the church. Interested in Legislation "What legislation are you interested in?" asked Walsh. "Prohibition, peace and war, the bill of obscene literature, encouraging the defeat of the Lausanne treaty, industrial relations, marriage and divorce. I think that is all. Prohibition and war and peace are the most important."

When asked about his lobby activities, the Bishop said: "I want it understood I am not a lobbyist in the sense of being paid. It has not been my practice to lobby personally very much, even in the years I was legislative superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League before the late Wayne B. Wheeler came to Washington. I never saw congressmen very much. I used to send general letters, but not to any one in particular. In 1926 a secretary was elected to our board and our assessment was doubled. We decided to hire a secretary. Previously the church board had been active only indirectly, explaining the attitude of the church about various matters which came up from time to time. I don't say our activities increased in 1926 but the secretary began to attend all annual conferences of the church."

Letter Is Produced Walsh produced a letter from Dr. E. L. Crawford, secretary of the board, to an Alabama minister of the church, the Rev. Magee, suggesting that the Alabama senators be notified the board favored the Harris amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill in 1928. This amendment would have increased the prohibition appropriations by $3,400,000. The Bishop said that the board not only did that, but also wrote a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Mellon demanding "an intensive nationwide campaign and many other reforms to correct prohibition enforcement. Cannon drew this letter from his brief case and read it. The letter would seem to indicate you were not satisfied with the Secretary of Treasury," suggested Walsh.

"It speaks for itself," said Cannon. "It states we would be satisfied if he would develop a national campaign." Walsh leaned upon the table as he propounded questions in an even tone. Between him and Blaine sat John Holland, committee investigator, reading a sheaf of files from Cannon's office.

Walsh did this when Cannon contended his anti-Smith activities were purely personal, but when Walsh showed the use of $303 of the board's funds and again pressed his question as to whether Cannon was influential in the Ashville conference, the Bishop said: "Oh, you get around it that way. Well, I can't see why you single out this group to inquire into its activities and mine. You are trying to persecute me."

Walsh, who is a Catholic, replied that "I cannot escape the implication in your statement against me, but I have my duty to do as a senator and I am doing it." "Oh, I don't say you personally are persecuting me, Senator Walsh," Cannon protested. "I respect you very highly, but the whole atmosphere in this issue has been such that it leads me to believe it is persecution." Cannon interpreted the Sinclair and other court decisions to mean congress could inquire only into subjects for valid legislation. "The intent and purpose of your question is not only political but personal," said Cannon, bringing up for the first time the question of Jameson's contribution. He asked why the committee did not go into the money which, he said, the democratic organization gave to negro groups in Chicago and elsewhere. He stated Jameson, a Republican, gave $50,000 to the national constitutionals, Democrats, $30,000 to the Virginia state republican committee and $20,000 to the North Carolina state republican committee.

Crawford.

The $303 was used, Cannon said, for circulating his speech, "Prohibition Repeal Unthinkable." Cannon said he had Crawford back "in paying for the cost of the copies of my speech."

He used the original advance of the money to call the Asheville conference. Walsh then adjourned the committee until 10 a. m., tomorrow, directing Cannon to reappear at that time. No action regarding possible contempt of the senate could be taken because only two members of the committee were present. Walsh and Senator Blaine, Rep., Wis., Walsh announced he would confer with other members of the committee later in the day to determine what action is to be taken against Cannon.

Two of the three absent committee members, Senators Borah, Rep., Idaho, and Robinson, Rep., Ind., are in the city, but Chairman Caraway is in Arkansas. Cannon declined to comment on the situation after the committee adjourned. He was in the witness chair 2 hours and 40 minutes. Cannon's examiners later decided to give him another chance tomorrow to answer the disputed question. Walsh and Blaine agreed that the Bishop's declination to answer the questions should not be accepted as final. They interpreted his recalcitrancy as meaning only that he challenged the authority of the committee.

If Cannon refuses to answer questions tomorrow with a quorum present, it will then be up to the committee to decide whether to proceed. The committee, if it acts against him, can recommend to the Senate either of two courses of action. One course would be for the Senate to certify the record of the proceedings to the local United States attorney, which would be tantamount to a request to have Cannon indicted by a United States grand jury on a charge of Senate contempt.

