

Report of sexy film on Jesus is unfounded

By JEAN TIERNEY
Of the News

The petition asks Pampa residents to protest "a movie based on the sex life of Jesus in which Jesus is portrayed as a swinging homosexual."

The film, says the anonymous petitioner, "will be shot in the U.S. this year, unless the public outcry is GREAT. Already a French prostitute has been named to play the part of Mary Magdalene which whom Christ has a blatant (sic) affair in the movie."

It's a hoax. It's an old hoax that apparently travels the country, dying and resurfacing like a chain letter, the Illinois attorney general's office said Friday. The petition is addressed to that office.

In late April, the petition came to Pampa. The Rev. Vurn Martin, pastor of New Hope Baptist Church, received a copy in his mail. The letter bore no return address, he said.

Remembering stories from a few years ago about such a film, Martin said he concluded a "pretty vulgar" project had not been scotched then — and photocopied the petition for his parishioners.

When his church celebrated its anniversary recently, visiting ministers from other churches as far away as Borger said they had also seen copies of the petition, he said. Some Panhandle church members were signing the petition and mailing their copies to Illinois, he added.

The Rev. Claude Cone of First Baptist Church saw a copy at a dry cleaners two weeks ago. The woman who spoke to him about it was "pretty excited," Rev. Cone said. "She thought it (the idea of such a film) was pretty bad, and I told her it just wasn't so, that I thought it was false."

Three rumors keep surfacing in American Christian congregations, Cone said: "that Proctor & Gamble has a sign on their products representing the Moonies, that Madalyn Murray O'Hair is going to take all the religious broadcasting off radio and television — and this one."

"And as far as I can tell, it's all rumors and falsehoods," Cone said.

The state attorney general's office in Springfield, Ill., receives three or four phone calls plus letters each day asking about the film or petition, the office's information officer, Beth Bosch, said Friday.

"It's a hoax," she said. "There's no film. It's a rumor... There's never been a film."

But the petitions "just seem to pop up" from around the country, again and again, mailed to the Springfield office, Bosch said, adding that the attorney general could try to "put a stop to it" if the source were located. This week, she answered inquiries from the Southwest, from California to Texas.

The petition bears no sender's name or address, simply instructions to sign and mail to Springfield. It says a tabloid magazine, "Modern People News," revealed the filmmakers' plans and, in another paragraph, suggests that the magazine itself is producing the film.

"We must not allow this perverted world to drag our Lord through the dirt," urges the petition. "Please help us to get this film banned from the U.S. as it has been in Europe."

There are two clues to the hoax in the petition. "Modern People News," founded in 1972 and boasting a circulation of 200,000 a few years ago, is no longer listed in the telephone directory for Franklin Park, Ill. Bosch said the magazine apparently became associated in readers' minds with the supposed film and, because of the "unsavory" connection, folded about two years ago.

The second clue is the return address. "Attorney General Scott" Neal Hardigan is attorney general of Illinois. Scott filed that office three terms ago, Bosch said.

Bosch said she does not know the origin or motive for the petition.

Cone said he read that the film was only a rumor in an editorial in "The Baptist Standard," a periodical for ministers. That editorial traces the rumor to a 1977 magazine poll in Illinois asking readers their views. "The readers responded with an overwhelming 'no,' and the results were sent to the producer with the result that the project was abandoned," the Standard's editor wrote.

Martin said he wonders about the motive for such a hoax, ruling out financial profit because the petition does not ask for money.

"Well," he speculated, "I guess some people make obscene phone calls."

Renegade Apache well replaced

ALLISON — A sister well to the gas renegade that blew out almost two years ago — and blew uncontrolled for months — is producing more than the original, Apache Corporation has determined.

The new well, Key No. 2, may be a better well than the one it is replacing, Apache's senior vice-president, John H. Black said from the company's offices in Minneapolis, Minn.

Another explanation offered for the new well's better production is that the huge but troublesome Key No. 1 may have been "restricted by downhole conditions created by the blowout which would have prevented it from ever producing up to its potential," he added.

The bottom hole of the 16,000-foot-deep Key No. 2 is only 120 feet from that of the first, in Wheeler County's Key Field about eight miles southeast of Allison.

Whatever the reason for the production difference, Black said, his company believes "this demonstrates that the blowout and subsequent kill attempts did not damage the formation" containing the underground gas.

The first well, which blew out of control in October 1981 and resisted attempts to harness it for 15 months, produced 32 million cubic feet of gas per day (Mmcf) through an open choke. Key No. 2 has given, under test conditions through an open choke, up to 36 Mmcf, Black said.

Apache "killed" Key No. 1 in February, after being ordered Jan. 4 by the Texas Railroad Commission to halt the waste. The company had already drilled two adjacent wells, No. 2 and No. 3, slanting down to the Morrow Formation to drain pressure off the first. In August 1982, nine months after the blowout, Apache considered the renegade a producer, capped with a special "Christmas tree" (control valves and pipes) which channelled some of the gas into a pipeline.

Tremendous gas pressure first loosed the renegade on Oct. 4, 1981; a month later, the well blew out a second time, sucking the wellhead and "Christmas tree" into the ground. Two months of digging with heavy equipment took operators to the level where the well casing had broken and left a stadium-size excavation pit.

Two months later, the obstinate well was spewing an estimated 20 Mmcf of gas into the air, still out of control.

Apache finally "killed" the outlaw when the drilling bit of relief well Key No. 3 broke through the side of No. 1's casing. The crew pumped mud in, and No. 1 officially died.

In recent tests, Key No. 2, now the production well, flowed at the rate of 23.5 Mmcf through a 19-64-inch choke for one hour, Black said. Flowing tubing pressure was 4,454 pounds per square inch, and shut-in tubing pressure was 5,500 psi.

Apache expects No. 2 to be assigned approximately 40 percent of the allowable production from the Key Upper Morrow field. Apache and El Paso Exploration Company, a subsidiary of the El Paso Company, have each earned a 50-percent working interest in the property with the completion of a producing well on the Key lease, Black said.

Slain sheriff eulogized

WALNUT RIDGE, Ark. (AP) — Mourners honored a sheriff killed while trying to apprehend tax protester Gordon Kahl, as North Dakota authorities searched for people who helped hide the militant fugitive.

A man tentatively identified as Kahl was killed along with Sheriff Gene Matthews, 37, in a gun battle Friday night at a remote farmhouse in northeastern Arkansas.

Kahl, 63, was wanted in the slayings of two U.S. marshals in North Dakota four months ago. He was a member of a militant, survivalist, anti-tax group called Posse Comitatus and was on probation for a 1977 conviction for failure to file federal income tax forms.

Matthews, who was buried Sunday, was the first officer to enter the farmhouse and the only one of 28 officers to be shot. He was wounded in the chest and died three hours later from a loss of blood, the state medical examiner said Saturday.

The body believed to be Kahl has not been identified positively because it was badly burned when the munitions-filled house caught fire during the gun battle. Authorities were waiting for the arrival of his dental records.

Tentative identification was made based on Kahl's physical description, including surgical scars and a bullet fragment found in a hip, said Arkansas state medical examiner Dr. Fahmy Malak.

Malak said after autopsies on Matthews and Kahl on Saturday that there is a "great probability" that the body was Kahl's.

The couple who owned the bunker-like farmhouse where the shootings occurred were charged Saturday with capital murder in Matthews' death. Leonard Ginter, 63, and his wife, Norma, 60, who had filed lawsuits challenging tax laws, were arrested outside the house before the shooting began.

In North Dakota, U.S. Marshal Chuck Kupferer said Sunday that authorities are continuing to seek those who may have harbored Kahl.

Kupferer declined to discuss what led authorities to the rural Arkansas farmhouse in their search for Kahl.

O'Neill calls for limits on tax cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., saying the nation's economic recovery is weak, today called for a 5 percent ceiling on military spending increases and a cap on this summer's tax cut.

In remarks prepared for delivery to the annual Washington conference of the American Stock Exchange, O'Neill, D-Mass., acknowledged that the economy is bouncing back from recession.

But "the recovery is too weak to stop the fiscal hemorrhage that is currently sinking the federal government in a sea of red ink," he added.

O'Neill also noted that interest rates likely will remain high because of "the prospect of staggering mega-deficits in the budget of the United States for the rest of this decade."

The speaker blamed President Reagan's economic program for the budget deficits. "He is seeking the biggest tax cut in history on July 1 at the same time that he is giving a blank check to the Pentagon," O'Neill said.

And he chastized Reagan for not helping to fashion a bipartisan budget on Capitol Hill.

"I believe the president is positioning his party for the next election by moving away from bipartisanship" and toward confrontation with Congress, O'Neill said.

"The administration is seeking the high ground politically not fiscally," O'Neill said, adding Reagan is "sitting in the stands giving the budget process the thumbs down sign. Because of this, it's thumbs up for deficits and thumbs down for lower interest rates."

The economy's needs "are too great this year to wait and risk aborting the recovery," O'Neill said.

In order to pare budget deficits, O'Neill called for a series of measures: Reagan has asked for a 10 percent increase — after accounting for inflation — in defense spending.

