PROGRAM OUTLINED IN CONGRESS

By United Press
WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The thirty-third combination soil conservation bill, which provides for a two-year program of soil conservation, was introduced in congress today by the committee on agriculture.

That reminds me...

There is rightful gloom in the ranks of those who still have peanuts to sell with the market getting weaker according to the Market News Service of the United States Department of Agriculture under date of January 15, 1936. Here's what it says: "Southeastern States: The market for farmers' stock, both Spanish and Runners, is weaker and prices are lower than at any time since the beginning of the season, though very little stock has moved recently. Spanish farmers' goods are quoted at $55.00-$60.00 per ton delivered and runners from $50.00 to $52.50 per ton delivered. The oil mill value of farmers stock peanuts delivered to the mill is reported as $4.00 per ton for Spanish, $52.00 per ton for Runners. The market for shelled goods continues to weaken."

Just how far the market will decline is not known. They were at one time up to 85 cents per bushel. Market values on any raw product are never certain and no one can guess what they will be even in short crop years. But what is promised to be something of a real big money crop as peanuts has dwindled the hopes of those who are interested.

Alarming figures are in evidence as to pneumonia cases throughout this section. A representative of a Mutual Life Insurance Company stated that four claims had been paid during the past week on deaths from pneumonia in a comparatively small district. New cases are being recorded each day. Most pneumonia cases are the aftermath of so-called common colds. Sometimes one can feel that they only have a cold only to be awakened during the night with sharp pains darting through their sides and pneumonia is on to do its deadly work. Most of us resort to home remedies when a cold first comes on and in hundreds of instances are lucky enough to get by with it. Some don't even do a thing but let it wear itself out. They too have a lucky streak. But warnings have been issued for many years that the so-called common cold is everything else but common and that immediate steps should be taken to curb it. Colds generally effect practically every part of the body and have a tendency to lower resistance more than any other malady. One's doctor is about the only safeguard available, and to imagine that there is a saving in doctor bills by not seeing him immediately is about the falsest economy one can practice. The sudden changes in temperature that has been in evidence this winter is probably most responsible for as many cases of colds and pneumonia as there have been thus far.

BOND BONUS PASSES HOUSE BY 346 TO 48

By United Press
WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Congress slammed the $2,237,000 soldier bonus bill through the formalities of formal passage today and prepared to do it all over again if necessary to override a veto.

House completed action on the measure providing for payment in baby bonds which may be cashed or held as an investment when it accepted the senate measure and sent it to the white house. The vote was 346 to 58.

This compared with a vote of 356 to 59 when the bonus passed its own bonus bill last week. The overwhelming majority in favor of the bonus emphasized the belief of congress it will pass the measure over a veto. This was based on the 74 to 16 vote for the bill. The veto and final vote may come early next week.

The bill now goes to the white house and provides for payment in $50 baby bonds, cashable after June 15. Or they may be held drawing 3 per cent interest until 1945, the original time for payment of the adjusted service certificates.

Information of boomers and pioneers, cowboys and Indians, wild cats and wild-cat wells, working men and millionaires is sought by W. K. Jackson of Eastland, first assistant for this district of the WPA writers' project.

Seeking information on those and other subjects is a part of the work of the Federal Writers' project which will prepare and publish a five-volume guide, covering the nation. The work in this district is being directed by Judge R. C. Crane of Sweetwater, West Texas historian.

Jackson this week received official notification of appointment from R. H. Horan, assistant state superintendent of the writers' project under J. Frank Davis of San Antonio.

The guide will not be concerned with history alone but will present in readable form information of the geography, culture, industry and commerce, the government, folk lore, Indian lore and local color of all sections of the nation. Pictures, documents, rare copies of periodicals and books are also needed. If the owners wish to donate any valuable possession they will be carefully preserved. Otherwise, they will be copied and returned.

Gorman Test To Be Acidized; Wende Well at Cisco Is Awaiting Pipe

The A. A. Wisdom and E. E. Parson well six miles south of Cisco and the States Oil Corporation's test near Gorman were nearing completion Wednesday with scheduling of running of pipe on the former and preparations for acidization on the latter.

