New Material For Speakership

Coke Stevenson having decided two terms is enough for him as speaker of the Texas house, three, four or five able young members have emerged as prospective leaders of the race for speaker to succeed him in the next regular legislature.

Rep. Sidney Latham of Longview, Rep. Homer Leonard of McAllen, Rep. R. Emmett Morse of Houston are regarded as likely entrants. Rep. Bullock Hyder of Denton is considered a potential candidate. Rep. R. W. Calvert of Hillsboro, who ran Stevenson a close race in January, is a logical candidate next time, if he should conclude to make the race.

Leonard perhaps got a shade of the start for the race. He is chairman of the appropriations committee, chief committee post of the present session.

Morse remained a prospective candidate for speaker of this legislature until Stevenson's second-term race was finished.

Latham's service, in his first term and in this second term, has been marked by a high order of ability. He is among those who, including others in this future list of campaign prospects, are known as working members—those who take the drudgery of the session seriously, sit up until midnight in windy committee hearings, and study bills and listen to speeches. Latham, coming from the oil country, has given special attention to petroleum legislation.

It is suggested as a possibility that if Lieut. Gov. Woodul of Houston seeks re-election. Rep. Morse might stay out of the race on the theory that Houston would otherwise claim to furnish presiding officers for both houses.

Hyder is serving a second term and is a consistent and faithful worker. Calvert's popularity and leadership were recognized in the big vote he got in January; and he has won other friends in that the rivalry of the campaign did not survive the vote.

All this group are young men: Latham is 27; Leonard, 35; Morse, 39; Hyder, 27, and Calvert 29.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Katharine Strykhurst, beautiful, is discontented and restless because of her wealthy father, Victor Strykhurst, and her aristocratic mother, Bertine, refuse to let her undertake any sort of restful activity.

She rides daily with Michael, the handsome young westerner in a riding club. She assures her father that she is not interested in him, but feels a pang of jealousy when Sally Moon, local co-ed, enrolls at the club for leisurely to him.

Zoe Parker, Katharine's friend, returns from Europe where she has been taken to forget a love affair with Gibbs Larkin, of whom her parents disapprove. Zoe begs Katharine to help her arrange a meeting with Gibbs. Katharine recalls in her mind the time when she had been added to the stepmother, returns from her trip. Katharine welcomes him as a friend.

Now Go On With The Story

CHAPTER V

No one in his right mind could have called John Kaye handsome, for there was something arresting about his lean, ascetic face, about the blue eyes smiling behind the rimless glasses. He had unt-fingered hands with closely-lyped nails—a surgeon's hands—and his light brown hair was thinning at the crown.

He held her hands now, smiling at Katharine. "Just off the at!" he said.

"You came right out! Why, a nice thing!"

She flushed, the thought of Zoe trading at the very moment. Zoe had said, "You lamb, and you darling," and "You precious," at even with Johnny, who, Katharine said to herself, was like the other she'd never had, she could be quite so familiar. Never had Johnny liked her as she liked him.

"What's troubling you?" The eyes looked her over in such a friendly fashion she could not resist it. "You're thinner. But haven't you grown?"

"You've been gone two years, Johnny dear." It slipped out before she noticed it. She ticked off the names on her fingers: "Munich, Vienna, Paris. How many degrees have you now?"

He smiled. "Learned a few things—that's all."

"And what now?"

"Now—well, I'm staying in New York for a while. Old Munster has asked me to come in with him."

"Dr. Hugo Munster? Oh, Johnny, that's marvelous!"

She could be herself with him, as always. John Kaye, who was a distant cousin of Bertine's and had lived in the house during holidays, when he had been attending medical school.

They sat down together.

"Tell me everything, Johnny."

"I want to know about you."

He had a gentle voice, a good doctor's voice, and a good doctor's probing, intelligent look.

She shrugged her shoulders. In her rumpled linen coat and jodhpurs, her russet stretched out in front of her, she looked oddly childish.

"Oh, nothing much. The same old dead-end round."

"How's the sketching?"

She frowned. "Daddy didn't like the idea of the life class. Honestly, John, he has prehistoric ideas. Anyhow, I'm not any good."

