Deputy says Borger officer may have shot Grandstaff

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS AMARILLO - Borger police officer John Robert Alonzo killed Four Sixes cowboy James Grandstaff, Carson County deputy sheriff Warren Hart testified he was told.

Federal Judge Mary Lou Robinson told jurors hearing a $5 million civil rights lawsuit filed in connection with Grandstaff's death to disregard Hart's testimony naming the ranchhand's alleged killer because the information was based on heresay.

Hart said Texas Ranger Jim Gillespie of Dumas, who headed up the state's official investigation of Grandstaff's shooting death, told him the evidence indicates Alonzo fired the fatal shot that slammed into the cowboy's back early Aug. 11, 1981.

Grandstaff went down in a volley of police gunfire in the pasture in front of his ranch home. Several Borger officers have testified they shot at Grandstaff, but all have denied killing him. The ranch employee was killed by a single. 223 - caliber bullet that cut through several vital organs.

In the second week of the trial here Tuesday, jurors also heard a Borger dispatcher describe police radio transmissions from the time officers began pursuing an armed suspect up until the time police say they mistook Grandstaff for the fugitive and shot him

Borger police dispatcher Gertrude Brucker testified Tuesday that Grandstaff was shot 26 minutes after police began chasing Lonnie Cox, an Oklahoma fugitive, who drove a pickup truck into a pasture on the Four Sixes Ranch where Grandstaff lived and worked.

Mrs. Brucker said on Tuesday that she kept a written log of police radio transmissions during the pursuit of Cox and the shooting of Grandstaff early on the fatal morning. She testified Monday that a tape recorder that was supposed to record the police radio transmissions apparently wasn't working the morning of the tragic events.

Grandstaff drove into the pasture after being awakened by the commotion a few hundreds yards from his house. Officers testified they opened fire on Grandstaff when he got out of his pickup and appeared to be reaching for

Grandstaff's wife, Sharon, filed the lawsuit in federal district court against four Borger police officers, a Hutchinson County sheriff's deputy, the city of Borger and counties of Gray, Carson and Hutchinson

Five Borger police officers present at the pasture when Grandstaff was shot have testified they don't know who killed the family man.

He was handcuffed before officers realized he was the wrong man, officers

Hart was expected to continue testifying when the trial resumed

Borger police officer John Ray testified that he was the first officer to open fire on Grandstaff. Ray said he 'got sick and threw up," when police

Gray County deputies Paul Ortega and Rocky Ferguson disputed Borger officers' earlier testimony that the Pampa officers were on the scene at the time Grandstaff was shot. The Pampa officers testified Tuesday that they arrived at the ranch after the shooting was over. Ortega said he could hear the wounded cowboy "screaming" as he lay handcuffed on the ground. He said he heard former Borger patrolman Mickey Davis yelling at the wounded man to "shut up." Ortega said he did nothing at the time because Grandstaff was not his prisoner. He said he didn't learn until the next day that the wrong man had been shot.

American educator murdered in Beirut

gunmen shot the president of American University of Beirut today near his campus office, killing him with a bullet through the head, authorities said.

About four hours after the assassination of Malcolm Kerr, 52, a Beirut-born American, an anonymous telephone caller told the Beirut office of Agence France-Presse, the French news agency, that "Jihad Islami," or Islamic Holy War, was responsible for the shooting Speaking in Arabic, the caller said Kerr was "a victim of the American military presence in Lebanon,' according to the news agency.

The caller also claimed the group was behind the abduction by gunmen on Tuesday of the Saudi consul in Beirut and said the kidnapped diplomat "is being tried according to Islamic law and we will soon throw out his body.

Islamic Holy War also claimed responsibility for the Oct. 23 suicide truck-bombings that killed 241 American and 58 French troops of the multinational force in Beirut.

Kerr had replaced David S. Dodge, the acting president, who was kidnapped in July 1982. Dodge was held by pro-Iranian extremists in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley and in Iran for a year before being released after Syrian leaders intervened.

A university statement about three hours after the assassination said two gunmen fired and Kerr was hit by two bullets. It said the two attackers 'managed to escape

'The president was taken to the hospital at the university's medical center but his life could not be saved and he was pronounced dead by the hospital," the statement said. State radio quoted Dr. Ahmed Harati, a Lebanese coroner who examined the corpse, as saying Kerr was killed by one 7.15mm pistol bullet that pierced his head at the right temple and exited just above the left ear The caller to Agence France-Presse also said: "We also vow that not a single American or Frenchman will remain on this soil. We will take no different course and shall not waver.

A university source, who asked to be unnamed, said Kerr's secretary and others in the building did not hear the shot but rushed to the scene after hearing Kerr's books, briefcase and umbrella hit the floor

MALCOLM KERR ..Slain university president

Earlier, a university professor, Delwin Roy, of Atlanta, said "one individual" shot Kerr as he was getting out of the elevator to go into his office. An initial radio report said a lone gunman fired a bullet into Kerr's head from a silencer-equipped pistol. University sources said the attack occurred on the third floor of College Hall, one floor above Kerr's office, as the president headed for a meeting of Lebanese army troops and police sealed off all gates of the 73-acre campus in west Beirut's Manara district and of the nearby hospital.

The vice president of the university Samir Thabet, called an emergency meeting of school deans and announced classes were suspended until Monday in mourning for Kerr.

On Tuesday, gunmen with automatic rifles abducted the Saudi Arabian consul from his limousine in west bodyguard. Beirut radio said the kidnappers were trying to sabotage a Saudi-mediated security plan and inflame the Lebanon situation.

The Saudi Embassy said late Tuesday it had received information that the consul, Hussein Abdullah Farrash, 45, was alive. The terse statement did not say how the information was received or whether any terms had been set for his release.

The security plan calls for disengagement of Lebanon's warring factions and extending Lebanese government control in some areas around Beirut.

In Jerusalem, a senior Israeli official told reporters that Prime Minister Yitzak Shamir's government was holding discussions with the major Lebanese factions to try to get the Lebanese security plan approved.

The Israeli government considers the plan crucial to its hopes of pulling back troops occupying southern Lebanon since the June 1982 invasion.

Delays in implementing the plan have been blamed on Walid Jumblatt. the leftist Druse leader. He charged Tuesday that President Amin Gemayel's administration was manipulating the plan "to acquire gains for the Phalange party," an aide

The Druse, a secretive offshoot of Islam, contend Gemayel, a Christian, is aligned with the rightist Phalangists

American University was founded in 1866 by Presbyterian missionaries, but today it is nonsectarian, with Christian and Moslem students. Its campus overlooks the Mediterranean and the ruins of the U.S. Embassy, wrecked by a bomb in April. It is alma mater to many Arab statesmen.

In October 1983, Kerr postponed the start of the fall semester because of a student demonstration. The protesters objected to a new policy that all enrolling students sign a pledge they won't join in political activities on

Temperature drops below zero; more of same expected tonight

Cold weather continued to grip the area today despite clearing skies and sunshine following the storm Tuesday which left three inches of new snow on the ground in Pampa. Temperatures dropped below zero again for the first time since the first week of the month.

The low this morning hit three degrees below zero, about 10 degrees below the originally forecast low of seven degrees. Temperatures remained below 10 late this morning. with a high today predicted for around 9 degrees

Yesterday's high was 19, ten degrees below Monday's high.

Tuesday's snow added to already hazardous driving conditions with icy and snow-packed roads, with travelers advisories issued for the Panhandle area. The system covered most of the Panhandle and South Plains region, with snow, freezing rain and fog creating problems for motorists.

Yesterday's snowfall left four inches of snow on the ground. An additional 22 inch of moisture was added to the year's total.

Cloudy skies are expected to return to the area, with a slight chance for up to an additional one-inch acccumulation of snow tonight and tomorrow.

Overnight low is forecast for near zero again tonight, with the high Thursday reaching only into the mid-teens. Winds will be northeasterly at 10-20 miles an hour.

Toma: Love licks drug abuse

Former detective says 80 percent of students here 'do drugs'

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Parents were urged to "get back to the basics' of developing and expressing family love and unity as the major means of combatting drug and alcohol problems among students by ex-policeman David Toma during a public meeting Tuesday night at M. K. Brown Auditorium Toma, whose life and experiences as policeman and detective in New Jersey were the basis for television series "Toma" and "Baretta," told the more than capacity crowd that parental influence, especially that of the mother, is a major factor in keeping students from using drugs and alcohol or in getting them off once they were on.

'You can't live without being touched," he said, urging parents to show love and affection with physical touching as a means of developing family unity.

He also said communication is essential in helping children understand the dangers of drugs and alcohol, saying parents need to speak openly and to become aware of what their children are doing. Parents should be able to speak with knowledge about such matters instead of just offering uninformed opinions.

"We've got to change the attitudes of people" to begin combatting drug and alcohol abuse. Toma said at the meeting sponsored by the Pampa Drug and Alcohol Abuse Task Force. He said attitudes need to be changed among parents, administrators and politicians so they will be aware of the extent of the problems and the means of helping students to develop more security for themselves so they will avoid turning to drugs and alcohol.

"We've got to get the meaning of God back to the schools," he stated.

Parents and teachers also need to develop and express true caring for the students, letting students know they are

"I can't tell you what a mess your town is in. It's a mess," Toma claimed, saying too many people are really unaware of the extent of drug usage in the city. He claimed "eighty percent of all those kids do drugs," saying this was the lowest estimate given him by students during sessions at Pampa High School yesterday. He said this is about the same figures he has found in talks with students in all 50 states.

(This contradicts recent government and private studies among students which indicated use of drugs has declined since 1980, with less than 50 percent now saying they use drugs.)

People in Pampa "think it's all rosy here." Toma said. Most people have no idea of what their children are doing, he said, claiming drug and alcohol use is prevalent even among elementary students. He said students here were telling him "parents and teachers are dumb" because they cannot even recognize drug use among their own children and students.

He said the best means of combatting drug use is education, both for students and for adults such as parents and teachers

Toma emphasized the use and effects of marijuana, claiming it is the most widespread among drugs used by students. He said there are 61 cannaboids, chemicals found only in marijuana, with 421 total chemicals found in the substance.

The major chemical is THC, which provides the high. "Take away THC and you won't get high on pot," he said All the other chemicals "are poisons, affecting the brain, eyes, body tissues and other parts of the body, he said.

Among the effects of regular marijuana use are decreased attention and lack of concentration, loss of memory, and periods of infertility among both men and women, he said Pot use can also create mutations in unborn children, he said. THC is fat soluble and concentrates in fatty tissues, such as the heart, liver and marijuana use showing up among students include temporary blindness and periods of numbness in parts of the body. These happen from the poisons in pot which cause "a short circuit of the brain" affecting operations of the body. he said.

These problems have too often been ignored by doctors and psychiatrists. he claimed, who treat such symptoms unaware of their real cause. They fail to ask their patients if they are using marijuana. Toma said.

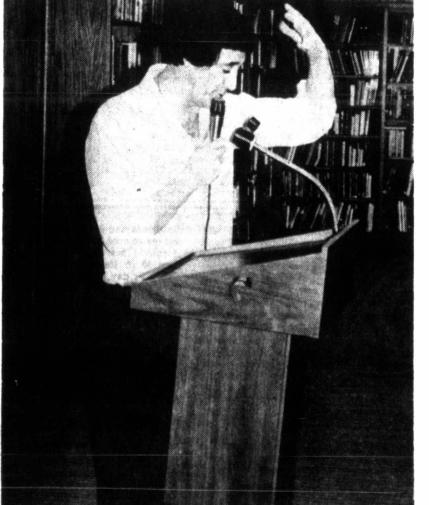

Problems also arise because of the variances among marijuana itself. depending upon conditions of its growth, with some forms being stronger than others.

Dangers are also faced from pot use because of dealers misrepresenting its effects or providing tampered and fake pot. Among these are the selling of pot sprayed with insecticides, the use of parsley leaves mixed with rat poison and pot laced with PCP (angel dust), which can have very extreme psychological effects.

The selling of various pills also involves dangers, with instances of pills being dipped in Drano or embalming fluid, he said

The number one killer among teenagers is alcohol use, Toma said,

Gromyko charges U.S. addicted to militarism

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko denounced the U.S. military buildup as a "pathological obsession" in a bitter speech today shortly before his meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Addressing the East-West conference on European security, Gromyko said it was up to the international community to stop U.S. militarism, which he likened to a drug addiction in which the addict needs greater and greater doses to survive.

Later in the day, Gromyo was to meet Shultz at the Soviet Embassy in Stockholm - the first high-level contact between the superpowers in four months.

In his speech, Gromyko attacked the Reagan administration for its military budget increases.

"New missiles, bombers and aircraft carriers are being churned out in a kind of pathological obsession. New means of mass destruction are being charged.

He called the U.S.-led invasion of the Caribbean island of Grenada in October "a piratical act of terrorism" and "a challenge to the entire world." Gromyko demanded: "The U.S. must withdraw its troops from Grenada.' After scathing attacks on U.S. policies in Lebanon and Central America, Gromyko added: "The main threat to peace is the aggressive foreign policy of the United States." On Tuesday, Shultz said he would try to convince his Soviet colleague in their meeting that the United States wants better relations. Gromyko gave no indication that the Soviets are ready to return to the nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva, which they abandoned on Nov. 23 after NATO began deployment of U.S.-built missiles in Western Europe.

"Should the United States and the other NATO countries display readiness to return to the situation that existed before the commencement of the deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe, then the Soviet Union will also be prepared to do likewise."

On Tuesday, Reagan administration sources said Shultz would suggest to Gromyko that U.S.-Soviet arms control talks resume on some level even if formal negotiations remain stalled. The last meeting between Shultz and Gromyko was Sept. 8 at the U.S. Embassy in Madrid, Spain. Shultz cut that stormy encounter short after Gromyko refused to admit Soviet wrongdoing in shooting down a South Korean jetliner with 269 people aboard. Both men are in Stockholm for the conference on European security, which opened Tuesday "We (the United States) approach the meeting in a constructive spirit," Shultz said of today's meeting. "Our agenda is a broad one ... and we hope for a constructive response.'

Winter is aggravating hunger problems

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) - Frigid weather early this winter has severely aggravated problems of hunger in the Brazos Valley, where more than a quarter of the people live in poverty, witnesses told a state Senate committee.

"In the winter we've had this year, there has to be a choice between paying the gas bill or stretching your food," Deborah Chapman told members of the Senate Interim Committee on Hunger and Nutrition

"Naturally, you pay the gas bill and add water to the soup — if you have soup." Mrs. Chapman

The panel, which held two similar meetings in Houston, heard testimony from Bryan-College Station area residents at a gathering on the Texas A&M University campus.

Senators Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, and John Whitmire, D-Houston, heard repeated tales of shrinking resources and worsening problems from social workers, program administrators and private providers.

Among those addressing the panel was Dr. Anne Shively, director of the Bryan area's mental health and mental retardation center, who told the senators that 26 percent of the Brazos Valley's population lives at or below federally established Nobel Prize winner Dr. Norman Borlaug, a distinguished professor of international agriculture at Texas A&M, told the panel that in 50 or 60 years, the world's population and demand for food will "I would like to urge that we not lose track of the

Dale Marsico, executive director of the Brazos Valley Community Action Program who testified before the committee as a private citizen, said he is worried that states will take federal block grants because of their difficulties in administering the food stamp program.

The problem with block grants is that there is no money behind them, he said, and it also would decrease the federal government's commitment to programs dealing with hunger

Marsico said Texas should follow Mississippi's lead in requesting a two-year moratorium on changes in regulations governing the program.

Unless there is some kind of moratorium the program will eventually cease to function," he said. Personally, I was trying to follow the changes in food stamp regulations (over the last couple of years). I'd probably need four law degrees to figure out which regulations are currently in effect.

convention city without night life

And fast-paced entertainment in Galveston, he says, is just about all gone. It was better in the 1940s and 1950s, said Kirk, when Galveston was a haven for a thriving illegal gambling industry. People came from all over the state, the hotels and motels were filled, and restaurants did well.

"Now, we don't have a tourist industry any more. After the summer months, it's dead," he said. "You could shoot a cannon through here and not hit a soul. After summer, you might as well forget it."

Gambling, claims Kirk, would change all of that. "It would bring in jobs and tax relief," said the night club owner. Kirk said a beachfront lined with casinos would bring in enough new income to repair Galveston's aging streets, sewers and water system. It could also bring in more crime, he admits, "but we'll have the dollars to put more police on the street.

Kirk, a band leader, even cut a record of the campaign anthem for gambling in Galveston. The song has enjoyed fame, of a sorts, on local radio

'Galveston, it's up to you We all know what we've got to do. Casino gambling is the thing we need."

"Galveston," says Kirk, "has all the opportunity in the world to be bigger than Atlantic City." That's what Mahan and the anti-gambling forces are worried about.

Gambling in Atlantic City, N.J., where legal casinos opened after a 1976 referendum, has brought billions of dollars into New Jersey. But Mahan said it has also brought a 300 percent increase in crime and an invasion by organized crime. And he's worried that the same thing could happen in Galveston..

"If we legalize gambling, we'll get that kind of undesirable element," he said. He painted a picture of the grim underside of legalized gambling: more violent crimes, more prostitution, a rise in property values that would chase out retired residents and small businesses, and an atmosphere that would discourage industry and professional talent from

Even the millions that would be brought in by gambling, he said, isn't worth all that.

'We have an economic recovery under way now and we would hate to see that jeopardized," said Mahan. He said Kirk's picture of Galveston is inaccurate: the island city is not a dying resort that desperately needs gambling to survive

We have industries now — the medical school, the port, tourism - and we don't need gambling."

Farmworkers win second round

AUSTIN (AP) - Texas said farmworkers have won a second round in their fight to win coverage under the state's Workers Compensation Act, but their battle is not over. A trial set for Feb. 21 will decide the issue on its merits.

In the meantime, State District Judge Harley Clark extended a court order Tuesday prohibiting the Industrial Accident Board from rejecting any on-the-job injury claims from farmworkers.

Attorney Jim Harrington of Austin, who represents 10 farmworkers in their suit against the state and the Industrial Accident Board, applauded Clark's order. "It's the only decent, humane thing to do," he said.

Bill Barbisch, an assistant attorney general said no one would be hurt, including farm and ranch workers, even if there were no court order against the Industrial Accident Board.

"The Industrial Accident Board will keep on doing what it does now," Barbisch said:

Farmworkers, joined by the United Farm Workers of the AFL-CIO in the suit, say the exclusion of farm and ranch workers from benefits of the Workers Compensation Act is unconstitutional on grounds it strikes mostly at farmworkers, who are mostly Clark said he decided Tuesday to grant the temporary injunction, which replaces a restraining order issued Jan. 9, largely on the testimony of Tony Korioth, a workers compensation law specialist and former accident board member.

Korioth testified that if excluding farm and ranch workers is declared unconsitutional, farm and ranch workers would automatically be covered — assuming their employer has insurance on any of his other workers.

Many firms in the Rio Grande Valley carry insurance on workers in their packing sheds and canning factories but not on their workers in the fields.

Does Wall Street really want taxes?

Advocates of higher taxes sometimes trot out the implication that "Wall Street" or the "financial community" is so upset about the size of the deficit that it wants to pay (and have the rest of us pay) higher taxes to keep the recovery recovering. It's a curious argument, but there are people in investment firms who can be depended on to recite the higher-tax litany at appropriate moments

Whether such media-annointed spokesmen represent a consensus of the financial community is. of course, irrelevant to whether the prescription is sound. To adopt a policy on the basis of whether prominent spokesmen or authorities endorse it is to abdicate independent thought; it is perhaps akin to buying a razor or comera because and athlete or actor recommends it.

Nonetheless, it is useful to know the attitudes of a more representative sample of wall street executives about national economic policy. The clamor for higher taxes will continue, and it's likely that some advocates will imply that "Wall Street" wants higher taxes.

The American Stock Exchange recently commissioned a survey of investment executives and CEO's of AMEX-listed companies. The results are interesting.

Reagan's handling of the economy got strong approval (89 percent). Most financial executives (95) percent believe the economy has improved in the last year, and a majority (79 percent) think it will get better in the coming year. They are concerned about deficits, to be sure. Asked what is the single most important economic problem the administration will face. 52 percent named budget deficits, followed by 14 percent naming high interest rates, 11 percent unemployment, 8 percent government spending and 7 percent inflation. When asked about means to reduce the deficit, however, the solution most favored was to reduce federal spending (35 percent) followed by improving the Federal Reserve System (20 percen) and a combination of reduced spending and increased taxes (13 percent) and reduced defense spending (10 percent). When asked specifically, 68 percent of the executives did favor reducing defense spending; 70 percent favored reducing "entitlement programs" more than President Reagan has done. The executives were not asked if they favored reductions in "corporate welfare" like the Export-Import Bank, International Monetary Fund, World Bank, International Development Association, farm subsidies or the marketing aspects of the census. One should not take such a poll too seriously. The same group, polled in March of 1982, predicted that unemployment and corporate profits would get worse in the following year.

One thing is for sure from this poll. While some Wall Street magnificoes may favor higher taxes as a first resort, they are a distinct minority. It might be healthy to remember that the next time some tax advocate implies that "Wall Street" is hungering for higher taxes.

Media-military war heats up

NEW YORK (NEA) - The debate over the media's coverage of American military operations is heating up, and the media will be surprised to learn that there are very definitely two sides to the question. The latest well - known figure to wade into the fray is Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, a former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff who served as our ambassador to South Vietnam in 1964 and 1965.

In an interview with the New York Times, Gen Taylor - now a spry 82 and appropriately equipped with frank opinions—listed as one of the three major lessons of the Vietnam War the proposition that "you should never let TV on the battlefield." In the case of Vietnam, he said, television "brought the war into the living rooms, highly damaging the national morale and the support for the war."

The media's response to that isn't hard to imagine. A television camera is, after all, a morally neutral piece of equipment: It can only transmit or record what is there to be seen. If the American people don't like what they see on their TV screens, why shouldn't they have a right to bring it to a halt?

To which Gen. Taylor would presumably respond by pointing out that, while a television camera may be morally neutral, television cameramen often aren't. As he said to the Times, "In World War II the press was admirable because they felt they were American citizens and that their country was sacred. In Vietnam there was the feeling on the part of some of the press that their task was to destroy the American command and work against what was being

(or his field producer, not to mention the editors back home) feels about a particular war is going to influence what his camera transmits or records, and what appears on TV screens across America. In the course of protesting the media's exclusion from the Grenada operation the Times itself actually reprinted the famous World War II still photo of U.S. soldiers raising Old Glory atop Iowa Jima's Mount Suribachi - the suggestion being that this was the sort of uplifting reportage America would be denying itself if it excluded reporters and photographers from future battlefields. But that isn't quite what the media have actually been delivering lately

Not long ago one of the TV networks -apparently with Syrian cooperation - treated its audience to a look at the results of some recent U.S. military operations. First there were some dramatic close - ups of the twisted wreckage of Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr.'s plane, downed by Syrian anti - aircraft missiles while on a reconnaissance mission over Lebanon. Then we were treated to shots of an American correspondent walking through a crater left by one of the 16 - inch shells fired at Syrian positions by the battleship New Jersey. According to U.S. government reports, 11 such shells were fired that day, and you can be sure the Syrians didn't invite American television to notograph the damage done by the ones that hit their targets. But this one landed harmlessly in a field, and the newsman's commentary, as he strolled along tossing shell fragments aside, as he strolled the futility (or worse) of the whole U.S. effort in

But, as the Times thereupon asked Gen. Taylor, what then ought to be the role of the press during a military conflict?

"Reporting what they see," he replied but then went on: "And in most cases it should take some clearance from senior people that that information (is) not damaging to the waging of the war in that

I believe strongly that people have a right to know what their forces are doing - but not today, tomorrow, but at the appropriate time. When they get the information in a block, they might well know what to do with it. But when they get it piecemeal, there's

And precisely who, the Times wanted to know, decides the right time for the press to make its reports?

"It should be the president of the U.S., directly or indirectly. He is paid for that. If he has acted wrong, the voters are certainly going to get after him. The press certainly ought to be willing to delay getting his throat until it's done by the people, and not try to cut his throat themselves.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 18, the 18th day of 1984. There are 348 days left in the year. Today's highlight in history: On Jan. 18, 1919, the World War I peace conference opened in Versailles, France. On this date:

In 1778, English explorer James Cook discovered the Hawaiian Islands.

In 1782, lawyer and statesman Daniel Webster was born in Salisbury, N.H.
In 1862, the 10th president of the United States, John Tyler, died at the age of 71, 17 years after leaving office.
In 1968, the United States and the Soviet Union agreed on a draft treaty to control nuclear weapons.

And also in 1968, in a White House confrontation, singer Eartha Kitt told Lady Bird Johnson that American youth was in rebellion because of the Vietnam War.

Ten years ago: Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said they would press Syria to enter into disengagement talks with Israel. Five years ago: Iranian Prime Minister

Shahpour Bakhtiar sent a representative to France to plead with the exiled Ayatollah Khomeini to give the new Iranian government a chance. One year ago: The United Nations Security Council voted to extend the life of the U.N. peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon for another six months. Today's birthdays: Actor Cary Grant is 80 years old. Actor Danny Kaye is 71. And former heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali is 42.

Potomac tape bug strikes again The news that Charles Z. Wick the director of the U.S. Information Agency, was taping the telephone conversations of everyone from U.S. senators (Mark Hatfield) to movie stars (Kirk Douglas to his most intimate friends (Walter Annenbert), without their knowledge, has left everyone in Washington with an uncomfortable feeling.

It's all right to read another person's mail (we do it all the time), but it is still considered bad manners to turn on a Dictaphone when your phone rings.

After Watergate it's also considered very,

"What the hell got into Wick?" I asked one of my pals at the USIA.
"He caught the Potomac Tape Bug," the friend explained. "I've seen it happen time and time again. A guy comes to Washington to do a job, and slowly paranoia sets in. He's afraid something he says on the phone may be misinterpreted, so he decides to tape the conversations so he can refer to the transcripts in case someone takes something he said out of context. At the beginning he only pushes the record button when he's talking to the press."

"Is that fair?"

"The government will never object to you recording conversations with the press," my friend said. "Especially when you have to assume the press is recording its conversation with you. But when you start down that secret taping road it's hard to stop. The Dictaphone is there and pretty soon you automatically turn it on when you're talking to a subordinate on business. It is very helpful when you're making out his or her fitness report.

'So far the official is keeping his secret taping within the bureaucratic ballpark," I

"Now this is where the guy goes off the track. He figures if he can tape his subordinates without their knowledge, there is no reason why he can't tape his equals in other departments of the government without telling them. Pretty soon he has a stack of taped conversations with White House staff, Cabinet members, senators and leading citizens in the country

'They could have historical value," I said.

'That's what the official talks himself into believing every time he turns the machine on. No longer is he taping to refresh his memory, but he decides he's doing it for future generations of Americans who want to know how he arrived at so many momentous decisions

"I can understand a person wanting to secretly tape his official calls. But why would he record his conversations with friends?"

"Couldn't he tell his friends that he was recording the telephone call?"

"If he did he wouldn't have friends for very long. How would you like to tell Walter Annenberg he was being taped?"
"I wouldn't have the heart," I said.
"The worst thing about having the

Deregulation not always good

The biggest change that Americans may experience in 1984 is in telephone service. The new year brings the split-up of American Telephone & Telegraph from its local operating units. The changeover to a different system may produce a lot of public unhappiness.

For as long as this writer can remember, Ma Bell has provided the finest telephone service in the world. One could use a coin phone in a hamlet and quickly reach out and contact someone across the country or halfway across the world. This not the case in most countries. Even in the advanced countries of Western Europe, placing a long distance call can be a nightmare.

Then why has Ma Bell been treated this way? Who is unhappy? Well, Ma Bell was a victim of its success. It grew to a size that aroused the ire of those who regard bigness as a social crime. Liberals don't like bigness. Let's see how they like a fragmented telephone system. And purist conservative advocates of deregulation also wanted the breakup. They too may be very unhappy with the results. Various press reports suggest that grand confusion lies ahead. These who have telephones in their homes may find that they will receive not one but several bills each month for different services. They will have to pick and choose among the services, though they may lack the rates. On the contrary, there is general agreement that the cost of phone service will rise for most users. The increases are likely to be substantial. Already there are demands that public agencies step in and provide subsidies for citizens with low incomes.

And what happens when one's phone goes dead? No longer will one be able to contact the phone company and get a repairman in short order. The trouble may be in a ong distance line, and the person to contact about phone trouble may be in a city hundreds of miles away. Syndicated columnist Jack Kilpatrick recently told a horror story about his phone trouble in Woodville, Va., and his discussions with a repair center in Baltimore,

How much better off we would be if in 1981 a federal court had accepted AT&T's motion to dismiss the antitrust suit that led to the breakup.

The impending problem with phone service in this country is reminder of the peril in ideology, whether liberal or conservative. A real conservative, to be sure, operates not on the basis of ideology but of leaving well enough alone. Or, to quote Bert Lance, with his homespun humor, "Don't fix it if it ain't broke." And phone service under Ma Bell definitely wasn't out of order. It was a wonder.

A measure of deregulation makes good sense, as in the case of the railroads, but it isn't applicable everywhere. . When the phone bills soar in 1984 and repairs prove difficult, the American people will have occasion to think about the real cost of ideology.

Co. contends in a suit to stop the merger.

The antitrust lawsuit, filed Tuesday in a Tulsa, Okla federal court, says the $9.89 billion merger is likely to touch off a wave of purchases as large companies "scramble to acquire new reserves by acquiring their competitors rather than by Pennzoil released copies of its suit in Houston, its home base. The 32nd-largest petroleum company in the United States offered Getty stockholders $110 a share in an attempt to buy 43 percent of that firm.

Pennzoil announced it had reached an agreement with Getty for a $2.6 billion deal Jan. 4. The purchase was to result in a private company owned by Pennzoil and Getty. But Getty backed out three days later, announcing that Texaco had offered $125 a share to buy out the company. The deal would make Texaco the world's second-largest energy corporation, behind only the Exxon Corp. Pennzoil labeled Texaco's merger bid a "ruthless and predatory use of sheer financial power."

"If Getty goes to Texaco, there would be only a handful of medium-sized companies left to be acquired by the big six or seven," Pennzoil said. "This would lead to increased concentration in the oil and gas industry and, equally important, create a major disincentive to the development of new petroleum reserves by exploration which is contrary to officials at Texaco and Getty were confident the suit would not threaten the merger

Texaco feels that there is no substance to the Pennzoil claims," spokesman Foster Morgan said, insisting the proposed merger meets antitrust guidelines. "The Pennzoil action appears to be no more than an additional tactic to delay Texaco's implementation of its signed contracts to purchase

At Getty, spokesman Jack Leone said the firm is confident of no major antitrust problems related to the proposed merger.

"Appropriate filings have been submitted to the Federal Trade Commission and Getty believes the federal procedures governing antitrust matters provide the proper forum for settling any antitrust questions," Leone said. "The company has not yet received the court papers so we cannot address the specifics of Pennzoil's charges. Tuesday's action is the second lawsuit filed by Pennzoil in the Getty-Texaco deal. Last week, the Houston company filed suit in Delaware, where all three firms are incorporated, asking a court there to force Getty to live up to terms of its deal with Pennzoil.

In the latest suit, Pennzoil said while its deal with Getty would have "procompetitive results," the Texaco-Getty merger would eliminate any competition between the two, eliminate Getty as an independent competitor in the industry

Archeologists discover ancient Indian camp

INGLESIDE, Texas (AP) - An ancient Indian encampment found on the site of a proposed 3,000-acre private industrial complex is expected to further delay construction of the project.

U.S. Army Corp of Engineers archeologists discovered the encampment at the proposed site of Baker's Port, an industrial complex and dry-dock for deep-sea oil rigs, which has been delayed for over two years for lack of a government construction permit.

The government maintains a permit is necessary because the site is on federally protected wetlands.

"I'm flabbergasted," Larry Baker Jr. of Baker Marine, developer of Baker's Port, told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "I didn't know I had this one to fight."

Baker has seid his firm is losing nearly $20,000 on a $42

Baker has said his firm is losing nearly $20,000 on a $42 million land investment for every day the project is delayed. Baker estimates that, once completed, the complex will provide 5,000 full-time jobs.

The Indian encampment was discovered Nov. 10 by Dr. Olin McCormick, staff archeologist for Coastal Ecosystems Management Inc. of Fort Worth. The archeological exploration was part of the lengthy government construction Corps of Engineers staff archeologist Carolyn Good said that while no human remains were found at the site, there was sufficient evidence of an encampment to warrant its entry on the National Registry of Historic Places.

That decision was confirmed by federal authorities Jan. 4 and means the site must be archeologically excavated by the U.S. Department of the Interior.

She said the excavation "shouldn't take an exorbitant amount of time," but will further delay construction of

The encampment is classified as an "archaic site," which means it dates from before 1200 A.D., said Mrs. Good.
"But it dates considerably before that," she said. "It's probably B.C. (before Christ)," she said.
She said artifacts found at the site included "food remains and a lesse number of couch shells made into tools," and were "The people who used the campsite were hunters and atherers similar to the Kalahari Bushmen of South and Central Africa and the Aborigines of Central Australia," Ms. Good said. "As hunters and gathers, they had no permanent settlement."

Briefing papers hearing is cancelled

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee chairman, saying he wants to avoid "part an bickering and a media extravaganza" in a presid...tial election year, today indefinitely postponed hearings into how Carter administration documents reached President Reagan's 1980

The hearings, which were rejected to bring top-ranking Reagan administration office. Capitol Hill to testify under oath, had been scheduled to begin Jan. 26.

Civil Rights panel is changed in both style and substance

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first meeting of the new U.S. Commission on Civil Rights spotlighted bitterness and showed that the panel that searches out discrimination in America differs from its predecessor in both style and substance.

For two days the commission bickered over the civil rights agenda of the nation. Its members not only disagreed, but became disagreeable The commission forged new policies that looked at affirmative action quotas as evils, not remedies, and viewed Reagan administration budget cuts as policy disputes, not civil rights problems. And when the meeting ended the commission held an extraordinary, no-holds-barred news conference during which several members took turns assailing each other. The commission met at a motel in Hunt Valley, Md., for what was once scheduled as a quiet retreat at which the 1984 program would be adopted.

But commission members realized they could not escape the public glare once the makeup of the new panel became the focus of a rancorous battle between President Reagan on the one hand, and civil rights groups and congressional liberals on

The eight-member commission, with the majority favoring White House policies, contains four members appointed by the president and four by Congress. The former six-member commission, which expired last year after its congressional authorization ran out, had six presidential appointees

For years the old panel was harmonious and united in giving itself the broadest possible authority to aid women and minorities who suffered discrimination.

Perhaps nothing demonstrates the change from the old to the new more than two members who served on both commissions — Mary Frances Berry and Clarence M. Pendleton, the current chairman who also headed the former panel in its final months.

Ms. Berry went from a majority member of the old commission to an outspoken but out-voted commissioner on the new panel.

She told a news conference that the new commission has "in effect been taken over by people who came to the commission with views already set in concrete who pretend to have open minds, but in fact have closed minds. Pendleton, who was a dissenting minority voice on the old panel, now rules the new commission He told the news conference that the new majority took over only after a "bitter fight" during which "I got beat up." But, he added, "the fight was one that we won. Now we're here."

The new majority is here, indeed, and in two days at Hunt

Valley it set in motion a program that the old commission would hardly recognize. The commission decided that use of quotas to hire and promote victims of past discrimination "constitute another form of unjustified discrimination" and should be abolished. The old commission, in a 1981 statement, supported the concept of quotas in a report entitled, "Affirmative Action in the 1980s: Dismantling the Process of Discrimination."

The new panel decided that budget cuts in social programs were a question of social policy, not of discrimination

The district attorney told the jury panel the case will include testimony from 25 to 30 scientists, including "a span of all kinds of doctors

The prosecution case could hinge on a Swedish scientist's new test to detect the drug Ms. Jones is accused of having injected into the child. Sutton said the expert testimony will include "words you and I are not accustomed to."

The case was moved here from Kerrville because of extensive publicity about the McClellan death and several other charges against Ms. Jones

Judge wants airline to settle strike

HOUSTON (AP) federal bankruptcy judge has ruled that Continental Airlines filed for reorganization to keep its planes flying while it caught its financial breath and not, as striking workers contend, to break union contracts.

But U.S. Bankruptcy Judge R.F. Wheless also ordered the airline Tuesday to devise a definitive proposal for settlement of strikes by the pilots, flight attendants and machinists

The ruling rejected arguments that Continental was trying to break union contracts by claiming it was going broke and it allows the airline to remain protect from creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy

"One of the purposes of the bankruptcy code is to give a business an opportunity to catch its financial breath, propose a plan to reorganize and to thereby allow it an opportunity to cure its inancial ills and continue in business. No small part of this purpose is to preserve jobs." Wheless said in the 12-page opinion.

James Linsey, an attorney for the Air Line Pilots Association, said the union was disappointed and would motion but he seemed to say that the company was obligated to come up with a new proposal. The ball is in the company's Linsey said. "We have said before that we were willing to make concessions in order to return the company to profitability.

from the bargaining table. Barry Simon, vice president and general counsel Continental said the airline is "always willing" to negotiate Wheless said that "all parties must be prepared to certify that all settlement negotiations have been exhausted" on Jan. 30, the date scheduled for a hearing on efforts to overturn union contracts.

In his ruling, the judge said Continental filed for reorganization in September only after its management felt it had "no acceptable alternative if it were to have a

"Had the airline not filed its Chapter 11 proceeding when it did, it would not have been flying for very much longer, its 6,000 employees would now be out of a job or working elsewhere and its ability to reorganize would have been further seriously impaired." the opinion said.

Phil Bakes said the ruling was a "clear sign that we did what we had to do to save Continental.

The court has stated that Continental acted in good faith in order to preserve jobs and provide a viable future for the airline and its employees," Bakes said.

Continental filed for reorganization on Sept. 24. It shut for three days, then resumed flights on a severely reduced schedule, using only about one-third of its 12,000 employees. Those workers, in turn, put in longer hours for about half their previous pay. Pilots and flight attendants went on strike a week later. joining striking machinists.

The unions have argued that Continental, once the nation's eighth-largest carrier, filed for protection Sept. 24 as part of a scheme planned months ahead of time to void union contracts

After exciting debate, Glenn loses audience

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG AP Political Writer

CLAREMONT, N.H. (AP) - Only 15 hours after he and Walter Mondale shouted at each other at Dartmouth College, Sen. John Glenn was in Stevens High School losing the attention of his youthful audience.