The other course would be to adopt a senate resolution calling on Cannon to appear before the bar of the Senate to answer the questions involved. If this unusual procedure were carried out, and Cannon refused to answer, the Senate would have power to order him to jail until he did answer.

A habeas corpus writ in federal courts would be the probable recourse in such a case. Robert W. Stewart, the oil man, sought such a writ, when he was so proceeded against two years ago.

Texas Political Circus Is Ready

List of Actors Is Closed. Poll Tax Receipt Is Only Requirement For Admission.

DALLAS, Tex., June 3.—Texas' big political circus, to which a poll tax receipt is the only requisite of admission and participation, had closed its entry list today. But for a few belated applications presented to the mails, the filing was complete for what promises to be the Lone Star State's most heated derby. Twelve candidates were in the race for governor, their names on file with Albert S. Johnson, secretary of the democratic state executive committee.

The name of Senator Pink L. Parrish, was expected to be the 13th. Reports had it that he had been drafted by the petition method, and an application mailed before last midnight was anticipated here today. C. C. Moody of Fort Worth was a last minute entry for the governor's race. His platform included numerous ironical thrusts at Governor Dan Moody. He said he would make the race on a platform of strict economy and opposition to extravagance, "believing that by so doing I can vindicate the family name."

"As to national politics," Moody said, "I'm unalterably opposed to running Texas by tiger tails from their New York lair or by disgruntled job seekers who voted for Hoover and didn't get anything but census enumerating and didn't know much about the job. The application of Ross S. Sterling of Houston, chairman of the state highway commission, was received yesterday. A third petition to have Lynch Davidson of Houston on the list also came in. The new petition came from Limestone county, while the others were from Hunt and Uvalde counties. Other late entries were G. E. Johnson of Plainview for a land commissioner, Robert A. Freeman of Blum for commissioner of agriculture, James A. Stephens of Benjamin for judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals, and J. D. Parnell of Wichita Falls for lieutenant governor.

Outstanding among the gubernatorial candidates who were publicly announced, but whose applications had not been received were Miss Kate Daffan and T. N. Auritz. E. G. Senter yesterday announced his withdrawal in favor of Lynch Davidson.

GEORGETOWN, Tex., June 3.—In addition to the filings with secretary Johnson of the state democratic executive committee at Dallas, state democratic chairman D. W. Wilcox here has another candidate for governor—Paul Loven of New Braunfels. Twenty-five citizens sent him the name of Fred Malloy of New Braunfels as a candidate for Commissioner of Agriculture. Chairman Wilcox also received the application of J. R. Ball of Bonham as a candidate for State Treasurer, duplicating this filing at Dallas. Chairman Wilcox said he will consider as properly filed any applications that he receives today, registered mail showing that they were in the post office yesterday.

Graf Zeppelin Homeward Bound

By UNITED PRESS FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany, June 3.—The Graf Zeppelin, homeward bound, was some 900 miles from New York at 3 p. m. Central European time 9 a. m. EST when she reported to her home base. The message said: "Position 40.15 north, 57.30 west. Northwesterly wind, weather clear and our appetites good."

NAVAL AIR STATION, Lakehurst, N. J., June 3.—The Graf Zeppelin rode a tail wind into the dawn today en route to Seville, Spain, and its home station, Friedrichshafen. It is due in Seville Thursday. Dr. Hugo Eckener lifted his craft from the field here at 9:12 p. m. (E.S.T.) last night after a stop of two days and a half. The veteran commander said his experience had proved commercial airship routes would not be reasonable south of Pernambuco, and that he expected to start regular trans-Atlantic service from Europe to the United States in September, 1931, in his new ship which is to be called the Friedrichshafen. His second new ship will be called the Lakerhurst in honor of the naval air station here. Eckener said the American airport for his trans-Atlantic service probably would be between Baltimore and Washington. Twenty-two passengers were aboard when the Zeppelin sailed and more than 1,000 waved farewell as it rose into the sky to fly over New York, along Long Island and out to sea. It carried 91,000 pieces of mail.

