out these modern girls. There was Barbara, cool as a cucumber and walking off with that grand catch tomorrow. And married once before, too, and widowed. Well, you just didn't know what went on inside their minds; they took everything as it came.
 Boots touched her lips with a bright smile and rubbed some of it into her cheeks. She was so thin—pale, too. Edward would think he was seeing a ghost. She had a new blue taffeta frock with the primest and quaintest deep sheer collar and a blue coat of dull wool and a wide-brimmed hat to go with it. Edward wouldn't be ashamed of her.
 He was waiting in the hotel foyer and rose as she approached, leaning on his cane. Why, everything was all right, she told herself, smiling back at him. She had been imagining things; his smile was just the same.
 They ordered; the room was crowded. Edward had nodded to half a dozen people. Curious eyes had observed the girl with him.
 "Tomorrow they'll know about us," Boots thought. She had insisted upon keeping the engagement secret all this time. "It will be time enough to make announcements when the marriage is a fact," she had explained to her rather surprised family.
 "You look mighty sweet, Beautiful."
 "Thanks. How's the limp?"
 "Oh, I just keep the stick to get a little sympathy." He gave her his own engaging, white-toothed grin. "Look, darling, I've got something I want to show you."
 Without warning, without preamble he put a square white envelope into her hands. She took it, slipped out the sheet within, read. Her eyes darkened; a slow flush crept over her face. With trembling hands she replaced it.
 "Which means exactly—what?"
 THERE was a melancholy rally in his smile now. It was as if his suspicions had been confirmed.
 "Denis left it in some books he sent me the day he left—quite by accident I'm sure," he explained painstakingly. "I just found it yesterday."
 "I don't know—I give you my word I don't know a thing about it, Edward." She was very pale now. The brief spots of rouge were like flower petals on the transparency of her cheeks.
 "Come clean, woman! No matter how serious he was, Edward talked the jargon of his generation. You never let anyone see you were hurt in Edward's simple code. You took your blows standing.
 "Honestly, honestly . . ." But of confidence in them that was so expressively shown by the depositors, than the depositors' committee who have been for more than six months working unceasingly, faithfully and fully determined day and night to see that Eastland has a national bank.

Hall Walker, vice president and cashier of the Commercial State Bank of Ranger, was a pleasant visitor in the offices of the depositors' committee Monday.

Mr. Walker is considered by this columnist one of the outstanding bankers of the nation. It was through his persistent efforts and the confidence of his directors that the Commercial State Bank is still in existence. Weathering the storm of toppling banks all around him was an achievement that will go down in history in his community as an almost impossible feat to overcome. Not a single depositor of the Commercial State Bank will lose a dollar, due to Hall Walker's wonderful qualifications of staying in the middle of the "fire" and quenching the flames that would destroy that which his heart and soul was building up, and behind it all there was the responsibility placed upon his shoulders of protecting his people who had placed their confidence in him and entrusted him with their life's savings. The job has been done and today he has the spirit of the enthusiasm of his accomplishment in the future of his community and nation as a whole. Mr. Walker is deeply interested and glad that Eastland will soon have a bank and extends to the citizens of this community his full co-operation and good wishes for its success. Eastland is just as proud of Mr. Walker as Ranger is and glad that he is Eastland's neighbor.

ervisor. Investigations are made by case workers directly in the home of the applicant and each family on relief is rechecked every two weeks by case workers calling on a client. Each family receives relief to the extent of their budgetary needs as approved by the case worker. Whenever a person is on relief if they are on any work project the compensation is given in cash. If they are on direct relief it is on orders for groceries, clothing, and general necessities. Farmers on relief are handled in the same manner as others. A person who owns property but is out of a job is eligible for relief assistance. When workers are paid cash it is their money to do with as they will, but if they are on direct relief there is a rule that to attend places of amusement, etc., that they will be cut from the rolls. About 72 per cent of those on relief will be in position to do useful work when such is available. All efforts are being made to reduce relief expenditures Mr. Driskill stated. Based on a population of 34,100 inhabitants with 9,531 now on the relief rolls of Eastland county there is 26.24 per cent of the total now on direct and work relief Mr. Driskill concluded his remarks with an urgent appeal for all civic organizations to do everything possible to encourage and stress projects for their respective communities and especially Eastland in order that direct relief can be reduced to work relief. The following is a list of work projects that are considered by the state and national administration officials as the remedy to reduce the direct relief and in which approvals and recommendations are the result.
