

Lawmakers say odds against state lottery plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Two lawmakers say a state lottery game could produce the right numbers to fund teacher pay raises, but other legislators and Gov. Mark White say the proposal faces long odds.

"I don't think the people of the state would support it," White said Thursday. "The prospect being a big winner in most of those lotteries is something like the prospects of getting struck by lightning seven times in a row."

White is looking for money for teacher pay hikes and other education reforms. Houston Reps. Ron Wilson and Larry Evans told the House Ways and Means Committee on Thursday that a lottery could bring in much-needed millions through a "voluntary" tax.

Under the proposal — which would require voter approval of a constitutional amendment — the state would run a lottery that would produce revenue for teacher pay and, possibly, other items. Wilson predicted it could mean over $100 million a year for the state.

"We've just about hit that mode where it seems attractive. In other words, we need money," he said.

About 15 states have lotteries. For example, Ohio raised $150.6 million in 1982 through its lottery, which has resulted in multimillion dollar prizes for purchasers of $1 tickets in some games.

Evans said a lottery is "probably the best form of taxation in that it is voluntary." He added that "it does not unduly burden lower income people."

"I don't think anybody would sacrifice the needed items of life to buy a lottery ticket," he said.

But several committee members made it clear they don't want to take a chance on a lottery.

"I think it would be very unfortunate for the state to have to finance itself by encouraging people to lose their money on gambling," said Bruce Gibson, D-Cleburne, and committee vice chairman.

Gibson said he opposes the lottery because it is "a sleazy way to get the money, and it doesn't even give you as good odds as the underground network does."

Rep. Gary Thompson, D-Abilene, said he was "philosophically uncomfortable" with a lottery because it "creates an illusion" of a "painless" tax.

"It seems to me that taxes ought to hurt," he said, calling a lottery "a trip wire that leads into all sorts of other things. The end of the line I see is casino gambling."

Rep. Rollin Khoury, R-Waco, said a lottery could take money from the pockets of those who can afford it least. Evans replied, "You can't protect a fool from his own folly."

Phil Strickland of the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission later said, "You don't have to exploit that folly... or make it the basis for state income."

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, neither endorsed nor opposed the lottery idea.

Whatever method the Legislature adopts for raising more money for schools will be unpopular with some lawmakers, he said, and the lottery may appear more attractive than some tax increase alternatives.

30 twisters hit nation's mid-section

By RON SIRAK
Associated Press Writer

Thunderstorms unleashed more than 30 tornadoes across the nation's mid-section, killing five people and injuring at least 71 others before rumbling east today, while fears of a rain-triggered mudslide forced evacuation of a posh section of Aspen, Colo.

Forecasters, meanwhile, predicted more record heat and suffocating humidity today in the East, where the mercury Thursday climbed into the mid-90s and a half-dozen new temperature marks were set.

In Vermont, sudden rains Thursday triggered flash-flooding that caused more than $1 million in damage.

The late spring storms slapped Minnesota with 81-mph winds, brought traffic to a halt in Nebraska with a blinding dust storm and closed several highways in Kansas as trucks overturned by high winds blocked lanes of traffic.

A tornado hit the town of Barneveld in south central Wisconsin early today, leaving a trail of damage and at least nine people injured, said Merrill Hough, director of emergency planning for Dane County. More than 75 people were being sheltered in schools after the twister destroyed or damaged their homes, he said.

"A total of 29 tornadoes touched down Thursday in North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri," Nolan Duke of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo., said early today.

Earlier Thursday, a tornado slashed through Moreauville, La., ripping a house off its foundation, blowing apart a mobile home and downing trees. No injuries were reported.

Storms in Iowa left two people dead and injured at least 35 others, authorities said. Heavy destruction was reported in Delta, and the town of about 480 people was sealed off as authorities waited until daylight to assess the damage, a Keokuk County spokeswoman said.

"We're under a disaster situation here," said Keokuk County Hospital administrator Doug Sheetz. "The reports we've got is that it's (Delta) two-thirds gone, but as dark as it is, I don't know if anybody knows that." Sheetz said 25 to 30 people were treated at the hospital.

An elderly man was killed and his wife was critically injured Thursday near Eagleville, Mo., when a tornado destroyed their mobile home, authorities said.

Gray property valuations up by $125 million

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

Many county property owners were probably shocked this week when they received reappraisal notices, but Chief Appraiser Charles Buzzard of the Gray County Appraisal District says it's not as bad as it may look.

While higher values were placed on many residents' property, Buzzard pointed out that the increased valuations could enable county taxing entities to set a lower tax rate than last year. That would mean that the total tax bill would not be increased by the same percentage as valuations.

Total county property values jumped by more than $125 million to just under $1.4 billion, Buzzard said. Last year, county property values were set at $1,213,260,728. This year they are $1,380,230,410.

About 11,875 re-appraisal notices were sent to property owners whose property value increased by more than $1,000 in 1984. Buzzard explained that the appraisers look at the total market value of all taxable items of a property owner.

"We have to value all taxable property," Buzzard said. "That includes buildings, boats, cars, airplanes. We revalue such personal property every year."

The appraisal district recently conducted reappraisal of land and improvements (new buildings and remodeling) on property in Pampa and rural Gray County earlier this year. It was part of a countywide reappraisal which began in 1982 in McLean and Lefors.

"The Pampa Independent School District revalued itself in 1981," Buzzard said. "When we were established, we revalued everything"

House attempts to force states to raise legal drinking age to 21

WASHINGTON (AP) — States in which the drinking age is less than 21 would have two years to make it 21 or face a cutoff of some federal highway construction money under a bill passed by the House.

An amendment stipulating all states make 21 the legal age for buying alcohol was added to legislation approved Thursday to disperse $5.2 billion in federal gasoline tax money.

The bill, passed 297-73, now goes to the Senate where its chances were considered doubtful because of the more than $600 million it earmarks for local-interest highway projects.

Similar legislation originating in the Senate and sent to the floor of that chamber earlier this week contains $93 million for hometown projects.

None of the projects in the Senate bill is in the House-passed legislation. And no House project is in the Senate proposal.

In debate over the drinking age amendment, Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., said a nationally uniform drinking age of 21 was necessary because 5,000 teen-agers are killed in drunken driving accidents each year, many of them along "slaughter alleys" as they drive to other states with lower age restrictions for buying alcoholic beverages.

He called the death and destruction caused by drunken drivers "a national epidemic."

States not bringing their laws into compliance with the federal standard within two years would have 5 percent of their 1987 federal highway money withheld. If still not coaxed into accepting the idea, 10 percent of their 1988 allocation would be held back. The money would be released as soon as the age was raised to 21.

Currently 22 states have laws setting the age for buying beer, wine or hard liquor at 21.

Although agreeing to the idea of a nationwide drinking age of 21, President Reagan had rejected a proposal by his own Commission on Drunk Driving to use federal law to bring it about.

As for the portion of the bill concerning highway projects, Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., the ranking minority member of the subcommittee which drafted the proposal, said, "There isn't a partisan piece of pavement in this legislation."

Police scramble to cool hot heads on hot night

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

A hot night in Pampa was matched by a few hot-heads and Pampa police officers scrambled to cool things down in the 24-hour shift ending at 7 o'clock this morning.

During the period, officers were called to investigate a fight between two women in a grocery store's parking lot, an assault with a motor vehicle and a baseball bat in a dispute over a parking space, and two separate incidents of assaults with firearms.

The temperature in Pampa climbed to 97 degrees Thursday, but tempers were even hotter, according to police reports.

Police gave the following accounts of the heated incidents.

The first reported violence started about midnight Wednesday and continued into early Thursday morning. Ginger Dee McNeil, owner of McNeil's Tomatoes, 541 S. Cuyler, asked the patron of a nearby tavern if he wouldn't mind parking somewhere besides on the lot of her business.

The man responded by waving the business end of a baseball bat at McNeil. "I'll kill you all!" the suspect reportedly told the woman. He then obliged McNeil by moving a black, 1984 GMC "Jimmy" that was parked on the fruit stand's lot. But first, he rammed the vehicle into the woman's legs. The vehicle's bumper pushed McNeil backwards, but she wasn't injured. The suspect drove off and has eluded arrest.

Later Thursday, about 8:45 p.m., the clerk at the Lil' Speedy Mart, 225 W. Brown, reported seeing a man and a lady wrestling in a blue vehicle. The lady was hollering for help. The vehicle and occupants wound up at the home of Carlos Segura, 1240 Osborne. Segura, acting as peacemaker, broke up the fight between the couple but got scratched with fingernails and threatened with a gun in the process.

Pampa increase 7.52 percent

Sales tax rebate gain continues

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa continued to show an increase in its city sales tax collections from last year, according to figures released this week by State Comptroller Bob Bullock.

The city received a check this month for $111,317.99, up more than $7,000 from the $104,030.83 received in June, 1983.

June payments reflect taxes on sales made in April and reported to the Comptroller by May 20.

Total rebates from the state to Pampa for the first six months of the year reached $781,703.91, a 7.52 percent increase above the $727,013.54 paid the city during the same period last year.

Though Pampa continued to register an increase in city sales tax collections, its percent hike is still running below the state average of just over 13 percent.

Bullock sent checks totaling $72 million in local sales tax payments to the 988 cities and transit authorities levying the 1 percent sales tax.