Chinese Bandits Kill Christians

PEIPING, China, June 3.—A Communist uprising and massacre in which Christian missionaries lost their lives was reported today from Hupeh province in the interior of China. Advises said Communist bands looted and burned Catholic and Protestant missions at Simakow and Hanchnan, on the Han river. Hundreds of persons, including Chinese, Christians and local officials were slain, the advises said. An American gunboat was ordered to proceed to Kiu-Kiang, on the Yangtze river in Kiangsi province. A Communist army was reported converging on the town, where there are 40 American residents. The Americans were prepared to evacuate if the advancing force approached the city. Meanwhile, the northern armies from Peiping claiming further advances and victories along the Lunghai and Hankow railways. They said their allies were throwing back the Nanking government troops and advancing on Hankow, where Nelson Johnson, American minister to China, is now visiting. American and British steamers on the Yangtze were subjected to gunfire by rebel forces and several Chinese sailors were killed. Information received here indicated the attack on the missions was one of the most serious of recent Communist outbreaks in the interior region which has long been threatened with Communist activities. The scene of attack in Hupeh province—not far from the center of the present war front between the national government troops and the northern rebel armies—is about 500 miles from Shanghai.

Converse, jealous of her friendship with Bernadine, leaves him. Alan's consolation with his secretary, Phillipa West, who has cleaved to become engaged.

returns, and Alan realizes he loves her, but his enmity with Phillipa prevents him from attempting a reconciliation. He asks Phillipa to release him from his engagement, but she refuses, and makes an appeal to his pity.

Alan's sister, Florence, fakes up a letter from Phillipa asking him to bring her back to the office. Alan still stands by her. Florence departs, and Alan will get along better with himself. Natalie makes an appeal to Alan's office and three days later, she is seeking advice. Natalie's old jealousy is again and she quarrels with Alan.

Alan goes to Phillipa's apartment for dinner, afterward spending the night at a hotel. The next morning he comes to the office for forgiveness, but Alan is told that Phillipa has broken her engagement and she tells him that Natalie is pregnant.

Alan, fearful Alan's anger will endure, uses a letter from Bernadine in a plot to displace Natalie. She changes the name of a stock Bernadine wants to sell to the office after she has gone through and that she has lost money she can't afford to part with. Alan, when she tells him he has bought the wrong stock and for her letter to prove that she followed her instructions, Bernadine discovers the change was made in the letter and starts an investigation to find out who had made it.

CHAPTER XXXIX

Phillipa pointedly hesitated to reply to Alan's question. He repeated it with a sharper edge on his voice.

"Was anyone in here, in this room, while that letter was here?" he said.

She glanced doubtfully from him to Bernadine and back again. It was plain to them now that she did not wish to answer.

"Well?" Alan insisted, and his voice was steely.

Phillipa appeared to give in to his insistence. "There was no one in here—except Mrs. Converse," she said slowly, reluctantly.

"Natalie!" Alan pronounced the name aloud in his surprise. But he recovered himself quickly, for he knew that Bernadine was looking at him searchingly.

"Yes; she was waiting for you," Phillipa explained, rather needlessly.

"Didn't you tell her I would not be in?" Alan asked. He had been instantly elevated in spirit. Natalie here, waiting for him! It must have meant that she too regretted their quarrel. Phillipa's next words were like a dash of cold water in his face.

"She said she would wait. She was not if I may say it, in a pleasant mood."

Suddenly Bernadine got to her feet. "I'm sure I can't be of any use to you here, Alan," she exclaimed; "and I have an appointment at home, with Dr. Wagnall. I must get back. There's just time to catch a train. You can telephone the house in about an hour."

Alan understood that the bringing of Natalie's name into the affair was the cause of her abrupt departure. He was deeply grateful for her delicate consideration. "Please leave the letter," he said to her, for she had it in her hand.

"Don't worry too much about it," she said, putting it down on his desk.

She could have said nothing more disarming to Alan. He thought before that she must know that he and Natalie were having trouble; now he was certain of it. His surprise over Natalie's visit to his office, and Phillipa's remark about her mood or temper must have given her added proof that their matrimonial bark was traveling a rough sea.

