U. S. MUNITIONS WERE DELAYED PROBE SHOWS

By United Press
WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—J. P. Morgan & Co. correspondence showing that an American munitions firm, "seriously delayed" the completion of orders from the government in 1916 in order to give preference to British orders was read into the munitions committee records today. "I don't see why we should be held to blame for that," said the portly Morgan, whose banking firm handled billions in munitions orders for the British. Stephen Raushenbush, chief investigator, read a letter to the Morgan firm export department dated July 28, 1916, from A. C. Dinkey, president of the Midvale Steel company of Philadelphia. It read: "We have accepted no orders from the Italian government or the United States government, the execution of which has interfered with orders we have taken for English munitions. "On the contrary in order to further production of English munitions or orders we have on hand we seriously delayed the completion of orders for American munitions which were placed long before your orders and on which delayed orders we are paying penalties in serious amounts."

INFLATION IN BONUS BILL IS ABOUT DEAD

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Currency inflation as a means of paying the soldier bonus was shoved further into the background today as a compromise bill providing for full payment in bonds which could be cashed immediately was introduced in the senate. Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, introduced the compromise bill with the prediction it would become law and would not require levying additional taxes. The bill would provide issuance of bonds in $50 denominations which a veteran could cash at any post office or could hold for 10 years as an investment at 3 per cent interest.

HIGH COURT RULING CUTS FEDERAL FUND

Billion in Other Processing Taxes Still Is In Doubt.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—A 10-minute session of the supreme court today cost the new deal $200,000,000 in processing taxes left status of $1,000,000,000 in other processing levies in doubt and avoided ruling directly on the constitutionality of the Bankhead cotton act.

The resulted from two decisions. First the court held protested processing taxes actually paid into escrow—a sum of about $200,000,000—must be returned to the processors. By failing to decide on validity of an AAA amendment, however, the court left in doubt the chances of any recovery of the $1,000,000,000 in levies already paid to the government by processors who failed to obtain anti-tax injunctions.

Second the court threw out an attempted test of the Bankhead act on technical grounds, thus it postponed until some time after Jan. 20 a final ruling on the act's validity. The question will be raised at that time in a suit brought by Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, new deal foe.

Business Can't Ignore World In Its Plans

Whenever a business man tries to make plans for the future, he is sooner or later confronted with the necessity of trying to figure out whether the world as a whole is going to the bad place in a high-wheeled hack.

That is to say that he cannot simply look at his own line of trade, judge the future by the past, and lay his plans accordingly. Things may happen away off in Italy, Germany, or Russia that would completely upset such scheming.

Any comprehensive planning must make some sort of prognostication of the state of world civilization as a whole.

A fair sample of this necessity is to be found in the scheme for gigantic new ocean liners recently proposed by Paul W. Chapman, former president of the United States Lines.

Mr. Chapman suggests that the United States government advance the money for construction of two enormous passenger ships. He visualizes vessels of prodigious size—1250 feet in length, 144 feet wide, 100,000 tons in displacement, with accommodations for 10,000 cabin class passengers and a speed of not less than 34 knots.

With these ships, which would dwarf even such giants as the Queen Mary and the Normandie, Mr. Chapman believes that American shippers could capture the bulk of the trans-Atlantic passenger trade.

These ships could make weekly sailings, and could carry passengers for $50 a head; they would be so immensely profitable, he believes, that their operators could pay back Uncle Sam for their construction at the rate of $10,000,000 a year.

Now this is a grand idea, certainly; but the first thing that occurs to one is that it is based on the unspoken belief that people are going to continue to want to travel back and forth across the Atlantic for pleasure or for business for many years to come.

That seems like a sensible expectation, until you stop to think that another European war would knock the Atlantic passenger trade into a complete coma.

Such a war may begin at almost any time and may last until there is nothing left in Europe for people to travel to; and in such a case these giant liners would set a world record for white elephants.

In other words, it is quite impossible to make a plan of this kind without doing some tall figuring on the prospects for continued peace; and the same is true, to a lesser degree perhaps, of all other large-scale business plans.

The world today, in sober truth, is at the mercy of its militarists. Until it can avert the threat of a general war, it simply cannot go ahead with the task of rebuilding its economic structure. It needs many things today, but it needs an assurance of lasting peace most of all.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Roosevelt will make many more speeches this year and most of them will be "fighting speeches" after the manner of his address to Congress.

That address was the kickoff of the campaign and the president has decided that he will have to carry the ball and make the gains himself. There will be support from other New Deal orators to help equalize the pressure of constant Republican attack, but it will be of distinctly secondary importance.

F. R.'s friends speak of "a one-man campaign."

Secretary Ickes and probably Harry Hopkins will be among the other pieces of New Deal heavy artillery. They like to fight and they know how.