The Democratic-controlled House has passed a budget blueprint calling for about 4 percent growth while the Republican-controlled Senate has passed a spending plan calling for a 6 percent increase.

"We need to slow down the defense buildup right now... Putting a 5 percent real growth ceiling on defense would save $8 billion in 1984 and $22 billion in 1985," O'Neill said.

O'Neill also called for limiting the 10 percent personal income tax rate cut scheduled for July 1 so that no taxpayer would receive a cut that exceeded $700.

Three ANC members to hang

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three black nationalist guerrillas scheduled for execution had their sentences commuted today, but three others are scheduled to be hanged Thursday.

Guerrilla leaders say the hangings will intensify the racial conflict in this white minority-ruled nation.

Church and human rights groups had led a campaign for clemency for the African National Congress members. As has happened in other cases, state President Marais Viljoen granted a reprieve, but this time for only three of those on death row.

Simon Makana, a member of the ANC national executive, told The Associated Press that the government "will be making a political decision" if it goes through with the hangings. He said the ANC will be forced to retaliate.

Thelle Simon Mogoerane, Jerry Semano Mosololi and Marcus Thabo Motuane are scheduled to be executed Thursday. They were convicted of several attacks on police stations and other targets in which four policemen were killed.

There have been no executions of ANC members since Solomon Mahlangu was hanged April 6, 1979. Former President Jimmy Carter and other world leaders appealed for a reprieve, and the execution provoked worldwide protests.

Viljoen committed to life imprisonment the death sentences of Anthony Bobby Tsotobe, Johannes Shabangu and David Moise. The three were involved in attacks on a police station, a constable's home and a fuel installation. No one died in the assaults.

Moise was involved in the spectacular June 2, 1980, attack on one of South Africa's synthetic oil facilities, where coal is converted to petroleum.

He fled to Mozambique but was captured by South African units during a commando raid Jan. 30, 1981, on ANC offices in the Mozambican capital of Maputo.

ANC guerrillas recently have stepped up their attacks on police, military and energy installations. The worst attack came May 20 when 19 people died and more than 200 were wounded by a car bomb outside air force headquarters in Pretoria.

Reagan capitalizing on military, economic gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, believing he has strengthened his economic and military bargaining power, is preparing for "some serious negotiations with the Soviets," administration officials say.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be named, said Reagan's recent decisions to add Soviet specialist Jack F. Matlock Jr. and arms control specialist Ronald F. Lehman to the National Security Council staff "point to more White House involvement in the U.S.-Soviet relations area."

The president, one official said, is anxious to build on the new strength he perceives in the wake of his recent congressional victory that won money for the MX missile, the growing signs of economic recovery and statements of unity from the Western allies at the Williamsburg summit.

"He believes we now have the economic and military strength for some serious negotiations with the Soviets across the board," the official said.

He noted the first sign of that may come later this week when Reagan decides how he will modify the U.S. negotiating position for the resumption of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) with the Soviets. Reagan was said to have studied various negotiating options while at Camp David for a long weekend.

After Reagan and his wife returned from the Maryland mountaintop retreat, they drove to the suburban home of Secretary of State and Mrs.

George P. Shultz for a private dinner.

The prevailing view in the administration, one source said, is that the United States has improved its leverage at the negotiating table with its recent successes and that the time has come to seek concessions from the Soviets on a variety of arms control and economic issues.

But the official made it clear he was talking about a long-range plan, perhaps extending into a second Reagan term, should the president seek re-election.

Reagan came into office saying the United States needed to build its strategic nuclear forces in order to negotiate from a position of strength, the official recalled, and the president now believes he has accomplished that. He cited Reagan's decision to resume production of the B-1 bomber, press development of the Trident nuclear submarine and missile system and get congressional approval for the MX.

The appointment of Matlock, the present U.S. ambassador to Czechoslovakia who has devoted much of his career to Soviet and East European affairs, as senior director of European and Soviet affairs on the NSC staff was disclosed over the weekend, although no formal announcement has been made. The White House announced last week that Lehman, a former deputy assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, had been named senior director for defense programs and arms control.

The appointments, one source said, "are an indication of the level of interest (national security affairs advisor William P.) Clark and the president will be giving to the U.S.-Soviet policy area."

Although the State Department continues to play an active role, the buildup of people on the NSC staff is one of the first moves toward a re-emphasis on U.S.-Soviet issues in coming months, the officials said.

The White House also announced recently its willingness to resume discussions on an long-term agreement for the United States to sell grain to the Soviets. Moscow readily accepted the offer.

Youth injured in initiation

CANADIAN — A 13-year-old boy spent two days in the hospital after a school initiation prank turned into a beating, police said.

Initiation pranks, "kid stuff," are "sort of a tradition" in Canadian, City Police Chief Eddie Langwell said. Older boys catch youngsters finishing grade seven and, for instance, "make them take off their pants and run across the Canadian bridge." This time, he added, the kid stuff apparently got out of hand.

The seventh-grader, who refused to perform the prank, had had an appendectomy only four weeks earlier, Langwell said last week.

John Albin, 18, surrendered to city police after the May 19 incident, was charged with felony injury to a child before the justice of the peace and released on $1,500 bond. The case is expected to go before the grand jury next month.

Langwell said Rusty Dobbins, 13, told officers he ran from an older boy trying to initiate him into eighth grade on North 6th Street the night of the middle school graduation. Some young boys near Rusty apparently ran away, and then the older boy reportedly caught the younger and kicked him. The Dobbins boy went to a nearby house for help.

The next evening, Albin took part in his high school graduation.

Job Hunter

Roy Bright, 38, drove a truck 14 years for the United States Army, but he recently turned in his uniform and needs a civilian's job again.

Bright said he achieved the rank of E-6, Sergeant, before getting his honorable discharge last September.

For 14 years, the job hunter drove a truck in Vietnam, Germany and on assignments in the U.S.

Bright served a year in 1969 at a station about 10 miles from what was once Saigon. He said he drove supplies in convoy from headquarters to various parts of Vietnam. His outfit saw the action of "two or three ambushes, but nobody got hurt," he said.

"I wanted to go back, but Nixon called it off," the job hunter said about his days in Vietnam.

The veteran also served a total of more than seven years at various stations in Germany.

Bright said he gave up the Army life because he "got tired of the B.S." and had some marital difficulties then.

He said he wants any kind of job, especially truck driving.

"If I don't know it, I'll learn it," Bright said.

The job hunter said he has several years' experience working in a service station and can handle most labor jobs.

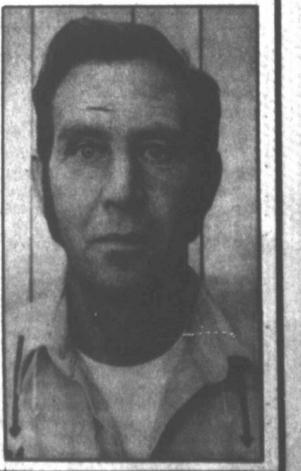

Bright said he has tried for work in the oil patch and with a private employment service, but had no luck.

Bright is now divorced. He lived in Pampa as a youngster and has several relatives here.

In his search for work, the veteran said he "will take anything."

Lebanese debate troop withdrawal pact

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Parliament opened a crucial debate today on the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement, while several parts of Lebanon were paralyzed by strikes marking the first anniversary of Israel's invasion.

Troops in armored personnel carriers teamed with red-bereted police squads in sealing off all approaches to the Parliament building as a clause-by-clause discussion of the May 17 agreement began.

The committees for defense, foreign affairs, justice and economy met in a joint session behind closed doors to study the U.S.-mediated accord and recommend a full meeting by Parliament for final ratification, the state radio said.

Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan and Foreign Minister Elie Salem attended the joint session to defend the agreement, which is strongly opposed by neighboring Syria. Salem put off a private visit to Washington to be on hand for the debate.

Although Parliament unanimously gave President Amin Gemayel the go-ahead to sign the agreement last month, final ratification is constitutionally required after the signing.

Several Lebanese leftist groups called for strikes and a day of mourning today to mark the anniversary of the invasion, an anniversary which arrived as tens of thousands of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops remained entrenched across a tense cease-fire line in Lebanon.

Lefors school trustees to meet Thursday evening

Bichsel given probation

James F. Bichsel, who held his estranged wife hostage for four hours Feb. 13, was sentenced to 10 years' probation Thursday and ordered to pay a $5,000 fine.

Bichsel pleaded guilty to one charge of false imprisonment, a felony, in a trial in 31st District Court Thursday. He was indicted March 18 by the grand jury on charges of aggravated kidnapping and aggravated assault.

Thursday, Judge Grainger McIlhenny took the charge of aggravated assault into consideration in determining sentence, the court reported, but did not rule on it separately.

The court stipulated that Bichsel, who police said had apparently been drinking before the Feb. 13 incident, attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings.

On Feb. 13, Bichsel forced his wife, Nadine Bennett, out of her house on East Francis Street and across the street to his house at gunpoint. The eight-hour siege that followed, until Bichsel released his wife and officers flushed him from his basement with tear gas, was the longest of its kind in Pampa's history, Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said at the time.

