Wolf of War Advances On Unmindful World

The bright young man who came hot-footing it into the sheepfold yelling "Wolf!" at a time when the wolf was going about his business over in the next county has an unassailable reputation as one of history's prize numbskulls.

It is edifying to reflect, however, that his reputation would be even worse if he had failed to come running with the alarm when the wolf actually did show up. An over-excitable centry is a good deal better than a sentry who puts in his time pounding his ear.

These deep reflections are provoked by a cable dispatch from London which points out that the British government has made up its mind that there is going to be a general European war inside of four years, and is getting ready to draw cards in it.

In adopting this realistic attitude, and spending all the money it can spare on its fleet and its air force, Britain is only doing what every other great power is doing. They're all preparing, including that lean gentleman with the foatee, Uncle Sam. But the point is that they are preparing for war, not for peace.

Observe how illogically the human mind can work.

War, as everybody agrees, is a great curse, the sum of all varieties of human misery. It is flood and pestilence and fire and earthquake all rolled into one; its horror is the worst horror that can be loosed on human civilization.

This being true, wouldn't you suppose that when the statesmen of the world saw a new war less than four years away they would take off their coats and vests and do everything humanly possible to head it off?

Four years is not a long time, as history is measured; but it does provide a good deal of room for negotiations, compromises, and round-table discussions, and for marshaling an international sentiment for peace. It would be only natural to expect that the leaders of mankind would look at this four-years-distant war and say, "Here—let's get busy and find a way to avert this danger; let's do something—anything—to get out from under."

If we knew that an epidemic of plague was due in 1940, we should do exactly that. We would move heaven and earth to keep it from happening. Why don't we do the same with war, which is worse than any plague?

Well, we don't. We are all spending millions on fleets and armies and air forces, so that when this terrible curse arrives we can do our part to make it even more terrible. We are doing nothing to keep the curse from coming.

The wolf is coming down on the sheepfold... but all the little watch-boys are off in a quiet corner playing mumbletypeg.

OLDEN

Ladies of the Olden Baptist Women's Missionary Union met Monday afternoon at the church for a Royal Service program.

Tuesday the Gleaners Class of the Olden Baptist Church met for an all-day social at the home of Mrs. John Sapulver.

Thursday evening of this week the intermediate boys' and girls' class of the E. Y. P. U. were to meet at the home of C. A. Howell for singing and a social evening.

Several from Olden expect to attend the Baptist Zone B. Y. P. U. meeting at Gorman Sunday, March 15. The meeting is scheduled for 2:30 p. m.

Virgie Sue Wyatt has been quite ill with influenza since Thursday of last week, but was reported much improved Tuesday of this week.

Mrs. Boles, Mrs. V. O. Wyatt's mother, is ill at the Wyatt home, but was improving early this week.

Mrs. Scruggs and Mrs. Charles Gullett left Monday for Hamlin for a few days visit with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Kuhn and daughter, Marcelle, spent the week end visiting in Mineral Wells.

Olden carried off the high honors in the invitation track meet held here Saturday, March 7. Max Anderson won four first places and tied for first place in one event. G. W. Curry was second high in honors received. Howard Young won third in javelin and third in discus throw.

The Minnich orchestra of Olden is to play at the style show to be held in the Recreation Building, Ranger, Thursday night. A large crowd from Olden expects to attend. The Minnich orchestra under the able direction of Ed Minnich of Olden, and include Carl Timmons, E. R. Buckley, Edna Ward, Ella May Fiddie, June and Jean Groves, Victor Hamilton Jr., Mrs. C. D. Coe and Don Minnich, musician and director.

These musicians have appeared once a week and worked diligently. They are appearing on programs now in surrounding towns and have received much well earned appreciation. Next week they play at Eastland on another program.

Miss Ruth Hunt and Roscoe Sims, both of Olden, were married Monday evening. The wedding came as a surprise to their friends who wish them a long and happy married life.

Miss Lena Norton of Olden was married to Mr. Justice of Ranger last week. They have the good wishes of the community for their happiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Embree of Longview visited friends and relatives here over the week-end. Mr. Embree was formerly employed by the Magnolia Oil Company here but was transferred to the East Texas field five years ago. Mrs. Embree was formerly Miss Katherine Birmingham, one of Olden's popular teachers, before her marriage to Mr. Embree in 1931.