It was in marked contrast to the excitement generated the night before and it highlighted a continuing problem for Glenn's campaign.

That contrast also symbolized an inherent conflict within the process, the competing demands on candidates to generate excitement while offering detailed policy programs.

The campaign process demands that candidates have flair and generate excitement. That's not necessarily a quality required of presidents.

At Stevens High, the students began to squirm about 15 minutes after Glenn started speaking.

It was the anniversary of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birth and Glenn used the occasion to talk about civil

He recalled the 1963 demonstration in Washington when King stood before the Lincoln Memorial and roused millions of Americans by telling them, "I have a dream

It was an unusually powerfully delivered address. Glenn's audience was surely too young to remember King's remarks, and the candidate recited a couple of lines from that speech, seeming to lose the passion and the power in his translation.

Glenn's problem was not substance, it was style.

He rarely stirs an audience with his oratory. On the 1984 campaign trail, some of his speeches seem reminiscent of the keynote speech he delivered at the Democratic National Convention in 1976. Glenn was on Jimmy Carter's list of prospective vice presidential nominees that year and the keynote role offered an opportunity to display wares that might have enhanced his prospects. It didn't go well. The convention crowd, ready to be stirred, wound up talking among themselves. Carter chose Mondale as his running

When a student at Stevens High asked the senator about his support of the B-1 bomber and of his vote for President Reagan's economic program, Glenn's answer ran 10 minutes. He gave the audience more than most of them wanted to know

The contrast between Glenn's attack on Mondale during the debate and his speech to the students the next morning raised the question of whether candidates should lose points for dullness.

Either way, there is no question Glenn is capable of excitement

When Glenn looked at Mondale on Sunday and accused the former vice president of using the "same vague gobbledygook," the place lit up. retorted Mondale. 'Baloney,

People all over America snapped awake as the two would-be presidents went at each other

Now definitely is the wrong time for us to withdraw from UNESCO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Any day soon Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, the agency's Senegalese director general, will be sending forth teams of experts from UNESCO's concrete and glass headquarters in Paris to deal with our Third Worldly problems of trains that don't run, buses that break down, hotels without heat or hot water and chaotic traffic compounded to the point of utter madness by traffic

Battle over video recorders goes from court to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) -The focus now shifts to Congress in the big-stakes battle to decide whether millions of Americans may have to pay extra to use increasingly popular home video recorders to tape television shows.

The motion picture industry, which suffered a setback Tuesday before the Supreme Court, is expected to look to Congress for help in obtaining a share of the profits from the billion dollar home video recorder industry.

If the movie studios are ultimately successful, it could mean a stiff royalty that would be passed on to consumers as a tax on video recorders and blank tapes.

But meanwhile, the Supreme Court, by a 5-4 vote, ruled that the sale and use of home video recorders to tape TV shows for later, private viewing is legal.

Some members of Congress expressed doubt that federal copyright law will be amended to benefit the movie

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., chairman of a House Judiciary subcommittee that is looking into the matter. said he doubts Congress will penalize viewers for taping television shows.

programs, Edwards said. The court said recorder manufacturers may not be held responsible for possible illegal use of the video recorders, such as taping copyright productions for commercial profit.

Justice John Paul Stevens. in his opinion for the court, wrote that there is another remedy for this so-called 'armchair piracy.

Stevens noted that anyone who reproduces copyright material for private financial gain can be sentenced to one year in prison and fined $25,000 for the first violation. The penalty is two years and $50,000 for repeat offenders.

1984 brings a new corporation

With the coming of the new year, Southwestern Bell has a new beginning. The operating company that was once part of the Bell System has become a stand-alone entity, Southwestern Bell Corporation, or SBC as it appears on the New York Stock Exchange.

Southwestern Bell Telephone is just one of four companies within Southwestern Bell Corporation. Southwestern Bell Telephone will continue to provide:

· Installation, maintenance and repair of local telephone lines

· Local telephone service

· White Pages directories Custom Calling Services

· Monthly billing statements, which will include invoices for SWBell Telephone, AT&T Communications long distance, AT&T Information Systems and possibly other companies

· Long distance within Service Areas

· Public telephones · Directory Assistance

• CO Centrex and ESSX-30 Southwestern Bell Telecom will provide terminal equipment and modems for business customers and also sell residence telephone sets.

Southwestern Bell Publishing will handle Yellow Pages directories and other services.

And, Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems will handle cellular mobile phone service.

Each of the four companies of Southwestern Bell Corporation will exist separately and apart from each other. In fact, one or more of the subsidiaries will form their own subsidiaries to enter other competitive fields.

Directory deliveries

You may have wondered how you will receive telephone directories during 1984

If you are a new customer, or a customer transferring service from one area code to another. your directory will be delivered to you once you order your telephone service from Southwestern Bell Telephone.

You will be provided with the directory in which your name is listed. If you want copies of other city directories, you may order these for a fee through your local telephone business

Modular jacks

Today, most houses and apartments are equipped with modular phone jacks. When you move, there is usually no need to take your modular jacks with you. Removing these jacks can damage telephone wires connected to the jacks.

Snails become dinner treat

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) - To most Californians, snails are a darn nuisance. To Ralph W Tucker, they are a meal ticket.

The 66 - year - old retired insurance agent raises escargots for gourmet dining, but once considered the soft-shelled mollusks an aggravation, too.

That was until he paid $12.50 for a dozen escargots at dinner with his wife, Christine, at a Hawaian restaurant 21/2 years ago.

" 'That does it,' I said to Christine." The Fresno resident vowed, "I'll never kill another snail. We'll eat

Tucker contacted a snail grower in Santa Rosa and set up a mini - ranch in his back yard using garden variety pests that had infiltrated his regetable patch.

There's not much information on raising snails but plenty on doing them in.' he said. "I never have used pesticides, so we started the snail business with a clean bill of health.'

His cultivation equipment consists of three growing chambers - halves of oaken barrels filled with rich organic soil and covered with window screening.

One is a snail nursery, the second is for growing adults and the third is a fasting room for snails about to become an edible delicacy.

"What with all the good cornmeal, wheat bran and broccoli and parsnips tops in the feeding barrel, those happy snails can't crawl out of the garden fast enough," Tucker said. "There's not a snail in my vegetable patch."

Snails lay 50 eggs that hatch in 10 - 20 days. They cleanse their flesh for two months in the feeding barrel and spend their final 24 hours without food and water.

"These snails are cleaner than beef or pork. I know everything they've eaten," he said. "Now look at these babies on the agapanthus leaf. They just love agapanthus in the nursery.

