300 Killed, 1,000 Injured In West Indian Storm

Santo Domingo Is Swept Away By a Hurricane

By FRANCISCO ESCOBAR, United Press Correspondent. SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic, Sept. 4.—A hurricane crossed the island yesterday, destroying a large part of the capital and killing many persons. The most authoritative early estimates of dead were about 300, with almost 1,000 others injured. Damage to the city, including the destruction of the home of American Minister Charles B. Curtis, was estimated at more than $15,000,000.

The sum of $15,000 was called to American Minister Charles B. Curtis in Santo Domingo by the American Red Cross within a few minutes after being informed by the State Department of the extensive damage caused by the Santo Domingo hurricane.

New Railroad Is Predicted For East Panhandle

By UNITED PRESS. CHILDRESS, Tex., Sept. 3.—Few rails across a tier of counties in the eastern Panhandle controlled by the Fort Worth and Denver in agreement with the Rock Island lines was the prediction of railroad men here today. The Rock Island previously received a permit to build from Shamrock through Collingsworth and Childress counties, to a point in the Frisco north of Quanah. The Interstate Commerce Commission also gave the Denver Road permission to build from Childress to Tampa, asking that the two companies agree on a single line between Wellington and Shamrock. According to predictions of railroad men a Rock Island line will run from Childress to Paducah, thence to a connection with the Texas and Western at Seymour. The railroads could use a jointly owned track from Shamrock to Childress.

The Rock Island route would give a rich territory and protect oil jobs and manufacturing. It would also give a direct territory by Kansas City, St. Louis, and Oklahoma City shippers.

The Hollywood Story

BY ERNEST LYNN

BEGIN HERE TODAY

It was not difficult once he had decided. He knew very clearly what he wanted to say, just as the screen treatment would state from the script; and he wrote swiftly, with a keen zest for his task.

At one o'clock there was a rap on the door and Phillips entered. "Have to knock off for lunch," he ordered amiably; "his is in my shop. Come on out and we'll have a bite together. How's it coming?"

"Pretty fair," Dan said. "I had ideas it was lunch time already, but he beat it in more than three hours."

Phillips laughed. "You've been writing something, too, haven't you?" He moved over to the little table and estimated the number of words that had emerged from the typewriter, and he turned to look at Dan with something like respect in his eyes.

On their way to the restaurant Phillips said that Collier had dropped in during the morning. "I told him you were upstairs working and he grinned all over himself. Paul thinks pretty well of it."

It was the greatest guy in the city," Dan said warmly, and he smiled, too, that Collier had used Phillips pretty accurately referring to him as "a good fellow."

Dime Covers Newest Watch

SINCE man first began to reckon time with mechanical contrivances, the watchmaker has reversed the accepted slogan of "bigger and better" and has aimed at smaller and smaller timekeeping devices. The latest development, "The Baguette," which can be covered with a dime, was recently exhibited in Chicago as the newest thing in women's smart accessories. It contains a movement only three quarters of an inch long and a little more than one-quarter of an inch wide and yet, by a rearrangement of the various parts, the watch is said to keep accurate time.

Modern life, it seems, however, has stepped up the watch's nervous system as well as that of humans for the balance wheel of the Baguette vibrates about 21,600 times an hour as compared with 18,000 vibrations an hour for a standard size pocket watch or 16,000 vibrations an hour for the average clock. Picture shows William M. Stutte, veteran watchmaker, comparing the "baby" wrist watch with an ordinary size pocket watch. In the background is a 300 year old Swedish clock, one of a collection which Mr. Stutte has made in 47 years at the watchmaker's bench.

Phillips discover it. You spoke your two cents worth, too, didn't you?" he accused.

"Oh, that?" Paul grinned. "Sure, I told him the same thing I told you. Where's the harm in that?"

"Well, you were pretty swell to do it. I'll owe you a lot if it goes over."

"Don't be silly. They shouldn't let talent like yours run around loose. The trouble with you is you need a manager."

CHAPTER XXXII

When Dan and Paul returned from dinner that evening the girl at the telephone switchboard downstairs informed them that there had been a call for Mr. Rorimer.

"From Miss Anne Winter. She left word for you to call her, Mr. Rorimer, as soon as you came in. Shall I put the call through for you?"

Dan nodded. "If you will please. We're going right up."

Anne said, as soon as she heard his voice: "Eva's gone, Dan."

The import of her words was slow in reaching him. "You mean..."

"I mean Eva has left, yes."

Mona, Anne said, had gone downtown that afternoon, and when she got back to the bungalow Eva was gone and there was a note from her. "Poor Eva." There was a hint of tears in Anne's voice.

"I'm sorry Anne." And he was; he had always felt sorry for Eva, in leaving Hollywood, had done a wise thing. He told Anne so.

"Oh, I know it," she said sorrowfully. "I know it, but..."

And Dan interrupted her to ask where Eva had gone. "Did she go back to New Orleans?"

"Yes," she told him then about the pitiful little note that Eva had written and left for them—all the more pitiful because Eva had tried to write so bravely.

"And she said—Anne spoke with a catch in her voice—"she said that it wasn't goodbye really, because she would see us in pictures, and hear us talk. I feel very broken-hearted, Dan."

"I know it. It's pretty tough, Anne. But you'll have to try not to feel badly." And he asked how Mona had taken it. "I guess it hits Mona pretty hard, doesn't it?"

"Terribly."

When she had hung up he told Paul Collier what had happened.

"It's a rotten shame," Collier said, but he, too, agreed that Eva had done wisely. "It would be a good thing," he said earnestly, "if a few thousand more of them packed up and went home; they'd save themselves a lot of grief."

Paul declared that sometimes when he got to thinking of the extras he felt very blue. "Positively. I know a few, and I'll swear I don't see how they get along. And there are lots of them worse off than Eva Harley; Eva at least had a couple of friends she could count on."

He sat down then to his typewriter. (Continued on Page 6)

New Diary Of Andree Is Said To Be Found

By UNITED PRESS
By Frederick Laudon
TRONSOE, Norway, Sept. 3.—The discovery of a new diary kept by the Andree expedition lost in the Arctic 33 years ago, more voluminous than the previously discovered record of the polar explorers, was announced today by one of the Swedish experts here to view the relics of their camp.

The existence of the diary, which may disclose further details of the wanderings of Salomon August Andree and his two companions after their unsuccessful attempt to fly to the North Pole in a balloon in 1897, was confirmed by a statement issued by the Swedo-Norwegian commission which will have official charge of the remains of the expedition.

The bodies of Andree and Nils Strindberg have been identified, the statement added. "The organic parts were partly destroyed, but their clothing was found in relatively good condition."

"Clothing included a jacket, a cap, and a pair of boots in which there were two diaries, both covered with wax."

"One diary contained only a few pages, but the second was quite voluminous. It was written in pencil and contains complete description of the wanderings of Andree and his companions over the ice. This will probably be the chief document from which records of the expedition may be obtained."

"The writing is quite easily read, although complete understanding is difficult because the pages are mixed and do not follow each other."

The boots containing the diaries were found covered by a woolen jacket beneath Andree's body.

THE PLAN WILL TEACH YOU HOW TO SAVE! WATCH THE WINDOWS.

The rules at the left are the rules governing an easy payment plan offered by several of Eastland's leading merchants.

It's a plan that has merit, a plan worthy of the consideration of all—it is the first of its kind ever offered by Eastland merchants.

So generous is the proposition and coming at the opening of the heaviest buying season hundreds no doubt will use the plan for winter and Christmas buying.

Investigate—get every detail—it's good news for the people of this entire section.

RULES OF OFFER
Hundreds of merchants—like the lay-away plan—and the merchants whose ads appear below offer to pay you for the use of your money from now to December 24th, 1930, at the rate of 20% interest per annum on all advance payments according to the following rules:

RULES
This offer is good only from Sept. 1, 1930 to Dec. 24, 1930.
Interest will be paid only on advance payments on merchandise.
Interest on each payment will run from date of payment to expiration of this offer to Dec. 24, 1930, in such cases interest will be paid from date of payment to date of delivery of goods.
No merchandise will be held after Dec. 15, unless held after more has been paid on same.
No interest will be paid if for any reason the merchandise is not taken.

Old Common-Sense Diet Will Aid Problem of Farm Relief

The most important reason behind America's wheat surplus, and therefore behind a large part of the nation's agricultural problem, is illustrated in the accompanying chart.

For two generations prior to the World War, America's increase in population was paralleled almost exactly by her increased consumption of wheat flour. Throughout this period the nation's demand for bread required the milling of between five and six bushels of wheat per person per year.

During the war, however, the Food Administration and other agencies of government exerted every influence possible to curtail domestic consumption of wheat flour. "Save Bread" became a national slogan. The health and strength of our armies and those of our allies, we were told, required that they have first call on our wheat flour.

America responded. Per capita consumption was cut to about four bushels, or a little over, annually. The stay-at-homes ate substitutes and black bread in order that the boys in the trenches might have the bread they needed.

Other abnormalities following the war, not the least was the nation's failure to resume its normal diet. As a result, we have been consuming about 130,000,000 bushels less wheat annually than would be required were we using our old average of 5.3 bushels each per year. At present our consumption is about 4.26 bushels per person annually.

To some extent this is held due to our recent prosperity. Housewives with full purses felt that bread was "too common." Many fancy substitutes were adopted. Another factor has been freak food fads sponsored by interests promoting special health diets and "light foods."

At last, however, the authorities are waking up to the importance of this situation in dealing with the problem of farm relief. The government that in war time urged us to "Save Bread" may now be counted upon to lend a helping hand in a national "Back to Bread" movement. Through such a movement, now being planned, it is hoped to bring about a return to the common-sense diet of former years and to restate as the "standard of life" the old-fashioned bread like mother used to make.

Such a "Back to Bread" program is held to be essential not only for farm relief through the restoration of the old ratio of wheat consumption but dietitians and health authorities declare it to be equally important as a matter of national health. Bread, they state, is strengthening, not fattening, and no substitutes yet found can take its place in wholesome nourishment on the national dinner table.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—The downfall of President Augusto Leguia, dictator of Peru and Uncle Sam's best friend in South America, is in accord with the old adage that prosperity breeds all criticism and that the more prosperous the more criticism. That goes in any country and stronger the factions are which oppose the administration the further it goes in effecting a change of government.

In the United States, which has been going through a protracted period of depression, there is a chance that the Democratic party will obtain control of one both houses of Congress in the coming elections. In any event there will be more Democrats in the Senate and the House.

It's Tough on Hoover

Instead of giving the Hoover administration a vote of confidence and a rip on Congress the press are virtually certain to do things harder for it by strengthening anti-administration attacks. If Hoover himself is running for re-election this year he will find some rough going as it is probably in the things that are done differently from the way they are done here. Few presidents have borne up under such a period of harsh criticism during their first year or two in office as Hoover has. It has been the depression which has been the United States along with many other countries.

Government agitation is to be on the increase in three other Latin-American countries, encouraged by unfavorable economic conditions there is as yet no indication here which indicates

OIL NEWS

COLEMAN, Tex., Sept. 4.—The Arcadia Refining Company has brought in a 500 barrel oil well on the Frank Golsen farm, adjoining the townsite of Burgett, 18 miles north of here. The well is the company's No. 1 Frank Golsen in Isaac Harris survey 164. Sand was topped at 1,577 feet and pay was found in a 60' producing well. A considerable lease activity followed the discovery.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Sept. 4.—The Pettus field in Bee county has added two more completions to its growing list of producing wells. A dry gasser came in a mile and a half northeast of Pettus and is known as the Union Producing Company's No. 24 Ray. It is estimated to be making 20,000,000 cubic feet daily. The other completion is S. R. C. Oil Company's well in block 19 of the Pettus townsite. It was estimated to be making 25,000,000 cubic feet of gas and spraying about 50 barrels of oil daily.

Family Menu

PROBABLY there is no cold supper that is more popular than the one of cold boiled or baked ham and potato salad. When this is served with an unusual accompaniment, it will satisfy the most exacting hostess.

The ham itself may be of several varieties. Canned ham is delicious and entails no preparation or work on the part of the cook. Every butcher shop carries sliced cold boiled ham and most delicatessen shops offer both baked and boiled hams. The housewife who wants to cook her own meat has a choice of several cuts.

First, there is "regular" ham. Whole or half a ham is used, depending on the number of persons to be served. The weight of ham ranges from eight to sixteen pounds. Allowance must be made for the bone. California or "picnic" ham, as they are often called, are shoulders, salted and smoked. There is more fat through the meat and the bone is wide and flat, making it difficult to cut meat slices. This variety is usually much less expensive than real ham.

Washington Letter

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Mr. John J. Raskob is going to be the big issue of the fall election campaigns—if the Republicans have anything to say about it. The party in power expects to make Mr. Raskob a very effective target. As long as Mr. Heston was the Republican chairman his party wasn't in any position to say anything about the other party's chairman. But now the lid is off and the fun begins. The Republican theory is that if they yell "Raskob!" often enough they will save themselves a lot of votes that might otherwise go Democratic.

Daily Menu

LUNCHEON—Broiled Frankfurter, Spanish rice, celery, apple sauce, cookies, milk, tea. DINNER—Hot meat loaf, scalloped potatoes, combination salad, jellied pears with whipped cream, milk, coffee.

water changed once. Bake ham in a very slow oven, allowing 45 minutes to the pound. Boiled ham must be simmered over a slow fire, allowing 50 minutes to an hour per pound.

Cider Frappe is delicious to serve with ham and the recipe follows. A large platter arranged with slices of ham, potato salad and apples filled with cider frappe is a festive and handsome dish to serve buffet fashion to Sunday evening guests.

Cider Frappe Four cups sweet cider, 1 cup cold water, 1 cup orange juice, 1-2 cup lemon juice, 1 cup sugar. Make a syrup of sugar and water. Cool and add to cider with lemon and orange juice. Pour into freezer and freeze until firm. Serve in apples that have been hollowed out to form cups. Rub cut surface of apples with lemon juice to prevent them from discoloring.

Autopsy Shows State Senator Was Poisoned

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Poison enough to kill five persons was found in the stomach of State Senator John P. Joyce who died suddenly two weeks ago on the eve of his scheduled appearance before a grand jury to testify against gangsters who invaded his ward at the April primary. The report of Dr. Clarence Muehlinger, coroner's chemist, telling about the autopsy which revealed the poison, was read by coroner Herman N. Bundesen today at the re-opening of an inquest into Joyce's death.

Play a new role

You can't be yourself many years at a stretch, without being somebody new! All at once, you will be using different cosmetics, eating different foods, setting your table differently, rearranging your surroundings, readjusting your whole scheme of life.

Advertisements lead you to do this—even when you are least aware. They announce the new discoveries. Others try them. You try them. Of a sudden, you've changed! The old is at once too out-of-date. It is too slow in this age of speed. Too ineffective in this age of perfection.

Somewhere, in advertisements you have not read yet, are things other people are reading about that will make a change in you. Read the advertisements here today. You will discover some of the things you will want to use habitually. You might even get ahead and start using some today.

The Hollywood Story

writer and began to write, and after a while he laid what he had written in front of Dan and asked him to read it.

It was a "column" about the Hollywood extras, a moving little story about an army that was doomed to failure. Dan, when he had read it, nodded approvingly and declared it was a pretty piece of writing. Paul, he thought, ought to try his hand at "sob stuff" more often.

"You're crazy not to. This is the best column you've turned out in weeks."

Paul took it and began to "read copy" on it. Some day, he prophesied in Hollywood. "It's here, all right."

"If you weren't so lazy," Dan told him unfeelingly, "you'd write it yourself."

Paul irritated him sometimes. Dan thought he was a little too satisfied with things as they were, and that he ought to make more use of his ability. He was forever thinking of a story that he ought to write, but he never got around to it; or, as in the case of the book he had started on, his enthusiasm soon died.

He turned back to his magazine then, but he made a sorry job of getting anything out of it, because his thoughts persisted in dwelling on the interview he had had with Phillips. Phillips at that very moment might be reading his manuscript, and Dan wondered uneasily what the man's verdict would be.

Now that the thing was out of his hands, he could think of several places where he might have improved it; but that was always the way. It had been like that when he was writing news stories and fiction; once the stuff was irrevocably in print, faults became apparent to which he had been blind when it was not too late to remedy them.

He threw his magazine down and got up and strolled aimlessly through the apartment. Paul glanced at him once or twice and then turned back to his typewriting; but presently he announced with a great deal of noise that he was knocking off for the night.

"What's bothering you, my boy?" And he added with a broad grin that he could guess. "Let's get out of here for a while. Grab your hat."

Dan spent the following forenoon writing letters, a task that he had no taste for; but he wanted to be at home in the event of a telephone call from Grand United. He wrote a long-overdue letter to Ziggy Young. Ziggy was clamorous for news of himself and Anne Winter; and Ziggy said that his mother down in Tulsa, who was very fond of Anne, had wanted to know what kind of a person Dan Romer was.

"And if you don't write pretty soon," read Ziggy's threat, "I'll tell her. Furthermore, I've still got that telegram you sent me just before you first called on little Anne—and those neckties you sent me are just about worn out. They must have been pretty cheap." In reply Dan wrote that the ties had been sent as a mark of gratitude; he'd send none as a bribe, and Ziggy might as well get his blackmailing ideas out of his head. "And those ties cost six dollars apiece, which is more than you pay for a hat, you little red-headed squirt."

He wrote a letter to his parents in Knoxville, enclosing a snapshot of himself standing beneath a palm tree. Paul had taken it. And there was another letter to a former pal in Detroit—long ones, all of them.

But when lunch time rolled around there had been no phone call from Grand United.

"Maybe he didn't read it after all," Dan thought, departing for lunch. "Maybe something turned up."

Paul, though, had told him that if Phillips promised to read it immediately and give him a verdict, he would do that very thing.

"That's great news," Dan said, trying to speak calmly. "Please tell Mr. Phillips that I appreciate his kindness very much."

"I'll do that, and we'll get in touch with you as soon as we know what the decision is."

There was nothing to do, then, but wait, but it was something to know that Phillips was for it.

"Just how important is Phillips, anyway?" Dan asked Collier.

"He's got a big job; his word goes a long way," Paul said. "But it's the production department that's the hard part. Getting by them is sometimes a different matter. But you don't need to worry; I'm dazed positively. They're not dizzy enough to pass that up."

"No?" Dan was skeptical. "You don't know how dizzy a production department can be. I've had experience with one. Plenty," he added with bitter emphasis.

But Paul said he wasn't dealing with Continental now. "This is a real outfit."

Anne was curious to know what had happened. She called him up the following day and they went out that evening and danced. It was the first time in many weeks that he had danced with her, and she reminded her of this.

"Who's been taking you around?"

And Anne laughed gaily. "Oh, not many people."

"Plenty, I'll bet." He knew that she had been going out a good

Actress Sued by Wife of Cartoonist

Playwriting was literally a labor of love for comely Constance Collier, right, and Bruce Bainsfather, noted cartoonist and dramatist, according to a suit for $100,000 damages filed against the English actress in New York by Mrs. Bainsfather, left. The complaint charges that Miss Collier, while engaged in collaborating with Bainsfather on a new play, "maliciously enticed" the playwright away from his wife. Bainsfather is famous for his war cartoons of "Abe" and "Old Bill" and his war play, "The Better Ole."

