Book Formula Breaks Down in Real Life

A young Chicago woman, discovering that her husband was infatuated with another woman, committed suicide so that the two sweethearts would be free to marry. But a day or so after the funeral, the other woman discovered that this blazing love affair had cooled her off to a mere glow, and was getting cooler every moment; so she announced that the stuff was off, and that the marriage would never take place.

"He took me around a little, but the only present he ever gave me was a box of candy," she explained. "I don't think I love him and I doubt if I'll ever see him again. I'm tired of him."

Just what the shade of the first wife thinks of all this is not recorded, nor is the re-action of the man in the case recorded; but a casual newspaper reader, meditating over this tragic and useless affair, can only conclude that all the parties involved must have been reading too many modern novels.

The modern novelist, who feels that he has been emancipated from all the old romantic traditions, is really more of a slave to romantic tradition than any of his predecessors, and the tradition which has enslaved him is this: that when two people discover they are in love, it is their high and holy duty to drop everything and rush to each other, no matter how many wives, husbands, children, or disapproving relatives may stand in the way.

If you are up on current literature, you will recognize that tradition at once. Over and over again the story is told; how John, happily married, meets Mary, also happily married, and how they kindle a great and overpowering flame between themselves, so that it is eternally right and proper for them to discard their present helpmates (at whatever cost in tears and heartaches) and devote themselves to the feeding of this great new flame of irresistible love.

Somehow it seems to work out pretty well—in books. But when it is copied in real life it generally produces a grand mess; and now and then it brings about a miserable, needless tragedy like this one in Chicago.

For this novelists' theory is a phony. This great and holy love business is usually just another name for sensual self-indulgence; our modern Tristrams and Isolde are generally just a flock of petty cheaters, the key to whose characters is nothing more or less than old-fashioned selfishness.

Our strait-laced grandparents weren't so dumb, after all. In their eyes the girl who stepped across the marriage lines was a sap and the man was a scoundrel; and almost everywhere, except in the pages of the modern novel, that still holds good.

Happenings like this in Chicago indicate that the novelists might well go to school to the mid-Victorians.

Soviet academy reports evidence of changes in the earth's gravity. When Il Duce quits threatening to take on the world, its mirth will probably subside.

CHIEF OF WRITERS' PROJECT TO W. K. JACKSON, DATA COMPILER, NAMED HAVE AID OF EASTLAND SCRIBE

Judge R. C. Crane of Sweetwater, appointed Tuesday as district No. 13 "supervisor of writers' project" under the works progress administration, will have the assistance of an Eastland man who has compiled and authored two state-wide volumes.

Judge Crane's No. 1 assistant will be W. K. Jackson, Eastland resident since 1917, who was assistant to the manager of the land department in Texas for the Prairie Oil & Gas company.

In recent weeks, Jackson, map-maker and abstractor, has been serving as office engineer for the survey of the proposed Mangum lake and dam.

The Eastland man spent nine months in 1908 in compiling and writing "A History of the State of Texas" for the Jackson Map company of which he was owner. Jackson's book was published and 1700 copies were sent to friends and customers of the map publishing company. It was a 160-page volume, size 15x17 and one-half inches, and 880 "cuts" were used.

In 1898 the Eastland man compiled and wrote a 1100-page book on prominent South Dakotans. The book was published by the George Ogle company of Chicago. Over three years were spent in compilation of this material.

Other statistical work performed by Jackson includes a history and record of land ownership of land to which he was assigned by the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

Recently Jackson compiled data on the McCleskey discovery well near Ranger for the Centennial Commission.

Russell, Bob Norrell, James Asbury, L. B. Lewis.

The "writers project" calls for the compilation of data on the history, architecture, geology and resources of the 11 counties of this WPA district. The material will then be written for inclusion in an American Guide Book which the government will print and make available to the public. Similar work is being done throughout the country.

