Why War, When There's Work To Be Done?

One of the most revealing sidelights on the civil war in Spain was dug up by an American newspaper correspondent who was trailing a retreating army across the country. Stopping at a little farm to get a drink, the correspondent asked the peasant who lived there on which side he was.

The peasant said bluntly that he was on neither side. He only hoped that both sides would get the fighting over with and go home so that he could go ahead with his job of getting the crops in; and he wound up by wishing an eternity of bad luck on all generals and armies that insist on holding battles on someone's farmland.

This peasant probably was a woefully undereducated person with no understanding of the great issues of the day and whichever dictatorship finally succeeds in fastening itself on Spain probably will shoot him one of these days. But he did manage to voice humanity's age-old complaint against war—it gets in the way of the work that has to be done.

He has had brothers on every battlefield in all history and they all got the worst of it when the drums began to beat. The stolid Belgian who farmed La Have Sainte on the plain by Waterloo, the Pennsylvanian who owned the famous Peach Orchard at Gettysburg, the Danish trawler who hoped to take a few fish from the Skagerrack on the May afternoon in 1916—to these people, as to this Spanish peasant, armies and battles are an unmitigated nuisance and the work of the world would go forward a lot faster if they were abolished.

And although it may be heresy to suggest it, these people are probably quite right.

Human civilization is a strange growth, and we do not entirely understand how it got started or how it does manage, in spite of obstacles, to keep progressing; but it is very clear that its base is the worker and not the warrior, the man who produces rather than the man who destroys.

Civilization, that is, does not rest on a base of armies and navies; it rests on the backs of the men who work with their hands, in field or in shop, and it will last just as long as they go on holding it up. They are a greater procession, in the long pages of history, than all the hordes of warriors that ever followed a drum.

They move without glory and without battle flags, poets do not immortalize them and the history books omit their names. But for unnumbered generations they have gone on, tempering the earth to man's habitation, making possible all the graces of living which lift man above the level of the beasts.

The far-called armies melt away, and the winds carry off the crash of their battles. The plain man at the bottom is eternal, and he has the world and all its hopes in his keeping. He makes possible Shakespeare and Beethoven, the Taj Mahal and Rheims cathedral, and all the glory and marvel of which human effort is capable.

And if, with all of this, he wearily asks the fighting men to get the heck out of the way so that he can go on with his job—is he asking too much?

Life of the Saint Of the Day

By REV. S. E. BYRNE

The Transfiguration of Our Lord: Our Divine Savior, about a year before his death, being in Gallilee at the time, took with Him St. Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, Sts. James and John and retired with them to a mountain. Tradition assures us that this was Mount Thabor, which is exceedingly high and beautiful, and at the time of Christ was covered with trees and shrubs, and was very fruitful. It rises somewhat like a sugar-loaf, in a vast plain in the middle of Galilee. Whilst Jesus prayed, He suffered that gles speaking to their Master. The three apostles were delighted and frightened by this glorious vision, and St. Peter cried out to Christ, "Lord, it is good for us to be here. Let us make three tabernacles: one for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." Whilst St. Peter was speaking there came of a sudden, a bright shining cloud from Heaven, an emblem of the presence of God's majesty and glory, and from out of this cloud a voice was heard to say, "This is my beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." The apostles, upon hearing this voice, were seized with a sudden fear, and fell upon the ground; but Jesus, going to them, touched them and bade them to arise. They immediately did so, and saw only Jesus standing in his ordinary state. This vision happened at night, we are told, and the following morning as they went down the mountain, Jesus bade them not to tell anyone what they had seen till He should be risen from the dead.

ON TEXAS FARMS

Edna Real of the Reservation Club won first place in Kerr county the 4-H club girls' bedroom contest. She painted the walls in ivory and varnished and waxed the floor of her room. She refinished 13 pieces of furniture, including the bed, and made three hooked rugs, a book shelf and a magazine stand. A mattress and pillow protectors, and a window blind were made. Together with spring and mattress covers, a mattress and pillow protectors, and a window blind were made.