John Ford, who has been attending Coyne Electrical College in Chicago, is here visiting relatives at this time. He was graduated from Coyne College and returned to Tulsa, Okla., on March 2. The course of training he completed in-

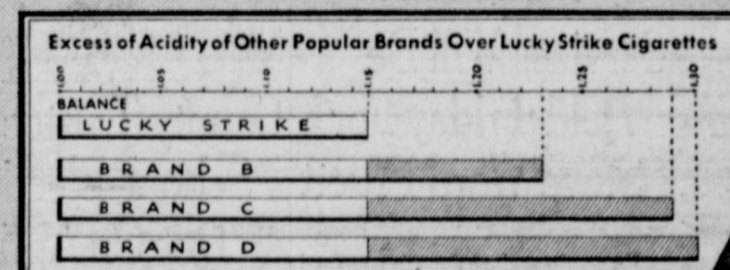

Student Grubstake Doubles in 28 Years

By United Press BERKELEY, Cal.—A "grubstake" loan fund of $349 donated to the University of California in 1908 has now grown to $612. The original loan was brought to the attention of Benjamin Ide White in 1908 by a messenger from an unidentified person who wanted to be used to "grubstake" a student through college. The initial amount was $350, but President Wheeler gave the messenger $1. The remaining $349 was invested when it wasn't "staking" some student, and has reached its present position.

PROPER AGING

Tobacco in its natural state is harsh and strong. Though "cured" by the grower before sale, it is unsuited for use without further aging. During this aging period (which ranges in the case of Lucky Strike from 1 1/2 to 3 years) important changes occur. These "Nature" changes result in the partial "smoothing out" of the original harsh qualities of the leaf. Our process of manufacture carries these improvements many steps further—as every Lucky Strike Cigarette exemplifies: A Light Smoke of rich, ripe-bodied tobacco.

LUCKIES ARE LESS ACID Recent chemical tests show that our popular brands have an excess of acidity over Lucky Strike of from 53% to 100%.

Texas Merchants See 1936 Trade As Topping 1929

CHICAGO.—Retail business in Texas, showing its greatest volume in 1935 since before the depression, is due this year to attain heights of "recovery" that will place 1935 beyond even the climactic boom year of 1929, a consensus of the Lone Star State's leading merchants indicates. Averaging of scattered replies to a questionnaire sent by the Merchandise Mart here, nation's largest wholesale center under one roof, to 230 Texas retail store executives, reveals that the state's retail trade in 1935 was reported as 8.66 per cent ahead of 1934, and only 7.68 per cent behind 1929 business. The questionnaires were sent to leading Texas stores as part of a national campaign being conducted by the Merchandise Mart in an effort to stimulate retail activities generally. Estimates as to expectations for 1936 ranged from an 8 per cent decline up to 40 per cent increases, the average being a predicted net gain of 9.63 per cent. This, combined with the figures showing 1935 only 7.68 per cent behind 1929, means that, barring unexpected crop failures, 1936 will see Texas retail business going stronger even than in the last pre-depression year! Widely divergent local crop conditions and other local factors apparently accounted for the big range in estimates reported for 1936. Singularly, the fact that this is a "presidential year," traditional business bugaboo, was completely ignored by the merchants in their comments on probabilities of 1936 retail trade trends. This is interpreted by T. J. Reed, general manager of the Merchandise Mart, as evidence that the age-old forces of supply and demand are again dominant, with demand due to be unusually heavy because of the depreciation which has taken place during the depression years of minimum purchasing, particularly of household goods and furnishings. The contention of many merchants and economists that long-deferred replacement of "things for the home," is providing one of the country's strongest vehicles for buying its way back to financial normalcy is substantiated by analysis of the sales gains as broken down into subdivisions of the larger stores. Reed pointed out. Generally speaking, those departments dealing with the more basic elements of home furnishing—that is, furniture, floor coverings, and curtains and draperies—showed by far the most striking and consistent gains. This is strictly in line with the findings of the Mart in a survey of the 600 manufacturers exhibiting in the building and serving the entire country, that "fixing up the house" had been Mr. and Mrs. America's first thought during 1935, with spending money becoming more plentiful. Although sales gains were general in virtually all lines in the national picture, home furnishings showed more extensive increases than any other type of merchandise. Improved crop conditions for the state as a whole, the natural corollary, increased farm income, government and state spending for forest and highway improvements, raising of more varied crops, and the coming Texas Centennial Exposition beginning in Dallas in

