

Gray Co. ties down airport repair funds, tries to land a grant

By JEAN TIERNEY
Of the News

Gray County commissioners tied up loose ends for repairs at Perry Lefors airport Wednesday, voting to formally apply for a state grant approved in Austin last week.

The $37,500 from the Texas Aeronautics Commission will pay for 75 percent of the repairs to both runways at the airfield, Judge Carl Kennedy said; the county has already budgeted $12,500 for its share, the project being subject to local approval at public hearing.

The commissioners also agreed to advertise for bids to encase part of the Transwestern Pipeline Company high-pressure gas line which crosses the field just south of runway 17-35. A 30-inch pipe enclosing the 24-inch gas line for about 277 feet would protect the line from damage and aircraft from gas leaks when the runway is extended, as is proposed.

A contract was awarded Wednesday to Quarles Electric Inc. of Pampa to install a $4,995 generator at the airport to supply emergency electricity in case of a power failure.

Two loose ends on other matters returned to the commission at Wednesday's meeting: a clouded title to 43 lots taken in a tax judgment decades ago and then later sold to a private party, and an overpayment awarded the county during an estate settlement more recently.

After Borger bondsman Ben Stokes was killed almost two years ago, Gray County received $750 from his estate, not realizing the debt had already been paid, Kennedy said. The bondsman before his death had already paid the county the $2,500 bond forfeited when a bonded suspect vanished from the area. The county checked its records and Wednesday agreed to repay the $750 to Stokes' estate.

Forty-three lots in block 16 acquired decades ago by the Pampa Independent School District, city and county after a tax judgement were later sold in 1949 under two different methods, the school district issuing a warranty deed and the city and county quit claim deeds. A more recent sale, Kennedy said, snarled because of the inconsistency in the deeds, and the commissioners agreed this week to issue a warranty deed on its part to help clear the title.

Also approved Wednesday was a $71,000 contract with Wiley Hicks Jr. to install an elevator in the White Deer Land Museum on South Cuyler Street.

Sheriff seeks burglars who took large amount of cash from home

By JEAN TIERNEY
Of the News

Burglars in the house of Robert and Fawncine Mack apparently dropped the television set and guns when they saw the cash.

But the cash may be hard to spend quietly as it was approximately $21,000.

Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan said his deputies "have been contacting every place of finance in this town" and area markets to watch for anyone trying to spend or trade large amounts of money. The money is genuine, not counterfeit, and unmarked.

Jordan and the Macks said a burglar or burglars apparently entered their historic house at the top of Loop 171 sometime early Saturday morning, breaking the century-old glass in one door and a wooden panel in another to gain entry. The Macks were in Dallas to watch their daughter, Debi, graduate.

Saturday morning, housekeeper Dorothy Brown discovered the doors broken, mattresses and bedclothes ripped from the beds and phoned her son, Pampa police Sergeant Lynn Brown.

Piecing the evidence together later, Fawncine Mack said she thinks the burglars discovered the money by accident, only when they tried to move a heavy marble-topped chest to steal the television. The marble top may have slipped, exposing two bank bags containing the bills and between $1,000 and $2,000 in traveler's checks, she said.

Investigating deputy Ken Kiehl found seven sporting rifles stacked beside the front door and the plug cut from the television set, she said. But the burglars had apparently changed their minds about the loot.

"Over my dead body will there ever be any cash in the house again," Mrs. Mack told The Pampa News this week. "It was stupid to have the money in there."

The cash came into the Macks' house a few months ago, when Mack made a large bank withdrawal for his business, Mack Enterprises, she said. The couple does not keep other valuables, such as jewelry, in the house. But the money stayed, even after the reason was past, she said.

The traveler's checks remained from past trips, she added, all hidden under the marble top. Because their serial numbers were recorded by the bank at purchase, the value of the checks can be returned to the Macks.

"It was the only time we've left the house unattended in the three years we've been out there," Mack said. "I thought I had a good place."

"I'm going to keep a couple of big loaded shotguns, and sleep with them," Mrs. Mack said, worried that burglars might return.

"We were just careless. This is just carelessness," she said, adding that she and her husband were removing immediately any other goods of interest to house-breakers.

Saturday night, Dorothy and Lynn Brown stayed in the house behind the Mack's unfinished large structure, in case the burglars tried to return. Mrs. Mack said she, her husband and daughter came home Sunday, already notified of their loss.

Mack, who owned Pampa's Coca-Cola bottling plant until he semi-retired, said none of his homes has ever been burglarized before. His wife said she thinks she can replace the old glass panel in one door and repair the second. But, she added, "really and truly, it leaves you numb."

weather

Sunny and warmer today with the temperature in the mid 80's. The low tonight should be in the mid 50's, with south to south-westerly winds from 15-25 mph. Lake wind warnings are posted today. The low for Wednesday at 11:24 p.m. was 59.

Prowler causes power outage

A Pampa prowler knocked out electrical service to eight Pampa homes Wednesday night, but service was restored in only 20 minutes.

Southwestern Public Service Manager Joe Gidden told The Pampa News that a prowler at 209 Starkweather evidently cut a power line at the house, which caused a transformer to short out. Eight homes in all were affected.

The power outage was reported to SPS at 10:45 p.m., and service was restored at 11:05 p.m.

Rebels vow death to Americans

By ANNIE CABRERA

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The most radical leftist guerrilla band in this war-torn nation has vowed that all U.S. military advisers working with the Salvadoran government will "return to the United States in coffins."

The warning Wednesday came from the Popular Liberation Forces, which took responsibility last week for the murder of Lt. Cmdr. Albert Schaufelberger, 33, of San Diego, Calif., deputy commander of American military advisers in El Salvador.

Schaufelberger, in charge of security for the military group, became the first U.S. adviser killed in El Salvador when he was gunned down May 25 while waiting in his car for a woman friend at Central American University.

"All the military advisers sent here will return to the United States in coffins," the rebel group said in leaflets sent to local radio stations.

They said Schaufelberger's murder was a warning against "the bellicose Reagan administration so that it does not continue its aggression against our people."

The leaflets said the U.S. advisers, now numbering 51, "have invaded our soil and massacred our compatriots every day." They said the guerrillas "will be implacable with them, until it achieves their total withdrawal from our beloved homeland."

The FPL, as it is known by its initials in Spanish, is the largest and most radical of the five rebel groups fighting for the past 43 months to overthrow the U.S.-backed conservative government.

With only minor language changes, the communique resembled the one the group issued last week when it claimed responsibility for Schaufelberger's murder. The FPL warned then that President Reagan's policies will bring a "harvest" of dead American soldiers.

Attached to the FPL leaflet were photocopies of personal documents the gunmen apparently took from Schaufelberger — his California driver's license, his Navy ID card and an identification card issued by the Salvadoran Foreign Ministry.

The FPL communique urged Americans to oppose the Reagan administration's El Salvador policy, saying it "will only bring mourning."

Bogus $50 bills may be coming here

Counterfeit $50 bills have been passed in Amarillo and may be making their way to the Pampa area, local banks have been warned.

The bills bear serial numbers K66652018B and K67570345A. Security

Federal Savings & Loan told The Pampa News today. All the bills have the numbers 11 or 116 in all four corners and are marked as if from the 1981 series from the Kansas City Federal Reserve Bank.

Amarillo police issued the following description of a man said to be passing the counterfeit bills: 30 to 45 years old, white, about six feet tall and 170 pounds with brown or blond hair. Anyone who obtains one of the bogus bills is asked to notify the police or sheriff's office.

U.S. harvesters angry at Canadian competitors

CANYON, Texas (AP) — Americans who make their living harvesting the nation's crops want to stop the influx of Canadian competitors whom they say get unfair advantages because of U.S. government regulations.

At stake is a harvest diminished by a government program that pays farmers to leave fields unplanted. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates this year's harvest will be off by as much as 25 percent because of the Payment-in-Kind program, leaving fewer acres for the competing American and Canadian custom harvesters.

"We have nothing against the Canadian people, but we've got enough machines and less acres, and we don't need them," Swisher County custom harvester J.L. Pettiet told the Dallas Morning News. "We just don't need their equipment."

Pettiet is president of the 180-member U.S. Custom Harvesters Inc., a Canyon-based group seeking to stop the Canadians at the border.

The group says Canadians can contract harvesting for less than Americans because the government gives Canadians a number of tax and immigration advantages that are not extended to U.S. harvesters working in Canada.

And the group, which was formed in April, has succeeded in getting the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to close loopholes in a 40-year-old policy that exempted Canadian workers from U.S. labor restrictions that normally apply to foreigners.

But the move prompted a sharp response from the Canadian government, and a U.S. State Department official said Canada has asked for talks with U.S. officials on the issue in this month.