Others to aid in the work will be appointed by R. H. Horan, assistant state superintendent of the writers' project division of WPA under J. Frank Davis of San Antonio.

Judge Crane, chief of the project in this section, has been the only president of the West Texas Historical society since its organization in 1924. He recently urged that the Centennial Commission plan for the erection of a monument to C. U. Connelley, founder of Eastland.

Counties in this district are WPA district are Eastland, Stephens, Callahan, Shackelford, Jones, Taylor, Coke, Fisher, Kent, Mitchell, Nolan and Scurry.

Mechanical Failure Caused Plane Crash

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 16—The little evidence available to investigators today indicated that mechanical failure may have sent the American Airlines ship crashing to earth at a cost of 17 lives.

While sorrowing relatives identified their dead at a local morgue, department of commerce officials pressed an investigation. The plane itself, torn to bits in a swamp jungle 45 miles west of here, offered few clues and the few witnesses told stories indicating mechanical failure.

WINE YIELD ENORMOUS

PARIS. — The enormity of the French wine industry is revealed from recent official figures which show that the 1935 harvest will yield 10,200,000,000 quart bottles.

Kipling Rushed to Operation

His condition serious, due to a gastric ailment, Rudyard Kipling, above, world-famed poet-author, was rushed to a London hospital for an operation. The author, who celebrated his 70th birthday anniversary Dec. 30, had planned to start with his wife for southern France when he was stricken.

Babe In Profound Sleep Report Is Spiked Thursday

Attendants of a Gorman hospital Thursday denied knowledge of an infant in a lethargy after eating 11 aspirins Sunday.

Reports were that a Gorman infant ate the aspirins Sunday, efforts to arouse the baby were futile. The child breathed naturally and the rest was described as a profound sleep, according to the reports.

Strong Words For Sergeant Lawful

VIENNA. — An attempt to curtail the immemorial prerogative of sergeant-majors in the matter of strong language has come to an end with the acquittal of a warrant officer of the Austrian Dragoons.

The sergeant-major was charged with casting reflections on the honor of his men by calling them "a gang of thieves and a pack of rogues". He was provoked by the disappearance of a new pair of riding breeches, which he suspected had been taken by one of his troopers.

The finding of the court was that he had used the words only in a "Pickwickian" or parading ground sense in a moment of justifiable indignation.

WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON — Probably you missed the U. S. Supreme Court's decision in the case of Colgate vs. Harvey the other day. But lawyers who do business before the court believe the verdict may prove as significant as any the justices have handed down in years.

This case didn't involve any New Deal legislation. It concerned the right of the state of Vermont to exempt from the state's income tax such interest as is received from loans made within the state.

The background was a problem which long has afflicted the New England states—export of capital to New York and other sections. Wealth produced by New England industrialists and New England workers has been skimmed off in large gobs and invested in other fields which seemed more profitable, instead of being plowed back into New England enterprise.

After investigation and recommendation by two legislative committees, Vermont decided to do something about it. The tax exemption was designed to encourage investments in Vermont.

But one of its residents, James C. Colgate, sued to have that exemption declared invalid. Colgate is a New York broker with large New York investments.

BY a vote of six to three the supreme court held that the exemption violated the Constitution. To do that it dragged out an almost forgotten provision of the Constitution—the part of the 11th amendment which says, "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

The amendment itself was framed to protect legal and political rights of Negroes and its "due process" since been used chiefly in legislation. But first time the court covered that a state's "privileges and clause."

The court had little to say in guarding that most lawyers are to hear Justice Sutherland that, "As citizens of States, we are members of a great community of the states united, as distinct communities of the states severally."

It is a factor in the jockeying and horse. The current plan rather extraordinary versals, which may be deep cushion, reminding "horses for course rule among turfme goers. It is a cog used by tipsters, less a potent one.

At considerable expense and with an equal quantity of ingenuity, Dr. Strub's aides developed a ribbon calculated to allow plenty of speed on a cushion as soft as any in the country. If you consider Top Row's phenomenal mile in 1:15 1/5, which broke the track record on opening day, as an example, you'll agree that they succeeded.

