Moral Issue in War Soon Is An Illusion

You cannot talk very long about our chances for staying out of this "next war" that everybody seems to be expecting without ringing in at least a few echoes from the last one.

What happened between 1914, when the European war started, and 1917, when we finally got into it, is not entirely clear even today. But it is about all we have to go on when we try to forecast the future, and it has a way of hornoring in on all our arguments.

One is reminded of it by some speeches made the other evening before the Foreign Policy association in New York. There was a round table discussion of the war-and-peace problem, and a lawyer named Frederic R. Coudert expressed himself as follows:

"I disagree with the assumption that war is a most terrible thing. The people of this country will not be satisfied to preach neutrality rights, to keep their flag off the high seas. They will want to know if there is a moral question involved in the war.

"They will prefer to take part in the war if it is against a brutal aggressor. They are 120,000,000 energetic idealists who will not shut themselves up lest they be drawn into a war, but will take sides undeterred by fear of war."

With the statement that we will want to know if there is a moral question involved in the next war there can be little quarrel. The only trouble with it is that you so often can't be sure about a thing like that until some 20 years afterward.

If you will cast your mind back to 1917, you will recall that we had not the slightest doubt, at that moment, that there was a tremendous moral issue at stake. Freedom, democracy, civilization itself—they all hung in the balance, and if we did not go forth to fight for them they were apt to be lost.

So, as you remember, we did go forth to fight, and the cause with which we sided won as overwhelming a victory as the history of warfare records.

So what? So freedom, democracy, and all the rest were preserved and made forever secure? Just where—in Italy, in Germany, in Russia, in Poland, in Yugo-Slavia — or where?

The bright moral issues of 1917 don't look as clear now as they once looked. We may be 120,000,000 energetic idealists, but we might be better off today if we had been just a bunch of suspicious cynics.

And that's the trouble. Go around looking for moral issues in the midst of a great war and you lay yourself wide open to the sale of a gold brick.

The one great lesson of 1917 is that if we are to protect our neutrality we must start long before the shooting actually begins.

Centennial Runs Gauntlet of All Its Foemen

Congratulations to the lawmakers of Texas. Congratulations to the governor. Congratulations to the publishers of newspapers and their staffs who forced the issue to a showdown and made success possible for the "anniversary birthday of freedom" to be observed in the coming year. Congratulations to the Texans who have passed away and who gave a commonwealth as a heritage to the 6,500,000 native or adopted children of the Lone Star who will be on earth to celebrate the occasion from the gulf to the foothills of the Rockies and from the Red to the Rio Grande. Now on with the procession and in passing show and make it one of the most sublime in a panoramic and historic sense ever given to the people of an American state.

Dictator Hitler Shackles the Religious Press

Dictator Hitler appears to be all powerful beyond the Rhine—for the time being. He has crushed once for all the entire German church press, Catholic as well as Protestant, and all Jewish organs still existing on a religious or racial basis. There are men in America, (perhaps there are a few women), who long for the coming of an American dictator given the authority to destroy the bill of rights of the constitution, to destroy the freedom of the press, to destroy the freedom of speech and to reduce to intellectual or economic serfdom all men and women who refuse to bow to the mace or the bludgeon of an autocracy and the armed warriors who execute his commands.

He says that recently the government liquor vendor had difficulty in keeping a grouse from entering the liquor store. The bird made several attempts to enter the building, evidently bent upon quenching its thirst at the government joy house.

"Dusting the Covers of Texas History"

For the Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936 Sadness had come upon the republic over the death of two well-loved citizens. One was the President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, and the other was Kenneth L. Anderson, vice president of the republic. Anderson had died the last week in June, 1845. He was "a man of great tact, unquestioned integrity, and natural kindness of heart. He kept his popularity throughout his political career. We meet a few such men in life," the Northern Standard editor of Clarksville wrote. It was a blow to his friends to lose him. President Jackson had died in the States, and Texas had been represented at his funeral by Gen. T. J. Green, George Van Ness, Lieutenant Clarke and Branch T. Archer, recently resigned from the cabinet.

shame and disgrace. It mattered little that the owner also manufactured tin ware, copper ware, and made casts for bells and "sturups."

