QUAKER OATS

Tester For Breath Indicates Alcohol

By United Press

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Call it a "balloon tester," "drunkometer" or breath tester, but results obtained from the device were admitted in evidence in Municipal Court here recently, despite vigorous protests.

The device, said by Dr. Rollo N. Harger, state toxicologist, to determine accurately the amount of alcohol in the body, was used to test the breath of two persons following an automobile accident in which both were injured and charged with driving while intoxicated.

It was the first time the invention had been used here, although it is understood to have been admitted in evidence in many other countries.

Dr. Harger testified that the breath of each was blown into a separate toy balloon. Then it was expelled into the "drunkometer," which contained a purple fluid. The fluid turned blue, which the toxicologist said, was evidence that they had been drinking.

Lawrence Shaw, attorney for the accused asserted the device was nothing more than a "balloon test," that the medical word does not recognize it as a competent test of intoxication.

Dr. Harger countered that it had the approval of a committee of members of the American Medical Association, that his research in several thousand tests had shown the apparatus to be accurate.

The doctor then offered to test Shaw, who readily accepted.

The attorney blew into the balloon, his breath was expelled into the "drunkometer" and the purple fluid remained the same. Shaw burns two ounces of alcohol every five minutes and told Judge Floyd R. Mannon that he had three drinks of cognac and a glass of beer for lunch.

Dr. Harger said that may have been true but that a person's body three hours and the test thus was negative.

Judge Mannon dismissed charges of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants against the defendants but fined each $5 on the charge of drunkenness.

Nine "drunkometers" are in use in Indiana, according to Dr. Harger. He said he has received requests to supply them to authorities outside the state. One of the breath testers was sent to Hi, There, Macaulay! We Have Your Number!

President Roosevelt, with his frequent turnings to classical English literature in his speeches, is going to give the country an education in English literature, if nothing else. He set thousands to thumbing through Milton when he christened Al Smith, "the Happy Warrior," and his frequent quotations from Alice in Wonderland have made him kin to the many people to whom Lewis Carroll is a minor prophet.

In taking on Thomas Babington Macaulay, as he did in his speech at Roanoke Island, Mr. Roosevelt is carrying the fight pretty directly into political enemies' camps, for the famous Macaulay letter he quoted at great length was widely circulated against Roosevelt during recent political campaigns. Copies of it, in pamphlet and reprint form, were published as a direct attack on New Deal spending.

Those people whose first reaction is to ask "Who is this guy Macaulay?" need only to think back to school days to have the rhyme come back:

"In yon strait path a thousand may well be stopped by three; Now who will stand on either hand and keep the bridge with me?"

That was Macaulay, and anyone who has heard "Horatius at the Bridge" recited by a popeyed eighth-grader will remember him.

Macaulay, 100 years ago, was an English writer and politician. He was a Whig, roughly equivalent today to a Liberty League Republican. He wrote a series of famous essays, and a 20-pound History of England that was almost as popular in that day as Gone With the Wind is in this. Before he was 8 years old, this prodigy had written a Compendium of Universal History, and poems in 12 books.

Macaulay's work was so highly esteemed that he was made Lord Macaulay. There seems little doubt that he believed sincerely, in rule by a select, favored and talented class; that "pure democracy," or as he called it rule by "the poorest and most ignorant part of society," was doomed to destroy sooner or later "liberty or civilization, or both."

"It is quite plain," wrote Olympian Macaulay, "that your government will never be able to restrain a distressed and discontented majority." What is not so plain is, what would be the use of keeping institutions under which a majority were distressed and discontented?

Lord Macaulay wrote his famous letter some 80 years ago. Yet the United States government has survived, possibly because there has never yet been a time when the majority of its citizens were distressed and discontented.

President Roosevelt might even have added to his own comment on Macaulay one made by an associate, Lord Melbourne, who said, "I wish I were as cocksure of any one thing as Macaulay is of everything."

OLD MUSICIAN GETS SURPRISE

By United Press

LA JUNTA, Colo.—A surprise was staged in Rourke theatre here for C. W. Wonderly on his 7th birthday. When the curtain was raised, seated on the stage were musicians who had played in Cincinnati's orchestra years ago, one traveled 500 miles to attend the celebration.

Kiddies Like Cereal Made Into Dessert

Youngsters who are "as cross as a bear" at breakfast and won't eat their cereal are big problems. Usually they are the ones who are sorely in need of the nourishment which a good cereal, such as Quaker Oats, gives them. Often a cereal disguised as a "dessert" and served at luncheon or supper is eaten with youthful zest and a lusty call for "second helpings."

Just such a cereal-dessert are oatmeal bouchees, which are made as follows: Oatmeal Bouchees: Pour left-over breakfast porridge in small coffee cups and place them aside to cool. When cool turn them out and scoop out the center, leaving a wall and bottom about half an inch thick. Fill this with fruit — berries, sliced peaches, pineapple — dust with powdered sugar and serve with cream or with a soft custard.