Tucker parboils adult escargots in a large pot of salted water for three minutes and removes them from their shells with an elongated seafood fork. They are then ready for freezing or more cooking.

Tucker simmers shelled snails for one - half hour in water with a touch of lemon juice, changing the liquid three times.

Seeking a suitable clientele for his snails, Tucker wrote some of the nation's most honored chefs to tell them about his enterprise and to ask for their favorite escargots recipes.

Kansas City chef Kenneth Dunn responded with a request for a special shipment of 210 plump escargots for a gourmet dinner of American dishes at the American Restaurant recently.

Most escargots for the restaurant trade are canned imports from Europe. The traditional recipe is for escargots sauteed in a butter and garlic sauce.

Tucker wants to change that. He's working on an artichoke - escargot bisque requiring about 25 chopped

"Much tastier than clam chowder and great food value," he proclaimed. "Lots of vitamin C and low in calories, too."

personal computers and this may lead to a deduction for a home office.

This is not an automatic means to tax savings. The deduction itself is carefully limited to rule out, for example, individuals who work at home for their own personal convenience and in doing so shun space set aside for them at the offices where they are employed.

CUT YOUR

To prevent a major revenue drain, the Internal Revenue Service has limited the home office deduction to employees who have no such choice. In many other respects, home office rules are now stricter than they've been since the deduction was first allowed.

Even so, many individuals who are unable to go to an office are finding that they can continue their employ ment, connected to their jobs through the umbilical cord of a personal comput-er. And when they do meet the strict rules for home offices, they win their deduction.

Here's an example of a legitimate home office deduction that works with or without a computer link. Let's say a taxpayer left to have a baby. With a baby at home, she can no longer commute to work.

Let's say that through direct employment or through a free-lance arrangement she does, say, secretarial work with or without a computer. If she sets aside space for this work, she'll probably be able to qualify for a deduction for her home office.

There are, of course, numerous other home office examples. And they'll no doubt proliferate as computer use becomes more wide

Jack Nilles, of the University of Southern California is also an author. He monitors computer trends. By 1990, he believes several million computer users will be working at least part of the time at home.

Just remember that if you use space in your home as an off-premises employee or as a free-lancer, you should check the rules to see if you can qualify. Once again, the computer is not the only route to a deduction for a home office. Here, then, are the rules

If you use part of your home regularly and exclusively for business purposes, you can probably deduct a part of the operating and depreciation expenses incurred in running your home. To qualify a part of your home it must either be your principal place of any business; or it must be used by patients, clients or customers who meet with you in the normal course of your trade or business.

Remember the caveat: The IRS says that if the regular and exclusive business use is for your work as an employee, use must be for the convenience of your employer and not simply helpful in your job.

TAX TIP: Recently, the IRS relaxed its strict rule that the office area must be a separate room or a divided area of a room. Although the IRS will look very closely at this, you may now claim a deduction for an undivided area of a room. The space must, however, be used solely for business purposes; you may not claim your den if you use it both for work and more general personal use.

TAX TIP: A taxpayer can have more than one principal place of business. Thus, an employed taxpayer who business at home may be able to qualify for home office deductions.

TAX TRAP: If you do deduct expenses for a home office, you will come under special rules when you sell your home. If you defer the capital gains tax on your profit by replacing your home with one of equal or greater value, you must reduce your capital gains exclusion by that portion of the home claimed as office. This could be substantial.

TAX TÍP: If you have a home office that you use for a free-lance business, you may want to lease a computer instead of buying one outright. Assuming that you use the computer exclusively for your business in the home, the full lease expense would be deductible.

TAX TIP: Those who buy computers outright should be aware that they change with breathtaking rapidity Even so, most microcomputers are subject to depreciation over five years, under the asset cost recovery system. Those who own such computers can take a 15 percent write-off the first year - even if you received the computer for Christmas, In the second year the depreciation rate is 22 percent and in the third, fourth and fifth years, the rate is 21 percent. The taxpayer can also use a 10 percent investment tax credit but this will reduce his depreciation base by as much as 5 percent.

Harvesters rally for win over Dumas

Pampa salvaged a 56-52 win over Dumas without star center Coyle Winborn in the lineup Tuesday night. Winborn, Pampa's top scorer and rebounder, was out with the flu, and the District 1-4A contest was quite a struggle without him.

Pampa never gained more than a five-point lead on the visiting Demons and the score was knotted 14 times before the Harvesters finally pulled away to win in the final

NEW YORK (AP) - A man jailed 28 months for his mother-in-law's murder was freed after his accuser - his ex-wife confessed to the crime, but she might not be charged because she got immunity from prosecution for her testimony, a prosecutor

Nathaniel Carter, 33, of Peekskill, was released Tuesday pending a hearing next week at which his murder conviction is expected to be set aside. He was convicted in the Sept. 15, 1981, slaying of his 60-year-old mother-in-law, Clarissa Herdon, who was stabbed 23 times in her home in the New York City borough of Queens.

The star prosecution witness was Delissa Carter, 25, who testified that her ex-husband was the assailant.

Ms. Carter confessed in Bristol. Conn. on Tuesday when investigators took her into custody as a material witness in the reopened case, according to Queens District Attorney John Santucci

The district attorney said the woman apparently thought she was being arrested for her mother's slaying and decided to make 'a full-confession.

She was granted immunity from murder charges in exchange for her grand jury testimony against her former husband, and investigators may have offered her immunity from perjury before she confessed, so she may escape prosecution entirely, Santucci

When the district attorney told Justice John Leahy that Ms. Carter had confessed, Leahy released Carter, telling him to return Jan. 25, when the verdict is expected to be set aside.

Even without the confession, there were newly discovered alibi witnesses and other evidence to justify releasing Carter, Santucci said. He had been sentenced to 25 years to Tuesday he left the courtroom with his second wife, Katherine. Carter told reporters he was glad to be able to go home. "I've kept the faith... I put it in the hands of the Lord and he took it from there," he said. "I'm not bitter at anyone, not even my ex-wife.

"He's just a fairly straightforward, unemotional fellow," said William E. Hellerstein, the Legal Aid Society attorney who handled Carter's appeal. "I think that's what did him in at the trial. Jurors said it was unnatural for someone to be accused of something and not show more outrage.

Carter's first wife is in custody in Connecticut. She could agree to return as a witness in her former husband's hearing next week or she could refuse, forcing a hearing on the issue. She would have to be extradited should Santucci decide to file charges against

Ms. Carter originally told detectives that a man wearing a stocking mask broke into the house and killed her mother, Santucci said. but later testified she made up that story because she was afraid of her ex-husband.