Bichsel, whom neighbors described as a hard-working man, and Bennett were separated then; they have since filed for divorce.

'Cats' is the top Tony

'Cats' garners seven Tonys

NEW YORK (AP) — "Cats," a $5 million Broadway extravaganza based on poems by T.S. Eliot, garnered best musical among its seven Tony Awards, while the surprising "Torch Song Trilogy" took home two awards, including best play.

Forty-nine Broadway shows were eligible for awards for the season that ended May 15. The Tony Awards, equivalent to Hollywood's Oscars, honor the choices of nearly 700 theater professionals.

"Cats," a British import and the most costly Broadway show ever, also won best book of a musical. The award was accepted by Valerie Eliot, whose late husband's "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats" poems provided its lyrics. "Tonight's honor would have given my husband particular pleasure," Mrs. Eliot said during Sunday night's show, which was televised live on CBS from the Uris Theater, renamed the Gershwin Theater during the evening.

Eliot was born in St. Louis, became a British citizen in 1927, and died in 1965. His widow lives in London.

Eliot and composer Andrew Lloyd Webber shared a Tony for best score of a musical. "Cats" director Trevor Nunn won as best director of a musical. Webber also wrote the music for "Evita" and "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" also now on Broadway.

Betty Buckley, who sings "Memory" in "Cats," won as featured actress in a musical. John Napier and David Hersey won for "Cats" costume and lighting design, respectively.

Harvey Fierstein won twice for "Torch Song Trilogy," for writing the best play and as best actor in it.

The play also is somewhat autobiographical. Its leading character is an entertainer who, dressed as a woman, works in a homosexual nightclub. Fierstein did that at age 16. He turns 29 today.

Fierstein, holding his two Tony Awards, said, "It is just the most marvelous thing in the world. We're like off-off-Broadway, doing theater out of our hearts, minds and lives. To get this kind of response from Broadway professionals is wonderful." Fierstein leaves his acting role June 11, to work on adapting the movie, "La Cage aux Folles," for stage.

John Glines, one of the show's six producers, said on TV, "I want to thank my producing partner and lover, Lawrence Lane, who never said it can't be done." Asked later whether he meant to shock the viewing public, Glines said, "Broadway producers get accused of not being daring."

Jessica Tandy, who turns 74 on Tuesday, was named best actress in a play as the Appalachian woman in the now-closed "Foxfire." She said her husband, Hume Cronyn, who co-wrote the play, "gave me a bit of an edge by writing such a wonderful part for me."

Another senior performer, 72-year-old Charles "Honi" Coles, who has been tap dancing professionally for 52 years, won for best featured actor in a musical, "My One and Only."

Tommy Tune and Thelma Houston won the choreography Tony for "My One and Only" and Tune won a Tony for best performance by an actor in a musical.

Natalia Makarova, the Kirov Ballet ballerina who defected to the West 13 years ago and now plays a Russian ballerina in "On Your Toes," won as best actress in a musical. She included thanks to "my husband, who didn't help much but stayed out of the way."

"On Your Toes," with music by Rodgers and Hart, won as outstanding reproduction of a play or musical.

Gene Saks won as best director, for "Brighton Beach Memoirs." Neil Simon, who wrote the play, was not nominated for his work.

Matthew Broderick, 21, who stars in "Brighton Beach Memoirs," won as best featured actor in a play. Broderick dedicated his Tony to "the honor, appreciation, love and memory" of his father, actor Jimmie Broderick, who died after his son was cast in the role but before the play opened.

Judith Ivey, won as best featured actress in a play for her role in the now-closed "Steaming."

Ming Cho Lee won as best scenic designer for building a Himalayan mountain in "K2."

A special Tony for regional theater was presented before the telecast to the Oregon Shakespearean Festival Association.

The Tony Awards are named for the late Antoinette Perry, who worked in the American Theater Wing during 1947, and for the last 17 years by the League of New York Theaters and Producers.

Top Libyan diplomat in Lebanon shot

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Libya's top diplomat in Lebanon was in critical condition today after being shot seven times by a gunman in a hotel lobby.

A rightist Christian radio station said police arrested a suspect who worked for PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah group.

The gunman fled from the hotel after the shooting late Sunday night, but state and privately owned radio stations said today a man had been arrested in the shooting of Libyan charge d'affaires Abdel-Kader Ghoka.

He was in critical condition at the American University Hospital after undergoing six hours of surgery.

The stations said the suspect was being questioned "in utmost secrecy." The reports said authorities were releasing neither the suspect's name nor a possible motive for the shooting.

But the "Voice of Free Lebanon" radio station of the rightist Christian Phalange Party's "Lebanese Forces" militia later said the suspect was Khaled Alwan, a Lebanese Moslem.

The radio claimed Alwan was working for Fatah, the Palestine Liberation Organization's main guerrilla group. But there was no confirmation of the report from police.

The Phalange Party is a bitter foe of the PLO and Fatah, which have been at odds recently with Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy. Khadafy last month accused Arafat of plotting with the CIA to assassinate him and declared Libya's support for a dissident faction within Fatah.

Report: arms negotiators badly demoralized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. strategic arms negotiating team is so demoralized that one member compares the atmosphere to "the last week in the Fuehrer's bunker," a Senate staff report says.

The report, by five members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff, says there is little hope of agreement soon in any of three arms control negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The committee released the report over the weekend in anticipation of a series of hearings it plans to hold on relations between the two superpowers. The hearings are scheduled to begin June 15 with an Appearance by Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

The report says U.S. and Soviet differences on the talks on intermediate range missiles are "fundamental" and the prospects for agreement on strategic, or intercontinental, missiles are even worse. Both negotiations are being conducted in Geneva.

The committee aides said the outlook for talks on conventional forces, which are being held in Vienna, "does not appear much brighter than for the nuclear weapons talks" unless there are changes in the negotiating postures of both sides.

The staff report describes the impact on strategic arms negotiators of a memo from the head of the negotiating team, Edwin Rowny, which harshly criticized some of the team members. The memo was leaked during Senate consideration of the nomination of Kenneth L. Adelman, since confirmed as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Father tells the story of watching his son die

By GERALDINE SATTERWHITE
Abilene Reporter-News

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — It's the story Terry Pringle couldn't stop telling.

He first told it to Dr. Dan Pope, a couple of minutes after feeling the last few beats of the little heart.

Pope, who became much more than doctor to the Pringles during the 20 months since Eric was diagnosed at age 4 as having leukemia, was not surprised. He had been with the family earlier in the day.

"Did he die in his sleep?" he asked.

"You've got to be kidding," Pringle answered. "For the past two hours I've been watching the fight of the century."

In his book, "This Is the Child," Pringle recalled his 5-year-old son's last moments, in which Eric said God was telling him to hold his breath, but that he couldn't.

"What impressed me so much was not that God was talking to him," Pringle said in an interview, "but that he wasn't going to just stop breathing. He could go out easy, or he could fight. After that I was no longer afraid."

"That's what I've always considered Eric's gift to me. He removed any fear I had."

It's also the story Terry Pringle couldn't stop writing, once he began. "This Is the Child" was published in May by Alfred A. Knopf in New York.

"I started writing primarily because I wanted to tell the story of Eric," he said. "But in writing the book I found myself telling how a parent feels in this situation, of watching a child die."

"But I've never seen it as another book about a dying child. I do see it as essentially the story of Eric, a child who knew how to live his life."

The book was easy to write, he insisted.

"I wrote myself. I had to tell about Eric. I can remember thinking within a couple of days after he died, I've been practicing writing for about 12 years, and I finally have a story."

Writing was not therapy for working through his grief, he said.

"I never started dealing with the loss of Eric until I stopped writing the book. As long as I was writing, I still had him."

Written throughout in the present tense, the book would not have been possible without the careful notes of his wife, Brenda, who recorded the 21 trips to Houston, the spinal taps, bone marrow aspirations, the many forms of leukemia therapy — experimental and otherwise — and the dates Eric's hair fell out and grew back.

The book is the story of family coping, admirably at times, not well at all at others; of a brother, Michael, just a year older than Eric, who sometimes felt neglected.

It was Michael, a little boy who had trouble with his "r's," who tagged his brother E. It was a name everybody, including his doctor, picked up.

When Eric tired easily and bruises appeared on his body after Christmas 1979, his mother took him to the family doctor. The leukemia was diagnosed on Jan. 29, 1980, and life was never to be the same.

There are the frustrations of dealing with the traumas in a huge medical center in Houston, of not being able to protect Eric from the pain he must endure, the total despair of a "bad" report, the elation on learning the leukemia is in remission. There is Pringle's absolute refusal to believe the first report that Eric's disease is no longer in remission.

Eventually the Pringles decided against continuing the leukemia treatments with their devastating side effects and elected to keep their little boy at home for what they know to be the inevitable.

It is then that their friends and family came to mean even more to them.

Does Pringle believe he instilled in his son that fighting spirit that lasted to the end?

"I don't guess I did," he said. "I guess it was there all along."