Her black mood threatened to descend again.

"Nonsense, you're great. Don't be a defeatist. How about college?"

She rumbled her hair. "I had two years of it, you know; but I flunked math. I take French afterwards from Madame Audie down in the village. Anyhow I loathe the girls' colleges—all proms and hockey and hand-made sweaters."

He gave a great laugh at her description.

"Johnny, what I want is to begin to live. This," her comprehen-

"You're a worker, Kay. I've seen you fling yourself into things. The time of that fire over in Burtville—why, you were only 16, and you nearly killed yourself, rushing back and forth."

"Yes, but the trouble is," said the girl, "most of the time there's really nothing for me to do. Bertine runs the house and the grounds and Daddy would like me to marry some Nice Boy and be done with it."

"Well, why don't you?"

"Perhaps I will, some day; but you ought to take nurse's training," John Kaye said suddenly, in the silence. "That'd keep you busy."

"Oh, John, would you give me a job?"

"Certainly, if you were nice and neat and only wanted Thursdays off."

"That's a bargain. Look, I must change for lunch now. Don't go away, will you?"

Dr. Kaye stood up as she did. She was conscious, in the cool room, of some quality of strength about this slender man with the quiet voice and the easy smile.

"Hurry back. I have lots to tell you."

Below the windows of her room shadows dappled the burning green of the lawn. In a far corner

Giuseppe adjusted the hose of a garden spray. Roses, white and pink and crimson, burned in the borders. As she flung the warm, wrinkled linen garments from her she could hear Bertine's staccato tones and ohn's deep voice in reply. A certain peace and contentment seemed to brood over the house.

Katharine slipped her arms into the sleeves of a creamy silk dressing gown with a dark blue monogram worked upon the pockets, and laced the heavy blue cord about her. In a bathroom whose tiles were the shade of the water in a shallow pool she ran her generous tub. Bertine might be a strenuous person to live with, but she was a good housekeeper. There were thick snowy towels in the racks; the bath salts and the fat balls of soap were greeny-blue; the chrome fixtures shone. Sheer curtains, spotless white, fluttered at the windows, and dolphins disported themselves on a green shower curtain.

Katharine, soaping and splashing, had a vision of herself in starched white at an office door. "Dr. Kaye? But he's expecting you, Mrs. Browning..."

She would be the one who would count sponges at the grave operation. She would save the little boy gasping for breath... She would have a life work of her very own.

The day dream lasted through the long, bright afternoon, through two sets of tennis with John Kaye. It lasted, in fact, until portly pleasant Mr. Strykhurst came home to dinner.

"Little Kay a nurse? What nonsense?"

He beamed at her. "Nonsense, my darling! Nonsense. Don't worry your pretty head about the troubles of the world!"

"You mean I can't take training, father?"

"Just that, my dear."

John Kaye, across the lace-trimmed cloth, across the crystal candlesticks, shook his head at her warningly. She put her head down to hide the sudden, traitorous tears. Why, this was absurd. Daddy was living in the Stone Age...

Later, strolling with John on the lawn in the dew-soaked twilight, trailing her sheer peal pink laces after her, she said mutinously: "Never mind. It won't be forever, and he knows it."

"He's a little bit old-fashioned, Katharine..." John's deep, serene voice.

"A little bit! Bertine could help me, but she won't. She's too anxious to conform." Her voice was cold, angry. "Never mind," she went on. "Next spring when I get my mother's money, I'll do as I please."

She was very lovely in the half light. The man beside her glanced at her curiously. Those dark eyes had lightened to many moods all day.

"Next spring, my dear," he said easily. "Many things may have happened to you before then."

She flung back her head with an angry laugh. "Don't make fun of me, John Kaye," she said. "Nothing on earth ever happens to me."

Littlefield New Broom Corn Area

By United Press

LITTLEFIELD, Tex. — Local farmers plan to make this section the leading broom corn area of Texas as preparations to plant between 10,000 and 12,000 acres in the crop about the middle of this month get under way.

The broom corn crop was practically a failure on the South Plains last year, only 15 car loads being shipped out. This year, if there is a fair yield, about 250 cars should be shipped, it was said.