KINGSVILLE. — Mrs. Lyman Hanson of the San Fernando home demonstration club of Kleberg county made two mattresses of home grown cotton last fall. About 350 pounds of seed cotton were ginned and pressed into a miniature bale and kept in well formed layers. Since the cotton was ginned for seed, Mrs. Hanson's cash outlay for the mattress was the amount paid for ticking, thread, mattress cord, and needles.

EDNA. — At the achievement program held at her home, Lola Kubecka, 4-H club girl in Jackson county, told visitors that she had raised vegetables from her garden this year worth $138.95. She reported that 1,644 pounds were used fresh; 1,135 pounds have been stored for future use. Also she canned 117 containers of food valued at $34.06.

SAN AUGUSTINE. — Mrs. Vivian Sowell, operator of the Norwood home demonstration club in San Augustine county, has canned so far this year 76 quarts of berries, according to Esther Ross, home demonstration agent. She has also canned 210 containers of 16 varieties of fruits and vegetables.

JAYTON. — "I have all my land contoured with the exception of about 20 acres and I plan to contour the rest of it next year," Wade Wright of the Girard community in Kent county recently said.

He pointed out that wind and sand had damaged his crops on the straight rows, but had not hurt his crops of the same size growing on contoured rows. "The wind and sand swept down the straight rows, but could not follow the contours," he said.

ROBY. — Curry McCain, farmer of the Capitola community in Fisher county, recently demonstrated to his own satisfaction that cotton burrs have a value in addition to ginning.

McCain planted two acres of sudan, according to T. H. Roensch, county agricultural agent. On one acre cotton burrs were applied to the land and the other acre was left in its natural state. On the acre on which the cotton burrs were used, the sudan is now about waist high; while on the other acre, the sudan is about six inches high and is practically dead.

ALUM CREEK. — "The milk check is larger and the feed bill is smaller when you feed your dairy cows on home grown alfalfa," T. T. Royston, dairyman in Bastrop county, pointed out. W. S. Millington, county agricultural agent, reports that Royston has been milking 12 cows which produced 22 gallons of milk per day. Three days after he began feeding alfalfa hay his milk production increased from 22 to 31 gallons per day. Royston plans to double his alfalfa acreage this fall.

1936 Lamb Crop 15 Per Cent Higher Than for Last Year

WASHINGTON. — The 1936 lamb crop in the 1 Western sheep states is about 2,700,000 head or 15 percent larger than that of 1935. The western lamb crop this year is the second largest since records began in 1924, being exceeded only by the 1931 crop. The number of lambs docked this season exceeds the 1934 crop about 4 per cent; the 1933 crop by 8 percent the five year (1931-1935) average by about 5 percent; and the ten year (1926-1935) average by about 11 percent.

In actual numbers the total western crop amounts to 20,037,000 head, compared with 17,248,000 in 1935, 19,355,000 in 1934, and 18,492,000 in 1933. The ten year (1926-1935) crop is about 18,186,000 head.

The larger western crop this year was due directly to the increased percentage of lambs marked, and only to a small degree on account of more ewes in lambing bands. Nine of the thirteen states registered higher percentage crops than in 1935, Montana and Oregon the same, and California and Washington lower. In total numbers of lambs, eleven of the thirteen states have more in 1936 than last year, while nominal decreases were shown in Montana and in Washington. In Texas, about 1,500,000 or 69 percent more lambs were docked than in 1935. This alone accounts for about 57 percent of the increase for the western group. In the eleven far Western States, as a group, the 1936 lamb crop was only about 1,000,000 head, or 7 percent, larger than that of 1935. Most of the increase in lambs took place in the late lambs (those available for market after August 1). Of the total increase of nearly 2,700,000 lambs, about 2,300,000 head was in late lambs.

Lamb crop percentages are computed from the number of ewes on hand January 1 each year, and not upon the number of ewes remaining on hand at lambing time. It will be noted that for each of the past four years (1935, 1934, 1933 and 1932) the average lambing percentage has been below normal while for 1936 a relatively high percentage was had.

In Texas the largest lamb crop on record, being slightly larger than the 1933 crop. The number of lambs is about 69 percent larger than last year and about 45 percent larger than the 1934 crop. Sheep wintered well with below average losses. Lambs have done very well, losses being light, except in a few early lambings. Range and feed conditions are good.