One Canadian warned his country was concerned about what it interpreted as a unilateral change in a harvesting agreement between the two nations.

Although the issue has international implications, Pettiet said he and 2,500 other U.S. custom harvesters see it as a pocketbook issue.

"We really don't care if it tees them off or not because they've been fleecing the U.S.," said Pettiet. "We're looking out for our own harvesters. What they (the Canadians) have had is strictly a gravy train."

The harvesters follow the harvest season as it moves from Texas in the late spring to the Dakotas in early fall. They contact with farmers to bring in their grain and work as long as 18 hours a day, seven days a week.

George Weiss, 63, of Canyon said the Canadians can charge from $2 to $4 less an acre because of their advantages and the U.S. Farmer cannot be blamed for hiring the Canadians.

The 1942 harvest agreement between the United States and Canada was drafted during World War II when farm equipment and farm workers were scarce in both countries.

Because of it, Canadians do not have to pay U.S. income tax, road use tax or various fees that U.S. harvesters pay. But Pettiet said U.S. harvesters must pay duties on their equipment when they go to Canada and a 15 percent Canadian income tax. And he said they can only travel on certain roads in Canada.

The issue remained dormant for years because there was enough work to keep everybody busy. But the new Payment-in-Kind program, designed to raise farm commodity prices, has ended the abundance of work for harvesters.

Iowa is largest farm exporter

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — After being edged by Iowa, Illinois last year regained its traditional rating as the nation's leading exporter of agricultural products.

The Agriculture Department said Wednesday that Illinois exported more than $3.3 billion worth of commodities as its share of U.S. shipments in the fiscal year that ended last Sept. 30.

Iowa was second last year — after being first in 1980-81 — with farm exports valued at $3.03 billion, the department's Economic Research Service said in an annual review.

In all, U.S. farm exports in the fiscal year that ended last Sept. 30 totaled $39.1 billion, down from a record $43.8 billion in 1980-81.

Agricultural exports increased for 12 consecutive years before declining last year. Another decrease to about $35.5 billion is expected this fiscal year.

Both Illinois and Iowa showed sharp drops in export values last year from the record levels of 1980-81 when the states' shares were $3.62 billion and $3.74 billion, respectively.

Only 10 states were ranked according to overall export value, although others were included in individual commodity rankings.

The other eight and their estimated values of overall shipments in 1981-82 included:

California, $2.85 billion; Texas, $2.57 billion; Minnesota, $1.88 billion; Nebraska, $1.81 billion; Kansas, $1.63 billion; Indiana, $1.56 billion; Missouri, $1.4 billion; and North Dakota, $1.33 billion.

The top 10 states accounted for about 55 percent of total U.S. agricultural exports last year, the report said.

Illinois ranked first in soybean and feed grain shipments, followed closely by Iowa. California was first in fruits, vegetables and tree nuts, and second in cotton and rice exports.

Texas led in shipments of cotton, cattle hides and tallow, was second in live animals and meat, and was a significant exporter of wheat and rice.

State export shares are based primarily on a state's production of crops and livestock. Thus, a big wheat or corn producer would be ranked high as a grain exporter.

She thumbs her nose at progress...

By DANNY GARCIA
 San Antonio Light

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Bertha Moten believes life's boundaries are set forever.

When she and her husband bought their small wooden clapboard house in the Rock Quarry neighborhood in the 1930s, she knew she would die there.

So when developers of the new Trinity Plaza project approached her and other homeowners about purchasing their property, she stood fast.

As a result, her home today is enveloped by the Trinity Plaza office tower, which is under construction.

Remaining untouched in a corner of the block-sized development, Mrs. Moten's neatly painted and fenced-in yellow house is a monument to her stubbornness and her love of her home and what it represents.

Mrs. Moten is 87 years old and lives with four cats, a dog and lots of memories.

She remembers when Trinity University was a newcomer to the neighborhood and when nearby Alamo Stadium was built from a rock quarry. And she remembers when the monstrous McAllister Freeway took shape outside her kitchen window 10 years ago.

Mostly, however, she remembers when she and her husband, who died 25 years ago, reared two children in a nice neighborhood. She also outlived her children, who died as youngsters.

Now, rezoning has made Mrs. Moten and her home almost anomalies.

Fun-loving patrons of Alexander's Pub park their cars in front of her house.

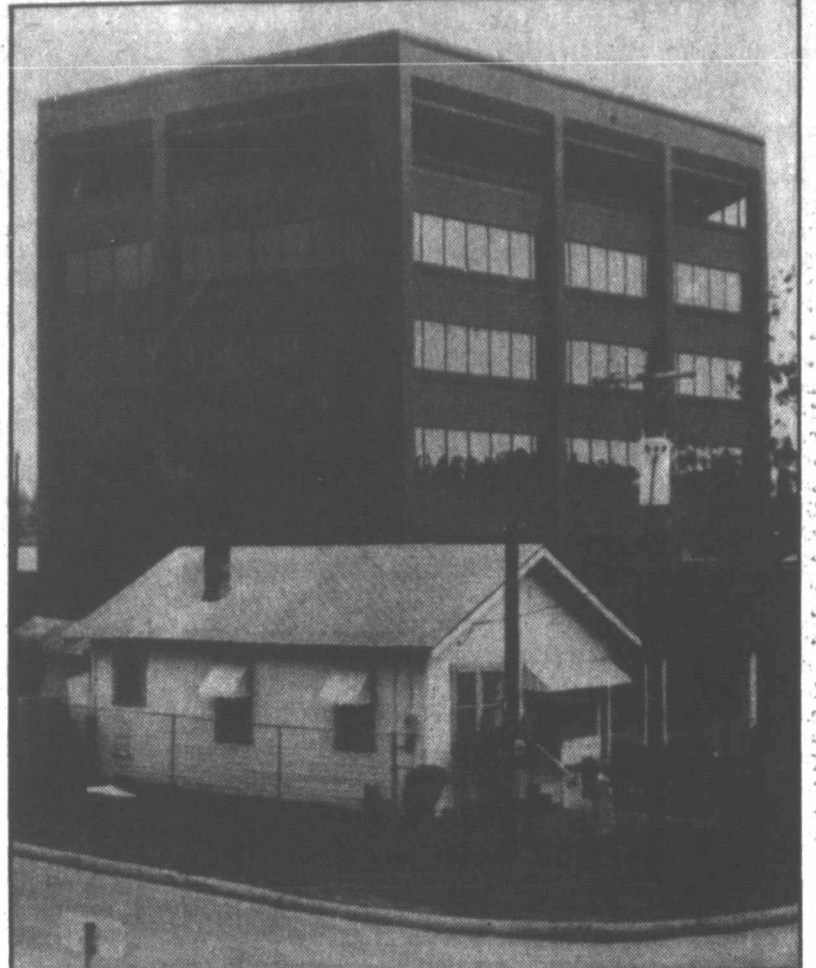

And in about 40 days, when Embrey Investment Inc.'s Trinity Plaza is completed, her new neighbor will be a drive-through bank with four stories of office space above it.

"I remember when this whole neighborhood was just families, some in nice two-story houses," she said, waving a frail arm toward the northbound lane of McAllister Freeway.

Her neighbor, Thelma Neaves, says of Bertha: "Her house is the only thing that she had ever had that was really hers."

Years ago, Mrs. Moten and her husband obtained the small home by purchasing it with the help of a family for whom she worked.

As far back as the horse-and-buggy days, Mrs. Moten, who is black,

Bertha Moten stands in front of her home reared white families' children. She says of the Trinity Plaza representatives: "They came and measured things all around. But they're nice white folks. They haven't bothered me, and they put up a nice fence."

She suffers from high blood pressure, arthritis and the effects of a mild stroke, but she has withstood repeated challenges to leave her home. It always has been no contest.

"I'm a Christian woman, and I'm going to die here," she says. "It's my home. I'm not alone here; I talk to God."

"They can't take my home. Where the sidewalk is, that's the government's property. But inside the fence, that's my home."

In her small back yard, she tends a garden of okra, string beans and corn, oblivious to the freeway noise and the Caterpillar bulldozers next door.

"We would have liked to have had it," Embrey Investments president Walter Embrey says of the property.

"We found her some nice houses in the neighborhood. But she's a sweet old lady who wants to live out her life in her home, and that's her prerogative."

"I think we're good friends," Embrey said.

Mrs. Neaves stepped in one day to advise negotiators to stop "molesting" her 87-year-old neighbor.

Mrs. Moten once baby-sat Mrs. Neaves' children: Sheriff Joe Neaves and police detectives Horace and Roland Neaves.

The Neaves boys mowed her yard. But it is the inside of her home that reveals the main reasons for her stubbornness: A round heirloom mirror, an ancient brass bed and a photo of a happy boy — her son — sitting behind the wheel of a Model-T.