But now you hear the complaint that the speed horses—those which like to pick up a feather burden and sprint from start to finish—are unduly punished by a surface which takes too much out of the short striding, closely coupled sprinter.

THIS makes the speed bunnies die in the stretch—brings them back to the pack runners, which, more often than not, are carrying heavier imposts.

It also takes away the premium of rail running, since the center of the track is not quite so deep in cushion. That this fact helps to eliminate crowding on the rail hardly would be considered an argument by horsemen, although

Amy said, "All right. You don't like the way things are. What are you going to do about it?"

"Well," Amy sighed, "at least it's exciting to work for lawyers. You should try to sell the latest models to these old hens for eight hours a day."

"I'd think it would be interesting, Amy. You get a chance to see in the flesh some of these women I can see only through their pictures in the society section."

Amy snorted. "Personally, I'd rather look at them in pictures. I waited on Mrs. Hamilton Uzzon today. Ever hear of her?"

"Of course," Julia said. "She had a tea for the Garden Club last week. There was a whole page of pictures in the paper, and—"

"Yeah," said Amy irreverently. "Listen—the Uzzon bill hasn't been paid at our shop for a year and a half. Mrs. Hamilton Uzzon couldn't buy an extra button in our place unless she paid cash, and all the girls have instructions to that effect. Mrs. Uzzon knows it, too—but she comes into the shop with her friends and tries on dresses by the hour. Then when it's all over she says, 'Really, I think your gowns are getting awfully nondescript.'"

Julia laughed. "I think that's delightful!"

"Well, if you had to listen to it you wouldn't have such a nice sense of humor," Amy mentioned. "And we all have to be nice to her because her husband may pay the bill any minute—and because she has influence."

"That's the whole story," said Julia reflectively. "You have to be nice to her, because she has influence. And she has influence because she's had money and may have it again."

At her roommate's cynical tone, Amy's dark eyes widened. "That may be," she said stoutly. "But I wouldn't trade places with Mrs. Hamilton Uzzon for all her tea parties and pictures in the rotogravure section. She's the most unhappy person in the world. I can tell. And I'll bet her husband is a close second."

"Just the same," Julia answered, "I'd take a chance on her unhappiness."

Amy tossed the magazine to the foot of the davenport and brought her slippers to the floor. "What's got into you, Julia? You have been moping for weeks now. You used to be the life of the party when we'd have the gang in. Last time they were her you wouldn't even sing a song for us. And everybody knows you can make a song sound all right, even when the tune isn't so good and the words are absolutely senseless."

"What do you mean," "everybody" knows it?" inquired Julia, getting up restlessly. "Maybe the gang, as you call them, knows it. But nobody else does."

"What do you care about that?" Julia turned suddenly, her eyes gleaming. "I care a lot, Amy. I'm sick and tired of working for Woodford and Brooks."

"It's a god job, Julia. You get a lot more money than I do. A lot more than most girls working downtown."

"What if I do? Where does it get me," Julia paced to the window and looked out. Then she said, slowly, "I'm 20, Amy."

"I'm 25," Amy said. "And I'm still having a lot of fun."

Julia turned. "Maybe you are," she said cruelly, "but it's not the kind of fun I want. Amy, I don't want to be George Woodford's secretary until I'm old. I'll—I'll be like Miss Jamieson down at the office. She's been there for 22 years."

"Aren't she likes it," said Amy. "Every girl isn't as ambitious as you are, Julia."

"I'm not so sure. I think they are—until life gets them down."

Amy Sanders stared at the carpet a moment. Then: "Julia . . . you said Peter Kemp wanted to marry you. Why don't you take him up?"

"Because I don't want to," said Julia quickly.

"Because you don't love him?" asked Amy quietly. "He's a nice boy—and it's p'—a he loves you."

