Report of Conviction In Case In Error, Judge Points Out The story carried in this paper in its issue of June 4th, stating that Bill Nichols of the Lone Cedar community, and his nephew, Jim Casey, had been convicted and sentenced on burglary charges for theft of "part of a gallon of oil" was in error inasmuch as the sentence was for burglary and theft of the oil was not involved, Judge Burette W. Patterson, in whose court the case was heard, stated this morning.

The T. & P. railroad is to be commended for placing warning signals at the regular crossing near the depot. That will no doubt eliminate any chance of serious accidents on the main Breckenridge highway. But that was never near as dangerous as the one in question. It is hoped that there will be as little delay as possible in getting started on the work of protecting those who must cross the grade at the old highway.

Exposition to Recall Romantic Northwest

Looking ahead a small matter of 11 years, the people of the Pacific Northwest are already preparing for a big centennial exposition in 1946 to celebrate the acquisition by the federal union of Oregon territory.

If you like expositions—as most of us do—almost any excuse is good enough to justify holding one. The excuse in this case, however, seems especially good, for it celebrates one of the most romantic and important phases of our entire history—and marks, also, a significant event in international relations.

Consider the second point first. Oregon territory—comprising the present states of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho—was part of a vast stretch of land which was in dispute between the United States and England for many years.

The Louisiana purchase left the northwest boundaries of the country in a fog. The United States claimed everything up to Alaska; Britain claimed everything down to Mexico—whose northern boundaries then was the upper end of California.

You can still read in your school books about the "54-40 or Fight" slogan of the fire-eaters of those days. The way was open for war; indeed, war was at that time just about the only recognized way of settling an argument of that kind.

But there was no war. Instead, there was a peaceful compromise, with each nation taking less than it felt entitled to—and this compromise, more than any other one thing, cemented the theory that no dispute could arise along the Canadian boundary which could not be settled peacefully.

So much for that. The purely romantic and picturesque aspects of the anniversary make it equally worth celebrating.

It was in 1843 that the first great wagon train plodded its way to Oregon. The first white women had taken up residence in the territory seven years earlier; in 1843 the first American government was formally organized there.

And then began that great epic of pioneering achievement which made the homely covered wagon an emblem of lusty youth and high daring, and which by its steady pushing back of the frontier saved America from the pressure of Europe's industrial problems and made it possible for the concept of a classless society to endure to our own day.

All in all, the story of the Oregon trail is one of the greatest in our history. If any chapter in the American story is worth celebrating with a centennial exposition, it is this.

The people of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon ought to put on a great show; they have all the materials for it.

Bogus Oil Deal Shows Value of Confidence

When you get through chuckling about the story of the bogus oil promoter who came to grief in Tulsa after a short but active career as a big shot, you might find it worth while to take a second look at the affair. There is something rather instructive about it all.

This man, as you have probably read, blew into Tulsa announcing that he was the head of a big new oil company.

He rented the entire floor of a bank building and established offices there. He bought a home and established a couple of servants in it. He arranged with a contracting firm to build a $1,000,000 refinery near Fort Smith, Ark.

Then, through a bank, he got in touch with a New York brokerage outfit which agreed to market $500,000 worth of bonds in this project. Next he summoned a railroad representative and arranged for construction of a spur line to his new factory.

And all the while his actual assets amounted to nothing more than a pleasant smile and three cents in cash.

Eventually, of course, his balloon exploded from sheer excess of hot air, and he went smiling off to jail.

But his whole venture is a beautiful illustration of the way in which we are compelled to take each other's word for things in this modern world.

The only difference between this man's activities and those of a bona fide business man seeking to establish a new plant was that this man had no backing. He was able to build a beautiful framework on the mere fact that people trusted him.

Not once did he lay a cent of cash on the line. Nobody asked him to. People just took it for granted that a man doing the things he was doing was operating in good faith.

There could hardly be a stronger example of the way in which modern business is founded on confidence—confidence that the other fellow is on the level, that he is what he says he is, and will do what he says he will do.

Once in a blue moon someone comes along and abuses his confidence. In this Oklahoma case, the result was something to chuckle at, in the Kreuger case, it was a financial holocaust.