Worse than that, he suspected she had connected Natalie with the letter tampering.

The idea was shockingly repellent to him. Preposterous! But if she didn't think so, why had she so impulsively decided to let the matter rest in his hands, and escape hearing what more there was to learn from Phillipa regarding his wife's presence in the office?

On her way home, Bernadine worried over the fear that she had betrayed her suspicions of Natalie to Alan. She tried to tell herself that she was wrong—that it couldn't have been Natalie—but she knew that deep in her heart she believed it was.

Natalie was insanely jealous. Everyone knew it. And who was more likely to do a thing like that—she was thinking of the letter—that a jealous woman?

Still she tried to reason against charging Natalie with it. But it was too difficult. Alan's secretary, Miss West, had said no one else had been in the office. Natalie alone had had the opportunity to get hold of the letter.

"Oh, how terrible!" she thought in a flood of pity for Alan.

He well deserved her pity, for at that moment his spirit was just about crushed.

Naturally he had doubted Natalie's guilt—he had never known her to do an underhanded thing in her life—but there were facts that could not be denied.

Their quarrel—she had made reckless statements during it—she had not seemed mentally responsible. Perhaps her temper had endured, and she had returned to the office to make a new scene, and, finding him absent, had been driven by her passion to seek to do him some injury.

And what greater injury was there within her power to inflict upon him than this? She wasn't the killer type of woman, nor would she, feeling herself wronged, revenge herself in like manner; no, that was not Natalie.

Formerly, her greatest power had lain in threatening to leave him; that power had been dissipated. What was there left for her, but to hurt him through his business?

These thoughts intruded upon his mind while he listened to Phillipa, as she told him how angry Natalie had looked, how rudely she had spoken, when she came to the office.

"I'm sorry, Alan," Phillipa said gently, after a quarter hour of planting and feeding suspicion of Natalie, "but I think Natalie must have made the change in the letter."

Alan looked at her, and wished she would stop talking. Of course, Natalie had done it. He did not concede this openly, but he felt there was no argument against it.

He thought he saw clearly what had happened. Natalie had come in, to resume their quarrel, and found Bernadine's letter in his desk. She was jealous of Bernadine. Perhaps Bernadine's interference, in terms of friendly familiarity, had enraged her. She probably thought about it—working herself up to a pitch of madness that would permit her to act dishonorably.

Phillipa, watching him as a cat watches a mouse, was tempted to suggest he investigate to see if Natalie had meddled with anything else in his desk, anticipating his discovery of the much-used eraser. But common sense warned her he was almost certain to do this of his own accord, and that was best for her that he should.

She felt she had said enough, and got up to go. Alan, with his head bent, did not look up at her. At the door she paused, about to ask him if he wouldn't spend the evening with her, but changed her mind and went quietly out.

He was still in his office when she left for the day. She walked with a light, brisk step, highly pleased with herself. She had slipped a note just inside Alan's door, asking him to come up if he felt like it.

Alan never saw the note. It got kicked under the thick rug—the rug that Natalie had helped him choose—where it lay for weeks. Then it was tossed into the wastebasket by a careless scrub-woman. Not that it mattered. Alan did not want to go to Phillipa's. He wanted to go and see Natalie.

And he did, about seven o'clock. In the interim he had sat at his desk, thinking, brooding. His dejection and utter hopelessness had gradually given way to a cold fury.

All the minor criticisms he ever made of Natalie—criticisms dead in his mind these many weeks—returned in force. The whole situation, summed up, meant that she had killed his respect for her. And killing that, had killed his love. He had been faithful, loving, dependable. His reward should have been a happy home. He had earned peace and security. And he had none of these things.

His fury grew apace as he neared the house in Westchester, where Natalie, fast giving up hope that he would come to her that day, waited wearily in a chair before the fire.

The night was not cold, but she felt chilled. She didn't know how much longer she could sit up—she was so very tired—but if Alan came, she did not want him to find her showing the weakness she felt.