"So far this year, we've sent these cities a little over $400 million, which is more than 13 percent better than what they had gotten by this time last year," Bullock said.

Lefors also continued to show an increase even though it received no check for June. The Gray County city has received checks totaling $3,306.31 so far this year, a 4.19 percent hike over the $3,173.36 sent from the state for the same period last year.

McLean, though, continued to register a decline in its payments. Bullock sent the city a check this month for $908.72, a drop of more than $300 below the $1,241.54 it received last June.

Total collections for the city to date this year are $11,232.08, a fall of 9.37 percent from the $12,393.13 it had gathered at this time last year.

In Carson County, Groom showed a big increase in its monthly check, more than doubling its June, 1983, check. The city received $1,870.91 from the state this month, compared with only $782.09 in the same month last year.

Total collections to date are $10,517.09, a 0.42 percent increase above the $10,473.25 received in payments at this time in 1983. The slight increase is an improvement over the 10.78 percent decrease it was registering last month, Bullock reported.

Skellytown also had a big increase in its monthly check, more than doubling its payments for last June. The state sent the city a check for $1,971.68 this month, more than $1,100 above the $818.16 for the same month in 1983.

The city still registered a decline in total payments for the year to date. Its total payments of $12,015.94 mark a 7.36 percent drop from last year's comparable total of $12,971.23. But in May the city was showing a decline of 17.35 percent.

White Deer also indicated improvements in sales tax collections. The city received a June payment of $2,190.98, about $460 above the payment of $1,730.77 in the same month last year.

Its total yearly payments to date reached $12,706.07, a 4.10 percent decline from last year. But in May, White Deer was showing a drop of 8.71 percent.

In Hemphill County, Canadian received a June check for $11,475.29, just over $2,000 above the $9,392.41 it had received last June. But its yearly totals to date show a 5.23 percent drop. The state has sent Canadian checks totaling $85,336.80 for the first half of this year, compared with $90,047.59 at this time in 1983.

Perryton showed a positive increase this month after receiving a sales tax payment of $39,090.33, a hike of more than $15,000 from the $23,489.21 paid the city in June of last year.

The Ochiltree County's yearly total to date is $328,584.79, a rise of 2.98 percent from the $319,079.50 registered for the first half of 1983. In May the city was showing a decline of 2.06 percent in yearly total payments. Miami continued to maintain its large increase in sales tax payments in Roberts County. The state sent the city a June check for $1,371.89, up from the $998.48 received last June.

Total payments for the year to date are $14,298.92, an increase of 37.24 percent above the comparable 1983 total of $10,418.67. Bullock reported.

In contrast, in Wheeler County Mobeetie and Wheeler continued to register significant declines though there were improvements in the yearly totals for the year.

Valuations increase else to bring everyone else to current levels.

This year we're looking at land values in Pampa and all rural agricultural property in Gray County," he said, explaining that the appraisers look at all property improvements over the past year.

The notices compare last year's market value of a resident's property with 1984 market value. It lists the different taxing entities — school, city, county and water and road districts — that the property falls under and the estimated tax rate that each entity would have to levy to collect the same amount of revenue as last year.

Also listed are the 1984 agricultural value, if any, and any exemptions for 1984.

One such exemption is the homestead exemption for residents 65 or older. For older residents who received the $1,000 residence homestead exemption, the amount of school taxes assessed will not exceed the tax ceiling imposed on the homesteads.

Buzzard pointed out that tax rates in several county taxing entities could go down in 1984 and those entities could still collect the same amount of taxes.

The taxing entities may not adopt a tax rate which will increase tax revenues for operating purposes by more than three percent without first having a public hearing. The body must publish a notice in a legal newspaper to note that it is considering a hearing for taxpayers to discuss such an increase

According to Buzzard, if the operating revenue is increased by more than eight percent, residents may petition for a decrease.

He estimated that the 1984 tax rate for Pampa ISD could be 58 or 60 cents per $100 of taxable property. The current rate is 63.9 cents.

Other estimates of tax rates required to generate the same amount of revenue as last year are as follows:

Pampa city tax rates could drop from the current rate of 60 cents to approximately 55 cents, while Gray County rates would have to increase from 12.7 cents to 13.5 cents. Tax rates for the road district could drop from 4.5 cents to 3.5 cents while water district tax rates would stay at one-half cent.

In McLean, the school tax rate could be dropped from 96 cents to 93 cents while the city tax rate would stay at 27 cents.

In Lefors, school tax rate could drop from 49 cents to 46 cents while the city tax rate may remain at 29 cents.

Buzzard couldn't obtain current tax rates for Grandview-Hopkins ISD of Allanreed ISD, but estimated that the tax rate at Grandview may be 59 cents while Allanreed may be set at 17 cents.

The completion this week of 1-40 south of McLean will affect future property values, Buzzard said. A new city ordinance setting up multi-family and retail zoning at the interstate and zoning districts throughout the city will have little effect on current rates, he added.

Mobeetie received a check this month for $639.24; it had received no check last June. The yearly totals to date are $4,063.02, falling 55.64 percent below last year's comparable totals of $9,158.88. But the city was registering a decline of 62.62 percent through May.

The state sent Wheeler a June payment of $4,277.07, about $1,300 above the $2,965.63 received last June. Totals for the first half of 1984 reached $26,221.79, a dip of 14.29 percent below the comparable totals of $30,593.01 for 1983. However, in May the city was showing a decline of 20.57 percent.

"The economy is really hurting down there," he observed. "Our goal next year is to look at land values down there."

An appraisal review board hearing is slated for 9 a.m. June 27 in the GAD offices, room 196-A of the Hughes Building.

Property owners who feel their reappraised value is too high, may appeal to the GAD before the review meeting date.

"We would rather the protestors come to the office with their appeal," Buzzard said. "It's easier than to talk over the phone or in writing."

"If they are still not satisfied, they can go to the review board," he added.

Economic issues overshadowed as summit meeting gets started

LONDON (AP) — President Reagan and leaders of six other major industrialized nations sat down for talks today at an economic summit immediately overshadowed by political concerns, including terrorism, arms control and the deep chill in East-West relations. Motorcades brought presidents, prime ministers, foreign ministers and finance ministers to Lancaster House, a 19th century mansion in the heart of London, for the first formal summit session in a gilded room decorated in ornate style of Louis XV.

Economic issues were to dominate the first meeting, but before the summit ends Saturday the leaders will decide whether to make a statement on troublesome political issues facing the democratic alliance, according to U.S. and other officials who briefed reporters late Thursday.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, host of the 10th annual gathering, has made it clear she would like a strong political statement to emerge from the summit in addition to an economic communique.

Sources from the British delegation said officials had been instructed Thursday to work into the night to prepare a statement which would be presented today to leaders of the United States, Britain, Canada, Japan, West Germany, France and Italy.

If there was agreement on a draft text, it would probably be published Saturday when the summit ends.

DPS, county to pay in immigration suit

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Two Hispanics who say they were jailed because they couldn't prove their citizenship have settled a class-action suit with the Texas Department of Public Safety and Deaf Smith County.

The settlement requires the DPS to pay $8,000 in damages to plaintiff Pedro Cervantes and $2,000 to Juan Lozano, the other plaintiff.

The settlement also requires the DPS to pay $1,000 each to class members

"subjected to improper immigration enforcement by the DPS."

U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson, who approved settlement of the suit against Deaf Smith County.

The settlement provides that state and local officers may not arrest people on immigration charges nor may they attempt to enforce the immigration laws by questioning persons about their nationality, birthplace or right to be in the United States.

"I'll use it, you..." the female reportedly said and pointed a pistol at the peacemaker.

The hapless Segura arrived at the police station about 10:30 p.m., showed officers the gun and the scratches, and filed a complaint for aggravated assault. No arrests have been made.

At 9:45 p.m. Thursday, Claro Sigala, 712 E. Malone, was trying to cope with the heat at his home when hot lead started flying from a passing vehicle. Several shots were fired at Sigala's house by a person in the vehicle. Police arrested a suspect in connection with the shooting and charged him with aggravated assault.

About an hour later, Lori Stapleton, 404 N. Christy, reported she was assaulted in the parking lot of the Ideal Food Store, 401 N. Ballard.

"The suspect (a woman) stopped Stapleton, reached through the widow of her vehicle, and slapped her in the face."

Stapleton grabbed a length of a two-by-four board and jumped out of her vehicle to defend herself, police said.

"You're going to have to use that stick," the suspect reportedly told Stapleton.

Police said the woman obliged and smacked the offending party with the board.

"The suspect then threw the complainant to the ground. The suspect then got in her car and left."

Stapleton filed a complaint and told police that the other female is responsible for a "constant fear of attack."

In the 24-hour period, Pampa police also investigated a burglary, an attempted burglary, two reports of criminal mischief, a suspect charged with public drunkenness and one charged with drunk driving.

"Was it a full moon?" wondered one police department employee after reviewing the shifts' records.

It wasn't. The next full moon will arrive on June 13.

Lefors delays phone decision

LEFORS — Members of the board of trustees of the Lefors Independent School District tabled consideration of a new telephone system for the schools at a regular meeting Thursday night.

The trustees decided to wait until the new elementary school building is constructed to review plans for replacement of the current telephone cables and equipment.

The board members approved a schedule of payments for construction of the new elementary building and authorized President Walter Jackson to sign checks for payments as they become due.

In an executive session, the board continued to review applicants for position of head coach.

In other action, the trustees approved outstanding bills for payment and authorized the travel of school principals to attend workshops in Austin during the summer.

ACCUSED OF POLLUTING—A giant crane scoops lignite coal to power the Monticello Steam Electric Plant eight miles west of Mount Pleasant. Residents of the area say ash from the plant is killing the fish in the lakes and making people sick. (AP Laserphoto)

Coal ash driving the residents from small town in East Texas

MONTICELLO, Texas (AP) — The 60 residents of this East Texas community may have to leave their homes if officials of coal-fired electric plant do not solve pollution problems, the town's mayor says.

City officials say the pollution is caused from smokestacks and from blowing ash from waste disposal sites at the plant, which is owned by Texas Utilities Generating Co.

Company officials, however, say the plant is in compliance with state standards and is not a health hazard.

Residents have complained of sore eyes and respiratory problems. Many have moved away, while others are encouraging the utility to buy their properties so they can afford to leave.

"What are we going to do, all sit here and die?" asked Mayor Harold Smith, 61. "They (Texas Utilities) should clear out a three- or four-mile radius around the plant."

"It's reached the point where we absolutely can't stand it anymore," Smith said. "There's not a one of us that's not stopped up, sinuses bad, and with kids that can't breathe."

Smith said the problem has become so bad that he believes the town's 60 residents will be forced to move.

In April, a state inspector tested the air near Joey Patterson's home and found that blowing dust from the plant's ash disposal site was at levels nearly 15 times the amount considered safe under state law, according to Texas Air Control Board data.

Another resident, Mike White, who has lived in Monticello since 1976, said his son's asthma has worsened since they moved to the area.

"You can see it pouring out of the stacks every day," said White. "We have special filters on our air conditioner, but it doesn't help much."

White said that the family will be forced to move unless his son shows signs of recovery.

Other families living near the plant say the pollution is damaging their health. Eighteen families have signed a petition asking company officials to buy their properties so they can afford to leave.

Although company officials say they have no evidence that anyone's health is in jeopardy, they have spent $250,000 in recent months to control the blowing dust.

"We feel like we have maintained compliance with applicable standards," plant manager Ned Baker said. "We have continued to do that all along."

Before the tests for blowing ash were conducted, company officials and the Texas Air Control Board had maintained that the 750-megawatt power plant was in compliance with air-quality standards.

After the tests, however, the TACB declared the ash a nuisance and ordered the problem corrected, said Richard Leard, TACB regional director in Tyler.

Leard said that stronger action, including a fine, may be taken later.

The plant's three generating units burn lignite coal, a cheap, dirty fuel strip-mined from more than 15,000 acres leased by the company around the facility.

Only one of the units is equipped with emission control devices. The two older units are exempt from the stricter standards under the Texas Clean Air Act because construction started before 1971. Because of that, the units are allowed to discharge three times as much ash and 2½ times as much sulfur dioxide, according to the TACB.

Smith and other residents believe that smokestack emissions as well as blowing ash are responsible for their problems.

Even the head of the state Public Utility Commission has questions about the plant's emission controls.

"I'm tired of hearing they're not violating the law," said Alan Erwin, chairman of the PUC, which grants licenses for new plants. "If they're not violating the law, and these people are suffering dust pneumonia and leaving the land they've lived on all their lives, then something's wrong with the law."

Dead baby's parents say hospital refused treatment for lack of cash

WALLISVILLE, Texas (AP) — The Chambers County sheriff's department is investigating a family's claim that a toddler choked to death after officials at Chambers Memorial Hospital demanded payment before treating the child.

The 14-month-old girl died Sunday en route to a Galveston hospital.

Sheriff C. E. Morris said his department still is gathering facts.

"Then we'll talk with the district attorney, who will decide whether to have a grand jury review," Morris said. "It's difficult to prove criminal negligence. Something like this may have to be settled in civil court."

A hospital administrator said Wednesday that the couple left "of their own free will" after talking with a nurse's aide.

The baby, Carrie Ann Banks, died on the way to John Sealy Hospital in Galveston. The girl's funeral was scheduled today in Wallisville.

"They did me dirty," said the child's father, Elva

Banks, 65. "The nurse said we needed to have cash money, and I told her we didn't have enough. So she said, 'I'm sorry, but that's all we can do.'"

Hospital Administrator Dean Boebinger denied that the child, who was not examined by a nurse or a doctor, was refused treatment. He said the nurse's aide, Helen Heiman, was only stating the hospital policy.

"There was never a statement made that, 'If you don't pay, we won't treat you,'" Boebinger said.

Had a doctor determined it was an emergency, the child would have been treated immediately no matter what the family's financial status, Boebinger said.

Justice of the Peace John McAdams, who ordered an autopsy, said he was told by a medical examiner that the bean could have been in the girl's throat as long as a day and a half.

Moisture may have caused the bean to swell, blocking the throat, he said.

"He (the examiner) said if anybody would have even looked down her throat they would have seen it," McAdams said.

The child was playing with her 2-year-old brother Sunday when she suddenly ran out of the room, choking and gagging, Banks said. Banks said his daughter apparently found the bean in a drawer.

The family lives in a ramshackle house and relies on his Social Security benefits and extra money he earns picking up cans along the roadside or raising chickens.

Banks said he rushed his daughter to Chambers Memorial, only a few miles away, where a nurse's aide told him nothing was wrong.

"She argued with me and told me the baby hadn't swallowed nothing. But there lay my baby, coughing and crying and sounding hoarse," he said.

"She said they couldn't do nothing for us. So we left," said the child's mother, Mary Frances Banks, 32.

The girl's condition began to improve later, and Mrs. Banks gave her a bottle. After sipping a little milk, the baby struggled to breathe and then passed out, the family said.

The Bankses got in their car and started to drive to Galveston, about 60 miles south of their home, but had a flat tire on the way. They called an ambulance, which took the child to a hospital in Winnie, about 35 miles east of their home. The little girl was pronounced dead on arrival.

Coach tells panel, sports help

AUSTIN (AP) — Almost all of the honor roll students at Brownwood High School participate in extracurricular activities, according to a longtime football coach who says the special programs enrich education.

"I think the problems with the schools is in other areas," said Gordon Wood, who has coached seven state champions in his 24 years at Brownwood.

Sports and other extracurricular activities have been a favorite target for H. Ross Perot, chairman of the Select Committee on Public Education. Perot says the activities steal learning time.

Wood told the House Public

Education Committee on Thursday that he has seen students benefit from extracurricular activities.

"Ninety-four percent of our students who made the honor roll at mid-term are in extracurricular activities, and I (believe) we should be trying to get more people interested in it," Wood said.

"Frankly, I think we ought to be trying to get more and more people interested (in such activities). I honestly feel sorry for people that the only interest they have in school is to go to school, nothing else," he testified.

He said Perot's attacks are misguided.

"You know if (students) don't learn to read in the first six grades the chances are they are not going to be able to learn to read thereafter. Actually, there isn't any athletic program below the sixth grade that I know of," said Wood.

The veteran coach said he opposes proposals to require students to pass four courses, instead of three, to participate in extracurricular activities. The University Interscholastic League, which governs many high school competitions, has approved the tougher requirement.

Wood said the more stringent requirement might steer students into easier courses.

Couple retrieves a portion of Davis' destroyed art collection

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A couple who retrieved part of the reported $1 million art collection destroyed by industrialist Cullen Davis were told that the jade and ivory pieces are "decorative stuff" that "probably was made in Taiwan."

Davis and evangelist James Robison, to whom Davis had donated the art, destroyed the collection in 1982. At the time Robison described the art as "an abomination to the Lord."

The two men smashed the collection and dumped the pieces in Lake Worth, located north of Fort Worth.

Davis was acquitted of a capital murder charge in the 1976 slaying of his stepdaughter, who was killed during a shooting spree at his mansion. He later was acquitted of plotting to have his divorce judge killed.

On Sunday, an airman stationed at Carswell Air Force Base and his fiancée were fishing on the shores of Lake Worth.

The couple said something just above the water caught the woman's eye. They reported pulling fragments of carved green stone, shards of ivory, chunks of lapis lazuli, pieces of malachite and lamps of painted porcelain from the lake.

Hoping what they had found was valuable, the two returned to the lake Monday and collected more fragments, which they took to the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History and then to the Kimbell Museum.

Emily Sano, curator of Asian art at the Kimbell Museum and considered one of the foremost scholars of Oriental art in America, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that "judging from these fragments, this stuff was never of any real aesthetic or religious value whatsoever."

She said no desecration ever occurred because there was nothing to desecrate.

"I hope that whoever bought this didn't think he was buying great art; this is decorative stuff, the Oriental equivalent of Dresden figurines or Spode vases," she said. "It isn't old. It was made early in this century. This isn't even real jade, it's what's commonly called 'spinach jade.' All of this probably was made in Taiwan."

Ms. Sano said none of the pieces was "anything to make any sort of fuss about."

Based on accounts from Robison, Davis first had donated the objects to the evangelist to sell in order to pay off debts that were threatening to end Robison's national television ministry.

Robison said the collection had been appraised and was worth more than $1 million, enough money to save his broadcasting efforts.

But while being driven to Dallas to inspect the collection, Robison said he was reading the Bible and saw a verse that convinced him he should not accept Davis' gift.

dumped into Lake Worth. Neither Davis nor Robison could not be reached for comment Thursday, the Star-Telegram reported.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

How deregulation helped railroads

Historically, regulation of transportation in this country was intended, at least in part, to protect the industry in question from the uncertain perils of the marketplace, from the "dog-eat-dog" rigors of unfettered competition. Even when an industry had "captured" a regulatory body, however, regulators could seldom keep pace with technological change and management innovations. Regulated industries found themselves fettered and stifled, burdened by high costs and built-in inefficiencies attributable to the regulations that ostensibly protected them.

Perhaps the classic case of regulatory overkill was the American railroad industry. It took decades for economic analysis to break through barriers of habit and fear. Finally, as the industry seemed to be gasping its dying breath, a dose of deregulation was tried, almost in desperation. Predictions of doom and gloom, of course, were rampant.

The Staggers Rail Act of 1980 reduced much of the Interstate Commerce Commission's power to regulate rates and terms of service of the remaining elements of the freight-hauling railroad industry. How have the railroads responded to increased competition and the need to please customers rather than bureaucrats? Rather well, thank you.

In 1979, following a period of steady decline, the rails hauled only 9.5 percent of the nation's produce. Last year they hauled 14.2 percent. The railroad's share of most categories of freight-hauling has increased since deregulation.

Why should this be so? According to a recent article in the National Journal, the railroads' "bloated work force has been slashed by almost a third in the past three years. Excess track and equipment has been abandoned... in record amounts, and investment in new or modernized facilities has doubled from the past decade's levels."

In practice, federal regulation protected railroads from rate competition, but required them to maintain unprofitable routes. As major companies have dropped unprofitable (to them) routes, short-term haulers have emerged to take up the slack. The American Short-Line Railroad Association had 215 members in 1971; today it has 266. A short line may require less capital investment but more intensive management than a long-haul route. When a large company shucks off a losing route, local entrepreneurs may spot an opportunity.

A major trend under deregulation is toward mergers; there are seven large railroads today, compared to 13 in 1978. So far, perhaps because railroads were so close to being on the ropes before deregulation, these mergers have escaped the intensive attention of "all mergers are evil" political opportunists.

In fact, most mergers have been between lines that meet end-to-end rather than overlapping. In general, they have increased efficiency by reducing negotiations over issues like shared use of terminal facilities. Moreover, the merged lines can achieve economies of scale, permitting larger companies to handle long hauls and smaller companies to handle short hauls.

Deregulations have brought some short-term problems as companies have adjusted to increased competition. Overall, however, partial deregulation of the railroads has been a success. With more competition, things are better for the railroads and better for consumers. There must be a lesson here.

A liberal with big problems

NEW YORK (NEA) - I must have missed reading The Wall Street Journal on Good Friday, for I only recently came across what will undoubtedly become famous in the annals of psychopathology as Arthur Schlesinger Jr.'s "Good Friday blast" at Ronald Reagan.

Schlesinger, of course, is the former Harvard history professor who has made a cottage industry out of writing pop biographies of liberal presidents, notably FDR and JFK. What these efforts lacked in scholarly qualities they more made up in uncritical enthusiasm, and Schlesinger has in the process become a sort of unofficial Keeper of the Flame that still flickers at the ramshackle altar of American liberalism.

When The New York Times Sunday Magazine needs to have some painful phenomenon (e.g. the growth of the conservative movement) explained away, Schlesinger can be counted on to do a serviceable hatchet job - and to deck it out, moreover, with historical allusions and analogies to give it a meretricious air of authoritative objectivity.

That is precisely what makes his Good Friday article so fascinating. Here, for once, we are spared the phony historicity, and treated to one of the purest blasts of political malice I have ever encountered. What prompted The Wall Street Journal to give it space is a major mystery.

Schlesinger, good liberal that he is, naturally detests Reagan, and the motive for his article is obvious: He is a badly frightened man. He knows very well that Reagan is far ahead in his race for re-election, and he just can't stand the thought. So, like a child having a tantrum, he simply empties his bile duct and throws its entire contents at the president.

Even so, he takes his time. His first few paragraphs are leisurely, almost ruminative. There is even a concession or two, to disarm the unwary: "No one can doubt that Mr. Reagan has a deep - felt, if highly general, sense of where he wants to go." His best speeches are "potent vehicles for president's charm, histrionic skill and genius for simplification."

Even when the denunciations begin, they are at first put forward only as illustrations of Mr. Reagan's supposed skill at avoiding responsibility: "The Lebanon fiasco was a truly massive demonstration of diplomatic misjudgment, ineptitude and incompetence. Similarly, Mr. Reagan is forgiven for his manifold misstatements of facts and for his endless flow of fable and fantasy."

But by now Schlesinger is fully wound up and will charge at any straw man in his field of vision, like a bull elephant in musth: "If asked to compare the president with, say, George McGovern, many Americans would choose Mr. Reagan as the quintessential American patriot. Yet when the chips were down, when the nation was in its greatest danger, Mr. Reagan bravely fought the second world war on the film lots of Hollywood, while Mr. McGovern was a bomber pilot, flew 35 missions, twice brought in planes severely damaged by antiaircraft fire, and won the Distinguished Flying Cross. McGovern needs no instruction from Reagan and his followers on the subject of patriotism." (And, as far as I know, has received none. Mr. Reagan was barred from a combat role by weak eyesight, not cowardice.)

But the all-time prize for gratuitous overreaching surely goes to this sentence: "The proclaimed champion of traditional morality, Reagan has undoubtedly in a long Hollywood career spent more of his life in association with adulterers, alcoholics, homosexuals, people who procure abortions and take drugs, than any previous president."

Aren't you glad you didn't write that? The man who did has problems he doesn't even know about.

Legacy

In this feature, we excerpt material that has appeared on Freedom Newspapers editorial pages in previous years, whether from the editorials or the column written for many years by Freedom founder R.C. Hoiles.

Taxes would not be much of a problem if the government attempted only to protect men's lives and property from outsiders. Taxes would be so small they would not be a burden.

The framers of the Constitution did not pay very much attention to taxes because they did not believe taxes would amount to very much. Their conception was that the government would be limited only to protecting man's life and property. Our tax problem has become a problem only because we have departed from this philosophy of government.

Taxes will continue to mount higher and higher, taking a larger and larger fraction of everybody's production, so long as we believe it is a governmental duty to protect men from their own inefficiency, indolence and bad judgment. That is not the function of any liberal or true democratic government.

The ways of a creative genius

The TV network program schedulers are becoming more ingenious with each passing season.

The other day I walked into a TV production center and I saw a man sweeping up all kinds of videotape from the floor. I thought he was a janitor, but he turned out to be a vice president in charge of "Creative Programming."

"Why are you sweeping the floor?" I asked him.

"There are a lot of good shows here," he said. "I'm looking for TV bloopers and gaffers that I can put together for next week's special."

"You mean mistakes people made that were left on the cutting room floor?"

"You got it. The outtakes of the goofs have now become more popular than the shows themselves. The audience loves them and it doesn't cost us a dime. The trouble is that we've used up so many real goofs that we may soon have to start producing fresh ones just for our show."

"You mean you want people to purposely make mistakes when they're doing a straight program so you can use them on your program?"

"That's correct. We sent out a memo to our news departments and production companies to mess up as much as possible so we can use the foulups on our special. And we're now writing into our contracts that a TV performer has to produce three bloopers for every straight spot that can be aired."

"You've really come up with a cheap form of entertainment."

"All the networks have gotten into the act. No one believed there was gold in all the screwups on TV."

He finished sweeping the floor and handed the videotape to an editor. Then he said, "I have to check on whose birthday is coming up so we can do a special honoring the person."

"I notice there have been a lot of shows featuring old-time TV personalities lately."

"It's a big business. You find some star from the Fifties and Sixties and you give a dinner for him and then you invite all his friends to appear for nothing to say funny things about the person, and you can fill up an hour and half of prime time. The only one we have to pay is the caterer."

"You have to be a creative genius to think of an idea like that."

"That's what we're paid for."

He took me into the TV library where the staff was going through old tapes. "That group over there is working on a 'Best of Comedy' special, that one over there is slicing 'The Most Memorable Plays in Baseball,' and the third group is preparing a show strictly devoted to TV car crashes. There is no end to how many shows are in this library, and if each special costs more than $800 I'll eat my Nielsen printout."

"Holding down costs seems to be the name of the game in TV."

"You use what you've got. I'm not organizing all our soap operas to compete in the TV 'Soap Olympics.' But our biggest special this year will be a mud wrestling match between the principals of 'Dynasty' and 'Dallas.' If I can arrange it we're talking about a 45 share in the ratings."

"Are you working on any new shows?"

"What do you mean new? The material may be old, but the concepts are original. Anyone can create a brand new show, but it takes imagination to recycle what you've shown already."

We went outside and the vice president started going through the trash can.

"What are you looking for?" I asked him. "You never can tell what shows are in here, until you hit the bottom of the barrel."

Where 'liberal chic' originates

The decline of intellectual order in the U.S. can be traced to the transformation of many leading American colleges and universities into training centers for liberal chic. Though no educational institution gives a degree in fashionable liberal notions, many institutions know how to influence the moods and attitudes of the rising generation.