Summer Sweethearts

By Mabel McElliot © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
 Katharine Strykhurst, beautiful, in love with Michael Heatheroe, who runs a riding school. His father is rich and her father is snobbish. Katharine's friend, unhappy love affair and is from suicide by young Dr. says.

Michael is to marry Sally and is broken-hearted. She overhears two detectives asking for Michael's address and, thinking him in danger, rushes to warn him. Michael sets off with Katharine in her car. He tells her she had better ask her to marry him. Impulsively Katharine agrees. They are married in an obscure little town. Afterward Michael insists on returning to face the detectives. Now Go On With the Story

CHAPTER XXV
 Michael said quietly, "Tricked you? No—"
 "But you did!" Katharine insisted. Her eyes were wide with a sort of horror. "Oh, if you knew you'd nothing to fear why did you make me come off with you like this? You said you wouldn't go unless I went with you."
 "Because," the man said with deliberation, "I loved you."
 "Ah, that!" She struck one palm against another (as if in fury. "It is a queer sort of love that doesn't trust—isn't open and aboveboard."

 "This is," persisted Michael Heatheroe. "Ah, don't let anything come between us now."
 "But why the detectives?" pursued Katharine, in that bewildered tone. "Why should they be looking for you, without reason?"
 "We can go back," the man said quietly, "and find out what it's all about."
 It had been different when she had thought she was racing off with a vagabond, a fugitive. The whole affair had worn a sort of brave air. Now—what could she say to her stepmother, to all the others? She had married Sally Moon's fiancee. Katharine Strvkhurst, the girl who inspired a jilt. "I hate you!" she cried wildly, striking at the hand she had caressed five minutes before.
 "No, you don't, Katharine."
 She thrust him away. "I do. I swear it."
 She was close to tears—perilous, angry, choking tears. But she would not let them come. "What they'll say of me!" she raged. "And it will be true. A fool . . ."
 "Does it matter?"
 She did not deign to look at him. "Of course, it does."
 "That, my dear Katharine," said the man beside her, in a coolly conversational tone, "is your trouble. You have a picture of yourself as others see you. You are continually altering that picture to suit your audience, living up to it. It's too hard. Snap out of it. Be yourself."
 "Oh, oh!" she choked with rage. "How dare you talk like this to me? After all, I—"
 The words almost flew out. "After all, I am your wife." But she checked them.
 "I dare," said Michael Heatheroe "because I love you. Don't shake your head. It's true. I've loved you since the first day I saw that mutinous red mouth and those contradictory cool eyes of yours. I knew you were my girl . . . the only one I'd ever seen and wanted."
 Some dangerous softness touched her heart but she steeled it against him.
 "Good talk," she scoffed, "but it doesn't mean anything."
 "Katharine—darling," he said, "don't be like this. You were so sweet a while back . . . I thought I had never known such sweetness. You were a statue come to life at last."
 "I wish I were dead," she choked, in rage. "I'd better be." What a strange wedding day! The sun had been out, but now the clouds were lowering. Thunder in the air!
 "Do you remember," he asked, "the day the rain drove us into the cabin?"
 Mutinously she refused to answer. The drawing voice went on. "You were so high and mighty," Michael Heatheroe said. "I longed to teach you a lesson. Little wildcat!"
 "But you didn't," taunted the girl. "You didn't dare."
 "That was it," he told her. "I was—afraid of you."
 She had kept her eyes resolutely ahead, but now almost against her will, she whirled and stared at him. The emotion that flared between them was at white heat . . . anger fused with love. Her composure broke. She was in his arms, half-sobbing, half-laughing.
 "Michael, Michael, why do we quarrel like this? How horrible of us!"
 "I don't know. Let's stop it."
 She straightened, dabbing at wet eyes with his big handkerchief. "It doesn't matter what you've done. Some power brought us together. But one thing I've got to ask you."

 "What's that?"
 "We mustn't announce our marriage now."
 His eyes darkened. Quietly he said, "Very well. That's for you to decide."
 "If you're sure it's all right for you to go back—and you must be sure, Michael—come along with me now. We'll go on as if nothing had happened. Meantime you can break your engagement with Sally as painlessly as possible. Then we can make plans . . ."
 "It would," said Michael thoughtfully, "be easier in some ways. But I don't like it."
 "We've got to do it this way," the girl said. "It's the only thing."
 She started the car. The air was full of a soft, fine blowing dust now. The thunder started, in a long roll.
 Katharine spoke seldom during the drive. Once she allowed her hand to slip into Michael's lean brown one, and at a stoplight her eyes sought his. He smiled. What a cool, restrained creature this girl was! The man who won her love and confidence could be proud of himself.