Duncan to handle Fischer Insurance

Brian Duncan, one of the principal owners of Pampa's Duncan Insurance Agency, has announced an agreement to write and take over the policies of another long-time Pampa agency, Joe Fischer Insurance.

Duncan said his agency will handle all of Fischer's insurance business, effective July 1.

"I'm not retiring," Fischer said. He said he will continue to sell insurance policies and service customers through the Duncan agency.

Fischer has sold insurance in Pampa for more than 40 years. He has operated his own agency for the past 24 years. Fischer said his office at 115 N. West will remain open for a few months, but that he will transfer his records to Duncan effective next month.

Duncan said his company will service Fischer's existing and future policies.

Fischer said he sold his agency's business to Duncan because he is getting older, because his wife is sick, and because, "I'll still have plenty to do."

Fischer said his continued insurance sales through Duncan and his real estate business will keep him busy. His other business, Joe Fischer Realty, which recently opened its new office at 2219 Perryton Parkway, will remain open, Fischer said.

Fischer and Duncan are independent agencies. Duncan's purchase of Fischer's business was for an undisclosed price payable over three years, Duncan said.

Duncan Insurance Agency was founded by Pampa's first Mayor, J.N. Duncan, before 1920. His son, the late Ivy Duncan, took over the business and was followed by sons Ray and Kirk and grandson Brian Duncan. Jerry Noles is also a principal in the agency.

Brian Duncan said his agency will also hire Fischer's two secretaries, adding to one of the largest agency staffs in town, he said.

Both Fischer and Duncan sell most types of insurance, including auto, home, fire and life insurance, through several insurance companies.

"It will be good for us to continue growing," Duncan said.

Students attend UT energy symposium

Lynn Norrod and Bryan Martin, juniors at Pampa high school, are participating in the 23rd annual Texas Energy Science Symposium at the University of Texas at Austin this week.

Lynn is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Norrod of Pampa, and Bryan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bryan Martin of 2236 Dogwood, Pampa.

Forty-one outstanding high school teachers and students from the Panhandle and South Plains area were selected by their schools to attend the four-day symposium, co-sponsored by Southwestern Public Service Company announced. This year's session is expected to attract 400 participants from across Texas to tour the science laboratories at UT and to hear nationally known scientists and engineers discuss energy-related topics.

Among the guest speakers are Dr. Edward Teller, a nuclear physicist with Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, talking about "The Ultimate Renewable Resource." The sponsors of the symposium are Southwestern Public Service, the University of Texas and the Texas Atomic Energy Research Foundation.

Judge opposes new grand jury

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A state district judge's refusal to empanel another grand jury has left Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap unsure about the course of an investigation into suspicious infant deaths at a hospital here.

Judge Ted Butler said it would be illegal to select a second, special grand jury to continue the now four-month old investigation.

A Kerr County grand jury, investigating similar allegations in that county 50 miles northwest of here, indicted a 32-year-old nurse in connection with the death of a 15-month-old Kerrville girl and injuries to six other patients.

Millsap said Wednesday that a special Bexar County grand jury is needed to continue the investigation in San Antonio.

But Butler said empaneling such a grand jury would place the entire investigation in jeopardy. He said he believes the law requires the case to be presented to a "regularly empaneled grand jury."

The judge said Assistant District Attorney Nick Rothe asked him last week to empanel a new grand jury to pursue the investigation into the series of infant deaths in pediatric intensive care units at the county-owned Medical Center Hospital from 1978 to early 1982.

"I just don't think I can do it," Butler said. "I think there would be too much of a risk that it is not proper."

Gene Jones pleaded innocent to the Kerr County charges in connection with the death of Chelsea Ann McClellan on Sept. 17, 1982. The injured children were under the care of Dr. Kathleen Holland, a Kerrville pediatrician who employed Ms. Jones, officials said.

State District Judge V. Murray Jordan set a $50,000 bond for the murder indictment and a $25,000 bond on each of the six other injury counts, and denied a bond reduction request by Ms. Jones' court-appointed lawyer, William Chenault.

The indictment alleges that Ms. Jones "intentionally and knowingly" killed Chelsea by injecting her with the drug succinyl choline, a muscle relaxant that can cause respiratory arrest. A toxicologist said he found traces of the drug in tissue from the child's body.

The initial Bexar County grand jury's term expired on Tuesday after it had served five months. Its term already had been extended for 90 days and, by law, Butler said, it could not be extended again.

Butler said grand juries are empaneled on a rotation basis by criminal district judges and said it was not his turn to preside over a grand jury.

"This is too big a thing to take a chance on the law," Butler said. "I was set to do it (empanel a new special grand jury) until I got looking at the statutes and I realized I would be taking a big gamble."

Millsap said Wednesday he has not had time to consider the next step in the baby death probe.

Butler said testimony in the baby death probe could be presented to a grand jury currently empaneled by another district judge, Tom Rickhoff, or delayed until District Judge David Berchelman empanels the next grand jury in July.

"We really need a special grand jury to death with the Medical Center Hospital investigation," Millsap said. "It is a great deal more difficult to deal with a major case like this one plus other cases week-by-week."

Millsap said he will determine his next move after meeting with Butler and Rothe, who is coordinating the baby death investigation.

Cuevas death sentence 'self defense of society,' state prosecutor says

HOUSTON (AP) — Ignacio Cuevas proved himself deserving of the death penalty when he helped two other prison inmates take hostages in an 11-day siege that ended in four deaths, a prosecutor says.

Cuevas, the sole inmate survivor of the siege, on Wednesday was sentenced to die a third time for the Aug. 3, 1974 slaying of Texas prison librarian Julia Standley.

Jurors, who convicted him of capital murder Tuesday, deliberated three hours and five minutes in the punishment phase of the trial.

Returning Cuevas to prison would be pointless because he "was in the penitentiary where he supposedly could not take the lives of other individuals" when Mrs. Standley was killed, assistant district attorney Bert Graham said.

Graham told jurors in his closing argument that giving Cuevas a death sentence would be an act in "self defense of society."

If Cuevas were not sentenced to death, Graham said, "he'll be sitting there in prison, waiting for the day that he can do that again."

Cuevas twice before was convicted in Mrs. Standley's shooting death. He was sentenced to death each time but the convictions were overturned by appeals courts because of errors in jury selection.

"It's the third time 12 people have said the defendant deserves the death penalty," Graham said.

Mrs. Standley was one of 13 hostages held 11 days in the prison's library by Cuevas and two other inmates. The other two prisoners were killed by law officers in the aborted escape attempt.

Another hostage, Elizabeth Beseda, also was killed and one was wounded.

Defense attorney Will Gray said he would base an appeal on a 1982 Supreme Court ruling which held that defendants who did not actually kill anyone and had no intent to do so could not be convicted of murder.

The state has produced no evidence that Cuevas fired a fatal shot. Gray argues his client is a slow-witted "dupe" who had not planned the violence.

But Graham holds the facts of Mrs. Standley's killing were vastly different from the case on which the Supreme Court ruled. In the Florida case, Graham said, "the person who was convicted was several miles away from the actual shooting. Our evidence shows that Cuevas fired his gun four times and was extremely involved" in the slayings.

To sentence Cuevas to death, jurors had to find he is a continuing threat to society and that he acted deliberately with reasonable expectation that others would die.

Jury foreman James Plumb called the deliberation process a "bad ordeal" but declined to say what points jurors discussed. He said he thought the death sentence decision was "fair and impartial."

Prosecuting attorney Frank Blazek said Cuevas had "a sheer hate and total disregard" for the slain victims of the failed escape.

Graham added, "This case illustrates perfectly why we need the death penalty in some cases."

But defense attorney Gray said, "What you're being asked to do is order the death of this person who killed no one."

Noting some art work that Cuevas had painted while in prison, Gray said, "There is a spark of humanity there... don't snuff that spark out."

Before the closing arguments, the prosecution called to the witness stand three law enforcement officers who said Cuevas had a bad reputation in Reeves County, where he was convicted of murder in 1970. He was serving a 40-year sentence for that crime when he attempted the 1974 escape.

"He terrorized the community every time he committed a crime," said Raul Flores, Reeves County sheriff.

Defense attorneys called to the stand a priest and a former Death Row inmate who now is a paralegal to raise the issues of ethics and the possibility of rehabilitation.

Cuevas, a Mexican citizen, sat quietly throughout the arguments while an interpreter whispered to him the proceedings.

White delays special session decision

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says there is no use in calling lawmakers back to town for a special session until he has some assurance they will support his plans.

"There's no sense to keep them after class just to be hard-headed about it," White told reporters Wednesday at his regular weekly news conference. "I am certainly not going to call one (a special session) until the Legislature is prepared to take action in some of these areas."