About opinions

The views expressed in the opinion column on this page are those of The Pampa News or Freedom Newspapers. Opinions expressed by the signed columnists are their own and may not always be an accurate reflection of the views of this newspaper.

Development of liberal chic on the campus begins at the top with role models in the administration and faculty, often with the president of the institution.

This came to mind the other day in reading a glowing account in The New York Times of the personality, interests and methods of the new president of Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. The new president, Dr. David W. Fraser, was described as a "slightly unkempt young physician" whose chief personal ambition is "to write the world's best book on twining, an intricate sort of weaving practiced by various tribal peoples around the world."

The new president of this prestigious college does all the right things. According to The Times, he "slouches in a chair, lopes off to lunch and bicycles around the arboretum. His shoes are scuffed and his clothes are determinedly undistinguished."

It's not that Dr. Fraser is the absent-minded professor type. The newspaper reports that Dr. Fraser was asked the other day what was the proper mission of a liberal art college. "Liberation," he replied. And The Times added that he said this "without embarrassment." In today's world of liberal chic, why should he be embarrassed for not saying "sound learning" or "knowledge of our cultural heritage"? Such answers might cause him to be regarded as an old fogey in some circles.

One can't be sure from the article what type of "liberation" Dr. Fraser has in mind. He also is described as questioning traditions, including the college's Oxford-style system of individual study for honors students.

The final paragraph in The New York Times story on Dr. Fraser described a sit-in in a college building. The article stated that Dr. Fraser "was absolutely delighted." One might ask whether he views a sit-in as an element of "liberation."

Swarthmore is a private college, and its trustees can choose whoever they wish as president. The choice, however, is of public interest and concern. Private colleges have an important role in setting standards for public education in the U.S. The leadership they have is indicative of the tone or tendency of the educational system in the U.S.

American society faces grave problems. Educational standards are deteriorating. National and international problems require the application of disciplined intelligence. Another dose of permissiveness is the last thing needed by a new generation of college students.

White sticks to sales tax hike

AUSTIN (AP) — Although many lawmakers say they prefer something other than a one-cent general increase in the sales tax to fund education reform, Gov. Mark White is sticking to that proposal.

White said Thursday he believes raising the sales tax from four cents on the dollar to five cents is a better approach than taxing some services which now are exempt.

"I just say my plan is one that I believe to be acceptable on the standards of fairness," White said.

Some lawmakers say the current 4 percent sales tax should be extended to such services as legal fees, entertainment costs, recreation and industrial utilities rather than raising the current tax.

White said that might unfairly penalize some people.

"For those people who will have exemptions removed, it amounts to a 5 (percent), in some cases 6 percent increase in their taxes," he said.

White said he might be willing to compromise on his $4.8 billion, three-year tax increase plan, which includes a doubling of the 5-cent-per-gallon gasoline tax, plus increases in the motor vehicle sales tax and cigarette and liquor taxes.

"My proposal is one I think would be hopefully easiest for the Legislature to deal with and one that has the least impact on any individual, any business, I think there are alternatives, certainly. I'm not going to foreclose some other suggestions," the governor said.

However, White said, he won't bend on the principles he sees as mandatory for education reform.

"There should be no compromise on the principles that we're seeking," he said, although there may be "room for differences in achieving those goals."

White has proposed higher pay for teachers, competency testing for teachers and students, a lengthy list of other reforms and an appointed state board of education to oversee the changes.

On the fourth day of the special legislative session he called, the governor said he isn't discouraged by lawmakers who say they oppose his tax increase plans.

"I have the feeling from talking to the speaker of the House (Rep. Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth) that he's going to make certain things get done in his House of Representatives. I have the distinct impression from the lieutenant governor (Bill Hobby) that things are going to get done in the Senate.

"I feel very confident they are prepared to take action on these programs," White said.

Beleaguered airline will show quarterly profit, chairman says

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines, which entered bankruptcy proceedings and drastically cut its flight schedule and salaries last September, will show a profit this quarter, the company's chairman says.

Frank Lorenzo told the carrier's annual shareholders meeting Thursday that Continental will show a net profit in the second quarter of 1984, the first such results since the third quarter of 1982.

The $4.9 million profit in the 1982 period involved about $5.2 million in several special items, such as the sale of airport gate leases, re-evaluation of foreign debt, income tax credits and other unusual factors, spokesman Bruce Hicks said.

The profit would be the airline's first in the second quarter since 1979. Continental reported a net loss of $26 million in the second quarter of 1983.

Lorenzo declined to predict the amount of the profit, saying "the comment about a profit for Continental is significant in itself."

Continental lost $218 million last year. Continental, once the nation's eighth-largest carrier, filed for protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy laws in September and temporarily suspended domestic flights.

The airline put its planes back in the air two days later, with its routes slashed by more than two-thirds and the workforce cut by 65 percent. It also announced a new salary schedule which cut in half the amount of money paid to pilots and flight attendants.

Those workers walked off the job within a week, claiming the airline was abusing federal bankruptcy laws in an effort to abrogate union contracts.

Pilots' and flight attendants' unions asked a bankruptcy judge to dismiss the Chapter 11 petition, but the request was denied. A ruling is pending on Continental's request to throw out union contracts.

In a letter to shareholders in the carrier's annual report, Lorenzo said that 1983 was probably the most difficult year in the airline's history.

"Groundwork has been laid for a potentially profitable future" through the reorganization filing, Lorenzo said.

Shareholders overwhelmingly elected a board of nine directors and approved three stock plans for employees.

Security at the hotel where the shareholders were meeting was tight. Everyone entering the meeting walked through a metal detector and about eight policemen stood guard in the room.

In the hotel lobby, about 100 uniformed members of the Air Line Pilots Association picketed. Many wore buttons bearing anti-Continental slogans.

Several ALPA members asked Lorenzo questions during the meeting about statements he had made before Texas International acquired Continental in 1982 and about his performance since then.

He responded for a while, but eventually said he was concerned that shareholders who were not union members had questions that might go unanswered.

"Do you have something specific that's useful to shareholders?" Lorenzo asked one union member.

Continental President Phil Bakes admitted the strike is costing the company a lot of money for security expenses, publicity and legal fees. Bakes estimated the company was paying about $1.5 million a month for legal fees.

Lorenzo also told shareholders Continental's cost per available seat mile has declined to 6 1/2 cents.

By December, Lorenzo predicted, the cost will be down to 6 cents per available seat mile. That figure would be 25 percent less than Continental's cost at the same time last year, he said. Lorenzo also said the airline does not anticipate any major fare increases.

Officials say teacher may have cheated on test scores

DALLAS (AP) — A third-grade teacher who can't explain students' unusually high test scores may have cheated to gain a pay bonus and could face termination, Dallas public school officials said.

Dallas Independent School District Superintendent Linus Wright refused to release the teacher's name and sex or the school where the teacher works.

The teacher was one of a dozen in the DISD being investigated for alleged tampering with students' achievement test scores to win a $1,500 pay incentive. The bonus was offered to teachers whose students scored well on standardized tests.

The teacher "just hasn't been able to explain (the high scores) and that led us to suspect cheating," Wright said. "Now we have to prove it."

He said that if cheating took place, the teacher will be fired.

The teacher was targeted for investigation after school officials interviewed 12 teachers whose classes scored unusually high on the Iowa Test of Basic Skills, a national standardized achievement test. Officials analyzed the scores of 425 third-grade classes and found 12 had unusually high marks.

Board member function confusing

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — With outsiders increasingly selected for boards of major companies, that old question arises: What do board members do?

All good board members will tell you they are there to protect the shareholders' interest, which is the director's legal responsibility. Generally, outside directors will also tell you that they "seek to make a contribution," especially in their particular areas of expertise, and that they hope to serve as independent judges of the company's performance.

Because they are outside the company — that is, not working directly for it — many such directors also feel they can serve as objective sounding boards, capable of telling when the inside management strikes a sour note.

Many others will tell you they are there to serve their "constituency" which might be the environmental movement, consumers, product safety, good accounting procedures or the founding family's personal concerns.

Few will confess that they serve in support of the chief executive who picked them for the board and seek only to make him look good.

Murray Weidenbaum, outside director, ex-adviser to President Reagan and head of the Center for the Study of American Business (Washington University, St. Louis), wrote a booklet Weidenbaum is clear. He is certain, for instance, that as a director his job is not to do the government's bidding.

Recognizing that consumerist Ralph Nader proposed national elections for board members of major corporations, Weidenbaum offers the observation that Nader should begin with his own "conglomerate."

"My candidate is former Interior Secretary James Watt," he says. "But until then I suggest that the allegiance of directors to the shareholders who elect them is fundamental."

How do you represent the shareholders and board meetings?

"I mainly ask questions," Weidenbaum confesses, and then offers his thoughts on a matter that produces consternation and even confusion in some board members.

"Of course, I try to avoid second-guessing the management. A company does not benefit from either a totally compliant board nor from one that tries to dominate the management."

"My attitude is that a strong management is cultivated by providing some guidance to it. If the company has that type of management, asking the right questions might be sufficient."

And what if management doesn't listen? Then the director finds himself in that most ticklish of all roles, that of insisting that his views be considered even if management doesn't like it. In some instances that can bring the director to communicating quietly and perhaps secretly outside the board room with fellow directors, a situation that some managements view as akin to conspiracy.

Administration opposing boost to rural electrification program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans to extend the government's role in subsidizing electric and telephone service for farm families have taken another step forward, but further movement is clouded by strong opposition from the Reagan administration.

On Thursday, the Senate Agriculture Committee breezed through legislation that would give a big financial boost to the Rural Electrification Administration, the agency which makes subsidized loans to rural power and phone systems. That sends the measure to the full Senate, where its fate is uncertain at best.

"I doubt there's anybody interested in this bill who does not recognize that there's a minefield out there," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the committee chairman.

One of the mines is the Reagan administration, which contends the program has grown to serve not just sparsely populated farming areas, but towns and suburbs as well.

"We are providing cooperative service to the suburbs of Washington, D.C.," complained Frank W. Naylor, the Agriculture Department's under secretary for rural development. He warned the bill is likely to be vetoed if it reaches President Reagan in its present form.

The administration wants to trim the costly program sharply and target its use to cooperatives that operate in truly rural areas. Those are the areas the electrification administration was created to serve in the 1930s, when investor-owned utilities shunned them as too remote to be profitable.

That early role has now been largely played out, the administration argues, adding that given huge deficit pressures on the federal budget, the expensive program would be a good place to begin saving money. The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office says the bill advanced Thursday will cost upwards of $10 billion over the next 2½ decades.

Another pitfall is Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., who has introduced an alternative bill that would force the cooperatives to shoulder a far greater share of their own costs.

The bill endorsed Thursday relieves the electrification administration, an arm of the Agriculture Department, of the obligation to pay back some $7.9 billion in Treasury loans beginning in 1993. It also raises interest rates charged to rural cooperatives to help extend the life of the electrification administration's loan fund, which is slowly going broke because it is lending money more cheaply than its cost of borrowing.

The House passed a nearly identical bill last month. Backers of the measure, led by Sen. Walter Huddleston, D-Ky., denied that it was a bailout for cooperatives and argued that it was merely a continuation of the government's decades-old commitment to provide electricity and telephone service to rural America at reasonable rates.

But the rates — fixed by law at 5 percent, or 2 percent in "hardship" cases — have in recent years fallen far behind the loan fund's cost of borrowing, eroding its assets.

Woman testifies in arcade massacre

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman who says she was like a sister to one of four workers massacred at an arcade and miniature race track has told jurors for a third time of finding the bodies the morning after the killings.

Naghme Naghavi, a 17-year-old premed student at the University of Houston, testified Thursday she and a delivery man discovered the carnage the morning of July 1.

Ms. Naghavi testified on the first day of the trial of Kenneth Ray "Pony Red" Ransom, 20, who is charged with capital murder.

Ms. Naghavi also testified against Richard James

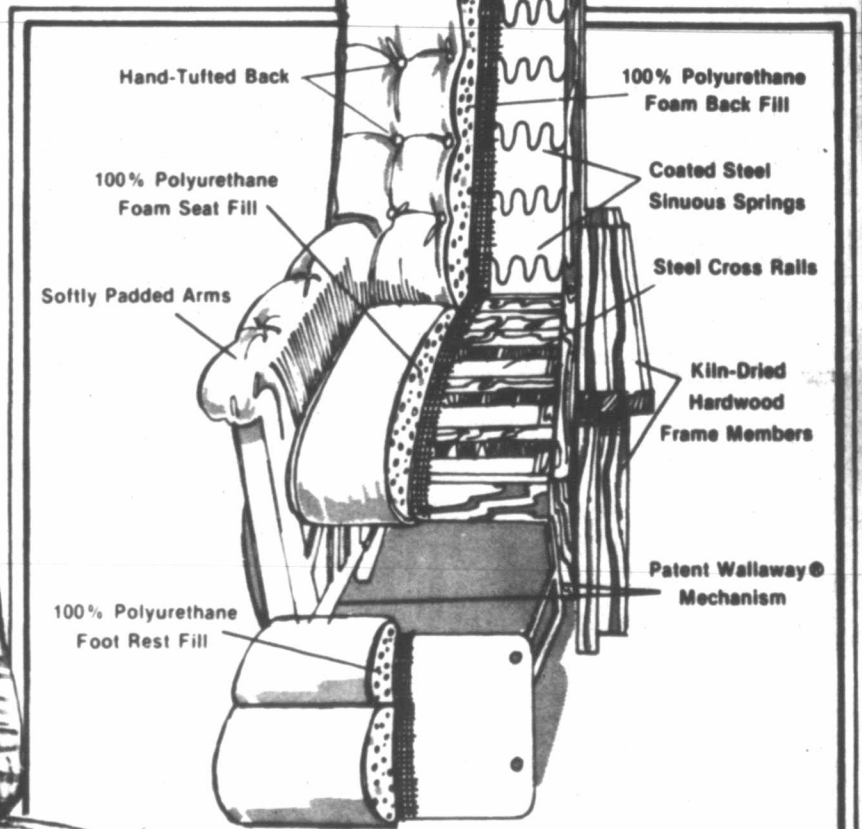

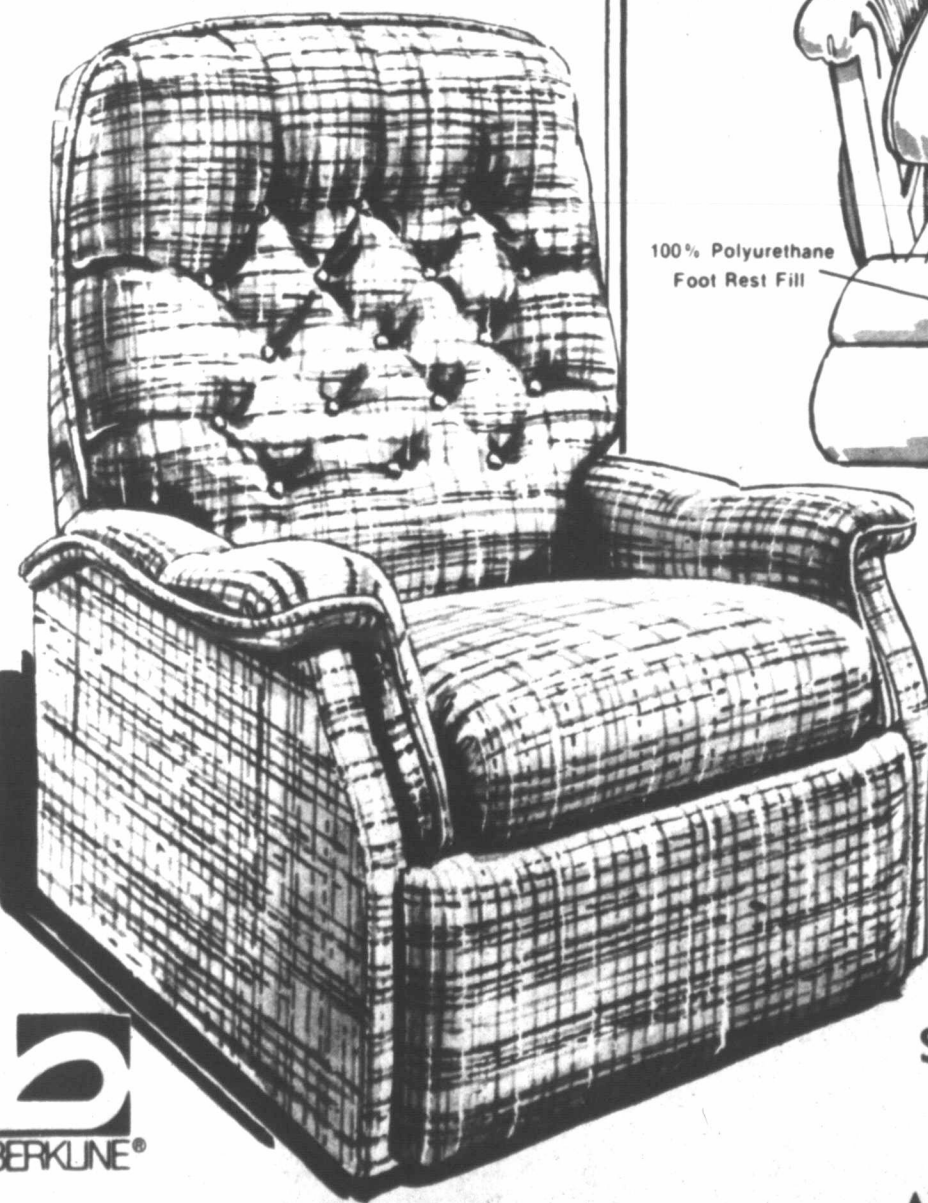

Wilkerson, 19, and James Edward "Junior Boy" Randle, 16. Wilkerson was sentenced to death Jan. 7. Randle received a life term, the maximum for a juvenile under Texas law.

Jurors in the previous trial found that Wilkerson and Randle plotted to hold up the game room and kill the workers in a robbery. Wilkerson had been fired from the business days

Queen's husband speaks out about money

By OLE DUUS
Associated Press Writer
COPENHAGEN Denmark (AP) — After more than 17 years as Denmark's prince consort, the former Count Henri Andre Marie Jean de Laborde de Monpezat still figures large sums in French, small ones in Danish.

But he now draws "almost exclusively" in Danish, and he's stirred up some Danes by dreaming publicly about a paycheck of his own.