Gorgeous

BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN © 1936 NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY TOBY RYAN, 19, works behind the jewelry counter of a large Manhattan department store. On her way to work during the crowded morning rush hour, Toby collides with a good-looking young man. She murmurs apologies and hurries on. In the midst of a busy morning Toby sees MISS BURROWS, the jewelry buyer talking with MISS COLLINS from the advertising department and a man in a trench coat. They summon pretty MAURINE HALL. Miss Burrows has just asked Maurine to pose for a photograph to be used in an advertisement when Miss Collins interrupts.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER II TOBY hadn't meant to overhear any of the conversation. It was just that they were all standing so near she couldn't help it. Toby was moving away when Miss Burrows called to her. She turned and said, "What is it, Miss Burrows?" The jewelry buyer looked at Maurine and said, "I'm sorry, dear. They won't need you, after all—". Then, to Toby, "This is Miss Collins from the advertising department, and this is Mr. Hiatt. They want you to pose in some photographs they're making up on the third floor. You're to go with them—".

That was how it came about that 15 minutes later Toby Ryan found herself standing before the new and dazzling black and chromium "Beauty Bar" with three blazing electric lights bathing her in their yellow glare and a camera directly before her. The photographer (he had removed the trench coat and hat, displaying a crest of very red hair and a gray suit somewhat out of press) dodged forward and backward, the black focusing clock about his shoulders. Every now and then he would pull the cloth over his head, peer through the camera, and then dart forward again to change the position of a light, alter Toby's pose, or rearrange the background. "Turn your face to the left a little, Miss Ryan. That's right—no, not so far. Back again, the way you were. Now try it again—".

The lights were hot and Toby felt uncomfortable. She had on a coat with a heavy mink collar and a hat from the French room. She was supposed to be a customer about to make a purchase at the "Beauty Bar." Suddenly the photographer called, "Now you've got it! That's it— and there was a barely discernible "click."

Miss Collins stepped forward. "I want you to try one from the other side," she said. "I'd like to show that background—". "Okay," Marty Hiatt set to work to change the lights again. He was accustomed to the whims of advertising men and women. "This what you want?" he asked a moment later, over one shoulder.

Miss Collins nodded. A moment later she was called to answer a telephone somewhere in the distance. The photographer said, "Now you've got it. That's it—!" and there was a barely discernible "click."

The photographer said, "Now you've got it. That's it—!" and there was a barely discernible "click."

MARTY said to Toby, "Might as well sit down and rest. Don't want you to look stiff and unnatural—". Gratefully, she sank into a chair. She watched curiously as the photographer worked over his camera. Presently he paused beside her. "You were all right," he told her. "Absolutely okay. Ever do any posing before?"

"No." Hiatt nodded. "I thought you were a little nervous," he said. "Just the same, you're all right. That other girl downstairs—the one Miss Collins wanted to use—she'd have been terrible."

"Why," Toby exclaimed, "I think Maurine's beautiful!" "Sure, she's good enough looking—but not before a camera. Features are too small. And I don't like her chin. You've got a camera face, did you know that? I spotted you the very first thing. Round face, big eyes, cute little nose—". "But Maurine's so much prettier!" Toby insisted. The photographer nodded again. "Maybe. But pretty girls don't always photograph that way," he informed her. "You've got to be able to size 'em up. You see, it's all in the camera—". He went into an involved, technical explanation, interrupted when Miss Collins reappeared. Then, for 20 minutes more, Toby stood before the lights and watched, apparently registering right delight over the array of beauty preparations before her. At last Marty Hiatt announced triumphantly, "Got it!" and signified that the posing was at an end.