There had been truly a shocking news of happenings in Galveston, however. A city that formerly had good morals was now in a state of corruption, it was said. A woman was fined for hearing her husband, a man was sent to jail for assaulting his wife, and another man was sent to jail for drunkenness. Thus we glimpse life in early Texas communities. There was a constant series of events that kept the attention of the settlers on things other than their worries. Manners and customs have changed in Texas' hundred years of independence, but Texans are fundamentally the same. Centennial celebrations of 1935 will be dedicated to the pioneers, for the noble work that they did for our state.

Texas Charters Show An Increase

AUSTIN.—A sharp increase in Texas charters approved by the secretary of State occurred during April in comparison with last year. Both in number and in capitalization, according to the Texas Bureau of Business search. There also was a moderate increase over the previous month. The Bureau's report said: "Records from the office of the secretary of state give a total of new charters granted corporate during the month, an increase of per cent over March and 47.3 per cent over April last year." The report said: "Capitalization aggregated $2,064,000, an increase of 8.6 per cent and 55 per cent respectively over the two comparison periods. The increase was especially marked in the groups classed oil, manufacturing, real estate building, and transportation." The latest farm movement seems to be in an upward direction.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Katharine Strykhurst, 20, is discontented and restless because her wealthy father, Victor Strykhurst, and her aristocratic stepmother, Mrs. Strykhurst, refuse to let Katharine ride the way she likes. Katharine rides daily with Michael, a young westerner who runs a riding club. She assures herself that she is not interested in Michael, but she has a pang of jealousy when Sally Moon, local coquette, enrolls at the club for lessons.

Zoe Parker, Katharine's friend, returns from Europe where she has been taken to forget a love affair with Gibbs Larkin, of whom her parents disapprove. Zoe tells Katharine she must see Gibbs, begs Katharine to help her arrange a meeting.

Now Go On With the Story

CHAPTER IV

Zoe glanced at the riders—Michael and Sally Moon—and said carelessly, "So she's got her hooks on him?"

Katharine felt the hot color burn her cheeks. She pretended not to hear. Her heart had plunged—now righted itself. She steadied her hand against the door of the car so that Zoe should not see how it was trembling.

Ahead of them, under the high arch of trees, Michael and Sally rode on. The sound of horses' feet was strangely loud in the stillness. Katharine could see a flash of sun, light on the red crest of Michael's head. Sally drooped toward him and his attitude toward her, even at this distance, seemed protective, solicitous.

It was all absurd; it was not Katharine's affair, certainly, if Michael rode with Sally Moon. "So I'll count on you, then, Kay," she heard Zoe say, in the silence.

"What? I didn't hear you?" Katharine's tone was confused, her cheeks flaming.

"Be a darling and think over what I said about taking a trip to Maine," Zoe coaxed. "Mother wouldn't mind a bit if you suggested it. She wouldn't even suspect."

"Oh, really!" Katharine was unaccountably nettled by the suggestion that she, at 20, was so staid and reliable that a willful, pretty child like Zoe might be trusted with her anywhere. What did people think she was made of, anyway? She had feelings like the rest of them. Anger swept her, swift and unreasoning. She wanted, recklessly, to strike out, to hurt someone. She felt savage—she who was usually so cool and judicious.

Zoe was in no hurry to get on. She lighted a cigaret now, from the little silver case she always carried, and offered Katharine one. The other girl refused.

Zoe nodded in the direction of Sally Moon's departing figure. The absurd yellow cap could be seen, bobbing in tune with the mare's jouncing trotting movements. "Hear she's refused Howe Mackenzie?"

"Oh, I don't believe it," Katharine said sharply.

Zoe giggled. "Why, Kay, I believe you don't like that girl."

Katharine shrugged her shapely shoulders. She hated the subject, but was fascinated by it. Howe Mackenzie, fat and rather stupid, a bore at 30, was in the nature of a town joke. Yet Sally had been sought in marriage... that was something. Howe was rich. Some day he would be important in local politics; that was the way the straws pointed. Sally Moon, foolish and deceitful and cheaply pretty, had had a chance to become a wife...

Not that Katharine wanted marriage. But, from her chilly and rather bewildered heights she wondered how it was done. Sally knew how. She had a system, involving the use of eyes, of furtive, fleeting caresses, of murmured words on dance floor and veranda. Katharine had always held herself aloof from what she called "that sort of thing." Now, suddenly, she was curious.

"Sally has her points," Zoe said carelessly, as if she read her companions' thoughts.

