Tacks No Terror to This Auto

Jerusalem is showing real ingenuity in meeting its newest traffic hazard. In the general strike which the Palestine Arabs are staging in their demand that Jewish immigration be halted, tacks have been scattered in all the principal streets of the ancient city, to halt traffic. Here is shown an auto equipped to overcome this obstacle. Brooms have been placed in front of the wheels to sweep up the tacks as the car moves along and the laughing crowd beside the machine seems to be confident that the innovation will work.

Europe Is Aiming For War of Machines

The precarious grip which the dove of peace has on her perch in Europe these days can best be gauged by the fact that people no longer are asking whether there will be a European war; they are asking when it is apt to start and what it is going to be like when it does start.

Neither of these questions can be answered intelligently unless the profound change that has come over military ideas of strategy and tactics since the World War be taken into consideration.

Germany has re-established universal military service, and has a substantial body of men under arms today; but because the soldier nowadays is an entirely different sort of human being from what he was in 1914, this in itself does not mean that Germany is ready for war.

More than ever before, the soldier is becoming an adjunct to the operation of expensive and complicated machinery. Never again, probably, will the world see anything resembling the mass movements of the World War.

The old-time infantryman with his rifle, his bayonet, and his hand grenades is out of date. The modern army is almost as fully mechanized as the modern navy. And until this mechanism is fully prepared, Europe will not be ready to fight.

In the World War, for instance, the airplane was primarily a scouting arm. Today, it is looked upon as essentially a striking force.

When war begins, each nation can be expected to try with its air fleet, to paralyze the great industrial and commercial centers of its enemy.

Mastery of the air might easily mean the gaining of an overwhelming military advantage in the first fortnight of fighting.

Nor is that all. The tank and the old-line cavalry troop have negotiated a marriage, and from it is emerging a strange hybrid—a mechanized force that can move up to the fighting line at 50 miles an hour, exercise the firepower of a whole brigade of 1914 infantry, and overwhelm a rifle-and-machine-gun line of the World War type with ease.

During the World War, the rival forces of infantry were thrown together and left to work out their own salvation. The typical soldier was still a man who carried a gun and did work on foot. Airplanes, tanks, artillery—all were adjuncts to the infantryman.

In the future it will be different. The typical soldier will be a highly trained technician; he is apt to be riding in an airplane, a truck, an armored car, or a high-speed tank. Instead of festering in a muddy trench, he will be forever on the move.

All this means that a nation must build and maintain far more mechanical equipment, per soldier, than ever before. It must consult the factory, rather than the barracks, before it goes to war.

This "next war" for which everyone is waiting is not likely to begin until the factories give the word; and it probably will be won by the side whose factories have made the better preparations.

Texas' Birthday Finds State Out of Business Woods

By RICHARD M. MOREHEAD, United Press Staff Correspondent, DALLAS.—Texas' 100th anniversary of independence finds the Lone Star state definitely 'out of the woods' from a commercial standpoint.

The eyes of the whole country are fixed on Texas on this hundredth anniversary of its appearance as an independent nation. 'Texas appears to be not only 'out of the woods', but on the threshold of very substantial developments,' said Wythe, former Dallas and European news writer, who now specializes in Latin-American commercial problems.

'Texas is producing for foreign quantities,' said Miller. 'This has a direct bearing on the prosperity of a very large part of the state's population. 'To emphasize this point, it is necessary only to refer to our export trade in cotton, petroleum and petroleum products, sulphur, lumber, rice, meats, wheat and wheat products.

'Texas business this summer is expected to enjoy substantial increases, especially in cities where there are centennial celebrations. Another favorable sign was given in mid-May when state tax collections were reported to be far greater than was expected to accrue this year.

'Increases in the price of oil, and substantial income from cigarette, gasoline and liquor taxes also added to the treasury improvement. Texas' oil production tax is 2 cents a barrel when the market value is $1 or less, but when it sells for more than $1 a barrel, the tax becomes 2 per cent.