Toby slipped out of the coat with the heavy mink collar and the expensive hat. She said, "Is that all, Miss Collins?" The older woman nodded. "Yes, I'll tell Miss Burrows you were a great help."

"I hope she won't think I've been gone too long." "Don't worry," Miss Collins smiled. "I'll take care of that. Perhaps we can use you again some day—".

TOBY slipped away. She wasn't interested in being "used" again. She hoped fervently that Miss Burrows would not be annoyed because she had been away from the department so long. Apparently Miss Burrows was not. Gladys Sorenson, when the opportunity came, plied Toby with questions about what it was like to pose for an advertisement. What the new "Beauty Bar" looked like, when they were going to see the pictures, etc.

Toby said, "Maybe they won't use them at all. I wouldn't be surprised if they didn't. I felt foolish, and I'll bet I looked that way, too." "I'll bet you looked swell," Gladys insisted loyally. She went on, "But, say—Maurine's sore as a ball because they asked you to be in those pictures instead of her. She looked mad enough to bite nails after you left." "But I didn't have anything to do with it—". "I know. Just the same, she's sore. Better stay out of her way—that's my advice."

Toby said, "If she really cares I'm sorry I did it." "Well, I'm not!" Gladys nodded emphatically. "Does me good to see that dame get taken down a peg once in a while!" Gladys was called away then to wait on a gangling, high-school-age girl.

wanted to buy an enormous rhinestone bracelet. A minute later Toby was busy with a customer, and the rest of the day went in brisk routine. Toby forgot the fourth floor "Beauty Bar" and the glaring lights and how awkward she had felt before the camera. She forgot Gladys' warning that Maurine was "sore." Lunch hour came and went, the afternoon brought a new stream of shoppers. By 5 o'clock, when the first closing gong sounded, Toby sighed gratefully.

In the milling crowd in the locker room she got into her last season's brown coat, managed to catch a fleeting glimpse of herself in a mirror, and adjusted the little green hat. Then she was in the elevator, descending to the street.

She stepped out into the February dusk, raised her head involuntarily, and drew a deep breath. The good, cold, fresh air smote her cheeks. To left and right, lights gleamed in the already darkened streets. Newsboys were crying the day's headlines in their indistinguishable jargon.

Toby stood for a moment, taking it all in—the lights and noise and pushing crowd. It was all familiar; nevertheless, it was impressive. Then Toby tugged at her hat brim, settling it more firmly on her head, and set off down the street.

AT the same time Tim Jamieson, leaning against a bar in the east fifties, helped himself to a cigaret from the package his companion held. Tim touched a match to the cigaret, watched the fragile ribbon of smoke rise from its tip. Then he said, "I saw a girl today—".

"Remarkable!" The other's tone was good-naturedly jeering. "How do you account for it?" Tim Jamieson did not seem to hear. "She has blue eyes," he went on, reflectively—"at least I think they're blue. They're big and sort of—well, swell. And she's got the cutest little nose. She had on a green hat—". The other man raised his glass. "I've seen girls myself—one or two of them. They've all got eyes and noses and ears and arms and legs and—er, and so forth. Lots of 'em have green hats, too. I can find you a dozen—".

"This one," Tim interrupted, "is special. I've got to find her." "Find her? Is she lost?" "I mean," Tim explained, "that I saw her this morning on the street. Ran into her—no, that's not right—she ran into me. At a corner. She almost bumped into my arms and she looked so surprised and cute and—". "Oh, forget it! Nuts about a dame you don't even know! Of all the crack-brained, crazy idiots!"

Jamieson shook his head. "No," he said. "I don't know her name or where she lives or her telephone number. I don't know anything about her—except that I've got to find her." The other snorted. "Be yourself, Tim!" he said impatiently. "Are you going to go through all that again? Don't you ever learn anything at all? What about Natalie? And Sally? And that red-head—what's her name—Maribelle? What about—?" But Tim Jamieson was not listening. "I've got to find her," he said abruptly, once more. "And I will. What's more, I'll bet you that within 24 hours I have a date with her!" C. T. LUCAS AND C. B. WELLMAN FILE FOR COMMISSION ELECTION

It became known Thursday that C. T. Lucas has filed with the city clerk his application for a place on the ticket to succeed himself as city commissioner. Likewise C. B. Wellman prominent business man of the city, has filed his name as candidate for city commissioner to succeed Ben F. Pryor, whose term as commissioner, expires on the first Tuesday in April.