There's a demand for a strong eastern Irishman to "take care of" Al Smith and the Irish in New York and New England.

THE "Skipper" wrote it himself, insist the insiders.

Usually when such a speech as this address to Congress is to be made, a half dozen important fellows in the administration throw their contributions into a hopper and Dr. Raymond Moley talks it over with the president, mulls over the material, and makes a literary document on which the president reads copy and makes revisions.

Then the group of "ghosts" eagerly awaits the final draft, to see how many of their precious paragraphs were left in as written.

Roosevelt had literally locked himself in for nearly a week to bat out the document. Members of that small inner group, any one of whom can get in to see Roosevelt virtually at any time, found great difficulty in reaching him.

One or two were permitted to suggest ideas, but the only authentic instance of a contributor seems to be that of Administrator Morris L. Cooke of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Cooke had sent his friends a New Year greeting card with some inspirational paragraphs of the late Prof. Josiah Royce, Harvard philosopher.

Roosevelt seized on those paragraphs and made them the final words of his text.

It was the second speech Roosevelt had written almost single-handed in recent weeks. The other was the one he made at the Georgia homecoming celebration.

THE speech—and no New Dealer would have the nerve to deny it—was a political address. It was Roosevelt's answer to many months of pleading by his closest intimates and advisers that he "get out and fight that gang," and give up all hope of conciliating his enemies in Wall Street and industry.

Until quite recently he kept putting them off, insisting that he would get around to it, but that the "timing" of his opening salvo was important.

Let the "enemy" stick its neck out and meanwhile start to fighting in its own camp, Roosevelt said, and there'd be plenty of time to start the counter-offensive.

Adverse results in the Literary Digest poll are believed to have spurred him on, but meanwhile some of his advisers privately had expressed doubt whether he would ever take a belligerent, challenging position.

THE effect of Roosevelt's change in tactics is not yet apparent. Most of his followers here are rather ecstatic about it, however, and insist Roosevelt has again proved himself the most brilliant political leader of his time.

And they're immensely relieved by what they consider the assurance that Roosevelt won't count on "smiling himself into re-election."

Monoxide Peril May Be Ended

By United Press
JOPLIN, Mo. — Experiments begun 40 years ago by Don L. Cross formed the basis for creation of a carbon monoxide eliminator which he has patented and preparing to manufacture for use on gasoline engines, including automobiles.

His advice is expected to be used mainly on automobiles and will result in the saving of thousands of lives lost annually through the deadly gas.

Cross, former newspaper editor of Cameron, Mo., and Bentonville, Ark., began experimenting with carbon monoxide 40 years ago when he was a student at Cameron and long before the invention of the automobile which brought the carbon monoxide menace.

The eliminator works on the principle of working air through a chemical solution which creates a mist and prevents the formation of carbon monoxide. The chemicals are placed in water before being sent in a glass container.

The kind of chemicals used, Cross says, are known only by himself. The recent formula has been placed in a bank vault so that his heirs may continue manufacture of the article. Part of the chemicals used are found in the mines of the Missouri-Kansas-Oklahoma mining district. Others are prepared by Cross.

Cross conducted exhaustive experiments with the eliminator before seeking patents. He used himself as a tester several times. In one instance he started the motor of a car in a tightly closed garage with two live rabbits. The motor ran for 90 minutes. When Cross opened the doors the rabbits scampered out in perfect condition. Ordinarily, the experiment would have killed the rabbits in a few minutes.

Cross has obtained American patents as well as patents in several other countries. Many offers of royalties already have been made but Cross intends to start his own factory and manufacture the eliminators. He is now negotiating with several bus lines for installation of the devices.

DR. GUS DORAIS, head man at the University of Detroit and chairman of the public relations committee of the Coaches' Association, is not sure that there is room in the football set-up for imitators of the Rose Bowl game.

"A new problem, which is annually becoming more serious, now confronts college football," Dr. Dorais told those attending the coaches' convention in New York. "The problem is the ever-increasing number of Bowl games and pre-season charity promotions.

"We now have besides the original Rose Bowl, the Sugar Bowl, Orange Bowl, Sun Bowl, the Feast of the Sun, and the Blue Bonnet," Dr. Dorais later discovered the Dust Bowl in Kansas, and did not bring up the Ice Bowl battle in his own Detroit Stadium between the professional Detroit Lions and New York Giants in mid-December.

"Are these games, promoted by outside interests, a healthy appendage to our college game; or are they, as some contend, a cancerous growth gnawing at the vitals of the gridiron sport?" continued Dr. Dorais.

Players and Public Lose Interest With First Defeat

"HAVE the colleges the right to permit the exploitation of students in these promotional affairs? Your committee feels that it is time this Coaches' Association defines a policy toward these games.