U. S. Tractors Sell Chinese

PEIPING, Sept. 4—Great possibilities of American caterpillar tractors in making good roads in China have been demonstrated by American engineers on the highway between Peiping and Tientsin, and the provincial authorities have agreed to finance construction of a first class highway between these two cities of 1,000,000 population each.

The demonstration was arranged by A. Bland Calder, assistant commercial attaché of the American Legation.

For a year past, Calder has talked with provincial officials, pointing out the advantages of having a good highway between Peiping and Tientsin, upon which automobiles may run smoothly and quickly. The distance is about 80 miles, but there never has been a real motor highway built.

So much money has been needed for civil wars that provincial authorities were hesitant to act, but the demonstration was so effective that they now have agreed to start work at once. Calder also is seeking to remove the exorbitant octroi tax, a relic of the Middle Ages, by which an automobile is charged about $75 sold to come from Tientsin to Peiping.

With a real highway built, it is

Marshall Field 3d Wed in London

Theirs was "the most exciting wedding London has known for years"—so one English newspaper described it. And here you see Marshall Field 3d, wealthy Chicago merchant, and the former Mrs. Dudley Coats, British society leader, when they emerged as bride and groom from the Marylebone Register Office. As news of the secret marriage ceremony spread about the English capital, thousands of persons thronged the streets outside the registry office. London papers gave more space to the accounts of their marriage than to the return of the dirigible R-100 from Canada on the same day.

Peiping Has Eating Club

PEIPING, Sept. 4—A group of Chinese lovers of good food in Tientsin have banded together to organize an exclusive little restaurant of their own, where they may taste dishes once reserved exclusively for the use of the late Empress Dowager Tau Hsi and her favorites, served only in the Forbidden City in old Peking, and in the Summer Palace.

The restaurant, or club, has been established in the theatre of the palace of the late Li Yuan-hun in Tientsin. It was the first vice-president of the Chinese Republic, and started the revolution which overthrew the Manchus in 1911 at Hankow.

Recipes for the former imperial dishes have never been written down. They were the secrets of the Empress Dowager's chef, and were communicated by him to his nephew, who cooks them himself in Tientsin's new Gourmet's Club.

It is related that the Emperor of Japan once sent his chefs to Peking, to learn the secrets of the Empress Dowager's chefs. The old Empress gave permission for them to enter the kitchens, but Chinese chefs guard their secrets even in the face of imperial orders.

The Chinese chefs cooked the dishes before their eyes, but moved so quickly and obscurely that the Japanese could make nothing of their movements. They returned knowing little more than when they arrived.

Colorful Comfort In The Bath Room

BECAUSE cotton and linen clothes and napery have been going to the laundry for these many years there came to be built up in our minds the idea that nothing that was not shining white was really clean. Glittering nickle or white tiles were the marks of the up-to-date bath room. The shower curtains just had to be white.

And then the women of the land began to insist on more color in their homes, more colorful walls, more cheerful looking upholstery, more charm and less cold monotony all through the house. That was when the colorful bath room first bloomed into its present dainty state. It is now no longer necessary to visualize the bath room as a purely utilitarian part of the home. The attractive use of color has made the modern bath room a delight to the eye. Even the fixtures are now being done in tones to agree with the color scheme of the room, and the towels, the soap, the curtains, and even the table and stool, are colored to meet the general scheme.

One of the most decorative uses of color in the bath room is in connection with the shower curtains. The above picture shows a modern room delightfully worked out in color and having a shower curtain in rayon and cotton water-repellent cloth woven with a green and silver combination with horizontal stripes.

This color combination gives a charming note to the room, which is carried out by the fixture hues and the lining. These shower curtains are not only beautiful but practical as well as they dry quickly and retain their pleasing texture as long as they are in use.