Two at Special Session to Draw Much Attention

AUSTIN.— Youthful, brilliant Bob Calvert; suave, sophisticated, mustachioed Walter Woodul — these two men will draw the spotlight when the special session of the legislature convenes Sept. 20.

Business of the session will be to raise revenue for pensions, for the blind, for dependent children and to balance the budget. And for the last time, Calvert and Woodul will see each other as presiding officers of the two branches of the legislature. Next summer they will be rival political candidates, asking for the office of attorney general.

paint and polish, and a bilge cleaning," Jim Pike explained. "Did Uncle Ben really cruise in that boat?" Kay inquired.

"He certainly did," averred Jim Pike. "And I and two others were with him. She'll sleep four easy. Those settees to port and starboard in the cabin fold into upper and lower berths. She's husky—and a 46-footer is ideal for you girls. Plenty of cruising on inside waters around here."

"We—we'd thought some of taking our vacation with the boat," Priscilla blurted.

JIM PIKE nodded. "You ain't really ever had a vacation until you've taken one in your own little boat—sail or power—with no schedules to make except maybe the tide. Wear what you want. Eat when you want. Just let the world go hang."

"It sounds nice," Kay said, after she had climbed up to the bridge and gripped the wheel. She tossed her head back in a riotous smile. "But we don't know anything about navigation."

"Shucks, you don't need navigation in inland waters like these around here. I can teach you some piloting—how to read a chart and lay out a course, and use the compass, and know what the buoys mean. You got common sense. I can see that. I'll teach you what you ought to know while you're getting the boat ready."

"B-but, you see, Mr. Pike, I'm not sure we can afford to trouble you—"

"No trouble at all. I'm happy when I can get somebody introduced to the greatest sport in the world. I got a launch you girls will take to water like the well-known duck. As for getting the boat fixed up... let's see..." He pursed his lips judiciously. "A hundred dollars ought to put her in shape, if you want to do some of the painting and polishing yourselves."

Melita and Priscilla were weakening fast. They knew that among the three they could manage the hundred—counting in the next pay day. But Kay was still a little dubious. "I don't know. None of us has ever operated a boat."

"Easier than drivin' a car," claimed Jim Pike loftily. "You got a forward and a reverse and a speed lever. Of course," he added, "there ain't no brakes."

"We'll have to have some put in, then," Priscilla insisted.

Pike roared. "Not while you got the reverse. That's the brake on a seagoing automobile, lady."

Priscilla was not abashed. "Let's use her for our vacation," she cried, and Melita agreed.

"Well," said Kay, "let's get some food first and talk it over. We'll let you know tomorrow, Mr. Pike."

"That's okay. You'll do it."

"There again," said the loquacious Jim Pike, "a boat's like a woman. Nobody exceptin' maybe the oldest master mariners really knows much about them. Just when you think you got them figured, they fool you a little, one way or another. But you three ain't too old to learn." He tossed the napkin somewhere inside the door, and grabbed up a weather-beaten blue yachting cap. "I'll show her to you."

Obediently Kay, Melita, and Priscilla followed down the boardwalk toward the water. Pike led them to a vast outdoor moorage, walked half way along one of the runways, and pointed. "There she is, ladies."

The trio stared. They hadn't known what to expect, but the very word "yacht" in the attorney's letter had connoted something a bit grander than the "Chinook." She wasn't large, and she wasn't particularly natty. Un-schooled in pleasure craft, the girls were seeing all her bad points and none of her good ones.

Study Before Mirror

The first step in the process of teaching the pupils is done before a mirror. They are shown the various positions of the lips, tongue and cheeks during the production of individual sounds. The teacher pronounces the sound while the child places his fingertips on her face to feel the voice vibrations.

After intense application to this fundamental step, the pupil watches himself in the mirror and tries to imitate the teacher. Unable to hear the sound he produces, the pupil depends entirely upon the mirror and the feel of the vibrations in his fingertips to receive and identify the sound. After he has mastered the basic letter sounds, the pupil then begins to construct them into words and sentences.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Senator Hugo Black of Alabama is a loyal, unquestioning follower of the idyllic Court appointment largely to his subservience to Roosevelt. So goes the patter.

The facts are something else again.

And the big outstanding fact of which perhaps Roosevelt himself isn't aware is that in four years the President has swung completely around from primary tenets of his original political-economic philosophy to the policies advocated in 1933 by Black. Vital policies which Roosevelt refused to accept when Black urged them then are now among the brightest jewels in the New Deal store window.

FEW are aware that Black first voted to knock out the NRA or code section of the National Industrial Recovery act, then voted for NRA when it carried the Enoch anti-monopoly amendment and finally voted against the finished measure as it came from conference for reasons which Black explained in a long-forgotten speech. In that speech made June 13, 1933, you will find much of what is sometimes called now, "The New Deal."

Black urged a flat wage-hour bill in which wage and hour standards would be declared by Congress, and enforced by the government and in which there would be no trade practice provisions or traps to industry.

He predicted collapse of NRA. Today Roosevelt stands behind Black's bill which strictly concerns itself with wages and hours.

Black argued against an act