Her heart gave a mad, glad, leap when he rang the bell. She knew that ring. So many times had he seen her through the window, waiting for him, and had rung to have her come rushing to let him in and give back the deluge of kisses he had been saving up for her all the day.

The shades were down tonight. She thought that might be why he rang again, so impatiently. She smiled. He must be impatient to be admitted, she thought, jumping up and hurrying out into the hall, forgetting the weariness of her flesh.

Alan's face, when she opened the door, shocked her. She drew back, the doorknob still grasped in her eager fingers, and stepped aside to let him enter.

He came in, without a word of greeting. They stared at each other speechlessly. Ethel had left a bright light in the hall, neglecting to turn it out as Natalie had asked her to do. The girl left burning many lights that she was asked to turn out. Because, as she said in her most frequent remark to the neighboring servants, the house gave her the "willies, all dark and deserted like."

Natalie was thankful for the light now. It showed her Alan's beloved face clearly. Something terrible was the matter, she perceived, but such was her joy in seeing him that she was glad to welcome him even though he had come in anger.

"There's a fire in the living room," she said throatily. "It's cold, isn't it?"

"No," said Alan, annoyed that she greeted him with a commonplace expression. He felt that only words of vital meaning could serve their purpose now.

She closed the door, as he strode toward the living room, and followed him with ever quickening steps. Inside the softly lighted, rather too warm room, he turned and faced her. He was too bitter to see that she was ill.

"I didn't come to discuss the weather with you," he said with cruel deliberation.

Natalie saw that his lips were curled into thin lines over his fine white teeth, but she could not guess how fierce was the scorn that shaped them so.

She stared at him, helpless. She had never seen him so angry before. His expression, the inimical hardness of his eyes, terrified her. No state of anger she had ever imagined him in had prepared her for this.

She put out a hand as though to defend herself. To Alan it was as though she understood that she had been found out; her gesture was to him an expression of her guilt. Defense before accusation; it was enough.

"Well," he said curtly, brutally, "why did you do it?"

Eastland To Be Featured, Radio Program Tonight

Interesting facts about Eastland and the adjacent territory will be broadcast throughout the South-west tonight during the radio program of the Texas Electric Service Company over WBAP, Fort Worth, J. E. Lewis, district manager of the company announced Monday. The program will start at 8 o'clock tonight and will continue for 30 minutes. Short talks about Eastland will be interspersed with musical numbers.

The entire radio program will be dedicated to Eastland, and the short talks between musical numbers will tell of mineral and agricultural resources of this area. These radio programs of the Texas Electric Service Company are a part of the efforts of the company to attract attention to the rapidly developing territory it serves, Mr. Lewis said, and also to entertain customers of the company in 55 west Texas cities and towns.

Musical numbers during the Eastland radio program will include the following selections by the 32-piece Texas Electric Service Company orchestra: "In the Tavern" from "Scenes from the South," by

Seven Are Dead In Chicago Gang Flareup Today

CHICAGO, June 3—Apprehensive lest wholesale massacres follow the flare-up of gang warfare that took seven lives over the week-end, police moved swiftly in a roundup of hoodlums and gunmen and today Chicago jails were crowded with suspects.

Nearly 200 men, most of them alien Sicilians, were in custody early today, being held for scrutiny by federal immigration authorities who have been asked to resort to deportation whenever possible in order that Chicago may be rid of undesirable persons.

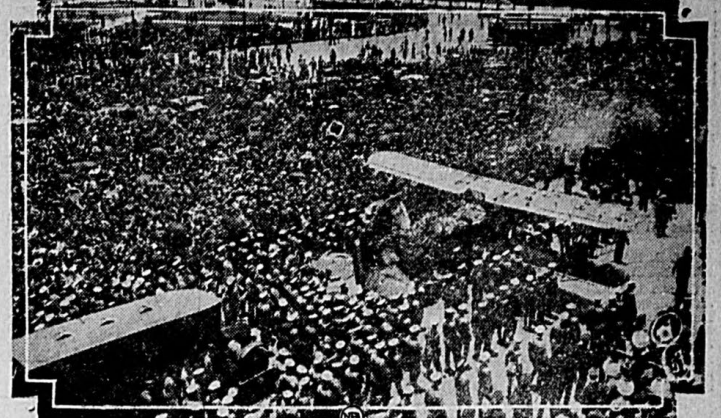

Fusillade of shots shortly after midnight in a dark northside alley led police to believe that gangsters had taken another victim for a "ride." Witnesses told of seeing a large car hurrying from the scene of the shooting with the slumped form of a man beside the driver.