"I haven't thought about love, Amy. But I've thought about some things that are a darned sight more important. Peter Kemp doesn't get any more money at Woodford and Brooks than I do. They use him to brief their cases—then Mr. Woodford or Mr. Brooks goes into court and make the brilliant showing. I don't want to marry a man like that, Amy."

"You're being pretty cold-blooded about it," Amy told her. "When you really fall in love you'll change your tune. Then you'll find that money isn't so important."

"Suppose I did marry Peter Kemp," Julia answered. "We'd have a little apartment at first—like this one. Then we'd probably have children, and have to move into a little rented house where there'd be a lot of hard work and not much else."

Amy didn't reply at once. She reached for a cigarette from the pack on the little table. When she had lighted it and blown a pillar of smoke toward the ceiling, she said, "Well . . . I didn't mean you have to take Peter. But in a job like yours you have a chance to meet a lot of likely men."

Peter pushed the button for the elevator. He said quietly, "I don't suppose that means you'll marry me?"

"Oh, yes," said Julia. "We have a chance to meet men. But—" she faced her roommate squarely. "Amy, the average girl working in an office is stuck any way you look at it. We work for wages that most men wouldn't think of accepting; and we do plenty of work, too. Lots of times we correct the mistakes of men who get three and four times the salary we get. And you talk about the chances for meeting marriageable men—Amy, the men we meet are of two kinds, usually. The kind that want to marry us, but who can't improve our status. And the kind who offer something less than marriage—and expect us to like it."

Amy looked at her roommate curiously. "All right," she said. "You don't like the way things are. What are you going to do about it?"

CHAPTER II

Julia said, without hesitation. "You know me well enough to know that if I didn't have some ideas for changing things I wouldn't be kicking." She took a long breath, then went on, "Amy, I'm going to try to do something with my voice. I don't mean anything fancy. But I know I have a knack for singing these modern songs."

"Call it whatever you like," said Julia. "That's my plan."

"I guess I'll have to get a radio," Amy said, aloud as if to herself. "I saw a perfect honey yesterday for $5 down."

"I'm not kidding, Amy. But I don't mean radio singing. I know perfectly well that I haven't the best voice in the world, and that maybe I'll have to use my face and figure, too." She laughed. "Assuming I have them. You're always telling me I have."

"You know perfectly well you have. Did you ever look at a man's face when you were singing one of these modern torch songs?"

Julia took a cigarette of her own, tapped its end against the table, then put it down without touching it to her lips. "I'm going to try to get a job singing, Amy. It's my only chance to be something and to meet the right man. I won't work at Woodford and Brooks' until I'm old—until I get panicky and marry the first man who comes along!"

Amy started toward the kitchen. "Well, let's forget it now and see what we can make of the groceries you brought home."

Julia started to put on a kitchen apron over her black dress, but she had hardly tied the knot at her waist when the telephone rang. It was Peter Kemp. "I'm sorry, but I haven't had the chance to call you before this. I worked late at the office. Hope you haven't started dinner yet, because I'd like to take you out."

Julia was hesitating at the telephone when Amy Sanders came in from the kitchen. "Tell him you will go to dinner with him," she advised quickly. "Royal Nesbitt is coming to take me out after dinner, and I'd have to hurry through it, anyhow."

"All right," said Julia into the mouthpiece. "I'd like to come, Peter."

When she replaced the instrument in its cradle she was facing Amy's amused smile. "I'm not weakening," she told Amy. "I happen to know that Peter has a friend who leads an orchestra. Maybe he can get me a chance to sing."

"Okay, darling. Go change your clothes while I have a cup of coffee to strengthen myself against Royal Nesbitt."

Julia Craig left the telephone and walked toward Amy. "You've been giving me some advice, Amy. What about this Royal Nesbitt?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean . . . he has money, and everybody in town knows he's not very serious-minded. Why is he giving you a run?"

"Why not?" asked Amy. "He likes me, and I think he's a lot of fun."