"We talked about our attitudes — the whole family — and we knew we had to gear up. After that first relapse in February of 1981 we decided we had not had good attitudes and we needed to change them, especially toward the treatment. Chemotherapy is hard on everybody."

"But it was Eric who guided us through the whole thing." Pringle is not sure he adequately expressed in his book his gratitude to Pope, and he admits that even now it is difficult to do so.

"He helped us more than anybody," he said.

He has no desire to see his book made into a movie, Pringle said.

"The best story is the story of Eric, and I know it would never get to the screen."

"It's intimidating, in a way, to know I will never have another story like Eric. I not only don't expect to, I hope never to."

Home Country

Town operated by volunteers

WIMBERLEY, Texas (AP) — The 5,500 residents of this community in the wooded hills of Central Texas have found a way to enjoy the essential services usually provided by government without the headaches of city budgets, taxes or zoning.

The unincorporated Hays County town, located between Austin and San Antonio, is one of the fastest-growing communities in the Hill Country chiefly because it has no municipal government.

Residents have fire protection, water, ambulance service and a library, provided almost entirely on the donations and volunteer work of the townspeople.

"We all work to keep Wimberley going," said Cindy Meeks, who helps her father operate the Rio Bonito Resort on the Blanco River. "Our community ... supports itself and gets behind things that need to be done."

Bill Johnson, 60, is president of the Wimberley Chamber of Commerce and is the closest thing the town has to a mayor. He said the town has no need to collect taxes.

"Anyone who wants to move here should be prepared to join the party and help with the activities and not sit back and say 'they' ought to do this and so," said Johnson.

"It's not 'they' here, it's 'we' ... Services often are done by volunteers or paid for by street dances, covered-dish suppers, flea markets and festivals. Community decisions are made at village meetings.

Although it is unusual for a community so populous to be unincorporated, Wimberley is not alone in its anti-government approach. Dick Brown, executive director of the Texas Municipal League in Austin, estimated that 25 percent of the towns on the Texas highway map have not incorporated.

"Our state laws are pretty much (designed) to let the people back home do what they want with or without government," said Brown. "Really the only thing they can't do is tax."

The chamber, organized in the late 1940s, arranged to have street lights and dial telephones installed in the community. The group also got road and bridge improvements and, after the elementary school was destroyed by fire in 1951, established the county's first volunteer fire department, said Raymond Czichos, a local ranch resort owner.

The chamber also helped obtained a $295,000 federal loan to create the Wimberley Water Supply Co., which now serves almost 900 private paying customers.

"We create committees to target specific needs," said Czichos. For the fire department, "a committee of two solicited funds from the community and raised a little over $5,000. We bought a 1952 Chevrolet fire truck, which is still in operation. We now have seven units."

The latest project being planned is a community center, swimming pool, tennis courts, baseball diamond and amphitheater. Since last October, the chamber has collected $10,782 for three town services and $5,000 through a street dance, a banquet and a marathon, said secretary-treasurer Linda Allen.

"The attitude is to keep this small town atmosphere," said Bob Gwynn, senior vice president of the Wimberley Bank.

But not everyone is satisfied. "They're volunteering and donating us to death out here," said Dorothy Kerbow, 64, the former postmaster in the town. "There's a certain portion of the population that supports everything and everyone else rides free."

State investigates revenue 'loophole'

DALLAS (AP) — Texas lost $1.1 million in potential revenue from oil and gas leases negotiated by South Texas-rancher-businessman Clinton Manges because of a "loophole" in state law, The Dallas Morning News has reported.

The newspaper, in a copyright story Sunday, said Manges received more than $2.2 million from leases on about 3,000 acres of potentially rich oil and gas land on Manges Duval County Ranch.

The state owns the mineral rights on the leases, and by law the state is supposed to share equally in leasing revenue. But Texas, the newspaper said, collected only $51,000 because of a "loophole" in the state law.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and his predecessor, Bob Armstrong, told the newspaper in a copyright story Sunday, that they believe the leasing transactions are legal.

But Mauro said he would file suit if he finds that Manges intentionally used the lease agreements to deprive the state of its share of the revenue, which by law is earmarked for public education.

Manges could not be reached for comment on his leasing transactions. But his son-in-law, Albert R. Cole, who signed all of the leases on behalf of Manges' Duval County Ranch Co., said the transactions were above board.

"We didn't do anything illegal," said Cole. DCRC vice president.

Manges leased the mineral rights to an employee for "bonuses," one-time payments of about $50 an acre, according to the News, which reported Manges and the state split the bonuses with each receiving about $51,000.

But within a month, Manges paid the employee $100 for the leases, regained control of the mineral rights, and then subleased the mineral rights to a Kansas oil company for $1,083 an acre — a total of more than $2.2 million.

The state did share in that amount because under existing law, the state can share only in bonuses on the initial lease of state-owned mineral rights.

State law does not address the state's share of subleases, land office officials said.

State officials say a preliminary review indicates Texas has lost "hundreds of millions of dollars" in potential revenue on leases of state-owned mineral rights.

Archaic laws, a shortage of personnel and inadequate records make it virtually impossible to monitor the transactions or determine how much revenue has been lost, they say.

Mauro has ordered his staff to review the leases on all of Texas' 6.4 million acres of "mineral classified" land, on which the state owns mineral rights and individuals own the surface.

Last year, the acreage generated almost $200 million that was split equally by the state and the surface owners.

Manges, a millionaire whose business interests include oil and gas and real estate, is one of the largest individual owners of mineral classified land in the state, state land office officials said.

Manges gained statewide attention in 1982 when he and his political action committee contributed more than $1.8 million to candidates such as Mauro, Attorney General Jim Mattox and Armstrong, who lost a gubernatorial race.

Mauro, who took office in January, and Armstrong said they did not know about the subleases.

"We did not know what was occurring because of the way the system was set up," said Jack Iberson, the chief clerk and a 30-year veteran of the General Land Office. "We have to somewhat rely on the surface owner to know what's going on. We've never had the personnel to check 6 million acres of land."

Half of the bonus for such leases, as well as the state's share of rentals and royalties on any oil or gas produced, goes into the Permanent School Fund. Earnings from that fund are funneled into school districts throughout the state to help pay teacher salaries and other school expenses.

The owner of the surface rights, who negotiates leases on behalf of the state, receives the other half of the bonus and a portion of the rentals and royalties. Land commission officials, however, have final approval over all initial leases involving state-owned mineral rights.

The officials said the loss of revenue is particularly critical now, with Gov. Mark White considering calling a special legislative session after lawmakers refused to raise taxes to finance higher teacher salaries.

Mauro said Manges and other large surface owners of mineral classified lands have displayed a "very cavalier, arrogant attitude" toward state supervision.

Businessman will testify at Kucel trial

HOUSTON (AP) — A New Orleans businessman who pleaded guilty to conspiring to evade taxes on more than $7 million in income is expected to testify this week at federal trial of an associate indicted on similar charges.

Norman Johnson, board chairman of Houston-based Lucey Products Co., said he conspired in the scheme with company president Richard J. Kucel, and pleaded guilty last month in New Orleans and was sentenced to 14 months in prison.

Justice Department attorneys Robert Pincham and Jake Snyder allege oilfield pipe was sold at below-market rates to two Bermuda companies formed by the men, Brimwell Co.

Study says 21 percent of adult Texans functionally incompetent

DALLAS (AP) — About one in five adult Texans do not read or write well enough to perform everyday tasks and an even larger number cannot determine the change they are due when they pay for merchandise with a $20 bill, a University of Texas study concluded.

The study found about 2 million Texans — or 21 percent of the adult population — lack the basic reading, writing and computation skills necessary for everyday tasks. Another 30 percent are "marginally literate" and 2.7 million cannot figure their change from a $20 bill.

"It is surprising, perhaps even shocking, to suggest that approximately one of five Texans ... are functionally incompetent or function with difficulty and that about an additional one-third of the adult population in Texas is ... not proficient in coping with everyday tasks of skills and knowledge," the UT report states.

The Texas illiteracy rate, the study found, is higher than the national average of 19.7 percent.

Dr. Lois DeBakey, a literacy expert and professor of scientific communication at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, said low teacher salaries, undisciplined students, drug abuse, deterioration of the family and even country and western music lyrics have contributed to the decline of literacy in Texas.

Many Texas classrooms are "war zones or holding tanks for undisciplined students and drug abusers" who are not interested in literacy, she said.

She also said illiteracy with flourish until writers are regarded on a level equal to athletes.

"Can you give me one incentive for students to learn to read and write? The media focus on the superstars; they are lionized and fawned over," she told The Dallas Morning News. "They are entertained in the White House and even given honorary degrees, and many of them are dropouts from grammar school. They are semi-literate, and these are the people who are honored, as our heroes."

Ms. DeBakey also claimed there was "flagrant, flagrant open cheating" by some of 3,200 Houston teachers during a recent competency test.

"Now, if teachers can't pass a minimal competency test, how do you expect students to learn anything from those teachers?" she asked.

The state's literacy problem also is reflected by the number of students in adult education or developmental English classes, education experts said.