 "Tips will have said I went off with you," she said once, musingly, during the drive.
 But Michael said Tips was far too clever for that. "He can play dumb as beautifully as anyone you ever knew," he said. "Tips won't know a thing."
 The miles flew by. The rain pelted down wildly, a storm of drops against the windshield. Brown puddles gathered along the road. There was an oak leaf pasted against the glass—Michael had to reach out and brush it off. The afternoon darkened. The afternoon of her wedding day. Did ever any girl have a stranger one?
 Her mind was confused. Could Michael be sure these men meant no ill to him? He seemed so confident. Was it bravado? She could not tell. She was conscious, at the very core of her being, of a sick feeling of apprehension. She would have so much to explain to Bertine—to her father. And she was a poor liar. Would some local correspondent for a New York paper pick up her name from the marriage license record of that obscure town? You could never tell . . .

No good to worry, sang the tires; no good to worry. Far better, for worse she had taken this man beside her. Fate had been too strong for them both.
 Innicock's church spires came into view below a rise of drenched woodland. The pin oaks on the old Rogers place swept in the wind, like curtseying maidens in dark-green draperies, as the little car drew up. There was no one about.
 "Goodby, Michael—dear."
 He was out of the car, standing hatless in the rain beside her.
 "Goodby, my darling."
 She gave one swift look about. She slipped the ring from her finger.
 "Look, Michael, you must keep this for me. I dare not . . ."
 Frowning a little, he slipped the ring into the pocket of his coat. "I wish you needn't take it off."
 Her glance flew to the porch. The two men she had seen in the village, now hatless, apparently at home, were emerging from the screened doorway.
 "There they are, Michael." It seemed to her that they could hear the wild pounding of her heart. "I told you—"
 He glanced coolly at the intruders. "So they are. Well, what of it?"

 "Michael, perhaps I'd better wait . . . I'm terribly afraid."
 He shook his head. "You mustn't. I'll telephone you . . ."
 She had to be content with that. They parted without another word. Katharine backed the car out of the lane; in a trance she followed the road toward home.
 She had Bertine to face. She had an endless tittle of lies before her . . . but she was not thinking of this as she turned into her own driveway. She was thinking of Michael Heatheroe's kiss upon her lips. What lay before them both she could not guess.

Wheeler-Rayburn Bill Violates Spirit of New Deal...

DOES the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, which would injure and handicap local electric companies, follow the spirit of the New Deal? This bill, now pending in Congress, has caused a nation-wide protest because it arbitrarily abolishes holding companies and usurps local control of privately-owned electric companies, passing that control into the hands of political commissions in Washington.

As generally understood the New Deal has these three main objectives. To:

- 1—Create employment
- 2—Bring back prosperity
- 3—Establish greater social security

Let's test the Wheeler-Rayburn bill as far as the New Deal is concerned:

Would the Wheeler-Rayburn bill create more jobs? NO! By abolishing holding companies it would put many more thousands into the ranks of the unemployed and on relief. Also the drastic and unfair restrictions it places on local companies would discourage greater payrolls and expenditures. It would spread fear to other employers of labor because of its socialistic trend. This would create greater unemployment.

Will the Wheeler-Rayburn bill aid in the return to prosperity? NO! It would delay our return to better days because it would cripple and in many instances actually destroy large segments of one of the largest industries and one of the largest taxpayers in the country. The investments of ten million people would be endangered and in many instances, destroyed.

What business can prosper with its control and its very destiny in the hands of political commissions!

Will the Wheeler-Rayburn bill establish social security? NO! For reasons already given the Wheeler-Rayburn bill would undermine security.

It would undermine the security that now exists among the half million employees of public utilities. It would make of these employees political office-holders!

It would cut loose the security of the thousands employed by holding companies, sending them out to look for jobs.

It would invade the homes of millions and destroy honest investments.

It would spread unrest, and make business afraid. This fear would retard prosperity.

The Wheeler-Rayburn bill violates the very spirit of the New Deal.