Julia's glance met that of Amy Sanders, met it squarely. "You'll watch your step, won't you?"

Amy grinned. "I always do, Julia. There's something funny about a dizzy blond giving advice to a brunet. But I get your point, all right."

"I may be blond," said Julia. "But I'm not dizzy . . . yet."

"You're telling me?" asked Amy, and went to see to the percolator while Julia went into the dressing room which was also the hiding place for the fold-down bed. In that confined space, under a rather feeble electric light, she changed her clothes and prepared herself for Peter Kemp's call.

He rang the bell promptly a half hour later. He was a well set-up young man, neatly dressed and alert—and his eyes showed plainly that he worshipped Julia Craig.

"Sorry to creep on you like this," he said when she let him in. "But I was working late at the office, and it suddenly occurred to me that I ought to stay down town and have dinner with you—if you'd let me."

"I'm glad you thought of it tonight," Julia said, laughing. "Amy's all in a stir to get out for a date—so I don't think she'd be much company at dinner."

Amy emerged from the dressing room, hooking a flowered print dress. "Hello, Peter. I warn you about Miss Craig tonight. This is one of her moody days."

Peter and Julia exchanged glances which told Amy that Peter Kemp was all too familiar with Julia's "moody days."

"Is that right?" he said lightly. "I'm afraid I'm in for it, then."

"I'm afraid you are," said Amy and disappeared into the dressing room again. "However," she called out, "I hope you have a good time."

When Peter and Julia were outside in the hall, he said, "Amy didn't really seem very hopeful that we would have a good time. What's wrong, Julia? Got the blues again?"

Julia nodded. "I'm afraid so, Peter. But they're not so bad this time. At last I've decided to do something about them."

He pressed the button for the automatic elevator, and said quietly: "I don't suppose that means you'll marry me?"

"No, Peter. I—" Julia hesitated. "I'll tell you all about it at dinner."

They ate in a little restaurant near the apartment, for it developed that Peter had to complete his work at the office. It was on the big public utilities case that Julia had mentioned to Amy, and Peter had to prepare a brief for a phase of it. When the coffee came, Peter offered his cigarettes and said, "All right, Julia. Let's have it."

"I want to quit Woodford and Brooks, Peter."

"Yes? What then?"

Julia looked at him. "I—I've decided to try to sing, Peter?"

"You've decided to TRY?" exclaimed Kemp. "Say, right now you're better than nine-tenths of these dames who get paid for it in the night clubs!"

"You really think so?"

"I know it, Julia."

"Introduction to you give me a note of introduction to your friend Henri Lamb who leads the band at the Green Club?"

The directness of her question surprised Peter. "Why—I—"

"Will you, Peter?"

"Why, of course, if you're really serious. But I don't see—"

"My mind's made up, Peter. And you can help me, if you will. You have known Lamb a long time."

"I'd do anything in the world for you, Julia. You know that. I'll—I'll write the note tonight and give it to you tomorrow morning at the office."

Oberlin Takes Step To Aid In Peace

OBERLIN, Ohio.—Oberlin College, which pioneered the first national collegiate program for peace with the founding of the Oberlin Peace Society several years ago, will inaugurate a "peace institute" next summer.

Announcement of the institute, said to be the first in a coeducational college, was made by Dr. Ernest Hatch Wilkins, pacifist president of the century-old college, following addresses in which he successfully condemned the "slacker's oath" as an instrument of peace and urged study and practical policies on the part of students and graduates as more effective.

"I believe there is a need for a summer institute which shall address itself particularly to college students and shall be thoroughly and exclusively educational in its aims and methods," Dr. Wilkins said.

The announcement marked a new step in an expanding program for peace which already includes a society with half the school's enrollment, a "peace mobilization" and Dr. Wilkins' addresses.