"Too many teams are pointing for this bowl or that," explained Dr. Dorais. "That places a greater emphasis than ever before upon victory or defeat.

"It is bad psychologically for the players and puts an added burden on the coaches. When a squad has been defeated once, the public, knowing that it has been eliminated from bowl consideration, loses interest. So do the players. They have too little zest for the rest of their schedule even though some of the most important games may be left.

"Things were somewhat different a few years ago. We thought then that one defeat did not necessarily spoil a season. It is harder now to drive that impression home when everybody is talking about teams that have survived as possible choices for the bowl games.

Teams Exploited Long After Season's Close

"MANY people are still antagonistic toward football and these bowl games give them an argument that is hard to answer. None of us can deny that schools, students, and teams are exploited long after they should have settled down to academic routine. What do they get in return? What prestige? What of anything that has been of benefit to the game as a whole?"

How about that fair share of the swag, doctor?

"It is impossible to prolong interest and to focus attention on a half dozen bowl games," points out the Detroit strategist. "Some of them are bound to die off. There aren't enough teams of national importance willing to lend themselves to these promotions. The Big Ten will have no part of them and neither will Princeton and some of the other eastern schools. That is helpful."

But don't bet that you won't be sitting in front of the radio listening to two or three or more bowl games next New Year's Day.

Exodus Has Cost Nazi Germany to Lose 700 Scholars

LONDON.—Approximately 700 Jewish professors, dismissed from German universities under Nazi rule during the last two years, have found positions in the United States, Great Britain and other countries, according to a report prepared for the League of Nations.

The expatriates, of whom the best known is Prof. Albert Einstein, account for only about half of 1,300 instructors who lost their positions because of their non-Aryan blood. Many chose to remain in the Fatherland, however, since they were not expelled from the country.

The 700 so-called "exiles" are distributed throughout the world. Some are teaching in universities. Others have joined industrial research departments, while a small proportion of the 700—fewer than 5 per cent—are being cared for temporarily by grants from such organizations as the Rockefeller Foundation.

The report of this migration, and the work which the professors are finding in foreign lands, was prepared by the British Academic Research Council, and reveals that the United States has provided permanent employment to 88 German professors and temporary jobs to 57, a total of 145.

Sixty-eight have found permanent posts in Great Britain, and 144 others have been given temporary positions, a total of 212, according to the report.

The 343 professors finding permanent jobs abroad include 92 medical professors and 43 teachers of chemistry. The others, for the most part, are professors of biology, economics, philology, sociology and mathematics.

"It is estimated, from information reaching us," the report stated, "that during the coming year 150 or 200 more scholars will leave Germany, even though new governmental regulations affecting exchange make it impossible for them to take their money with them.

Funds for maintaining the German professors on grants until they have found positions in foreign lands have been raised by the Academic Assistance Council through campaigns among University leaders and scholars throughout Great Britain.

Among those said to have aided actively in the 1935 campaign were Stanley Baldwin, Lord Cecil,

That new cook is so crude. Will you entertain him a few minutes until—

"Yes, Grandmother," Nancy answered mechanically.

She opened the front door, and Ronnie came in. Ronnie Nancy saw, was looking at her as though he had already guessed that he had been deceived "at the altar" as old fashioned wags started always put it.

"Hello, Nancy," Ronnie spoke awkwardly. He glanced about the flower-filled hall. "Looks as though somebody bought out a floral shop."

"They came from everywhere," Nancy said in a low, uncertain voice. "I'm afraid it's not a secret—about you and Dana."

"I'm afraid not," Ronnie conceded, quietly his eyes on a basket filled with glowing roses.

Nancy said desperately, "Ronnie, I've something—there's some thing I must tell you."

"Go ahead, Nancy," Ronnie said. "Out with it."

"Oh, I can't, Ronnie. It's too terrible."

"Never mind, then," Ronnie's voice was calm. "I think I can guess. Dana doesn't want to go through with it."

"She was dressing," Nancy spoke in a low tone. "And then someone called from the hospital. Scott had been in an accident."

"I'm sorry to hear that. Is he hurt much?"

"No. It was the other man."

"Oh," Ronnie said, repeating tonelessly, "the other man."

NOW was her opportunity. Nancy knew she should tell Ronnie that Dana didn't know it was the other man who had been hurt. That Dana had been frantic believing Scott had been injured. And that she had let Dana go with that agony of fear in her heart.

But if she were courageous enough to tell him, Ronnie would be sure to miss the important fact—that Dana had come because it was Scott she loved. No words came from Nancy's stiff lips.

"That lets me out," Ronnie said. Nancy thought "Ronnie is being brave. Ronnie is being awfully brave. You would think he would know the truth about Dana rushing off so without leaving even a message for him. Surely she should tell him. But no words came."

Ronnie turned then, looked at Nancy and came back taking both of her hands. "If you had been ditched by a girl an hour or so before you were to marry her, what would you do?" he asked in a tense tone.

"Marry another girl, I guess," Nancy said.

"That's what I've been thinking," Ronnie said.

"You were?" Nancy's voice was breathless.

"Yes, only I don't know any girl who would marry me right off."

"Anybody would," Nancy said. Ronnie smiled a little. "But I don't know anyone who would." His hands tightened on hers. There was a strange intensity in his voice.

"There's me!" Nancy cried. And then a wave of color washed over her face. If her hands had been free, she would have covered her face in an agony of shame. She had proposed to Ronnie. Ronnie herself right at his head. And now he would turn her down gently and firmly and she would never hold up her head in life again.

RONNIE was saying in a queer voice. "That's a mighty fine idea, Nan. It's generous of you to try to save my face. Your idea is that tomorrow when Dana is back with Scott and you and I are married, nobody will know what to believe. They won't be able to make up their minds—wondering if Dana ditched me, or whether I fell in love with you and ditched Dana. The honors will be about evenly divided. That's what you were thinking I imagine."

Nancy didn't reply for a moment. Ronnie said it all figured out this way. Maybe it would be best to let him believe it. Then, if he didn't want to go ahead, he wouldn't feel so embarrassed about saying so.

"Don't think you have to marry me, Ronnie, just because I suggested it."

Ronnie spoke almost cheerfully. "I'm going to take you up on it, Nancy. Can you leave at once? Perhaps you could take along some of Dana's clothes. Hurry will you? I'm afraid we may have a hard time selling the idea to your grandmother."

Nancy ran up the stairs. This was a dream. A foolish dream. It couldn't be possible that Ronnie was willing to marry her. Even though he were only marrying her to escape humiliation, it was still wonderful.

It might be weak and cheap to do this. But when the desire of your heart was offered you, it wouldn't be human not to accept it.

Nancy found the traveling cases neatly packed, closed. Dana's new hat was on the bed and her new coat on a hanger. Dana had worn her old coat. Somehow, Nancy felt that had been intentional. Dana hadn't wanted to go to Scott in clothes bought for her marriage to another man.

With trembling fingers, Nancy put on the smart, small hat, slipped into the coat and quickly made up her face.

She was going to be married. In clothes that didn't belong to her. To a man who had believed until 10 minutes ago that he was marrying her sister. But nothing mattered. Her heart was leaping wild with joy. Somehow the lucky star that had been so far away all her life was hovering over her to night.

London's Tallest Building Will Be Eight Stories High

By United Press
LONDON.—An eight-story "skyscraper" that is expected to amaze staid Londoners will be started soon in the midst of the London University grounds in Bloomsbury.

The tower will be 210 feet high, or 70 feet taller than the imposing Shell-Mex building on the Thames embankment and 40 feet higher than Nelson's monument with its guardian Lions in Trafalgar Square.

In order to build the tower special permission had to be obtained from the London County Council to exceed the 80 to 100 feet limitations on the height of all buildings under a new act.

The base of the tower was started recently and the structure probably will be completed early in 1937.

Although it will have higher office accommodations than any other building in London, the tower will not be the tallest structure. Big Ben atop the House of Parliament is 320 feet high while the campanile of Westminster Cathedral is 283 feet at its summit. The cross on St. Paul's is 365 feet above the ground.

"The tower, a part of which will house the University library, will be something of a skyscraper by London standards and the view from its top will be magnificent," a University official explained.

"We intend that it shall be dominating, bringing home to Londoners the full importance of the University."

Now that "Sky Pullmans" are being built, likely candidates for the naming job would be General Johnson and Gertrude Stein.

Traffic System Tops Program

CLEVELAND.—Elimination of traffic hazards will be one of the major problems under consideration at the highway world's "Big Show" here Jan. 20 to 24.

When the American Road Builders' association convenes in public hall, it will have five key subjects as the center of interest. Foremost, according to leaders already here to complete final plans, is the problem of safety on the nation's roads.

Several months ago, the association went on record with the declaration that unless traffic safety is given effective attention, the increasing toll of deaths and injuries will affect adversely continued highway programs and motor vehicle production. It volunteered to serve as a sort of clearing-house for the exchange of traffic safety methods by making worthy safety measures available to state, county and city officials.

Foreign Leaders Expected Leaders of the industry who will come here from every state in the union, from Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Central America and Soviet Russia plan to take further steps looking towards reduction of the automobile death rate. They have indicated they will devote one entire session to discussion of recent safety methods for general application.