A pay raise for schoolteachers financed by a tax on luxury items — White's pet project — failed during the regular session, and the governor said he needs time to try to build new support for it.

He said Monday he visited the House and Senate Wednesday night just before adjournment of the 140-day regular session. "I had many of them who'd suggested we shouldn't do it at this time tell me that they would be willing to do it as soon as we could, and I think more and more people will be coming to that position."

In the meantime, White denied that a special session was mandatory this summer to address three other major issues left hanging by the Legislature — the possible end of the Texas

Employment Commission, a statewide water plan, and a brucellosis control bill.

The TEC required a bill to keep it operating because of the state's "Sunset" law designed to reduce bureaucracy, but the bill was killed by a deadlock between the House and Senate on the last day of the session. According to the law, the TEC must begin closing down Sept. 1 unless the Legislature takes action.

"I don't think that's as harsh a deadline as some people think," White said. "They have a continuation built into that Sunset process," which gives the agency one year to disband.

Other unfinished business of the regular session included a bill that would have brought Texas into compliance with U.S. brucellosis control standards. It failed in the Senate while federal authorities were trying to impose a quarantine on Texas cattle, and a statewide water plan that White supported died in a conference committee late in the session.

Despite that, White, who was asked repeatedly about the possibility of calling lawmakers back into session, insisted, "I don't want to say we're going to have a summer session. We're going to wait and see what the court action is on brucellosis. The TEC has a phase-out plan which would foreclose their going out abruptly on the first of September. As far as the water plan is concerned, that can be addressed here in the next few months and maybe even have it for a 1984 help-get-out-the-vote campaign for West Texas," White said.

Normally, the Legislature meets every other year for 140 days beginning in early January. But beyond that, the governor can call a special session any time he likes to handle any issue he deems an emergency, and he can keep lawmakers in session for up to 30 days at a time.

During a special session, lawmakers can consider only those items presented them by the governor.

White said he wanted to discuss items of unfinished business of the regular session with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Gib Lewis.

"I am trying to work with the speaker and make certain that his concerns — and I think they are valid concerns — that at the same time we are called upon to ask for more taxes to increase teachers' salaries, it's important that we improve the quality of education across the board."

Plastic cards may replace checking accounts.

HOUSTON (AP) — Texans may be able to replace their checking accounts with automatic bank teller cards late this year or early next, officials say.

PULSE cards will be known as "debit" cards under the new system, which would allow customers to transfer money directly from their accounts to those of merchants, said Stan Paur, executive vice president of PULSE.

That company is Texas' largest automatic bank teller network. There are currently 4.2 million bank customers who hold the cards.

Paur said customers would use the same cards they now use in the automatic tellers.

He said the system would work this way:

A customer, making a purchase, would give the merchant the PULSE card instead of cash, check or credit card. The merchant then would place the card into a terminal which would send a signal to a computer. The computer would then transfer funds from the customer's bank account directly to the account of the merchant and the purchase would be complete.

Paur said the customer's identification would be verified either through a signature or through a personal identification number, depending on the type of terminal used by the merchant.

Terminals, he said, could be electronic cash registers, or card-operated gas pumps or card readers attached to a telephone. All would be linked to a financial computer that would sort out the purchase and make the appropriate credits and debits.

"Debit cards and point-of-sale terminals benefit both consumers and merchants," said Paur. "Consumers feel more secure not having to carry checks or large amounts of cash, and merchants receive quicker payments for their goods or services at less risk."

Merchants, he said, "look at the system as protection against bad check and credit card fraud."

The "plastic cash" system cleared a government hurdle during the recent session of the Texas legislature.

The Texas Senate and House passed a bill that would enable electronic transfer of funds for point-of-sale transactions and Gov. Mark White is expected to sign it into law.

But several other elements are yet to be worked out, said Paur. The start-up date is now expected for "late 1983 or early 1984" depending on technical connections and the education of merchants.

He said studies have not yet determined how much each transaction will cost and who will pay the service fee — the customer or the merchant.

The PULSE automatic teller network was organized by seven bank groups, Texas Commerce, Allied, Bank of the Southwest, First City, Interfirst, Cullen and Texas American Bank Shares, and customers holding debit cards from any of those banks would be able to use the point-of-sale money transfer system, said Paur.

Stopping child abuses...

Recently, the Texas Senate was shocked by stories of family violence and abuse that were told during several public hearings.

The hearings revealed an increase in abuse during the past 10 years - abuse to children, spouses, the elderly and disabled and usually perpetrated by family members.

The Senate reacted to the bad news by adopting a series of eight resolutions designed to help people who are abused and those doing the abusing. The House also will vote on the resolutions.

The Senate's resolutions are rather lofty, and one wonders how many children or adults they will save from abuse. The resolutions would create an advisory group to study family abuse and help the Texas Department of Human Resources with its family violence program. They also would try to increase public awareness of family violence, upgrade services to children and rural families, give more training and education to criminal justice professionals, re-evaluate existing rehabilitation programs and study the feasibility of an information and referral system.

It is about time the Legislature tried shedding some light on the problems of family violence. But the only way abuse really can be checked is if people take responsibility to find help, whether they are abusers or abused, and if people report incidents of possible abuse before it's too late.

Family violence is a sinister problem because it is difficult to detect in its early stages. Once the problem has become noticeable to outsiders, the people involved may be at the end of their ropes and ready to take drastic action, or they may be near death.

Abuse to children is a special problem, not only because of physical harm, but because the abuse can distort psychological development, which is not easy to reverse.

The Texas Department of Human Resources' Odessa office has programs - or an refer to people to programs - that can help the abused and the abusers. According to Jean Chapman of the department's children's services office, most persons with problems that may lead to abusive behavior don't realize the help that is only a phone call away. The idea is to get people to call and talk about their difficulties, whether they are financial or related to physical or mental health.

They can be referred to programs that have been helping people get their lives back on a peaceful and productive track, including counseling, day care, charities and meals programs.

Odessa's human resources phone number is 367-7201, and the local child abuse 24-hour hot line number is 362-0464. The statewide child abuse hot line can be called by dialing 1-800-252-5400.

How do you stop what may be a promising recovery dead in its tracks? Six former secretaries of Labor (from the Kennedy, Johnson, Carter, Nixon, and Ford administrations) have a nifty idea. Initiate a "substantial" government "jobs" program requiring "a large expenditure of public funds." Yessir, that oughta do it, and might even stifle any speculation that there was anything to this "supply-side" nonsense.

Two former Carter administration officials, finally taking note of possible Soviet violations of current arms treaties, have urged that discussion be handled through diplomatic channels rather than through a public airing, i.e., in secret rather than in the open. If we let them know we might not sign another treaty to cheat on. And some people think that signatures on a treaty would actually reduce arms. There's one born every minute.

Hi-tech jobs require a low-tech appearance

By ART BUCHWALD

Apparently the job market for college graduates is still in the hi-tech industries. The trouble is that most graduates don't know how to apply for a hi-tech job.

When Rod Beaver came home from an interview the other day he was very discouraged.

"The personnel director only spent three minutes with me and said I wasn't qualified."

"Of course you weren't qualified," his uncle, who works for IBM, told him. "Look at the way you're dressed. You're wearing a blue suit and a white shirt and a conservative tie. And you shaved. Is that any way to apply for a position in a hi-tech industry?"

Beaver said, "I don't understand. I wanted to make a good impression."

"You don't make a good impression in hi-tech by wearing a shirt and tie."

"I thought everyone at IBM had to wear a dark suit, shirt and tie."

"That was in the old days when it was important to look nice. If you want to be a salesman you can dress like that, but if you're going for the big money in programming and research they don't trust you if you're too well dressed."

"What should he have worn?" Beaver's mother asked.

"A sport shirt, blue jeans and open sandals. You have to look like a crazy genius before they take any interest in you. You kids think you can just walk into a hi-tech company all slicked and dressed up and they'll be impressed with you. But it isn't so. They want people who look like they know something about computers."

"I've got an outfit in my closet I can wear, and I'll go out for an interview this afternoon."

"Don't go out until you grow a beard. Hi-tech executives hate people who are clean shaven. And don't get a haircut for a while. You want to look like a gorilla if you hope to get the personnel director's attention."

"Does he have to grow a beard?" his mother asked.

"It could make the difference between $25,000 and $45,000 a year," his uncle said.

"What do I say to the personnel director?" Rod asked.

"You don't say much. I'll be the personnel man. Now the first question I'll ask you is if you think you would be happy working for the company."

"Yes, sir. It's always been my dream to work for a company like this."

"That's not the correct reply. You say you have no idea, but you're willing to give it a try. Except you don't want to be bugged about how long it takes you to come up with something. And you don't want anyone checking on how many hours you put in."