Pythian Sisters Temple Hold Installation of New Officers

The Eastland Temple No. 72 held the annual installation service for officers on Monday evening at K. of P. hall, with Past Chief Glenn Liles acting grand chief, assisted by past chiefs, grand senior Veda Davis and grand manager, Veda Newman.

The ceremony was conducted and the new most excellent chief presented each officer an unusual book, with a tied pencil in station colors, and requested each officer adopt the motto for the coming year.

Some of these are, "Harmony," "Faith," "Love," "Service," "Cooperation," "Hope," and "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Installation placed most excellent chief, Blanche Nicols; Urania Andrews, past chief; Clara Byers, E. S.; Mary Frances Reed, E. J.; Louise Duhr, manager; Addie Slaughter, M. F.; Mae Johnson, M. R. C.; Laura Hakrs, protector; Vita Davis, guard.

Mrs. Newman presented Mrs. Andrews the past chief, a handsome P. C. pin, and Mrs. Liles presented gifts to Mrs. Nicols, and Mrs. Slaughter.

Nearly the entire membership of the Eastland temple was present, including the temple mother, Mrs. Anna Rogers.

Visitors were 10 from the Breckenridge temple, and their temple deputy, Mrs. Etta Mathias. Mrs. Blanche Nicols, M. E. C., presented the district deputy, Mrs. Glenn Liles, who made an address on service for the new year.

Eastland is again fortunate in having another district officer of the Sunshine Council Girls in Mrs. Addie Slaughter.

The Martha Dorcas Class invites all interested to attend their program Friday at 2:30 o'clock to be given in the lower assembly room of the Methodist Church.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

WATER IS TAKEN FROM THE AIR, BY THESE HUGE "AIR WELLS" WHICH ARE BEING BUILT IN DRY AREAS OF EUROPE! THE WARM OUTDOOR AIR ENTERS THROUGH THE OPENINGS, AND IS ROBBED OF ITS MOISTURE BY CONTACT WITH THE COLD INTERIOR.

FOR MANY YEARS IT WAS A COMMON BELIEF THAT HORSE HAIRS, LEFT IN WATER, TURNED INTO WORMS.

AIRWELLS already have been used successfully in southern France. The principle is the same as that of an ice-filled pitcher, on which water condenses. At night, cold air enters the dome through a central pipe and circulates through the interior core, chilling it thoroughly by morning. As the outside air warms up, it enters and deposits its moisture, which drains into basins.

Post Office Awning Is Being Removed

George McManus, owner of the building in which the Ranger Post Office is located, was in Ranger Tuesday looking after properties in Ranger.

While here he issued orders to have the awning in front of the post office building, which have been sagging for some time and which had become dangerous, removed.

Workmen on the job Tuesday afternoon stated that a new awning was not to be installed to replace the one removed. The work was being completed Wednesday.

Sharp Increase In Trade Seen

By United Press

CHICAGO.—Increases ranging from 15 to 35 per cent are predicted for 1936 by the more than 600 manufacturers of 5,000 lines of merchandise exhibiting in the Merchandise Mart here, America's largest permanent trade fair and generally regarded as one of the country's most accurate business barometers.

A survey of these manufacturers conducted by the Mart showed an average business gain for 1935 of 22.4 over 1934. The inquiry covered the five major fields of clothing; housefurnishings; lamps, china, glassware and gifts; furniture and floor coverings, and draperies. Housefurnishings industry led the field with a 40 per cent sales increase in 1935, indicating, spokesmen said, that "things for the house" have played a major part in nation-wide business gains in 1935.

Representing a total capitalization of $680,550,323, the 600 manufacturers reported a gross business of $1,045,000,000 during 1935, officials said.

High Optimism Prevails Among highlights of the summations were such phrases as "best year since pre-depression days," "demand for better merchandise is unmistakable," and "seasonal slumps were eliminated."

The head of one of the country's leading electrical appliance concerns reported that American families spent nearly $725,000,000 for electrical appliances in 1935 as against $600,000,000 in 1934. He placed the probable figure for 1936 at close to $850,000,000, based on the present rate of increase.

The president of a large furniture manufacturing house anticipated "a steady continuation of the improvement which has marked the furniture industry particularly during the latter half of 1935." This may be especially significant in view of his accompanying statement that this industry "will most likely be among the last to realize full recovery because it is so dependent upon widespread, general prosperity."

From other furniture men came the estimate that 1936 will see demand for "at least 20 per cent higher grade goods."

Men's Wear Gain Seen The vice-president of one of America's largest manufacturers of shirts, collars, and other accessories for men predicted an increase of roughly 20 per cent for the men's wear industry in 1936.

He pointed out that the introduction of the "fused" collar requiring no starch has greatly stimulated the wholesale and retail shirt business. The high colors to be stressed in men's wear in 1936, according to this spokesman, are an indication of greatly improved business for the new year. In times of prosperity men wear bright colors; in times of depression, dark and sombre effects, he explained.

Floor coverings, spurred by new style developments, especially in "texture" effects—the rough, homespun appearance—had "the best year since 1929," according to a consensus of important manufacturers' representatives in Mart. Notable, they said, was a complete absence of the customary July-August slump, the continuation of large orders "right up to Christmas," and a distinct trend toward wall-to-wall carpeting, traditionally symbolic, to this trade, of better times.

Safety Campaign Among Children Is Being Planned

By United Press

AUSTIN.—A safety campaign among Texas' 1,558,855 school children and 42,000 teachers will be inaugurated immediately by State Superintendent L. A. Woods.

In a personal letter to each school, Wood addressed teachers and pupils, with special warning to the 200,000 Texas children who ride school buses to and from their homes. He pointed out that 35 per cent of the injuries received by school children occur on the campus or in the building; 32 per cent in homes; 9 per cent while going to and from schools and the remaining 24 per cent on streets and other places.

Wood stressed safety education as a factor in reducing children's accidents and lauded the work of junior safety councils, school boy patrols, and safety clubs.

Precautions advocated by Wood were:

- 1. To put things in their proper places, avoiding trash fires.
2. Not to lean out of windows.
3. Helping parents see that homes do not contain worn stair treads, loose or torn carpets, unguarded steps, poorly lighted halls and stairs, loose banisters, slippery floors, worn lighting connections, or cans of gasoline and benzine.

Urging grown-ups not to pass school buses which are loading or unloading children.

Against alighting from buses while they are in motion.

Against riding fenders or on the outside of buses and cars.

Sport Glances.

NEW YORK.—Professional boxer King has tumbled to such a low estate in the east that it no longer pays a performer to make a trip of any length unless Joe Louis is his opponent.

That is the principal reason why Jock McAvoy suddenly returned to England for the holidays and why Freddie Steele is highly content to ply his wearing trade on the Pacific coast.

Under current conditions, McAvoy and Steele—that would be a match despite the disparity in poundage—can collect more coin on their home grounds than they can hope to make on what formerly was big time.

Steele, against formidable foes such as Vince Dundee, whose jaw he broke, and Gorilla Jones, drew $18,000 and $17,000, respectively. The Tacoma Tanager dragged down 30 per cent. Expenses are normal.

Steele, battling Babe Risko, whom he probably would flatten, would play to net receipts of $25,000 in Seattle. This for a non-title affair, with the 155-pound Steele stepping on the scales with lead in his hands or being made officially overweight in some such manner.

Steele Rejected Scrap With Heavier McAvoy McAvoy, boasting the lightweight and middleweight championships of England, is a light-heavyweight. He agreed to make 166 pounds for Risko on the night he knocked the Syracuse Pole down a half dozen times and out in the first round, but bounced on the scales at 168 1/2.

That's the gentleman Jimmy Johnston offered Steele in the Garden. Yes, sir, Johnston certainly was looking after Steele's welfare.

At that, Steele might belt McAvoy out, despite the undeniable class the Briton showed in flooring