The increased acreage is due largely to the increased price for broom corn as a result of last year's near crop failure. Last season the price rose to $160 per ton compared with $35 per ton in 1932.

Legislators Have Changed Figures of Speech at Session

Austin. — Legislators have turned from the monkey to the ox as the favorite animal used in illustrating a point.

Early in the session the usual expression indicating the transfer of a burden to someone else was "putting the monkey on someone's back."

Senator Joe Hill of Henderson was the victim of such a reminder. Hill is an energetic foe of liquor and gambling. He was protesting against a bill that allows any officer to stop a truck hauling motor fuel and demand a satisfactory manifest.

Failing to get the manifest, the officer could impound the truck and its contents and have them sold to pay taxes unless there was a showing within 72 hours that the cargo was "o. k." and the tax on it paid.

Hill challenged members to cite any other law that made the arresting officer "judge, jury and executioner."

"How about the ranger ax law?" asked Senator Weaver Moore of Houston.

Gene Stratton-Porter's "Laddie" Which Enchanted Its Millions Becomes the Ideal Screen Play

time to be working on it, and not the last minute. Folks will be here from everywhere—we've just got to show them the best time they ever had in their lives and that we can be hosts as good as the best there is.

A vast world following has been rolled up in the admirers of the writing of Gene Stratton-Porter, and particularly of her "Laddie," upon whose 40,000,000 readers it has been declared that "the sun never sets."

Based partly upon the true story of her own girlhood the book has now been translated into terms of the motion picture screen by RKO-Radio, which produced the immortal "Little Women," "Anne of Green Gables" and "The Little Minister." All the appeal, all the vigorous drama, all the imaginative touches of the novel, have been made authentic to the last detail of costume and locale and character and story.

At Hollywood it has been predicted that "Laddie" will prove itself one of the sound screen's outstanding audience pictures. In the weaving of a sympathetic love story, Mrs. Stratton-Porter was a wizard with a wondrous wand in her words. Her story of the romance of the farm boy Laddie for the "Princess," has a secondary, and very charming romance in the love of Laddie's sister, Sally, for a country youth. Thus the two romances parallel and contrast in a manner dramatic and most effective.

For tender charm, there is also the story of Little Sister, and how she insinuates herself into the very heart of the gripping story of a clash of farm folk with caste—a story that establishes the truth that the nobility of the soil is as truly grand as nobility of blue blood.

"Laddie," as a picture, is not only luscious with the glamour of the sweetest of fiction's romances, but has the acid bite of dramatic elements that move to a remarkable climax, to bring the happy ending.

Salaries For the Commissioners Is Given a Hike

AUSTIN. — Whatever business may be neglected by a state legislature, there is one bill that always gets prompt attention in house and senate. Any bill to fix salaries of county commissioners put the legislators on their toes.

Nobody tries to obstruct such a bill. No committee is too busy to hear it promptly and no member has the temerity to object when unanimous consent is asked to suspend other business and act on a commissioner's salary bill.

The 44th legislature was no exception in this respect. County commissioners' salaries were again revised. As usual the revision was upwards.

County commissioners in a few counties may receive salary cuts and some of them may continue to receive the same amounts, but most of them will be paid more.

Nearly every session devises a new way to fix salaries.

Some sessions base the pay on population. This time assessed property valuations in the counties was used as the base for determining the amount of the commissioners' salaries. The exact amount the commissioners will receive, they will determine themselves. The legislature fixed the maximum.

In a county with less than $4,500,000 property assessed for taxation, a commissioner will be paid $5 per day while working on the job with a limit of $900 a year.

If the property values are $6,000,000 he can get a total of $1,200 a year. At $10,000,000 valuation, the commissioner goes on straight salary regardless of the number of days they work.

The straight salary scale begins at $1,400 a year. It progresses to $4,200 in counties with $150,000,000 valuation.

Rep. J. C. McConnell, Palo Pinto, asked Attorney General William McCraw for a ruling to determine whether salaries of officials can be changed during the term of office for which they were elected. The ruling was good for the officers, bad for the state.

It is that an official's salary may be increased during his term, but not decreased.

People don't mind a politician's hand-shaking and back-slapping so much as his leg-pulling.