The week-end gang warfare toll was brought to seven today when Joe Ferreri died in Henrotin hospital. He was shot Sunday with two others in Washington "Bug-house" square by a band of five hoodlums.

During the night police squads cruised about the city, moving in mass formation against places known to be haunts of gunmen and gang members.

Two of "Scarface Al" Capone's gangsters were run down and captured in an sensational chase shortly after the big drive got under way. They were believed to be on their way to avenge the deaths of the three gangsters who died in a Fox

The ashes of Sidar and Roviroso were brought back to Mexico City by airplane from Puerto Limon, Costa Rica, where they crashed, and then transferred to Sidar's favorite plane Ejercito Mexicano, which was draped in black and drawn through the streets by fellow aviators.

Lake resort hotel Sunday morning as machine gun bullets raked a dining table where they were having a party.

Israel Andelman, alias Alderman, former Detroit kidnap, and Frank Foster, were taken to the detective bureau where they admitted their allegiance from the George "Bugs" Moran gang to be one of the gangs allied with that of Capone.

Other notorious gangsters arrested included "Machine Gun" Jack McGurn, a Capone "big shot," James Belcastro, reputed bomber, and Ralph "Chink" Avino, both known as Caponeites.

The capture of Andelman and Foster brought from Stege the declaration that there was no doubt they and Diamonds were out on a job of killing.

"The fact that Diamond, one of Capone's chief henchmen, was leading the way, is proof of that," said Stege. "He had all the guns in his car, for there were none in the automobiles driven by Foster and Andelman."

The reprisals feared by police were principally in connection with the slaying of Michael Quirk, Sam Fellar and Joe Bartsch in the Fox Lake Hotel.

DES MOINES, Ia., June 3—Agricultural Iowa was writing her approval today of the pending Smoot-Hawley tariff bill by piling up a big majority in the state primary election for Rep. L. J. Dickinson in his race to be the republican candidate for the United States Senate.

feminine lead opposite Johnnie Walker in a thoroughly enjoyable manner. The work of their pair argues that they should be much in demand at the studios during the forthcoming season. Others who acquit themselves commendably in the production include Natalie Kingston and Creighton Hale.

The story is that of an unknown boxing enthusiast, who aspires some day to become a significant factor in the pugilistic world, if not the real champion in his class. He lives at Maggie Callahan's boarding house, and is much admired by all of the boarders and the landlady herself, but all of them wisely keep these thoughts to themselves. Two of these domestic associates are openly boosting for his success, his sweetheart, Mamie, and Johnnie, a fight promoter.

The kid, faced with eviction and hounded by his creditors, lands a last-minute substitute fight, and Mamie tries to get Johnnie to place her entire savings on the boy. Johnnie, feeling the boy is not ripe for a winning, bets against him, and his judgment proving correct, the girl finds herself bewildered but $500 richer. With this as a financial backing, the promoter and the girl form a partnership to help the boy up the fistic ladder to success. The long climb to the championship is painstakingly accomplished, but the adulation of the fans goes to the boy's head. He soon forgets their friendship, and begins the down hill trail of dissipation. The champion, who has steadily gained unpopularity, hits the bottom at a big birthday blow-out, when all of his real friends, including the landlady, his fiancée and his manager, quit him cold

"Swellhead"

Pugilistic stories have flooded the market, but few of them could be more entertaining than "Swellhead," now showing at the Connelley, a Tiffany feature program, with James Gleason, Marion Shilling and Johnnie Walker.

James Gleason, who until recently was better known on the stage, has been given a tough-egg part, characteristic of many of the recent screen assignments in "Oh, Yeah!" and "The Shannons of Broadway." Marion Shilling, a recent recruit from vaudeville, plays the romantic