The Frenchman who abandoned a diplomatic career to become the husband of Queen Margrethe II of Denmark brought up the issue in newspaper interviews in advance of his 50th birthday on June 11.

Prince Henrik said he simply couldn't understand why, in a modern society that hails equality of the sexes, a consort should be "in about the same position as Arab women whose suppression is considered so outrageous."

An easygoing man, Henrik said it with a laugh. But he obviously had given the matter serious thought after a long struggle to come to terms with Danish mentality and an informal yet dignified monarchical style that came naturally to Margrethe.

The 17 years have been anything but smooth sailing for the former third secretary of the French Embassy in London. He's been criticized for everything from "delusions of grandeur" to "reactionary and typically French" views that spanking is good for children.

1st Week's Rent Only *10

Rent To Own All Your Home Furnishings

Wayne's Rental

113 S. Cuyler 669-1234

Now, however, opinion polls give Henrik high marks for doing "a good job." An admiral in the navy and an army and air force general who has flown the F-16 supersonic fighter, he founded and is president of the Danish branch of the World Wildlife Fund and is a volunteer worker for the Danish Red Cross. Danish industrialists praise him for his export-promoting missions abroad.

Also available for less prestigious jobs, Henrik recently inaugurated a new monkey cage for the Copenhagen Zoo.

So Henrik apparently thought the time was right to air a grievance that he, unlike Britain's Prince Philip and Prince Claus of the Netherlands, gets no independent allowance.

"It's hard on a man not to exist financially," he said. "I get what I need, but the way I get it is unsatisfactory."

Margrethe's treasurer makes a monthly deposit of an undisclosed sum into the consort's bank account from the queen's allowance, which currently runs $2.5 million a year. Reactions to Henrik's plea for "a little more equality" were cool. Female members of parliament were decidedly unsympathetic. One advised Henrik to "adapt and share with his wife like so many wives share with their husbands." Another rejected his case as "a luxury problem."

Parliament's male majority stayed out of the potential fray. The public never learned what Margrethe thought of her husband's initiative. Asked about it, Henrik had to check himself.

"She ..." he began, then changed his mind: "I think she doesn't want to talk about it publicly. But I did discuss it with my wife."

A Copenhagen tabloid, fond of referring to Henrik as "our most prominent guest worker," launched a mock national collection under the slogan "Be Loyal to the Royal" and announced after a week that donations totaled $3.

The 44-year-old queen, the consort and their sons, Crown Prince Henrik, 16, and Prince Joachim, 15, live comfortably, dividing vacations between skiing resorts and a wine estate near the consort's parental home in southern France.

Nevertheless, a Gallup Poll indicated that 51 percent of the Danes felt Henrik deserved an allowance, but the Council for Equality of the Sexes, prodded by the media, deferred any action on "a strictly private matter."

Henrik blames Britain for the problems of consorts. In his version the title "prince consort" was invented in 1840 when Queen Victoria married German Prince Albert, because the British couldn't bear the thought of a German as "king consort."

"What is this thing, a prince consort? There is no job description for prince consort," he observed.

Although Henrik strongly denies that he wants to be king or king consort, his official title underwent a subtle change a few years ago. He is no longer Prince Henrik, but His Royal Highness the Prince. Margrethe faithfully says "the Prince and I." No Henrik.

Henrik insists that he has come to feel perfectly at ease with the Danes, saying "we" when discussing their faults or virtues. He admires the civic spirit of the Danes but believes they are xenophobes, afraid of strangers, with a streak of provincialism alien to the Latin mind. He also has found a strong disinclination to "venture out of great intellectual depths."

A well-read man, Henrik is known to be a good piano player, creates abstract sculptures which few have been allowed to glimpse, and writes French poetry whose meaning escapes most of his adopted countrymen. A volume entitled "Chemin Faisante" (Under Way), of which 150 copies were printed and circulated privately, earned Henrik membership in a 650-year-old literary academy in Toulouse, France. He said recently he wouldn't mind if he were published — after his death.

Reagan on stage in Europe

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was playing to American voters and worried Europeans when he proposed that the United States and the Soviet Union discuss a pledge against using force in Europe.

But he was also trying in his visit to Ireland to break the deadlock in nuclear arms talks by seizing on what initially was a Soviet idea. In effect, Reagan is willing to consider renouncing force in Europe if the Soviets accept various American proposals to lessen tensions, primarily by lowering the risk of surprise attack.

In the past, when the Soviets offered to discuss a no-force pledge, the United States dismissed the idea as superfluous since in signing the U.N. charter nearly 40 years ago member nations renounced force to settle disputes.

The Soviets have called for mutual pledges by the Warsaw Pact and NATO. But only a few days before his Dublin speech, Reagan said there was no point to it since NATO is dedicated to peace anyhow.

His turnaround was so subtle, tucked into a speech in which he reshaped his overall arms control policy, some of the early press accounts overlooked the offer.

It isn't surprising that Reagan chose his trip to Europe to show new interest in an old Kremlin idea. The Europeans are worried about the stalemate in U.S.-Soviet negotiations and are witnessing a surge in missile deployment by the superpowers. The Dutch are not the only allies edgy about the sullen relationship between Washington and Moscow. They live precariously in the shadow of Soviet SS-20s and American cruises.

Reagan wanted to demonstrate he cares. In saying he would like to "reach out" to the Soviets to reduce tensions, the president also had a clear political goal.

He will need the support of more than hard-line conservatives in November. To win a second term, Reagan has to persuade voters in the middle of the road that he is sincere about wanting to curb the growth of nuclear weapons and achieve some accommodation with the Soviets in this nuclear age.

Pampan joins Morman voluntary mission effort

Lamar Bradley (Brad) Voyles, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Voyles of Pampa, has been called to serve an 18-month mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Elder Voyles reported to the Missionary Training Center (MTC) at Provo, Utah, on April 19 for eight weeks of training in the Portuguese language in preparation for serving in the Sao Paulo North Brazil Mission.

He will depart from Salt Lake City, Utah, on June 19 for Brazil to serve his mission.

Latter-day Saint missionaries receive no pay for their mission labors. Instead, they are supported by money previously earned and saved or by money provided by their families.

The church presently has more than 30,000 missionaries throughout the world who serve voluntarily in fulltime teaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Voyles graduated from Pampa High School in 1983. In his senior year he was class president and president of the Concert Choir. He was also a member of the Harvester football team and the track team.

He attended Ricks College at Rexburg, Idaho, for the fall semester of 1983. After his mission, Elder Voyles intends to attend Brigham Young University at Provo.

First Pentecostal to burn mortgages Sunday

Members of the First Pentecostal Church, 1700 Alcock, will observe Pentecost Sunday with a burning of mortgages at the 11 a.m. worship service Sunday.

Rev. Albert Maggard, pastor, will lead the congregation in the burning of the mortgages. Pastor Maggard and the trustees of the church have decided members should participate in the event. The mortgages will be cut into pieces, with each one present in the congregation having the privilege of burning a part.

The remodeled church building and adjacent properties purchased for further expansion will be dedicated to the Lord at the service.

Special speaker for the morning service will be Rev. Mrs. Louva Kersey, widely known as an outstanding leader and inspiring preacher, Rev. Maggard said.

Following the service, boys and girls of the church will conduct a balloon launch at noon. "A thousand balloons will soar into the skies above Pampa to tell all finders that God and the people at First Pentecostal Holiness Church love them," the pastor said.

Lunch will be served under the trees at the back of the property west of the church.

To conclude the day of celebration, the evening service at 6 p.m. will be entirely musical, featuring old campmeeting and convention type songs and hymns. Various groups and individuals will sing.

Pastor Maggard said, "It's with real joy in the Lord that we celebrate several victories Sunday. We invite all members, former members and other friends to join us in worship and thanksgiving."

Annual CME regional conference in Pampa

The Northwest Texas Annual Conference of Christian Methodist Episcopal Churches will be hosted in Pampa Monday through Friday at St. Mark CME Church, 406 Elm.

Approximately 200 pastors and delegates from various cities in the Lubbock and Abilene District and the Wichita and Odessa District are expected to attend the business sessions and services, according to Rev. H. R. Johnson, local pastor.

The conference sessions will open at 10 a.m. Monday with the Right Rev. C. D. Coleman, presiding bishop, in charge.

Others presiding for the conference will be Rev. Jonah Parker, presiding elder of the Lubbock and Abilene District; Rev. Homer L. Paceby, presiding elder of the Wichita and Odessa District; Rev. Johnson, host pastor, and Mrs. Ruthenia Morgan, secretary.

Business sessions will be held daily during the week, with preaching services daily at noon and special services at 7:30 p.m. A special communion service will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

The conference is expected to end about 2 p.m. Friday, Rev. Johnson said.

Bishop Coleman also will preside at the official dedication of St. Mark's in a special service at 3 p.m. Sunday. He will be the guest speaker and dedicate the local church.

Rev. Johnson said all CME churches are officially dedicated, but the local church has not had its dedication previously.

The public is invited to attend the dedicatory service and the sessions and services of the annual conference, Rev. Johnson said.

Choir to be at McLean church

McLEAN - Spirit Wind 1984 will be performing at First United Methodist Church in McLean at 8 p.m. Sunday.

The choir is a select group of United Methodist young people from churches all over the Panhandle and West Texas areas, chosen from more than 70 who have auditioned this past year. The members are representative young people from churches in the Northwest Texas United Methodist Conference.