About 133,000 Texans attend adult education classes, and many are struggling just to learn to read, said Deborah Stedman of the Texas Education Agency.

"The state of illiteracy in Texas and the United States is a whole lot larger than we assume it is," she said.

Forty-one percent, of about 600 of the entering freshmen, enrolled in the University of Houston's developmental English program last fall, with most of them reading at the fourth- to sixth-grade level, Ms. Stedman said.

More could have been enrolled if there had been additional space and teachers, she added.

About 9 percent of the freshman class at Texas A&M University and about 8 percent of Southern Methodist University's freshman class last year had to attend remedial English classes, educators said.

Despite their numbers, illiterate Texans take great pains to hide the fact that they can't read.

"People would rather admit to killing their mother than to admit that they can't read because of the stigma associated with illiteracy," said Carolyn Cribbs, who teaches an Operation LIFT reading class at First Presbyterian Church of Dallas.

One of her students, 43-year-old Jerry Mefford, said he must learn to read because he has health problems and needs a job that is not physically demanding.

"I can build a house, I can rebuild a car and I can weld. I can do anything but read," Mefford said. "I couldn't read when I was in school and the teachers just didn't care ... They passed me just to get rid of me."

Teachers, she added.

Teachers, she added.

Teachers, she added.

Wildcatter dead at 79

HOUSTON (AP) — Funeral services were scheduled today for Pat R. Rutherford, one of the original All American Wildcatters and a founder of St. Luke's Hospital.

Rutherford, 79, died Saturday at his home after a long illness.

A native of Denton, Rutherford began exploring for oil and gas in 1928 near Laredo and later moved to San Antonio to organize several oil and gas companies.

In 1931, he moved to Houston and again organized wildcatter operations, including Rutherford Oil Co., which now has oil and gas operations in several states and in the Gulf of Mexico.

In 1970, Rutherford was named one of the original All American Wildcatters. The organization was founded in 1968 by M.B. Redman of Dallas to honor leaders of the nation's petroleum industry.

He also was a director of Texas Commerce Bank. Survivors include his wife, Arline Masters Rutherford; two sons, Mike G. Rutherford and Pat R. Rutherford Jr.; 14 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Actions speak the loudest...

It is one thing for President Reagan to defend his decision to impose tariffs on Japanese motorcycles. If you accept the notion that government ought to intervene in the marketplace to "fix" things that somebody thinks have gone awry, such a decision is a matter of prudential judgment. You can defend a decision to intervene or not in a specific case on strictly pragmatic grounds.

For the president to claim that this decision, and others placing government controls on international trade, is within the confines of an overall policy of free trade is, however, reprehensible. Any resemblance between the policies the president has carried out and free trade is strictly due to funhouse mirror rhetoric. The president is close to outright deception, and is firmly in the realm of evasive cop-out we have come to expect from conventional politicians.

We admit to some ambivalence about the president and his rhetoric. It is pleasant to listen to a national leader who seems to understand the concept of free trade and is willing to decry the dangers of protectionism. Speeches by public figures help to set the national agenda, and a president who talks about freedom of trade has made a contribution to political dialogue.

The trouble with a president whose policies bear little resemblance to his rhetoric is that some people can be led to believe that what is happening under Reagan is a resurgence of free enterprise and a cutback in government. Some may actually believe that taxes and government spending have been cut. When the results of Reagan's half-hearted policies are mixed and feeble, some may believe themselves justified in saying, "Well, we tried the market - place and supply-side Reaganomics, and it didn't turn out so hot."

In the case of the duties on motorcycles, which will amount to 49 percent (!) the first year, the president told a U.S. Chamber of Commerce television conference that "everything we've done is within existing law." That was true as far as it went, but not the whole story.

Existing law gave the Harley-Davidson Co. the right to appeal to the International Trade Commission for some form of "relief" on the ground that it was being "damaged" by imports. Existing law gave the ITC the responsibility to investigate the claim and make a recommendation to the president. But the law also gave the president the final decision as to whether duties would be imposed. President Reagan himself made the decision, and no fancy verbal footwork about "existing law" can relieve him of that personal responsibility.

A president whose devotion to free trade was expressed in deeds as well as words would have turned down the ITC's recommendation on motorcycle duties, and informed the commission that he would turn down all future recommendations for government intervention in the international marketplace. He also would have moved quickly to repeal the law that permits such recommendations. He might fail in the effort, but he would at least make it.

President Reagan, for all his brave words, has not taken those simple actions. He can make a case for his lassitude, but for him to utter the words "free trade" in the same paragraph is - well, there isn't a nice word for it.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, June 6, the 157th day of 1983. There are 208 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: In 1944, Allied forces invaded Europe at the beaches of Normandy, France, in what is now known as the D-Day invasion.

On this date: In 1660, the Peace of Copenhagen ended the war between Sweden and Denmark and opened the Baltic Sea to foreign ships.

Berry's World

From a columnist's notebook...

By PAUL GREENBERG

Handing Down the Law: Not even the Reagan Administration should have been surprised when the Supreme Court of the U.S. ruled that the Internal Revenue Service need not grant tax breaks to private schools that practice racial discrimination - even if it's done in the name of religion and the First Amendment. These schools, being private, can still practice racial discrimination. They just can't expect the people of the U.S. to subsidize it through the tax structure.

Not even the Reagan Administration claimed to favor racial discrimination. Even though it would up abetting it in what it depicted as a campaign against an overreaching bureaucracy. The bureaucracy in this case - the IRS - was able to show that Congress had not intended to subsidize racism, for religious reasons or any other.

The decision from the Supreme Court was reassuringly one-sided: Eight to William Rehnquist. The Torquemada of the court can be counted on to employ the most sophisticated arguments to sustain the most primitive policies, so long as those policies are suitably right-wing. Perhaps every sizable appellate court needs a William Rehnquist to assure that even the most pettifogging case gets a hearing. But surely no court needs more than one. The rest of the court chose to stand by firmly established precedent, and even more firmly established principle. It was George Washington who in 1790 described the government of the U.S. as one that "gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance." This decision of the Supreme Court is in the same, still unfolding tradition.

The losers in this case - Bob Jones University of Greenville, South Carolina, and the Goldsboro Christian Schools of Goldsboro, North Carolina - can still practice racial discrimination as part of their beliefs. But they have no right to expect the rest of us to pay for it. Other Americans have principles, too.

Daylight Savings Time: A state representative in Utah has introduced a bill to ban daylight savings time in that state, explaining that it "wrecks the work ethic." Well, that explains what's been going on.

Where Your Money Goes - The General Accounting Office, scourge of the nation's bureaucrats and defender of its taxpayers, came up with this item the other day: The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has paid a consulting firm $23,800 to "simplify" a letter sent to car owners telling them about a recall. One wonders how much that came to per word. But it might be too painful to find out.

Just a Thought: If the report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education accomplishes nothing else, at least it has got people from coast to coast talking about excellence in education, which is a nice change from topics like busophobia and McGuffey's Readers. The commission has given excellence a new fashionability, and an appeal it should never have lost.

The commission's report succeeded in making good old ideas sound like good new ones. That's important in America, where anything advertised as new is automatically entitled to consideration even if it's old. For example, the commission recommended a high school curriculum that would include four years of English, three each of math, science, and social studies, and two years of a foreign language for the college-bound. That outline echoes the standard curriculum proposed in James Bryant Conant's study back in 1959. Now it's the latest thing.

The best school of all is right at home...

By OSCAR COOLEY

Since the National Commission on Excellence in Education issued its blast at the deterioration of our schools, the population has been agog over the state of education in America.

Like many knotty problems of the day, this one, some imply, should be untied by Washington, but the federal government, warns Secretary of Education T. H. Bell, is not going to inject either its money or its might into a reform of the school system. This is the business of each state, not of Uncle Sam, says Bell. "We ought not start paying teachers' salaries and buying textbooks on the federal level." To pay school costs and control school policies from Washington would be tragic, he said. We heartily agree.

But when Bell says that "education is the foremost responsibility of the states," it is harder to follow him. The education of children is a foremost responsibility of the parents of those children. It is the states' attempt to take over this responsibility that accounts for the decline of the schools noted by the commission.

For years the states have prescribed public schools and

But as long as Americans are finally listening to the idea, its genealogy matters little.

Considering how much interest, enthusiasm and long-buried concern this national report has unleashed, what would happen if the same approach were tried on a local level? Suppose your school board appointed a local commission and asked it to report back in a year on how much to encourage excellence in the public school?

The decision to appoint local commissions would reflect a new and widespread seriousness about quality education. And its makeup would reflect how seriously the community takes education. Ideally, this commission would be composed not just of professional educators but of leading citizens - each with a great deal to offer.

Well, it's just a thought - about how to encourage thought.

The Canute Rule: The Great Salt Lake continues to rise, but the Utah legislature is not without recourse. Not too long ago it passed a law limiting the lake's level to 4,202 feet above sea level. The lake broke the law February 1st. Which shows the extent of the general breakdown of law and order. It wouldn't have dared do that when Brigham Young was still around.