Striking top of the lime at 2,832 and showing for a showing of gas and revealing a seven foot depth of saturation, tubing was being set on the State's No. 1 S. H. Huckabee, Section 60, Block 2.

H. & T. C. survey. Acid will be used from 2,830 to 2,850 feet. The Wisdom-Parson No. 1 Gus Wende well, Block 3, Section 62, H. & T. C. survey, awaited pipe for the drilling in.

The test topped the gas sand at 3,215 and touched the oil sand at 3,226 feet Saturday and work was abandoned because of the weather. The Wende is reported as having "all the earmarks of a good producer."

WAR PACT IS ANNOUNCED BY ANTHONY EDEN

GENEVA, Jan. 22.—Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, revealed today that Britain, France, Jugo-Slavia, Greece and Turkey had made an arrangement to give each other armed aid if Italy attacks them because of sanctions.

Eden's revelation came shortly after the steering committee of 18 decided to move toward an oil embargo against Italy by appointment of a committee of experts to study if it could be made effective.

Eden sent a note to the chairman of the committee of 18 explaining the conversation held among Mediterranean powers.

Eden's note said France had promised that in the event Italy attacks Britain, "French support of Britain is assured fully and in advance."

The Turkish, Greek and Jugo-Slavian replies to Britain, Eden said, "left no doubt of their readiness to apply faithfully all obligations devolving upon them under the league covenant. Britain gave similar assurances to Turkey, Greece and Jugo-Slavia if Italy attacks them."

Science Has Scoffed at Bleak Depression

Ask almost anybody what kind of time the United States has had in the last five or six years and he will tell you that they were dead and hopeless years in which nothing was brought forth but misery.

The wheels all ran down and stopped, in those half dozen years, and time stood still while men gathered by the ashes of burnt-out dreams. That, anyhow, is the way most of us size them up.

But things did happen, somehow, during that dead and hopeless time, to make the business of living easier and more pleasant. We have a great many things today that we did not have six years ago; and in some ways they all came into existence in those years which the locust has eaten.

Suppose you go traveling, for instance. You can ride on new, streamlined, smokeless, and dustless trains which will get you to your destination faster and more comfortably than any train in existence in 1929. If you don't get on one of these trains, your ordinary Pullman is very likely to be air conditioned, free from grit and soot, replete with new gadgets.

If you don't go by train at all, you have other advantages. You can fly from New York to San Francisco in a day, or take an aerial sleeper, going in far greater comfort and safety than you could have done in 1929. If you drive your own car, it is a better car than you could have had in 1929, it costs you less money to buy and operate, the roads over which it rolls are better, and the tourist accommodations en route have been improved.

Suppose you build your own home; there, too, you can get more for your money than you could have gotten six years ago. New materials have been adapted for your use, new household appliances have been devised, new designs have been evolved—all to the end that the house you buy can be a more comfortable place to live in.

In the food you eat, similar improvements have taken place. It is easier to keep fresh fruits and vegetables on your table all the year round. The vitamins your body needs can be obtained in bottles or pills, if you don't care to get them in your food.

The very packages in which your food is wrapped are more scientifically designed to keep it fresh.

Such improvements have been made all along the line. There are new textile fabrics for your clothing; the range of your telephone has been increased; your radio is a better instrument, and some of the programs that come out of it have even been improved a little; your doctor and your dentist have increased scientific knowledge at their command; new books and magazines have been produced to give you intellectual and emotional stimulus.

These things are the gift of those half dozen dead years; years that were full of misery and despair for a great many people, but years in which, nevertheless, the great work of knocking the rough edges off life was carried forward as steadily and intelligently as in any other six years in our history.

WHEN THE DEMOCRATS ASSEMBLE

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—At the time of the 1933 massacre of little pigs, which brought on so much criticism, Mrs. Roosevelt herself is supposed to have made the naive suggestion that resulted in the creation of the FSRG—the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation—which bought up more than 250 million dollars' worth of surplus crops, for consumption by people on relief.

That program was off to a promising start, but trouble soon beset it. The first blow to the idea came when Roosevelt decided that FSRG should be abolished—on the theory that his works program and return of the "unemployables" to state care would somehow guarantee everybody enough food.

Remnants of the FSRG were moved over to the AAA. Then Congress seemed to feel that the needy unemployed offered a good dumping ground for surplus crops and so suggested when it passed the AAA amendments appropriating 20 per cent of customs receipts for diversion of such surpluses, which would amount to nearly $100,000,000.

THE next blow came when AAA decided to devote more than half the money to subsidizing southern cotton farmers and indicated that much of the rest would be spent on dumping commodities abroad. Nevertheless, a few here still hoped that the FSRG principle might be preserved.

And then, late in December, entered Comptroller General John R. McCarl. He ruled it would be impossible to use any of the customs money for relief purchases. McCarl held proposed purchase and distribution "would not constitute a diversion of such agricultural commodities from the normal channels of trade and commerce." Next, Roosevelt in his budget message recommended that the section providing for diversion of crops with customs receipts money be repealed altogether, on the ground that it made budgeting difficult and was contrary to principles of sound administration.

The small group which still thought surplus relief a good plan was just beginning to lobby secretly for a new amendment when six of the "nine old men" obliterated the AAA law completely. Now the farm lobbyists summoned here by Secretary Wallace to work out a new AAA insist that the customs receipts and diversion section be resurrected and strengthened in the new act. But chances are this will simply mean a controversy over export subsidies, which Roosevelt opposes, in which the surplus relief plan will again be ditched.

ROOSEVELT and Farley were at all times determined to have the Democratic national convention in Philadelphia because they believed it would help Senator Joe Cuffey carry Pennsylvania for Roosevelt in November. Pennsylvania's 36 electoral votes would be likely to swing the election to Roosevelt—if they could be had.

Philadelphia's business men's committee apparently believed it won the convention by raising the ante $50,000 plus expensive concessions, through Democratic desire to tune in with the Liberty Bell in the shadow of Independence Hall for public consumption, and because the administration wanted to hurl defiance at the door of Wall Street.

But suspicion grows that Farley was merely holding Philly up for extra dough while pretending Chicago and San Francisco had a chance. (Copyright, 1936, NEA Service, Inc.)

King Cotton's Price Depends on Supply and Amount Used

COTTON consumption and industrial production move together. The rate of cotton consumption in this country is influenced more by the general business situation than by cotton prices. Cotton consumption in the United States was the highest for this November than for any November since 1932. This increase in consumption reflects an increasing industrial and retail demand, Government purchases, and the existence of a large volume of reserve orders.

Farmer Raises 3 Crops in One Year
By United Press
GONZALES, Texas.—If farmer J. E. Davis had minded his cattle, he would have had good luck with his corn growing during 1935. Nevertheless, he had roasting ears on New Year's Day, gathered from his third crop of the year. Cows got into his field, however, and ate most of his last green crop. Davis, who lives at Thompsonville, reported he first planted 20 acres from which he gathered 600 bushels of corn. During the late summer he planted four more acres, using seed from the first crop. Last fall, he planted another acre which produced 20 bushels, most of which the cows ate.

HOW SOIL CONSERVATION PLANS WILL BE WORKED OUT

(Editor's Note. For the purpose of better acquainting readers of this paper with the program of the Soil Conservation Service, today is presented one of a series of articles dealing with the work of the service as it will be carried on under the direction of the regional headquarters office located in Fort Worth.)

Detailed work relative to setting up of Region 4 headquarters office of the Soil Conservation Service in Fort Worth is now in progress and will be pushed as rapidly as possible, according to a statement made today by Louis P. Merrill, regional conservator. Announcement of the designation of Fort Worth as headquarters of the region, which is comprised of Texas (except the high plains area), Arkansas and Louisiana, was received this week from Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, through Hugh H. Bennett, chief of the Service at Washington. Office space has already been secured in the Neil P. Anderson building.

Most of the personnel of the regional staff will go to Fort Worth from Lindale, Texas, where temporary offices have been maintained for the past two months at the Duck Creek watershed project pending designation of the permanent regional office location. Supervisory and administrative direction of five units of field operations in the region will be handled from the Fort Worth office. These field units consist of 19 project watershed demonstrations, 60 ECW camps, 2 Soil Conservation experiment stations, 4 soil conservation nurseries and a research division.

The 19 project demonstrations are operating on definitely defined watershed areas of approximately 25,000 acres each. Work on the individual farm units within these areas is determined by the suitability of the farm for an erosion control demonstration and the desire and ability of the farmer to cooperate in carrying out the program of erosion control planned for his farm. In working out a plan for controlling erosion the program best adapted to the peculiar needs of the farm is applied to each acre of the farm unit. In some cases it is possible to treat adjoining farms as one unit.

Points taken into consideration in developing an erosion control plan for each farm are based on proper utilization of each acre of land on the farm. Discussions of the special application of the different phases of the coordinated program, which includes the various phases of forestry, agronomy and engineering for successful erosion control, will be taken up separately in a subsequent article of this series. It is well to state here, however, that the primary agencies behind all erosion control and water conservation measures are the use of proper vegetative and cultural practices together, where necessary, with certain mechanical means of checking too rapid runoff of rainfall. In addition to ECW camp labor available for work in project areas, a considerable amount of labor from WPA rolls is being utilized.

The Newfangles (Mom 'n' Pop) By Cowen

the farmer to be a member of the soil conservation association which is organized in each project and camp work area. The entire program of the service is voluntary so far as to the farmer is concerned for demonstration of practical erosion control until the landowner invites representatives of the service to work out a plan for his farm. Activity of the soil conservation Service in working with farmers is predicated upon the closest cooperation with all federal and state agricultural agencies operating in Region 4. In order to insure cooperative working relationships between the service and allied state agencies, there is within each state a state coordinator. There is also a state advisory committee. This committee in Texas is composed of Louis P. Merrill, state coordinator, Soil Conservation Service, H. H. Williamson, Director Texas Extension Service, and A. B. Conner, Director Texas Agricultural Experiment Station. Through this committee cooperation with other organizations and agencies is effected. The program of the soil conservation service does not overlap the plan of operation of any other agricultural organization or division, but rather is carried on in its own particular sphere of demonstrating a complete program of erosion control. The service works side by side with all other agricultural agencies in its demonstrations of the best means of maintaining the inherent fertility of farm lands and protecting them from devastating erosion.

The STRANGE CASE of JULIA CRAIG

BEGIN HERE TODAY
JULIA CRAIG, pretty young secretary to GEORGE WOODFORD of the law firm of Woodford and Brooks, is ambitious to become a night club singer. Julia has a slender figure, a lovely face and a voice that is just what the doctor ordered. Her ambition is to become a night club singer. Her ambition is to become a night club singer. Her ambition is to become a night club singer.

Woodford laughed. "I'm not astonished. Woodford must be a friend of every young woman in town!"
"Well," said Julia, frowning his laughter rather weakly "that's quite a reputation to uphold."
"Royal does a good job of it though. . . . Then—let's see—there's Huzo Nash. He's an architect, and a mighty good one."
Julia smiled. "Sounds like a star, so far, except for me."
"Oh no. You'll like the two in files we have about Mrs. Joseph—she's a charming widow—and Cintra Lee."
"Cintra Lee? That name sounds familiar somehow."
Woodford nodded. "You've probably heard of her all right. She's a dancer, and a mighty good one. With your ambitions, you ought to meet her."
"You've forgotten Smith Garland?" Julia reminded him.
"No," said Woodford, "I've never met him. He's a dancer, and a mighty good one. With your ambitions, you ought to meet her."
"You've forgotten Smith Garland?" Julia reminded him.
"No," said Woodford, "I've never met him. He's a dancer, and a mighty good one. With your ambitions, you ought to meet her."

When she awakened the sun was streaming in through the port holes, brightening the little stateroom. Julia dressed with an energetic swiftness she had never experienced in town. A moment later she was clad for this swiftness, for there was a knock at the stateroom door and she heard Woodford's voice wishing her a pleasant good morning.
"Ready for breakfast?" he asked.
"Yes," Julia called out, then opened the door to find Woodford looking fit and attractive in his white ducks and blue coat.
"We came aboard rather late last night," he apologized, "so I thought it better not to disturb you. Of course you'll meet the others this morning." He hesitated a moment "I'm afraid, though, that none of them are quite up yet. I've told the cook to serve breakfast for two."
He guided Julia to the spacious after cabin where there was a small table set for two. A Japanese boy in white coat hovered over it so solicitously.
"Good morning, Oho," said Woodford pleasantly. "How about some of your delicious toast and crisp bacon?"
"Yessah. . . . Oho smiled, uncovered the halves of red grapefruit, and disappeared into the galley.
Woodford looked thoughtfully at Julia across the table.
"I'll tell you something about who's aboard. There's Royal Nesbitt—"
Involuntarily Julia looked up and repeated the name, "Royal Nesbitt!"
"You know him?"
"Only slightly," Julia said. "He's a friend of the girl who rooms with me."

Julia and her employer had finished their cigarettes when the rest of the party began to join them, drifting to the after deck one by one. Cintra Lee came first. She was a dark girl unbelievably slender and somehow attractive despite her brilliant make-up.
Mrs. Joseph, who joined them a moment later, seemed much less approachable.
Royal Nesbitt was his debonair self, except for a minute or two of embarrassment when he confronted Julia. But whether his embarrassment was due to the fact that he hadn't kept his promise or whether it was from some obscure sense of duty to Amy Julia could not determine. Obviously he was with Cintra Lee and Julia guessed that it was Nash who accompanied Mrs. Joseph.
There was some indefinable quality in the air which told Julia they were all assuming that she was Woodford's particular companion on the trip. Certainly Woodford's manner did nothing to dispel this assumption. Of course, Julia supposed, he wanted her to feel one of the little crowd. But she almost wished he would do or say something which would make it clear that she was aboard as an entertainer—and an amateur one, at that. The fact that there was a Mrs. George Woodford who was not aboard the Wood Nymph didn't add to Julia's peace of mind. But it was Nesbitt rather than the host who first suggested that Julia had a voice. Woodford's eyes widened. "Then you've already heard Julia sing?"
"Indeed yes. Let's go in to the piano and make her prove she's good."
When they had gathered in the main cabin it was Cintra Lee who sought the piano—a little dubiously. Julia noticed. But half-slender dancer capitulated and did her best with the accompaniment. Julia took an encore and when she had finished the dancer swung around on the piano bench and said "You're all right. . . . Let's go out on deck and have a cigarette and some fresh air. We're not paid to entertain after all."
They left the others gathered around a tray of cocktails which Oho has just deposited in the cabin. Outside, Julia laughed. "You said we weren't paid to entertain. But you see I am. Or at least I expect to be."
"Really?"
Cintra Lee gazed at her oddly, and Julia went on. "Yes—I came along to sing for the guests. I—I feel a little bit like an interloper."
"Forget it." Then the girl added: "Are you on the level? I mean is that what Woodford told you?"
Somehow a swift panic took Julia's heart. "Why, yes. You see, I want to be a night club singer. But I've never seemed to get a chance. When I accepted this trip I thought Smith Garland was to be aboard."
Cintra Lee did not answer at once. She flipped her cigarette in a wide arc over the rail. "If you've a good job, stick to it, Julia. The night club racket is no fun unless you're tops." She turned to Julia and smiled. "But of course you plan to be tops."
"I'd like to be," Julia admitted. "But you can't star there."
The other nodded. "I think you've got the nerve, all right. And there's nothing wrong with your voice. Maybe when we get back I can steer you around."
"That's nice of you," Julia said slowly. But there had been something odd about the tone with which the Lee girl had said "when we get back." She had sounded as if the return of the Wood Nymph was to be beyond the termination of the weekend. Suddenly Julia remembered a remark which Nash had casually dropped at dinner—a remark she hadn't caught fully at the time. "A hundred dollars," Nash had said to Woodford, "I bag more game than you do in the first two days on the island." Julia had supposed that this referred to some future hunting trip. But it might mean that Woodford had decided to extend the trip. Or that he had known all along—
Julia took a grip on her whirling thoughts. With sudden fright she wondered into what mass her ambition was leading her.

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, eats little, is hard to manage. Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right!
The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, must be carefully regulated as to dosage.
A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.
This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult.
The doctors use Liquid Laxatives. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative most families use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.