RESORT HOTEL

BEGIN HERE TODAY ANN HAMILTON, pretty young secretary in a large business office, goes to a travel agency to make plans for her two-week vacation. BILL WARE, travel bureau employee, persuades her to go to Lake Racine. Bill is obviously attracted by Ann, but she gives him little thought. Ann goes to the mountain resort and at first is lonely. Then she meets RALPH SPRING, head boatman, who tells her he is not interested in girls. Ralph introduces her to JAIMIE LAIRD, wealthy playboy. Jaime is handsome and attentive. At a dance she meets LEFTY PONDS, married but flirtatious. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER VII WHEN ANN came down to breakfast she felt that some of the guests at the resort hotel eyed her askance. She was sure she knew what they were thinking: she was the girl who was running around with that wild galoot, Jaime Laird, who lived across the lake at the Majestic. Flying high! They all knew who Ann was, what she did in the city, and how old she was. She was wearing climbing tops. The porch stairs took up their positions and waited for something to happen. One or two genial old ladies dropped a stitch or two in their knitting when Jaime's long roadster came roaring around the lake, to stop in a whirl of dust before the Glenwood Inn. Ann went down to meet him and they drove away on the Cascade road, toward the Marcy trail. Jaime seemed changed. Ann thought—or perhaps she imagined it—that his face had a little more color this morning. Perhaps it was the result of the crisp mountain air. "Is this a very steep mountain?" Jaime asked. "It's the highest in the Adirondacks," she said firmly. Jaime pretended to faint, and she had to catch the wheel to keep them from swerving off the road. "You juvenile!" she said, laughing. "You perpetual clown." He faced her. "Do you like me?" "I'm afraid I do." THE climb they were attempting wasn't arduous. They were going only part of the way up the mountain. At first the trail was no more than a leisurely uphill walk. At intervals Jaime stopped and pointed out flora beside the path. Once they stopped to watch tiny lizards in the grass. This experience was something entirely new to him, and he thrilled to it like a small boy. His face was flushed when they came to the roaring cataract which emptied one of the high mountain lakes called by the Indians Lake Tear-in-the-Clouds. He leapt out to the big boulder in the very center of the raging flood, and waited for her to follow. low. Ann jumped, and he caught her in his arms. They were both laughing hilariously when they sat down on the rock-island to catch their wind. It hadn't been a bad climb, and now they were enjoying one of the most beautiful sights in the mountains. The sun, playing about the peaks, painted them with a fantastic mauve and purple. The roar of the water was pleasant in their ears. A faint cooling spray came up at intervals to revive them from blissful lethargy. Jaime smoked and was silent, contemplating the grandeur all about. Ann leaned back on the rock, and watched the cirrus clouds chasing one another in the sky. "You see how marvelous it is up here?" she said. "This is a real vacation spot." "At least it's better than that dark little hole—the betting room. But it was too much work getting here!" Jaime smiled lazily down at her. She sat up suddenly. "Jaime, why don't you do something? People love you. They are snared by your charm, but they want to slap your hands and say, 'Get some ambition!'" Jaime laughed at her. "I think you like me—just as I am," he said, and moved to kiss her. "Conceited!" she answered, evading him. He looked genuinely hurt, and sat very still, hugging his knees up to his chin. "All right, Jaime will be a good boy." He looked up at the trail which led toward the top of the giant peak and said, "Shall we climb on?" "Do you want to?" Her eyes were eager again. "If you want to," he said with extreme courtesy. "I think I could go it until lunch time. After we've had our lunch we can start down again." "Let's go!" THEY came back to the little inn at a quarter to 4. Jaime went to his own hotel, pleasantly tired. He had to go to the racing room and see how much money he had lost on the day's races. He was losing steadily. After a hot shower Ann felt refreshed and joined the crowd for tea in the lobby. It was hard to realize that she had arrived at the resort only the afternoon before. The hostess, Aimee, was busy introducing new guests, and Ann felt like one of the oldest now. Aimee talked to her like an old friend.