While They're Hot: It's the New South. At Austin Peay State Park in Clarksville, Tennessee, they're working on a two-foot robot that can be programmed to walk, talk with a Southern drawl, pick up the mail and maybe even deliver the morning coffee. Yeah, but who's gonna fix the grits? These scientists are always leaving something out. Something important.

Back in Print: Lord Killanin, who has been mercifully absent from the news since he presided over the spiritless Moscow Olympics of 1980, is back with a memoir. He's still sore at the U.S. for boycotting the Olympic games that year merely because the host had invaded a neighboring country - Afghanistan, this time.

As Lord Killanin put it: "Here again was the American New World attitude of bringing out a bulldozer to save someone from an awful fate, or what America thought was an awful fate." Nothing seems to offend some Englishmen like the sort of American arrogance that led this country to help save theirs twice this century. Afghans don't seem to matter as much to Lord Killanin, whose reaction to that invasion was: Let the Games Be. The lord's detachment from the real world remains, well, Olympian.

Smoking Out Lawrence Welk: When a church youth group up in Pennsylvania decided to join the move to burn records, the usual rock music went up in smoke - accompanied by some country music and Lawrence Welk albums. Evil is in the ear of the beholder. Proverbs 32:1.

On the Cultural Front: The president of the National Association of Black Psychologists - Dr. Joseph Baldwin - has called on Florida's black students to boycott that state's standardized tests, saying they amount to "European cultural imperialism." Dr. Baldwin did think to issue his call in English, not Swahili.

Meanwhile, in Denham Springs, Louisiana, the Imperial Gizzard or Whatever of The Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, announced that the Klan was filing for protection under federal bankruptcy laws, at last having found something useful in federal law. If the Klan should be declared bankrupt, at last its financial status would have matched its ideological one.

What kind of nut to fly...

By D.R. SEGAL

Airlines are queer ducks. Oh, I am not talking about there are 162 different rates and the way they try to stuff 200-pound adults into seats engineered for smallish kindergartners. What I am talking about is the subject of nuts.

Airlines serve meals, "snacks" and nuts, all of which might reasonably be classified as junk food. Nuts are the worst.

I am not sure if airlines buy stale nuts or if they buy fresh ones and let them stale - up in specially constructed nut hangars somewhere in a humid climate.

I am inclined to think they buy them already staled because they are in airtight containers and they must have been staled when they shoved them in there.

Some airlines - notably Delta, which makes pots of money - serve stale peanuts, which, due to a bumper crop, are going to be pretty cheap this year. (We have a paper in Dothan, Ala., the peanut capital of the world, and I get the inside poop on the peanuts.)

United, which does not make pots of money, if any, serves macadamia nuts, for which they must pay a cheek and a thigh, even if they buy stale ones. I fly United for the reason I like their macadamia nuts better than I do peanuts, although I would like that to be bruited around Dothan, Ala.

American airlines, which does not make much money, either, serves almonds sluiced in "natural smoke," which is wonderful if you like smoky almonds.

I can take them or leave them alone, and I feel the same way about American after a recent experience on their 747.

The thing is, it costs as much to fly a peanut airline as a macadamia airline, and there is no sense to that, friends. None at all.

I rode a small airline recently (it was either AirCal or Golden West) and they treated us to little cups of saloon munchies known as "trash." Peanuts, soybeans and a robust selection of chemicals.

I took mine home and our dog Charlie showed mild interest in it, but Charlie is getting on in years and is addicted to Cycle Four. He is no fair judge, really.

It is also a fact that you can fly from Point A to Point B at 10 a.m. and be treated to a small R.C. Cola, but if you fly from Point A to Point B at 6 p.m. you will be served a full dinner, and the price is the same. That isn't reasonable, either.

I would like to discuss this with Frank Borman some day, between commercials, but I guess a fellow with all those TV commitments hasn't time for things like stale peanuts or smoky almonds or charging the same whether you get to eat or not.

I would have said that the airline that fed its customers least would profit most, but that is not true. Braniff practiced almost total abstinence and they went belly-up. I guess you have to feed the passengers or at least buy them a small R.C. between meals to wash down the stale nuts.

compelled attendance. Thus they have taken on the job of educating everybody, up to the high school level at least, and parents for the most part have surrendered their responsibility to the state. This was probably a monumental mistake. Blame it on Horace Mann.

Parents are biologically responsible for the lives of their children. During the years of babyhood the child is under the tutelage of the parents. And even after Johnny and Bess start going to school, they return home at night and for weekends and are again under their parents' instruction.

At school they learn to read and write and figure, but at home they learn a multitude of things which will be useful to them the rest of their lives. Just what they learn at home depends mainly on their parents, the kind of home their parents make for them, and the degree to which the parents are conscious of their need for education.

To say that the state government is responsible for children's education is to ignore the parental role and to discourage parents from accepting and performing that role.

If the child were not required by law to attend a school, either public or private, it would be clear that the institutions we call schools are merely one way of educating, a way which takes some but by no means all the burden off the parents. The latter then would have to decide whether to send the child to school, and if so to what school. They would take more interest in the quality of the school and its teachers than at present.

If the school did not get its "customers" by compulsion, it would have to attract them by its quality, and this would result in better schools, taught by superior teachers. In short, economic determinism would replace political compulsion.

Compulsory financing - school taxes, that is, as well as compulsory attendance, should be discontinued. When parents pay tuition fees to defray the cost of schooling their children, they are inclined to concern themselves more closely with the quality of the schools service. They and their money are responsible for the quality. The school and its teachers then become an extension of the home and parents.

In such a school the question is, should there be a religious exercise such as prayer? would be answered by the parents, who are after all the logical ones to answer that and similar questions.

Dear Abby

Baffled family struggles with Alzheimer's Disease

By Abigail Van Buren
1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: About two years ago, my father, who was only 55, started to forget the simplest things — such as his own telephone number. "I must be getting senile," he joked.

He grew increasingly confused and forgetful, which frustrated and depressed him. When he couldn't find his way home from work one evening, we knew something was terribly wrong.

We took him to a psychiatrist who immediately referred him to a neurologist. The diagnosis: Alzheimer's disease, for which there is no known cure! We had never heard of this disease and were surprised to learn that approximately 2 million Americans presently suffer from it.

Our father can no longer drive and, of course, he had to quit his job. He just stays home doing nothing. He has become childish and completely dependent on Mother. His physical health is fine, but he has the mentality of a 2-year-old. Mother must watch him day and night. She even has to diaper him, and she's about to crack under the strain.

We feel so helpless. Abby, I can't describe the heart-break we're enduring. How do other families cope with this? Can you send some information about Alzheimer's disease? What is it, and what can be done about it?

DESPERATE IN LONG ISLAND

DEAR DESPERATE: Alzheimer's disease (pronounced ALTZ-himerz) is a disorder of the brain that causes loss of memory or serious mental deterioration.

Within the last few years, concerned friends and families of Alzheimer's disease victims have banded together to form a national support group. The prevention or cure of the disease is still unknown. However, medical care can relieve many of the symptoms, and proper guidance can help the patient and family cope with the illness.

Do you remember Rita Hayworth, the beautiful actress who married Prince Aly Khan? She is a victim of Alzheimer's. Today she can no longer recognize her own name. Her daughter, Princess Yasmin, is a hard-working member of this organization, which provides help to families through education, research and a quarterly newsletter that contains valuable information. The organization wants to hear from the families of Alzheimer's disease victims in order to help them.

For a free packet of helpful information, write to: Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, 360 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60601.

It is a non-profit organization, so please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (54 cents) envelope. There is comfort and support from others who have learned how to cope with this terrible affliction.

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

Counselor's Corner

Don't become a workaholic

By DAVE BRUMMETT, MDiv

In private counseling it's easy to evaluate information shared by a patient and diagnose a problem accurately. Too often the symptoms overlap, however, and one wonders if any diagnosis can apply only to one psychological disorder.

An area found most complicated is family dynamics. It's possible to study a family of four and break down a problem area into many facets. The more people involved, the more diverse is the diagram of conflicts overlapping and intensifying what began as a simple misunderstanding or questionable message communicated.

For us to confront any problem, we need the truth. One area in which honesty is hard to acquire is in the American work ethic which has said for too long that man is the "bread winner" and women are homemakers.

That's absurd any more. It takes all of us to barely make ends meet.

The question in research is to decide at what point does work become an escape and workaholism takes over.

An individual works too much if his health is affected. There are persons who suffer stress, anxiety, ulcers, high blood pressure and depression as a result of their work. The boss is too hard on them, co-workers are disliked or the pay isn't enough. Any of these, plus a number of other work-related problems can cause ill health. If you are one of these people, answer the question honestly: Is the work I do worth the risk?

We all need to ask ourselves if our present job is important to us and suits us in a meaningful way, other than pay day. On the job we do a lot of the same things and might as well be satisfied with it or inventory a change. Enjoying our work can be healthy. Your question might be: Am I happy doing this type of work?

Getting involved with status seekers and ladder climbers can be damaging. It produces stresses never experienced. It can be like a vicious circle leading to no certain end in the long run. Sometimes it involved playing people against each other, manipulation and bribing them. There are times when "back stabbing" is used.

Popularity is a factor. Blackmail definitely accompanies bureaucracies and their deceptions to live "fat on the hog." Question number three asked by these people of themselves: Does my work mean selling my soul to corporate giants who use people to gain success?

These three groups of laborers need to be honest about their goals on the job and what they expect to gain from their struggles.

Here are some ways to avoid workaholism. Employers need to spell out expectations of potential employees and be open about advancement and pay. They need to define the company's purpose, production, profit and pay offs. Get to know each other early in order to avoid dissatisfaction and discouragement.

Laborers need to become as efficient as possible and reach an indispensable level if possible. Do your job and leave the remainder to your co-workers and management. This will free you from workaholism. The job you do will be satisfactory and satisfying, acceptable to the boss and fellow teammates.

Check on your hourly pay and expected results. Ask about profit and worker dividends - bonuses. Read the company's manual on rules and expectations. Know the requirements and your rights under the law. Be sure and inquire about holidays, vacations and sick leave. You may feel a need eventually for time off. It's fair and a good policy. You earn your freedom with pay.

Be sure and involve your family in your work because too many late hours at the office can lead to "happy hours," fatigue and romantic affairs. It is too risky and absolutely disrespectful to leave your family alone in your office and go out and have a drink at the local bar, go home and rest or take your favorite office charmer out to dinner.

A close family prevents extenuating circumstances from developing, in which you would surely not profit. The family is a support group, too, and need to know where you leave to every morning, what you do there and why it's so important.

Spend time away from work. Leave it at the office. Break away to prevent burnout. Go off. Take a day off occasionally. Retreat. Get a new view and listen to the simple lives. Answer kids' questions and make love to your spouse. Workaholism will not compete with the free time because it's more fun in the open air, quiet and relaxed.

Follow your guidelines, not your business partners' priorities. Let them overwork if they choose. Set your hours, both at work and at home. Have meal time, coffee break time, personal phone time. You have the same time as the rest of us. Use it for your best interest.

A job is for you to feel importance as a participant in life. You're more important than every job around. Without you, there wouldn't be a job. Keep yourself away from workaholism. Let there never be another "Thank God. It's Friday." Keep each day unto itself. It's special and so are you.

Ragweed

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Ambrosia artemisiifolia, more commonly known as ragweed, is a major cause of hay fever.

The annual plant, which thrives throughout the United States, has erect stems that grow from one to six feet tall. The irritating pollen and seed heads are located at the branch tips and leaf bases.

Ragweed, which grows from July to October, can be controlled most effectively when sprayed early in the season when the weed is small, according to makers of a lawn weed killer.

NL roundup

Braves stumble in a 'Stupor'

John Stuper was glad to be part of the St. Louis Cardinals' gentle reminder.

"By pitching seven solid innings, and getting 16 hits in support, he not only raised his record to 7-2, but he also gave the St. Louis Cardinals their first victory over Atlanta in seven games this season. Sunday's winning score was 8-3.

In fact, it was the first victory over the Braves for the World Series champion Cardinals since they swept Atlanta in the National League Championship Series.

"Losing gets old," said Stuper, who left after giving up Dale Murphy's leadoff homer in the eighth. "We needed to remind people that we are still the world champions."

Expos 12, Giants 9

Andre Dawson went 5-for-5 for the second time this season. Al Oliver added four hits and Tim Wallach drove in three runs as Montreal put together 20 hits to beat San Francisco.

Dawson homered and had two doubles and two singles.

San Francisco hit five home runs in the game. Two apiece by Jack Clark and Chili Davis and one by Joel Youngblood, but four of them came after they trailed 9-1.

Brewers make fallen Angels

Ted Simmons cheats. He admits it. He also admits he got caught at it. But he made up for it in a most unusual way — with his bat.

His baserunning in the seventh inning cost Milwaukee a run, but he got that one back — and the game-winner as well — with a homer in the bottom of the ninth that boosted the Brewers to a 5-4 victory Sunday over the California Angels.

"If we had lost this game, I would have been in a big-league mess," the lead-footed Simmons said. "My mind tells me what to do, but sometimes my legs try to do something they can't."

Mariners 8, Yankees 7

Al Cowens, playing so poorly earlier this season that the Mariners gave rookie Ricky Nelson a shot at right field, responded to the platooning by hitting a home run and a triple

SMU wins NCAA title

HOUSTON (AP) — Southern Methodist got into position to win the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field team title by doing the expected.

But it won it with a flare by doing the unexpected. The expected came when Michael Carter won his sixth NCAA shot put title. Robert Weir led three Mustang scorers in the hammer throw and Keith Connor easily defended his triple jump championship.

But for all its muscle, SMU's title came because: freshman Sven Nylander, expected to finish fourth or fifth in the 400 meter hurdles, won the event; Henry Andrade lunged at the tape to finish fifth in the 110-meter hurdles for an extra precious point and the 1,600 meter relay team made a thrilling charge that gave the Pony's the title on the final event of the meet.

UCLA won the women's title for the second straight year, also on the last event — the long jump — when Jackie Joyner placed third, allowing the Bruins to edge Florida State, which had no long jumper in the finals.

SMU's title hopes came to rest on freshman Rod Jones' shoulders as he took the baton to run the anchor leg of the 1,600 meter relay. He was in sixth place and needing to finish fifth for the Mustangs to have enough points to win the meet.

Jones finished fourth. "I like running from behind anyway," said Jones, who had a 44.3 split that allowed SMU to capture a 104-102 victory margin over runnerup Tennessee. Alabama finished third with 88 points and Texas-El Paso was fourth with 84 1-2.

SMU had to overcome a slow first leg by Leslie Brooks, who pulled a muscle at the 200 meters mark and almost had to stop but limped home 15 yards behind the field in eighth place with a 48.4 leg.

Russell Carter turned in a 45.1 lap to move into seventh and Eric Josjo added a 45.4 split to move the Mustangs into sixth place, one position away from the first NCAA title ever for a Southwest Conference school.

Then it was Jones' turn.

Astros 6, Reds 3

Houston scored four runs in the seventh inning to erase a 3-0 Cincinnati lead and drop the Reds into last place in the NL West. Kevin Bass, pinch hitting for winning pitcher Vern Ruhle, drove in the first two runs of the inning with a double and later scored the go-ahead run on Tim Tolman's sacrifice fly.

Dan Driessen homered for the Reds.

Cubs 3, Pirates 1

Jay Johnstone homered to lead off Chicago's fifth inning, sparking a three-run rally that helped the Cubs to their fifth straight victory. The loss was the sixth in a row for the Pirates.

Mets 4, Dodgers 2

Mookie Wilson's eighth-inning single snapped a 2-2 tie, and the Mets center fielder robbed Pedro Guerrero of a three-run homer in the second inning to lead New York over Los Angeles.

Phillies 2, Padres 1

Philadelphia ended a six-game losing streak with the help of home runs from Garry Maddox and Joe Morgan and three innings of one-hit relief by Al Holland.

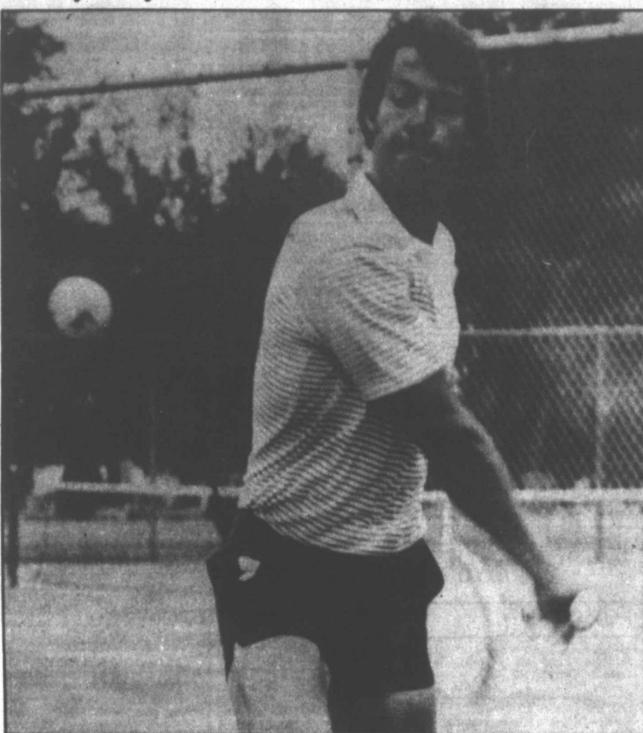

Oakland's batters pounded Cleveland's pitchers for 23 hits in their sweep, striking for all eight first-game runs in the ninth inning, then getting homers from Wayne Gross and Rickey Henderson in the finale.

Royals 7-2, White Sox 5-5

Four-run eighth innings were pivotal in both the Royals' opening-game victory and Chicago's nightcap triumph.

In the first game, U. L. Washington hit a three-run homer for Kansas City, then Tom Paciorek hit a three-run double for the White Sox in the second game. Floyd Bannister of the White Sox pitched six perfect innings in the opener before Willie Wilson's leadoff single triggered a two-run seventh.

Foster wins Pampa Open

Stacey Foster made his presence felt once again in the annual Pampa Tennis Open.

This time it was Amarillo's Frank McAlpine, who tried to handle Foster's stinging serves and deft over-the-head lob shots in the Class A Men's finals Sunday at the Pampa High courts. He couldn't do it and lost in straight sets, 6-1, 6-0.

Foster, Pampa High tennis coach and the Open's defending champion, defeated Dennis Crowell, 6-3, 6-2, in the semifinals. McAlpine, who is ranked No. 30 nationally in the 35 and over class, downed Rick Wertz, 6-2, 6-3, in his semifinal match.

In the Class A women's singles, Johanna Ashley of Canadian defeated Laura Johnson of Pampa in the finals of the round-robin event. No score was available.

Almost overshadowing Foster's win was the entry of 73-year-old Bud Buzzard of Amarillo in the Class B men's singles.

Buzzard won his first two matches before hurting his knee in the quarterfinals against Perryton's Mike Coggins, who won the match, 6-2, 6-2.

French receive fix for tennis addiction

PARIS (AP) — The importance of the French Open title match in this nation of tennis addicts was summed up in a Paris headline with these patriotic lines from the national anthem La Marseillaise: Le Jour de Gloire.

The day of glory arrived in France Sunday when Yannick Noah became the first Frenchman in 37 years to win the world's No. 1 clay court tournament by defeating 18-year-old Mats Wilander of Sweden, the defending champion, 6-2, 7-5, 7-6.

It was the first Grand Slam title for Noah, a 23-year-old who is ranked sixth in the world and is the best-known athlete in France.

When the 6-foot-4, 180-pound Noah won the third-set tiebreaker 7-3 to wrap up the title, the 16,500 fans at Roland Garros Stadium broke into chants of "No-ah, No-ah, No-ah" as they waved flags and wore sun hats bearing Noah's name.

Overcome with emotion, Noah jumped over the net and ran into the arms of his father, who had traveled from his home in the west African nation of Cameroon to watch his son play.

Palmer sets records

Pampa High cross-country coach Wendall Palmer broke two national records in the discus in a Master's track and field meet Saturday in El Dorado.

Palmer, competing in the 51 and over age bracket, set a Master's Division record when he tossed the 2.0 kilogram discus 142.4 feet, breaking the old record of 131-11 set by California's George Kerr in 1974.

Palmer then broke the existing high school record with a 156-11 heave, using a 1.6 kilogram discus.

The old record (154-10) was also set by Kerr in 1974.

"I hadn't realized I had broken the high school record until I looked it up in the book," Palmer said.

Palmer also won the shot (42-1½), javelin (129-9), high jump (4-11) and triple jump (30-4). His javelin and high jump marks were personal bests.

"I believe I could have done better if my calves hadn't tightened up on me," Palmer added.

The only event Palmer didn't win was the long jump. He leaped 15-7.

Palmer, who has been competing in Master's Meets since 1973, won discus championships as a college student attending Garden City Junior College and Fort Hays College in Kansas.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS

Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above) (2) Headaches (3) Painful joints (4) Numbness in the arms or hands (5) Loss of sleep (6) Stiffness in the neck (7) Pain between the shoulders (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

Names in the News

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Tony Perkins, who recreates the role of Norman Bates in the movie "Psycho II," says the film character's anxiety and turmoil shows some resemblance to his own life.

"I became abnormally close to my mother and whenever my father came home I was jealous," Perkins, 51, said.

Perkins, who played the mother's boy maniac in Alfred Hitchcock's terror film "Psycho" 22 years ago, said he no longer is a loner. Things are different and better, he said, since his marriage in 1973 to former photographer Berintha "Bery" Berenson.

"Marriage is a full life, and it needs full commitment," Perkins said in this week's issue of People magazine about life with his wife and their sons Osgood, 9, and Elvis, 7.

About his sons, Perkins said, "The time to be a parent is when they're still children. I pay attention now because I want no self-reproach later."

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — Actor Alan Alda, best known for his role in the long-running television series "M.A.S.H.," has made a 1983 appearance at Wesleyan University in little more than a year, this time to pick up an honorary degree.

Alda, 47, whose daughter Beatrice was among the graduates, received an honorary doctorate of arts degree at commencement exercises Sunday.

In March 1982, he addressed a crowd of Equal Rights Amendment supporters at the Middletown campus.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Actor Eddie Albert, honored for contributions to America's older generations, says the nation is losing a great resource by ignoring its elderly citizens.

"The old age of an eagle is better than the youth of a sparrow. We are missing out on a great resource for getting things done in our society by not tapping the experience of older Americans," Albert, 75, said Saturday night.

He was appearing at a reception before the Fourth Annual Evergreen Awards ceremony of the National Association of Mature People.

The non-profit organization, which supports and serves people over 40, claims 100,000 members nationwide.

News briefs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Operational tests have found "serious problems" with the new vehicle planned to be the successor to the standard military Jeep, but Army officials say corrections will be made by next year.

Tests have determined that the new vehicle, known as Hummers, uses more fuel than planned and has problems with its suspension. Water also enters the vehicle's transmission while it fords streams, officials said.

Art Volpe, a spokesman for the Army's Tank Automotive Command, said Saturday that the supplier, AM General Corp. of Toledo, Ohio, will pay for needed corrections. The subsidiary of American Motors Corp. has a contract to make 2,334 Hummers. The Defense Department eventually plans to buy 55,000 Hummers for $1.2 billion.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has decided to extend for 18 months the existence of the Scowcroft Commission, which helped the administration obtain congressional support for the MX missile program.

The panel, headed by retired Air Force Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, was scheduled to expire on June 16.

Murray Olderman On Sports

By Murray Olderman

While Billie Jean King struggles to stay competitive in the sport she once dominated, women's tennis, the most dramatic comeback story this year involves her younger brother.

Randy Moffitt, age 34, is emerging as the top reliever on the hottest pitching staff in the majors — the Toronto Blue Jays.

Randy, who put in 10 years with the San Francisco Giants, had been on a decline since 1978 and was virtually useless for the past three summers. The Giants finally released him during the 1981 season. The Houston Astros gave him a shot in '82, and then he became a free agent. He had lost weight and suffered internal bleeding. But baseball people were convinced there was nothing wrong with him, except the snap had gone out of his arm. A specialist finally diagnosed Moffitt's physical problem as a mysterious intestinal fungus, which, if uncurbed, is usually fatal. Micro-surgery restored his health.

The origin of the fungus isn't positive, but Randy thinks he might have contracted it while working around horse barns, a favorite avocation.

Anyhow, the Blue Jays took a chance on him this spring, signing him to a minor-league, contract and then bringing him up to Toronto at the start of the season. He quickly became the bullpen ace behind the starting rotation of Dave Stieb, Jim Clancy & Co.

PLEASE, LORD, give me a boxing commentator who doesn't say, "I have went..." With the diminishing millions who speak English correctly, you'd think the networks and cable companies, with their own millions, could find one analyst who is able to get his syntax and grammar right.

On the subject, I have yet to hear one boxer brought in as a color man utter one meaningful comment during the course of a bout — and that includes Boom Boom, Sugar Ray, Marvelous Marvin and all the gang.

SPEAKING OF boxing, I hate to say it, but Howard Cosell's timing was perfect in deserting the world of fisticuffs. He did so ostensibly because of uncontrolled violence and chaos.

I have been cynical about the charges of fixes in boxing, which go back almost as long as men have stepped through the ropes. But now with the opportunists controlling the sport, it has become randic.

I can't recall two worse decisions than the recent Weaver and Witherspoon "robberies." And the proliferation of titles by the WBC and WBA requires a computer printout to know who all the "champions" are.

Boxing exists now only to service the insatiable programming appetite of television, which killed it once, and as a come-on for gambling casinos.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP

his career, one of the few individual accomplishments to elude him.

The major-league record for most career one-hitters is held by Bob Feller, who pitched 12 of them. He also has three no-hitters to his credit.

NBA series between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Philadelphia 76ers deserves a better platform than twice-weekly games in approaching summer. Why don't they play such a title duel during the basketball season, when interest is better geared to appreciate the marvelous gyrations of these two sensational teams?

This Week in Baseball

By Harvey Greene

It isn't easy to pitch a no-hitter in the major leagues. Just ask Milt Wilcox, Charlie Lea or Altee Hammaker. All three flirted with no-hitters during a three-day stretch in mid-April, coming tantalizingly close to baseball immortality before losing their no-hit bids in the late innings. Despite the early-season trio of near misses, a no-hitter remains one of the rarest feats in the game.

The odds of pitching a no-hitter have been placed at 1,300-1, while the odds of pitching a perfect game is approximately 260,000-1. And Steve Carlton might think they're even higher than that.

Carlton, a sure Hall of Famer and a four-time Cy Young winner, holds the National League record of six one-hitters. But he has never pitched a no-hitter in Camel. Where a man belongs.