"Does he have to be that surely?" his mother asked.

"There are hundreds of kids waiting out there for jobs in hi-tech, and all the companies are looking for are surely loners who don't want to be told what to do."

"If Rod is going to look unkempt and be surely how is he going to impress the hi-tech clients?" his mother wanted to know.

"If he gets the job he'll never see a customer. The people they hire for research and development are kept in a separate building in cages and they get a banana once or twice a day."

Rod thanked his uncle for the advice, and came back the next month to announce he got a job with the Apple Corporation. "I did everything you told me, and they were so impressed with the way I looked and how surly I was, they selected me over two guys from the Stanford Business School, and gave me a surfboard so I wouldn't get bored in my office."

Waste and spending in Congress is not new

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

Writing in the 19th century, Lord Macaulay wrote that the U.S. Constitution "is all sail and no anchor." One is reminded of this by the depressing debate over the federal budget.

The founding fathers, who drafted the Constitution thought of the U.S. Senate as a steady force in the nation's legislative system. With six year terms, the senators weren't supposed to yield to popular pressure. Unfortunately, it hasn't worked out that way in modern times. It isn't working out that way in the budget debate. A sizable number of senators are as determined as their colleagues in the House to re-start spending programs.

The latest proposal, which could become a massive entitlement program, calls for federal assistance to persons who may lose their homes in foreclosure proceedings. Given enough time, this program could become one in which Uncle Sam makes the mortgage payments for millions of citizens.

Remember: food stamps started on a small scale.

The Senate, which is supposed to be responsible, wants to spend billions of dollars more on domestic programs than President Reagan has recommended. And it has no intention of introducing the cost-cutting measure which have been recommended.

The President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, headed by J. Peter Grace, chairman, of W. R. Grace & Co., has cited potential savings in excess of $30 billion. Mr. Grace told a news conference: "The waste down here is unbelievable. It's over $100 billion a year."

In discussing wasteful federal spending, Mr. Grace said that the government has no bottom philosophy at all. "A business has to survive," he said. "It has to make some money, at least break even, otherwise it goes out of existence. The government has no survival situation at all. Survival in government is to spend more."

The unhappy truth is that a very large number of congressmen have reelection as their primary goal. Right now, they are worrying about 1984. They are planning to spend their way back into office by catering to every special interest and pressure group. The purse strings of the nation are in the hands of people who don't put the national interest first. Obviously, this is a very dangerous situation for the U.S.

During the Eisenhower administration, the U.S. had a balanced budget. For some years, the federal deficits were on a modest scale. Now, we are faced with deficits in the $200 billion range. This is a surefire prescription for renewed inflation, a massive credit crunch and depression.

Will the voters wake up and turn out of office the big spenders who are threatening the financial security of the U.S.? One can only pray that they will do so.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors says America's cities need "revitalization" and "strong federal support." Translation: city governments are so inept and hel in such low esteem by the citizens they purport to govern that they don't dare raise local taxes. Therefore, rather than scaling back their grandiose plans, they want the federal government to extract the money for them and pass it along with no strings. Children may not believe in fairy tales any more, but some city bureaucrats obviously still do.

News that former EPA official Rita Lavelle is being cited for contempt of Congress reminds us of a line attributed to Mae West during a trial connected with an allegedly racy show. When the judge asked, "Are you trying to show contempt for this court?" the irrepressible Mae answered, "Your honor, I'm doing my best not to." Really, what response could any balanced person have to Congress besides contempt? One might almost say it's unpatriotic not to show contempt for Congress.

Electronic warfare era underway

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — The low-slung labs of "Silicon Valley," spawning ground for an age of microelectronic ease, are also creating an era of lightning-fast electronic warfare, one whose secrets the U.S. government wants to keep.

Here and in other high-tech meccas across the United States, researchers are working on a classified Pentagon project to develop "Very High Speed Integrated Circuits," called VHSIC, the key to "supercomputers" that could revolutionize weapons of the future.

But the government is worried by what it says is a too-successful Soviet effort to tap into American high technology.

"The Soviets have been stepping up their efforts to acquire new and emerging technologies such as ... VHSIC," says a Central Intelligence Agency report.

U.S. officials say this Moscow-directed campaign, involving front companies, legal scientific exchanges and old-fashioned spies, has focused heavily on Silicon Valley, fancifully named for the basic element of microelectronic circuits. In this 20-mile stretch of research and manufacturing facilities south of San Francisco Bay, the microelectronics industry has produced a lifestyle of musical-chair jobs, casual thievery of trade secrets and lax security.

Douglas Southard, a local deputy district attorney, uses computers to help cope with the growing high-tech crime beat. He will soon computerize intelligence files on the estimated $20-million-a-year in high-tech property theft. This does not include stolen trade secrets. And his two-man county task force will be expanded to five.

John Shea, a consultant whose Technology Analysis Group acts as an industry-government liaison, says foreign agents, both open and undercover, are here in "profuse abundance."

The most celebrated recent case was last year's "Japcam," an FBI "sting" operation in which 18 Japanese were caught trying to buy stolen IBM computer secrets.

But other cases involving the industry surface regularly: —The sale of major radar secrets to a Polish intelligence agent by a Hughes Aircraft engineer.

A foiled attempt by a Santa Clara distributor to ship abroad advanced computer microcircuits stolen from giant microchip manufacturer Intel.

Seizure of a $70,000 computer system for enhancing reconnaissance-satellite images. The system, first bought by a Silicon Valley intermediary, somehow ended up in Soviet hands and was confiscated when sent back to California for maintenance.

The biggest prize of all would be the VHSIC technology. Shea said the Soviets' high-tech campaign has cut their "microelectronics gap" to just two years behind the United States.

The goal of the Pentagon's $225-million VHSIC research program is to produce "very high speed" microchips that would drive computers able to perform one billion or more operations per second. The best current computers top out at 400 million a second in short bursts.

Such supercomputers would make U.S. weapons "smarter" and faster.

Long wait for Aggie ring

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — E.I. "Doc" Watson waited 65 years for his Texas A&M class ring, but he figures he's one of the few members of his class who got one at all.

Watson, an 89-year-old retired civil engineer from Houston, left school in his junior year to serve in World War I. He wasn't alone.

"What wrecked that class was the war," Watson said. "We're the class that wasn't there at all."

Watson, who said no engineers graduated in 1918, received his custom-made class ring Saturday.

"It was such a surprise. I was practically speechless," he said. "It's one of the nicest gifts I've ever received. I'm mighty proud of it."

U.S. scientists see ships piloted by robots that can evade enemy fire, mini-rockets that find and destroy enemy tanks, laser systems whose computers can pinpoint and knock out missiles in flight.

Other military uses of the superfast circuits are almost limitless. They will help aircraft designers, for example, by simulating the airflow around an entire warplane, something that cannot be done now. They will also make code-breaking easier.

The federal government is already shielding this critical new technology.

Documents relating to VHSIC are protected against Freedom of Information Act inquiries. Foreigners are banned from work on VHSIC projects — a prohibition that caused some U.S. universities to decline research invitations. And this spring the Pentagon ordered two research papers on "focused ion beam" technology, important in producing high-speed circuits, cut from an optical engineers' conference in Santa Clara.

"The reason: too many Japanese and French in attendance, two clear tracks into the Soviet Union," said an industry newsletter, Microelectronics News.

Many in the Silicon Valley complain the Reagan administration's current clampdown on high-tech exports is futile, since the rest of the technological world is relatively open to Soviet purchases or infiltration.

In Japan, whose government and industry have embarked on their own civilian "supercomputer" program, 30 Soviet intelligence agents are busy soliciting information from high-tech researchers, says the Japanese business newspaper Nihon Keizai Shimbun. Their targets are believed to include advanced Japanese technologies in ceramics, robotics and fiber optics.

"We've had a defector from the KGB (Soviet intelligence service) who told us how they operated in Japan. It sounds as though they had a very easy time," said a Washington official deeply involved in efforts to protect U.S. high technology.

This official, who asked not to be identified because of the sensitivity of his position, said the Japanese often guard their technological secrets jealously from Americans, knowing they could be turned against them commercially. "But they take the view of the Soviets that they can't make good use of it," he said.

Internationally, the United States is calling on Japan and other U.S. allies to tighten controls on high-tech exports to the East. Domestically, meanwhile, Washington "hard-liners" are locked in a showdown with science and industry over just how open the American high-tech sector should be.

Dear Abby Woman's marital ties keep slipping apart

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You will probably think this is from a crazy person, but I am quite sane — except when it comes to Rudy and Ralph. I am 29 and have been married six times — three times to Rudy, and three times to Ralph.

Rudy and I were married right after I graduated from high school. I was 17 and Rudy was two years older. We fought from the day we were married. After a year I divorced Rudy and fell in love with Ralph, the young lawyer who got the divorce for me.

I soon realized that I was still in love with Rudy, so I divorced Ralph and remarried Rudy. (That's two for Rudy and one for Ralph, right?) Well, I discovered that I was three months pregnant with Ralph's baby, so I left Rudy to marry Ralph for a second time.

Meanwhile, I kept having these strong feelings for Rudy, so I called him and asked him if he felt the same. He did, so we decided to try marriage for the third time. (Our pastor refused to marry us, so we went to a judge.)

After three years with Rudy, Ralph showed himself to be such a terrific father to our son, "Ralphie." I let Ralphie talk me into going back to his father, so I divorced Rudy a third time and married Ralph for the third time.

Now I can't seem to get Rudy off my mind, and I don't know what to do. I saw a marriage counselor who suggested I discreetly have an affair with Rudy, but I am a very moral woman. I have never slept with either of my husbands while being married to the other.

Please tell me what to do.

TORN IN TWO

DEAR TORN: Don't do anything while you're still "torn." Stay with Ralph and get some psychological help until you are sure of your feelings for both Rudy and Ralph.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I enjoy artichokes. Recently, however, in addition to scraping the tender portion with his front teeth, as all artichoke lovers do, he is now consuming the entire leaf!

Is this good for him? I don't believe it is. He says he is getting his "roughage" this way. I love him and I'm worried.

What do you say?

EATS THE WHOLE THING

DEAR EATS: Tell your husband that man's digestive system was not intended to assimilate that kind of roughage in large amounts. Cattle, si. Humans, no.

DEAR ABBY: Here is a message I would like to convey to your readers: I am the blind person you often see waiting across at a busy intersection, walking down the street or shopping in a store. My dog-guide is with me, leading me safely around people and obstacles, up and down steps, in and out of buildings and across streets.

If I need help, and sometimes I do, I will ask you for it. Please don't grab my arm and try to steer me across the street. I'm sure you don't realize it, but you are confusing my dog when you try to do her job.

Please don't call to her, pet her or feed her. Whenever you see her in harness, even if she appears to be resting, she is "on duty" and should be considered as a working dog, and not your pet. I give her plenty of love and affection at home and lots of praise while she is working. She does not need your affection and attention. In fact, when you distract her from her work, you are endangering both our lives. Her full attention must be on her work and my safety.

So the next time you see us together, please respect my four-legged friend for what she is, a professional dog with an important job to do. I know she looks lovable, but please let me do the loving and let her do the leading.

DOG-GUIDE'S OWNER

Good exercise benefits ticker and tush

The lives of women will never be the same.

All across the country, the women's movement has sparked new self-respect and independence, even among those who aren't avowed feminists. They feel a stronger sense of themselves that comes from knowing who they are and the power they can assert. This is especially evident in the workplace.

The greater control women are exerting in their lives naturally includes greater control over their bodies. In taking responsibility for their physical well-being, more and more women are realizing the importance of being fit.

Times were when a woman would never have been seen playing basketball or racquetball, or running in shorts and singlet, or bicycling 50 miles in one day.

Sports and athletics were strictly for men.

The word "fitness," if it even entered a conversation at the turn of the century, had an entirely different concept. A "fit" woman was one who had an hour-glass figure, a rosy-cheeked complexion and a head of thick, curly hair, and she relied on corsets, cosmetics and switches to achieve that appearance.

Today, women can still have hour-glass figures, rosy complexions and thick, healthy hair. But most probably such an appearance is the product of regular exercise and proper nutrition. Cosmetics are still popular, but they are used with different intent: to enhance rather than mask.

The fitness movement has spawned a wide assortment of exercise programs. Whatever a woman's interests, lifestyle, time constraints or level of fitness, some type of exercise will meet her needs.

Most programs emphasize the importance of aerobics to strengthen the cardiovascular system. With the prevalence of heart disease today, it's no wonder. The simplest exercise is walking. It's simple because it requires no equipment except a pair of good walking shoes. A half-hour of walking at a steady, brisk pace three times a week is enough to keep the heart strong and the muscles minimally toned.

To make that half-hour more efficient, the next step is running. A little more equipment is needed — besides shoes, a runner needs running shorts and a loose-fitting singlet, preferably with an open-mesh front and back to keep cool.

The simplicity, however, is still there: A runner can run anywhere. I've heard stories about running when on business trips, on vacation, at the beach, in the mountains, in the city — the list is endless. For someone eager to get in shape, the quickest start is running.

Running isn't for everybody, though, some women (amazingly enough, to my notion) find it boring. For them, an aerobics class is a perfect solution. Many high school gyms, YMCA's, fitness centers and health spas offer classes that set exercise to music, which many women find is the most pleasant path to fitness. Some organizations like Jazzercise and Aerobic Dancing by Jaki Sorensen have standard routines that are taught in cities and towns throughout the country. If you've got happy feet, what could be better than doing aerobics to the best of Donna Summer, or thigh stretches to the strains of the "Chariots of Fire" theme? Nothing. And the filled-to-the-brim gyms and YMCA's attest to the popularity of sport.

One of the greatest advantages of aerobic dance classes is that many of them combine aerobic exercise, which is specifically for the cardiovascular system, with exercises for individual muscle groups. As a result, an aerobics class burns calories, strengthens the heart and improves muscle tone all at the same time. This is something that running doesn't always do. Some women acquire muscle definition in their legs after running for a few years, while others can never get rid of flabby thighs. A combination of aerobic and anaerobic exercises takes care of both the ticker and the tush.

Swimming and bicycling are excellent aerobic exercises, and good activities to practice in conjunction with, for example, running, racquetball or any other strenuous sport. By avoiding any pounding on pavement, swimming and bicycling spare the knees and ankles of shock, and still work the cardiovascular system.

Remember that the most important ingredient in any exercise program is enjoyment. It does no good to take up running, pursue it passionately for two weeks,

Welcome to the world of dizzy

By LISA PATMAN

For those of you who are new readers of this column, let me tell you a bit about myself. Those of you who are old readers of this column may as well read on, since I just made this stuff up a few minutes ago.

I have been a female since birth and, having become quite accustomed to it, have not felt the need of the services of those strange doctors in Sweden. Now on to the more interesting aspects of my manner.

I am a surprisingly clean person: several times a day, and many times during the night, I clean my plate. Just like my mother always told me to, and to be on the safe side I clean the plates of those fortunate wags sitting on either side of me. This results not only in a sparkling set of dishes, but also in my startling physique, which is tall and slender, except for my height and weight.

Other wonderful physical attributes which I claim as my own include a head of hair which is a challenge to the curling iron, and to which many beauticians have thrown up their hands in amazement and, I assume, admiration. More notable features are a long nose, perfect for storing peas, and a small chin, which tries its best to remain invisible. I also have a unique derriere, which is perfectly padded for sitting on hard bleachers during high school football games. However, I do not have a waist, being morally opposed to them.

As to my personality, I have been called kind, humorous, inspirational and charming. In fact, I called myself these things only minutes ago. And if it were not true, why did everyone laugh so loudly?

My temper is sweet, and I have lots of will power. It is a fact that I am so good, I hold grudges for no longer than 10 years, unless it's something really memorable, like somebody saying something I don't like. As for criticism, I take it well, waiting to hold my breath and turn blue until after I get home.

Speaking of home, I have one, fully equipped with a family — my husband, Old Dad; and our two teenaged sons, Mumbles and Bluto. All three are quite proud of me, and adore me completely, often saying, "Who was that woman?" whenever I pass through. My pets refer to me as "Meow."

My parents try not to refer to me at all, and I'm pretty sure this is out of respect for my privacy. My brother refuses my calls, knowing that the sound of my voice would make him too, too thrilled to be able to continue his work as a loan shark.

That's about all there is to me really, except for my cooking abilities (I am affectionately known as Botulism Betty), my gracefulness (I trip over dust balls), and my great business sense (if there are checks in the checkbook, there's bound to be money in the bank).

So now you know it all, and you are, as my friends and family say, "Welcome to the Wonderful World of Dizzy."

Computer careers expected to grow

VERNON, Conn. (AP) — Computer occupations — such as programming and systems analysis — are expected to be the most rapidly growing in the nation over the next decade, says an industry specialist.

Microcomputers particularly will soon move into the workplace in addition to their current personal or home use, says Dr. Arthur Michals, head of a computer education group.

"For today's youngsters, this shift presents a unique set of opportunities and challenges to be met in the years ahead," says Michals, president of Computer Education Institute.

The institute has launched a national program called Computer U., designed to offer a $95 computer education to youngsters in 15-hour, five-day summer courses across the nation.

Enrollment will be offered to children between the ages of 8 and 17, Michals says.

Secretary of State George Shultz, left, presides as Richard Stone takes the oath of office Wednesday in Washington as President Reagan's envoy to Central America. The position carries the rank of ambassador. (AP Laserphoto)

Stone leaves on trip seeking peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard Stone, newly installed special envoy for Central America, is setting out on a 12-day mission to the area with a mandate to promote peace, democracy and economic development.

After receiving a warm send-off at his swearing-in Wednesday from Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Stone was due to arrive today in El Salvador, the first stop on his 10-nation fact-finding journey.

The State Department said in a statement that Stone's mission is to carry to the countries of the area "the full support of the United States for regional efforts to achieve peace."

Included in Stone's itinerary is a June 10 visit to Nicaragua, which the Reagan administration claims is an obstacle to peace because of its alleged support for Salvadoran rebels.

The planned visit to Managua will represent a rare high-level diplomatic contact between the United States and the Sandinista government, which recently has been engaged in a spreading armed struggle against American-backed insurgents.

Meanwhile, The Washington Post reported in today's editions that the United States plans to send 20 to 25 military physicians to El Salvador to treat wounded soldiers. The newspaper also said the ambassadors to Costa Rica and Guatemala would be replaced.

Stone's visit to El Salvador follows a warning Wednesday by the country's largest guerrilla faction that it will continue killing American military trainers until all are forced to leave the country.

The group claimed responsibility for the May 25 slaying of Lt. Cmdr. Albert Schaufelberger, the deputy commander of the American trainers in that country.

A U.S. official said there will be no change in U.S. policy or operations despite the threat.

"We can't operate out of a fortress," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

Shortly after Stone was sworn in, President Reagan told a group of business leaders with operations in Latin America he believes the leftist forces in the region are on the defensive.

"The communists and their Marxist apologists ... have been rejected again and again ... More and more people are realizing that Marxist socialism may provide rhetoric, but it doesn't put food on the table," Reagan said.

Stone, a former Florida Democratic senator, took the oath of office before a large State Department gathering that included much of the Latin American ambassadorial corps.

"Nothing is more blessed than the act of making peace," Stone said.

Book reports

Greece gave to Nixon campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon received secret campaign contributions from the military government of Greece in his 1968 election campaign, according to a new book by a prize-winning reporter.

The book, "The Price of Power," by Seymour M. Hersh, also reports that Henry A. Kissinger may have blocked a Senate investigation of possible Central Intelligence Agency involvement in the political donations.

The book, scheduled for publication June 13 by Summit Books, suggests that Kissinger courted both sides in the 1968 presidential campaign. Hersh reports that Kissinger not only gave secret information about the Vietnam peace talks to Nixon but offered Democrat Hubert Humphrey data he could use to discredit Nixon.

Asked about his role in the 1968 campaign on ABC television's "Nightline," Kissinger called Hersh's report "a slimy lie."

An aide in Nixon's New York office, Nick Ruwe, asked to comment on the Hersh allegations, said, "Former President Nixon only comments on his own books."

Hersh says the Greek campaign contributions were confirmed by Henry J. Tasca, a career Foreign Service officer who had been ambassador to Greece during the Nixon administration, in secret testimony before the House Intelligence Committee in 1976.

Such contributions were legal in 1968.

On Sept. 22, 1970, the Nixon administration lifted an embargo on arms shipments to Greece that had been imposed after a military junta seized power in 1967. The junta, strongly criticized for its human rights record, collapsed in 1974 and parliamentary elections were held.

Hersh says Tasca, who died in 1979, testified that Greek-American businessman Thomas A. Pappas served as a conduit for the campaign contributions. He quotes Elias P. Demetrapoulos, a Greek journalist who moved to Washington after the junta took power, as saying the money amounted to "hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Pappas, who has homes in Boston and Athens, could not be reached for comment.

Demetrapoulos charged in interviews in 1975 that money from the Greek central intelligence agency, known as the KYP, had been funneled into the Nixon campaign.

In an interview Wednesday, Demetrapoulos said he knew the money came from the KYP "through the same sources who tipped me off about the transaction in the first place."

Optimist baseball roundup

Pampa Optimist Club's newly-organized 16-18 year-old Babe Ruth league started play Wednesday night with Energy Agra posting a 12-3 win over Clingan Tires.

David Owens was the winning pitcher. Brian Bowen, the Pampa Harvesters' most valuable player this past season, took the loss.

Juan Soto paced Agra with two hits in three trips to the plate.

As of now there are seven teams—Titan Specialties (Pampa Red), Clingan Tires (Pampa Purple), Energy Agra (Pampa Blue), Panhandle, Skellytown-White Deer and two teams from Berger—entered in the league.

Optimist Club official Marvin Elam said Lefors and McLean may also field teams. Lefors is currently in the state baseball playoffs while several McLean players are on a senior trip.

"Hopefully, we'll get a good lasting program going here," Elam added.

Grant Supply beat Cree Companies, 11-4, in a Babe Ruth 13-15 game last night. Winning pitcher was James Ward. Losing pitcher was Wade Howard.

In National Little League play, Kevin McKnight struck out nine hitters in four innings as Cabot blanked Moose, 12-0. Eric Cochran was the losing pitcher.

Glo-Valve defeated Celanese, 14-6, in the other NL contest. Winning pitcher was Barry Coffee. Losing pitcher was Ben Green.

Citizens Bank hurler Kurt Brashears blanked Chase Oil, 6-0, in American Little League action. Losing pitcher was Sammy Franklin.

Dempsey was the peoples' choice

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
Jack Dempsey never met a stranger.

He was the "peoples' champion" — peoples' champion when he came out of Manassa, Colo. as a raw-boned, 167-pound ring tiger to dominate heavyweight boxing in the 1920s and the peoples' choice when he died peacefully Tuesday at age 87, one of the few remaining relics of sports' Golden Age.

He liked people — plain, ordinary people. People idolized him. To most of them, young and old, he was always the one and only "Champ."

He never lost the common touch.

He never made himself scarce. Some of the heart seemed to go out of the old champ when the restaurant was torn down in the mid-1970s for commercial purposes. Still the event may have improved his financial status.

Dempsey was universally known as a "soft touch." Whether it be friend or foe, he never turned his back on someone needing a temporary loan with no thought about repayment.

The most graphic illustration of the old champion's softheartedness occurred at the Kentucky Derby during the period before the outbreak of World War II.

Dempsey was serving in the Coast Guard. There was another prominent sports figure in the scene in a starched-white naval officer's uniform.

A man approached the naval officer, identified himself, and said, "Hello, Sir, remember me? I was in your outfit at San Diego."

The naval officer straightened himself and coldly replied, "I never saw you before in my life," and then wheeled to return to his friends.

Later in the day, Dempsey was mingling in the crowd when he was accosted by an individual in a tattered suit and rundown shoes.

"Hi, Champ," he said. "Maybe you remember me. I worked with your guys at the fight in Philly."

"Sure," said Dempsey, obviously not recognizing the man. "How are things going?"

"A little down on my luck," the man replied.

"Here," said Dempsey, removing a roll of bills from his pocket. "Take this for old time's sake. I owe you."

The guy mumbled, took the bill — was it a century note? — and fled.

While healthy, Dempsey continued to make public appearances with his third wife, Deanna, to whom he had been married 25 years, and stepdaughter Barbara, co-author of his autobiography, "Dempsey."

He would go to senior citizens' outings in Central Park, sports luncheons and other occasions.

One of his last public appearances was at a New York reception honoring prominent athletes featured in a commercial. Accompanied by Deanna and Barbara, he found himself immediately the center of attention.

Hardly a head turned when Muhammad Ali, with his large entourage, burst on the scene. It was natural that photographers should urge Ali to pay respect to the former boxing great.

After amenities, Ali, subdued by awe, said: "You're the champ — you're the greatest."

Fitch to coach Rockets

HOUSTON (AP) — During what Bill Fitch calls "The Larry Bird Era," the Boston Celtics sold out 119 consecutive games, won three divisional titles and won one world championship.

Fitch started "The Ralph Sampson Era" Wednesday when he signed a multi-year contract with the Houston Rockets to direct their resurrection from last season's 14-68 record, worst in the National Basketball Association.

The Rockets have earned the No. 1 selection in the June 28 NBA draft and will pick Virginia All-American Ralph Sampson.

"I really look forward to coaching a player of Ralph Sampson's ability but he's got a lot to live up to," Fitch said. "I'm sure he'll be interested to learn what players are going to be around him."

Fitch said having Sampson on the team would not insure a championship.

"If one man could win a championship, you had the right man here two years ago," Fitch said, referring to Moses Malone, traded prior to last season to Philadelphia. "Championship teams have the (Kareem) Jabbar but they also have two or three others to go with them."

Fitch said it would take time to develop the Rockets.

"I don't think it's possible in one year, even if you get the greatest talent together, to win the championship," Fitch said. "It takes time to develop the chemistry to win a championship and that will be our goal."

Terms of the contract were not announced although the Rockets' was believed to be similar to the four-year, $200,000 per year offer made last week to Tom Heinsohn.

Fitch left Boston with three years remaining on a contract that paid him an estimated $200,000 per year.

Fitch said Celtics owner Harry Mangurian's decision to sell the team influenced his decision to resign.

"Houston had nothing to do with my resignation," Fitch said. "I said at the time that there was several other opportunities where the timing was right for me to look into those situations."

Fitch said ownership was a big factor in his signing with the Rockets.

"The NBA is losing a great owner in Harry Mangurian," Fitch said. "Nothing is more important to the stability of a franchise than great ownership. Everything of quality starts there."

Fitch has 546 career victories in the NBA, sixth best on the all-time list.

The Celtics won divisional titles in three of Fitch's four seasons as coach and they finished second last season.

"Somewhere along the line this ring will come off and I'll put one on that says Houston on it" the former Boston coach said, holding up the title ring the Celtics received after beating the Rockets in the 1979-80 title series.

The Cleveland Cavaliers were Fitch's first NBA reclamation project. The Cavaliers won only 15 games in 1970, Fitch's first season, but won the division title in 1975-76.

Fitch hopes it doesn't take that long to reach the championship with the Rockets, but he's not promising instant titles.

Jabbar becomes free agent

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the second-leading scorer in National Basketball Association history, may have played his final game for the Los Angeles Lakers.

Jerry Buss, the club's owner, says it's better than 50-50 but not a certainty that Abdul-Jabbar, a six-time NBA Most Valuable Player, will play with the Lakers next season.

But Abdul-Jabbar, 36, became a free agent immediately after the Lakers were beaten by the Philadelphia 76ers 115-108 Tuesday night in the fourth and final game of the NBA championship series.

The 7-foot-2 center has led the Lakers to a pair of NBA championships in the past four years. But in the finals this year, he was overshadowed by Moses Malone as the 76ers swept the series.

"Of course I would like to be back," said Abdul-Jabbar, a UCLA All-American who has been a standout during his 14 seasons in the NBA. "But who knows?"

His contract calling for $1.1 million has been fulfilled and his agent, Tom Collins, has said he will ask a two-year contract calling for $2 million annually. That would be close to the amount earned by Malone, who signed a six-year contract with the 76ers before the 1982-83 season.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 28 points Tuesday night. He is the third-leading scorer in NBA playoff history.

Astro-Graph
by bernice bede osol

This coming year you are likely to switch your major objectives several times. In each instance you will make greater demands of your abilities and skills.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you become involved in a competitive situation today, try not to take it or yourself too seriously. Getting uptight will lessen your winning possibilities. Gemini predictions for the year ahead are now ready. Romance, career, luck, earnings travel and much more are discussed. Send $1 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to state your zodiac sign. Send an additional $2 for the NEW Astro-Graph Matchmaker wheel and booklet. Reveals romantic combinations and compatibilities for all signs.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Treat what occurs today as a fresh happening. Letting a grudge from a past experience influence your attitude will work against you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It will prove wise today not to become involved in the business or financial affairs of friends. Also, don't let anyone pry too deeply into yours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Try to avoid companions today who tend to be demanding or domineering. You won't appreciate having others tell you what to do.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) This is not a good day to tackle tasks which you find distasteful. Your heart won't be in your work and you're apt to do a poor job.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Don't gamble on things today where the control is in the hands of others rather than yourself. Unless you can run the show, pass the action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Neither you nor your mate should make important decisions today without first consulting one another. Be sure you're both pulling in the same direction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll get better performances out of subordinates today if you don't constantly look over their shoulders. Keep an eye on things from a distance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Avoid temptations today which could cause you to splurge. There is a possibility you could be looser with your funds than usual.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Make it a point not to air disagreements with family members in front of others today. Domestic relations won't be improved by bringing outsiders into the act.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Unless problems are resolved quickly today, they're likely to compound themselves. Correct mistakes as they occur.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to select fun activities today which won't cause you to spend more than you should. Having a good time could carry a big price tag.

Handicapped theater patrons upset over Gabor incident

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A group of handicapped people, some in tears, abruptly left a dinner theater after entertainer Zsa Zsa Gabor refused to keep performing unless they moved from tables near the stage, according to their escort.

"She made me feel so ashamed," said Beverly Stabler, 44, who suffered brain damage when she was hit by a car 30 years ago. "We can't help that we're in wheelchairs. It's just by the grace of God we have them to get around."

The incident occurred during intermission Tuesday night at the City Line Dinner Theater, where Miss Gabor is starring in the play "Forty Carats," re-creating her Broadway role. The show runs through June 26.

Deborah Missanelli, a direct-care supervisor at the Woods School in suburban Langhorne, said a waiter told her that Miss Gabor had instructed him to move six people in wheelchairs from their seats near the stage to the back of the theater.

"These are all patients who were normal until a certain point in their lives when a car accident left them brain-damaged," Ms. Missanelli said. "They knew what was happening. Women were dressed in formals and the guys wore coats and jackets. It made them feel dignified to go out and see a star, although I wouldn't use that word now to describe her."

Numerous calls to the dinner theater Wednesday failed to reach either the actress or her agent, Robert Hussong of Beverly Hills, Calif. An employee who declined to be identified said he did not know how Miss Gabor or the agent could be reached.

Ms. Missanelli said all 16 people in the group were well-behaved during the performance. Some tend to laugh loudly or a little later than non-handicapped people might, she said.

"But no one laughed at an inappropriate moment," she said. "No one complained, except Miss Gabor."

Police officer fired after investigation

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — An Albuquerque, N.M. police officer has been fired for violating official procedure in connection with the beating and shooting of a Texas man earlier this month, says Police Chief Elroy Hansen.

The decision to fire officer Shirley Ray, a three-year veteran, was reached last week after an Albuquerque Police Department investigation into the May 6 shooting, Hansen said.

The shooting apparently began as a domestic quarrel between the victim and his estranged wife, officers have said.

"This is a very unusual case and I'm not at liberty to comment upon it," Hansen said Tuesday.

"All I'm going to say is that Ray was fired for violating the department's standard operating procedure," he said.

Wesley Braddock of Seminole, Texas, was shot once in the forearm and kicked repeatedly, suffering three broken ribs, officers have said.

Ray, Joseph Arnold Gaschler and Lynn Braddock later turned themselves in to State Police in Albuquerque after giving an oral report of their roles in the incident.

The three have been charged by the Otego County District Attorney's Office in Alamo, N.M., with aggravated assault and aggravated battery.

Police have said Braddock, 35, was going to Texas with his children when Mrs. Braddock asked Gaschler to help her retrieve her children.

Cable company files antitrust suit

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Bexar County Cablevision has filed a $30 million antitrust suit that contends a competitor is trying to "monopolize" the local market by cutting cables and threatening Cablevision's customers.

Wednesday's federal lawsuit seeks an injunction against UA Columbia Cablevision of Texas Inc. and asks for $10 million in actual damages, which would be trebled under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

"Two years ago, I received a direct verbal threat from a UA Columbia executive vice president saying they would 'squash us like a bug' if we didn't limit our market size to the areas we served at the time," said Charles Lowe, Cablevision's vice chairman and general manager. The suit said Lowe refused to discuss the matter "at which time the UA Columbia representative repeated the threat he had made."

UA Columbia General Manager Gil Varela declined Wednesday to respond to specific allegations, saying he had not seen the suit, but he denied his company had done anything wrong. "Our company has been and is operating totally within the law," he said.

Bexar County Cablevision lost a suit filed against UA Columbia last year, which asked a state district judge to uphold exclusive easements Cablevision bought from customers in the unincorporated areas of Bexar County.

"There is some irony developing here," Varela said.

The suit filed Wednesday contends UA Columbia has been trying to run its smaller competitor out of business "with a dangerous probability that such actions will succeed."

"We know — and UA Columbia knows — that two companies cannot profitably serve the same cable market," Lowe said. "Yet, they have made predatory investments in areas where our cable system exists, rather than within their franchised areas where they have no competition. These investment practices are being made specifically to drive us out of business."

Lowe said about 13,000 homes subscribe to Bexar County Cablevision.

About 145,000 homes subscribe to UA Columbia, Varela said.

"We have spent more than three years bringing cable service to the unincorporated areas of Bexar County at a time when UA Columbia ignored this market," Lowe said.