Both of these gentlemen are prominent business men here and are held in high esteem by the citizenship of our city.

Mr. Lucas, when interviewed, stated that he is enthusiastic and highly gratified with the improved condition of the city's business. "It has been a real pleasure to work with the other members of the city commission, and by a full cooperation and understanding between the commissioners, we have been able to accomplish much for the city of Eastland. Practically every street within the city has been graded, drained and gravelled, and our cemetery has been improved and beautified to the great delight and pride of all who have visited the same. We are completing three beautiful entrances to the cemetery, all driveways have been gravelled, 1,400 feet of hedging has been set with Arizona cypress appropriately spaced and an adequate water system laid out to amply care for all shrubbery and flowers throughout the entire plot," stated Mr. Lucas, "The city commission is to be commended for its management in making the improvements, and they are entitled to have the public know that all of the labor used in making the cemetery improvements has been obtained by working out delinquent water bills by patrons who found themselves unable or inconvenient to pay their bills in cash, and who were glad to avail themselves of the opportunity of clearing their account by such labor."

"The city was able to purchase at a very low cost 250 arborvitae, which added greatly to the appearance of the cemetery. The civic pride and public interest of States Oil corporation and Hoffmann & Page prompted them to furnish material and labor used in the erecting of the entrances to the cemetery property."

Comments of approval were heard on the streets of the city among those discussing Mr. Wellman agreeing to give his time and service to the city.

"While it will require some sacrifice upon my part, it will be my pleasure to work with the city commission and other organizations who have at heart the up-building and welfare of our city. The good feeling and spirit of cooperation existing among the citizens of the city prompts me to offer my services as city commissioner to the end that such a feeling may be perpetuated and that the city's program and plans for the future may be carried out for the best interests of the entire citizenship," was the comment of Mr. Wellman when asked for an expression.

The city election is to be held on April 7, 1936.

Members of the city commission expressed pleasure when advised of the announcement of Mr. Wellman and C. T. Lucas as candidates for city commissioners.

Commissioner T. M. Johnson could not be reached because of his present confinement in the hospital, the Mayor C. W. Hoffmann and Commissioner H. C. Satterwhite stated that they were delighted to have such business men manifest an interest in the welfare of our city.

"I know from personal experience that these gentlemen will be called upon to give freely of their time and energy in serving as city commissioners, and I know that their purpose and their business experience will lend greatly to the development of the city and the promotion of its best interests," said Mr. Hoffmann.

MACHINERY FOR FARMING SEEN BY BIG GROUP

One hundred and fifty of Eastland and vicinity attended the showing of McCormick-Deering farm equipment at Frank Roberson's garage Tuesday.

The value of the new machinery in farming in an up-to-date manner was pointed out by Roberson, W. R. Smith of Cisco, I. G. McClung and F. L. Stark of Dallas, all with the sales department of International Harvester company, manufacturers of the equipment on display.

Motion pictures of an educational nature—one on the value of terracing, another on how soy beans are grown and one on how bindery twine is manufactured—were shown.

One of the newer features of the planters on display was pointed out to the machinery-interested group attending the all-day show was a hill drop attachment by which the planter is enabled to space seeds. Other drop attachments heretofore were said to scatter the seed and without semblance of being methodical.

Coffee and doughnuts were served by Mrs. Frank Roberson. Incomplete registration showed

Long Distance Rates REDUCED Sixth Time

1. AFTER 7 EVERY NIGHT person-to-person long distance charges are now lower, except on some shorter calls. 2. ALL DAY SUNDAY long distance rates are reduced on both person-to-person and station-to-station calls. These reductions apply on calls to points more than 100 miles distant, and to many shorter calls. In the past the only reductions were those after 7 at night on station-to-station calls. This is the sixth time in 10 years that the telephone company has lowered long distance charges. Other reductions were made in 1926, 1927, 1929, 1930, and 1935. Ask Long Distance for the new rates to any point. SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY
