U. S. Has No Reason To Enter Any War

If and when that much-talked-of European war is finally staged, it will be an almighty difficult job to try to sell any tickets to Uncle Sam. The one thing that seems certain these days is that the ordinary American citizen wants no part of such war and doesn't propose to be sold any of it.

If that were all there was to it, we could face the future with a complacent confidence. Unfortunately, however, there seems to be at least a fair chance that we may attend this war by the back door—via Japan.

While there has grown up in this country a strong determination to stay clear of any and all European fights, there also has grown up a state of mind which looks upon a war in the Orient as something more or less destined. Certainly that attitude seems to prevail in Washington; it also is widely prevalent among the rank and file of citizens.

In other words, while we learned our lesson about European wars in 1917, we apparently have not learned it at all so far as Asiatic wars are concerned. We are almost beginning to take it for granted that some day we are going to tangle with the Japanese.

We have a trade with China to protect, they say? Sure—and its annual value is just about what we would spend in two days of warfare. To be exact, we sold the Chinese worth of goods in 1933 (the last year for which figures are available to this writer). In that same year we sold to the Japanese goods worth $143,434,000. Which trade is more worth keeping?

But the Japanese, it is protested, have designs on the Philippines. Well, we're on our way out of those islands. The Filipinos wanted their independence and they're getting it. If they want protection against the Japanese or anybody else, and expect us to give it to them, let them stay under the American flag.

The Japanese are strong-arming their way to empire in Manchuria? Yes, they are; just as we strong-armed our way to California and the southwest; just as the British got India and much of South Africa; just as all the great powers built up their empires. So what? Is it any of our concern?

As a matter of fact, the reasons why we should fight the Japanese are so flimsy and weak that one wonders such war is ever discussed. But it is discussed, and worse; it is beginning to be taken for granted by a great many people.

Bones Mounted Of Early Horse

WASHINGTON.—Paleontologists of the Smithsonian Institution are completing restoration of a skeleton of a 40,000,000-year old "clawed horse."

After careful study, the bones, obtained several years ago from a Nebraska quarry, were joined, piece by piece, until the representation of the actual animal. The work has been done by Thomas Horne, of the Smithsonian staff, under supervision of Dr. C. W. Gilmore, curator of vertebrate paleontology.

The animal, known scientifically as "Moropus Elatus," was one of the most fantastic specimens that lived in North America during the Miocene period, the institution said. It was somewhat larger than the plow horse of today. It had a long neck, high fore-quarters, a short, downward-sloping back and long, stout legs. How it was able to get its mouth to the ground to drink, due to the structure of its body, puzzles the paleontologists.

Heavy, sharp, curved claws, about 3 inches long, instead of hoofs, on all four feet, were a distinctive feature of the animal. The Moropus is believed to have lived in swampy forests, existing chiefly on twigs and leaves, which it may have dug from the ground with its claws. Its companions were members of a mammalian fauna which has been extinct for millions of years, and paleontologists believe it was the largest and probably the most feared creature of its time. The most conspicuous creatures of the period, aside from the "clawed horse," were a giant pig and a dwarf rhinoceros.

Canada Opens Up New Gold Diggings

OTTAWA, Ont.—Scores of new mining areas, located last summer by the government's "million dollar gold hunt," will be opened this spring in widely separated parts of Canada in what is expected to be a minor mining boom.

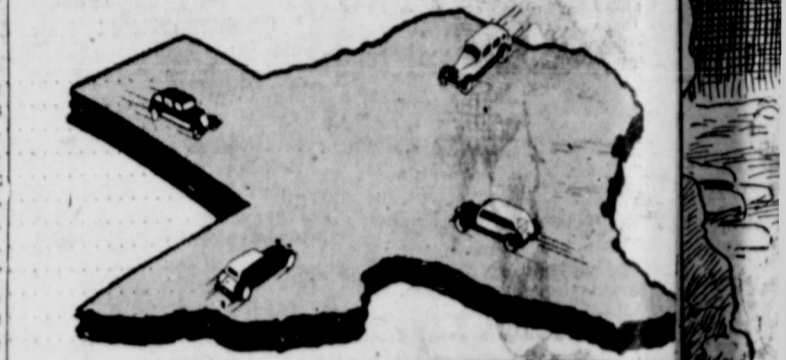

Nearly 1,000 men, grouped into 188 surveying parties, spent the whole summer exploring hitherto unclassified regions favorable for gold, silver, nickel, copper, oil and gas production in all parts of Canada and within the Northwest Territories. Their reports are now being compiled and will be issued to prospectors early in the spring.

The most valuable discoveries were made in the Yellowknife district in the Northwest Territories, where nearly 3,000 square miles of good gold prospecting territory were located. Other valuable gold-bearing areas were found in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Survey parties exploring the east located 300 square miles fa-avorable to the occurrence of silver, and found copper-nickel mineralization in sporadic occurrences over a distance of 14 miles in Fort William-Port Arthur region of Ontario. Gas deposits were found in Southwestern Ontario.

Although the major object of the government-financed survey was to discover and map attractive gold prospecting areas, it will also ease the lot of the small prospector by showing him where mineral wealth lies.
