Lumber Industry Forsees Continued Gain In Business

Based upon a detailed economic analysis, the special lumber survey committee in its report to the De partment of Commerce states that prospects indicate a continued gain in lumber consumption. However, no extraordinary rise in demand over usual seasonal increases s forecast and the survey commit tee recommends that any substantial addition to lumber production should follow actual demonstrated increases in demand rather than any anticipated gain.

We Should Get Truth About Life In Slums

Probably the hoariest and sorriest of the gags in which well-fed people indulge concerning the poor has to do with the tradition that every slum family looks on a bathtub as a good place in which to store coal.

The joke has done service for a great many years. It had almost died of old age when it was revived by the recent rise of the slum clearance idea. People who ought to know better assured us that it was useless to provide slum dwellers with bathrooms; they'd just put coal in the bathtubs, and all the expensive plumbing would be wasted.

It occurred to somebody, at last, to find out whether there really was anything in this story. The New York City Housing Authority, preparing to build a low-cost housing development, sent a number of investigators through upward of 1300 slum homes to have a look. These investigators looked and came back with the report that in not one of these tenements did they find a bathtub that was used for anything but taking baths.

Some of the slum people were good housekeepers and some were rotten housekepers. Some kept their dark little suites clean and neat, and others made no attempt to do so. But not one family piled its coal supply in the tub-although, as the investigators remarked, it would hardly be surprising if they did, since most tenement bathtubs are really washtubs in the kitchen, handy to the stove.

None of this is especially important, of course, except that it does give us a chance to kill this cruel old wisecrack; and that is worth doing, because gags of that kind are shields behind which comfortable folk can keep themselves from realizing just how tough life is for some of their fellow citizens.

No sensitive person can look at some of the hovels which thousands and thousands of Americans have to call homes without feeling unutterably heartsick. And to feel heartsick and indignant in the face of human suffering is good-because, sooner or later, that heartsickness and indignation make people get up on their hind legs and do something to wipe out the causes of the suffering.

But heartless, lying jokes such as the coal-in-the-bathtub thing stand in our way. We see people living miserably in a dark hole hardly fit for animals-and then somebody says "Oh, people like that don't mind. They don't know anything better. They like to be dirty. Why, they keep their coal in the bathtub."

So our indignation dies down, and we are content to let our country continue to carry its dreadful, expensive load of slums.

Perhaps if we can once understand that this kind of talk simply isn't true, we can get to the point of being willing to stand the cost of putting slums out of existence.

Tablets found in France reveal human beings had an alphabet 100 centuries ago, which was our first intimation there had been an Antique Deal.