"Oh, I don't doubt it!" Even to Katharine herself the words sounded vaguely bitter. She wouldn't stoop, she told herself, to the sort of thing Sally indulged in—brushing against a man's shoulder, appearing to stumble and catching the nearest masculine hand or arm, straying oneself with the most seductive perfumes...

"You're a funny girl," Zoe said curiously, almost speculatively. "Don't you like men?"

Katharine slid the door lever open jumped lightly to the ground. In the bright light of early morning her skin was flawless, ivory stained faintly with an apricot glow. Her fair hair curled in little tendrils about her face. "Why, she's gorgeous looking, really," the other girl thought. "What wouldn't she be like if she waked up!"

"Don't be a goose," Katharine said good-naturedly. "I don't know how we got on the subject. Of course I like men. Don't I dine and dance and swim with them?"

"Oh, it isn't that. I know you have heaps of beaux," Zoe hastened to amend contritely. "It's just that—well, you're sort of casual with them. I don't believe you've ever even felt a flutter. Have you?"

Katharine shrugged. "All this talk of flutters," she said with distaste. "It makes me—well, just a bit sick."

"There, you see?" cried Zoe. "I knew it! You're on the heights most of the time. And," she added mysteriously, "they don't like it!"

"Who doesn't?" Katharine, comprehending perfectly, was purposefully lofty.

"Men," said Zoe softly. "They're afraid of you."

"Let them be!" said Katharine. "Oh, don't be cross," coaxed the little girl at the wheel of the roadster. "I only wanted—well, it does seem such a waste—your being so gorgeous and all that..."

"You think," began Katharine with superb scorn, "that being in love's such fun. Is that it?"

Zoe, remembering her tears and furies and imprecations, when dragged away from the adored Gibbs, had the grace to color.

"Not—not fun, exactly. Oh, but it's what makes life worth living. Haven't you ever, not one single time, waked up in the morning to find the sky bluer and the sun brighter and everything—oh, marvelous—just because you were going to see someone?"

"No, I haven't."

"I don't," murmured Zoe, "quite believe it."

Any moment now, Katharine's errant thoughts ran, any moment Michael and Sally Moon would be fording the low river, Sally's dark curls would bob deliciously on her shoulders—if you liked that sort of thing, it was all right—and Michael would be speaking in a low tone to Fury, urging her up the bank.

Suddenly everything was helpful; Zoe with her babble of puppy love and sunrises and blue skies—everything!

"I've simply got to see Gibbs," Zoe cried abruptly, receding to her original theme.

"I won't have a thing to do with it," Katharine declared.

"Oh, how mean of you!"

Katharine strode up the lane without a single backward look as Zoe, after one or two reproachful mutterings, slid the car into gear. Oh, it was altogether a horrid day! Now Zoe would be angry and Katharine felt within herself the murmurings of a deep discontent. She longed, suddenly, to be doing something important—going to Paris to study art, taking a school in the southern mountains as Harriet Greening had done, making something real and important of her life.

Terrible to be a girl—even in this day of much vaunted freedom for woman. Poor girls. Katharine mused, had all the luck. They could strike out for themselves. They could have the infinite satisfaction of doing work that was fascinating and important or both. She hated her soft, easy, uninteresting life. To go back home, to listen to her stepmother talk prettily of bridge and new slippers for the morning room, seemed unendurable.

The house was dim and shaded when Katharine reached it. Wisteria and ivy swung before the drawing room windows. Striped cherry and white awnings shut out the sun from the long veranda facing the water. The Parker place was some few hundred yards away, separated from the Strykhurst's only by the grounds of a convent. Through the wooden lattice work, Katharine could see a few novices moving gently up and down the paths. An old nun was reading from her daily office book. In the grape arbor, two or three lay sisters worked busily, talking softly together. How happy and busy they all seemed, thought the girl, with envy. Here there was literally nothing to do. In the garden a snarled Italian worked as Mrs. Strykhurst, moving capably from bush to bush, gave orders in her concise voice. Maids were busy above stairs, shaking out fresh linen for the beds. The cook sang over her pudding sauce in the kitchen.

Katharine clenched her hands. "I've got to do something," she said. "I can't just drift around here. It seems to me that everyone else in the whole world has a place—a meaning." Her eyes filled, to her dismay and anger, with tears. Ellen, the pleasant Irish parlormaid, came out upon the veranda at the moment.

"There's a gentleman to see you, Miss. I left him in the library."

Katharine took the card from the little silver tray and read, "John Gilder Kaye."

Instantly she was on her feet, a running along the hall to the dark, cool vault that was lined with her father's books.

"Why, Johnny Kaye! Wherever did you drop from?"

The people in Innicoek who thought Katharine Strykhurst cool and self-contained would have been amazed at this transformation in her. The man of 30 who rose from the deep leather chair evidently was not surprised at the warmth of her welcome. Her two hands were clasped in his. There was a duet of voices as Mrs. Strykhurst passed the window and glanced curiously within.

"So John Kaye's back," observed Bertine Strykhurst with satisfaction. "Well, perhaps we shan't have Katharine moping any more."

Few seem to know that a war is going on between Bolivian and Paraguayan troops, there not being an upside-down stomach or a running along the hall to the dark, Mae West ex-husband in the lot.

SHE CALLS IT A COOKS TOUR

NOBODY thought Katherine would make a very good wife. She seemed too frivolous. Always made a game out of everything. Hadn't a practical thought in her head—so it seemed.

Maybe that's why she DOES make Ed such a good wife. You still wouldn't think she was serious about a thing. Yet she must be. Because you've never seen a house kept better in your life. Or a budget balanced more neatly.

Most women come home from shopping all tired out. Not Katherine! She makes a grand game of it... calls it her weekly "Cook's Tour." She pores over her newspaper like a travel map... charts a course that takes her to bargain ports... and gets there without one wasted step.

How? She follows the advertisements... Watches them as closely as a sailor watches his compass. And she gets fun out of it all... But who wouldn't, with a happy home like hers and her knack for saving up money!

A dream inspired by back-breaking toil in the inventors' youthful days in Texas is forged into this machine, hailed as the first practical cotton picker. Built by Mack D. and John D. Rust, it was exhibited the first time at the National Cotton Show in Memphis. In tests it has picked more than 8000 pounds in a 7 1/2-hour day, as much as an average hand picker will gather in 10 weeks. The principle is simple. Rotating moistened spindles enter the plant, the cotton adheres to them, and is stripped away by a suction fan which delivers the cotton to a container attached to the upright pipe shown in this picture.

Equipose's Illness Costs Players Another $500,000
It was the second year in succession that a C V Whitney non-innocent cost winter book players a half million, Equipose having taken sick the week of the previous Derby.

By HARRY GRAYSON
LOUISVILLE—Chance Sun's withdrawal from the Kentucky Derby was another striking example of the unpopularity of the book for everybody but the book-makers.
Pay or play means that you pay even if your horse doesn't get to the post. In the case of Chance Sun, those who made the white-faced son of Chance Shot the winter book players' coin went out the window when Golden Broom broke down a fortnight before the running of the Derby that was captured by Paul Jones in 1920.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

IT'S about time to be putting away woolen blankets for the summer, and as I like to dry mine outdoors I'm looking for the first warm day with a gentle breeze so I can wash them and put them away clean.
Moths dislike clean fabrics, so if you put your blankets away fresh and sweet you'll disappoint the bothersome creatures.
It's a good idea to wash blankets before they get very much soiled. The soft wool fiber is easily injured by too harsh methods, so take care in handling them.

Tomorrow's Menu
BREAKFAST: Stewed rhubarb, broiled fresh fish, rye muffins, milk, coffee.
LUNCHEON: Veal and macaroni pudding, tomato and celery salad, toasted muffins, prune whip, milk, tea.
DINNER: Tomato juice cocktail, baked Canadian bacon, peppers stuffed with rice, beet and cream cheese salad, strawberry chiffon pie, milk, coffee.

Lukewarm Water Is Best
Lukewarm water must be used for both washing and rinsing. Heat and cold both have a tendency to shrink woolens and heat discolors as well as shrinks them. A mild soap thoroughly dissolved in the water before the blankets are put in does much to restore the fluffiness as it cleans. Force the suds through the fabric by rubbing with your hands. This naturally may be more soiled than the rest of the blanket, so it may be rubbed between the hands if necessary.

Pressed for Time, Coyne Drives Chance Sun Too Hard
COYNE gave Chance Sun plenty of time to get his growth, but it seems that the bad break in the weather caused him to overwork the brown and beautifully marked colt.
It takes 60 days or longer for a thoroughbred to get his legs, and Coyne was faced with the problem of sharpening up Chance Sun in a month breezes. But it was something else again when it was time to tighten up. Chance Sun simply was too tired to run.