The program of music will include selections from different periods of church history and styles of music. Songs range from musical compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach and Giuseppe Pitoni to Stephen Schwartz, composer and writer of the Broadway musical, "Godspell."

The concert is free to the public. Those who wish to contribute to a love offering will be given an opportunity to do so, however.

Protection

The signal light is man's guide to safer travel. However, they protect only as they are obeyed.

The Bible is God's Signal Light and guide for man's path through life.

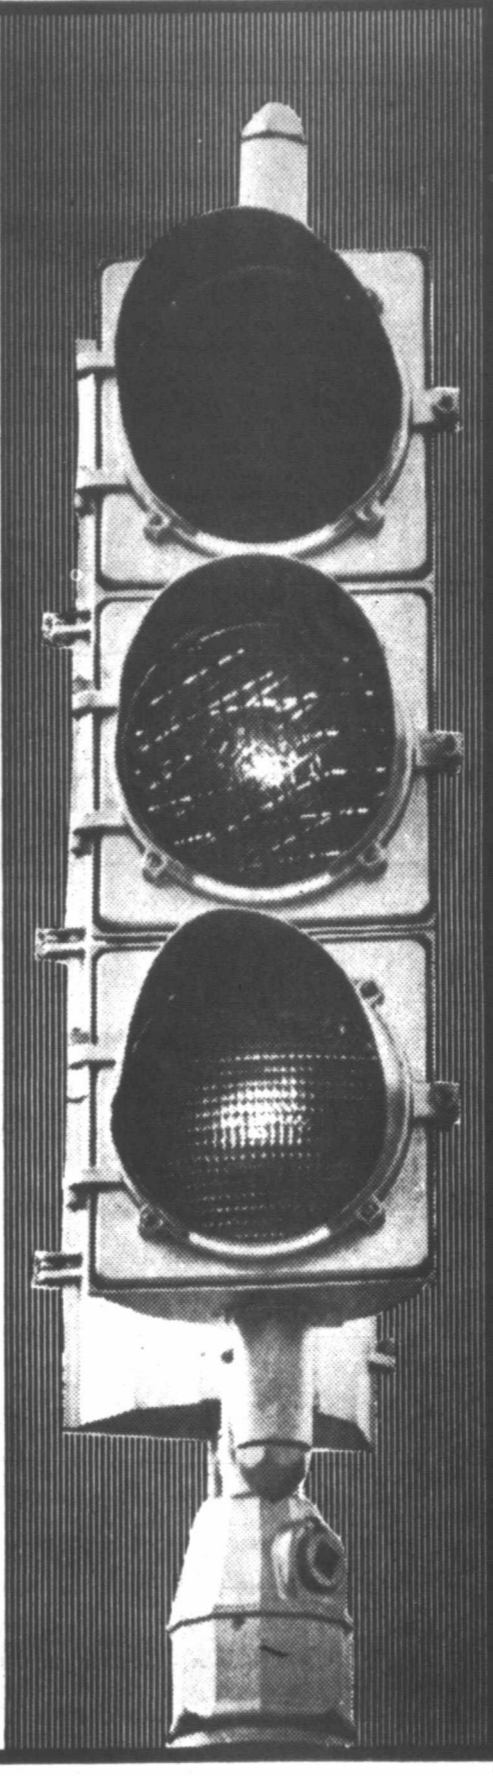

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

Through study of God's word, we learn His will for our life, and He will lead in paths of righteousness. ATTEND CHURCH

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Dear Abby Army wife shares secrets of a family on the march

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Unhappy in Minnesota," the woman who was so upset about the moving required by her husband's job, really struck a nerve with me. It's a good thing she didn't marry a career Army man (or Navy, Air Force or Marine, for that matter)!

My husband is a career soldier. I've always joked that we've stayed married so long because he was never home long enough to fight with.

In 15 years, we've moved 11 times. Four of these moves were trans-Atlantic moves, and he was around to help with only one of them. Our daughter went to three different kindergartens, four elementary schools, two middle schools, and she will attend at least two different high schools. (Not unusual for Army families.)

While I'm never thrilled with the thought of another move, I've learned a lot from all the moves we've made. I turned the negatives into positives.

Rule 1: Laugh a lot. No humorist could possibly invent stories as funny as the ones we've experienced. Besides, moving a lot keeps your closets cleaned out.

Rule 2: Don't view it as "leaving," view it as "going to." We have a lifetime filled with friends and experiences we never would have accumulated had we stayed put.

Rule 3: Don't wait for a new community to provide you with what you want. Get out and find it. If it's not there, create it. No job in the community? Start your own business—a nursery school or baby-sitting service. And don't turn your nose up at volunteer work. How about the shelter for battered women, the PTA, a political party, church work or even a car pool? It's a good way to be accepted and welcome in a new community.

Rule 4: Remember, "home" is an attitude. Wherever we are together is "home." My attitude sets the tone of every move. If I am enthusiastic, my family will be. A positive attitude is not always easy to assume, but it's a must.

How are my children doing? Both are straight-A students, our house overflows with their friends, and a list of their combined activities would fill another page.

My marriage? Terrific! So tell "Unhappy" to get it together. She's not alone. Nobody claims that moving a lot is easy, but it can be fantastically rewarding.

NANCY E., ARMY WIFE,
FORT HOOD, TEXAS

DEAR NANCY: Thanks for a wonderful letter. Your husband is lucky, and so are your children.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ONLY ONE PERSON IN WORCESTER, MASS.: I am reminded of a short but meaningful poem from the play, "For Heaven's Sake" by Helen Kromer:

One man awake
Can awaken another.
The second can waken his next-door brother.
The three awake can rouse the town,
By turning the whole place
upside down.
And the many awake, make such a fuss,
They finally awaken the rest of us.
One man up with the dawn in his eyes—multiplies.

Eagle seed applique receives rave reviews

By STEVIE BALDWIN

At the risk of sounding insane, I'd like to report 200 flying bean bags. Before someone has me hauled off, let me explain. For two weeks now, the birds in my neighborhood have been flying only inches above ground. I wasn't overly concerned until I noticed they had to be jump-started to even get going.

If anyone else noticed this oddity, no one bothered to admit it. Then the mystery solved itself: My youngest son had been treating these low riders to large doses of dried beans. He had decided that no living creature should be reduced to eating worms on a regular basis.

Because Mark has such a way with beans, I knew he'd appreciate the eagle seed applique pictured here. It was my clever little way of letting him know that he'd never live down this particular episode.

Much to my surprise, the eagle wall decoration got rave reviews. It's made from unshelled sunflower seeds, dried lima beans, unpopped popcorn and glue. Seed applique is one of the easiest and least expensive ways to keep creative hands happy and to add a decorative touch to a neglected wall.

Our illustrated plans make this simple craft even easier. Eagle Seed Applique plans include a full-size, iron-on pattern for the eagle, plus complete instructions for applying and finishing. Also included is a full-size, iron-on pattern for a pair of geese. To order, please specify Project No. 1240-4. Also available is Project No. 1228-2, which includes full-size, iron-on patterns for a seed applique hen, rooster, frog, butterfly, mushroom, owl and duck.

Send $3.95 for either plan, or save money and receive both for $6 by specifying Project No. 3368-2. Our full-color catalog features hundreds of additional fun-to-make craft and woodworking projects and is available for $2.95. Mail your order to Makin' Things, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 159, Bixby, Okla., 74068.

To make the eagle seed applique wall decoration, collect the types and colors of dried edibles you wish to use and work out a basic scheme. You'll need a decoupage board or a piece of heavy cardboard, the desired size of the finished project. You can stain or paint the board, or cover it with fabric.

Draw the design of your choice onto the center of the board. Spread glue over the entire area of the design and place each seed, bean or whatever you use, individually in place. Avoid short cuts such as dumping the materials randomly, as you will undoubtedly get tacky-looking results.

Try to place each piece so they all point in the same direction. You may want to use lines of contrasting pieces for the outlines of various areas. You'll have better luck if you use a toothpick to move the seeds into the desired spots.

Allow the glue to dry for 24 hours. Then seal the entire surface with a coat of diluted white glue or clear acrylic spray and allow to dry for an additional 24 hours.

Attach a wire hanger to the pack of the picture and your eagle is ready for take-off!

Gena on Genealogy

By GENA WALLS
Many of our ancestors left the New England states traveling south. When searching from them we tend to forget that the road was traveled in both directions. The southern part of ILLINOIS during the early 1800s was occupied by settlers coming from North Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky. Others came from Maryland and Pennsylvania and this pattern continued for several years.

It is difficult to obtain information from ILLINOIS as the state law permits release of records only by certified copy to relatives. Counties with more than 70,000 residents have a probate court, while others use the county clerk for probate transactions and wills.

The War Veterans Graves Registration Files can be an excellent aid if you are certain the veteran is buried in Illinois. The file is alphabetical by veterans' names and by war with a cemetery listing. Each card gives the name of veteran, serial and claim number, rank, organization, enlistment, discharge, the date and place of birth and death, the town, county and cemetery where buried including a grave description and name and address of next of kin. Write The War Veterans Graves Registration Files, 221 W. Jefferson St., Springfield, Ill., 62705, for more information.

Father's Day could be celebrated this year by giving that special person a "Memory Book." Ask relatives and friends to write about an interesting event that included Dad. Contact neighbors, former school teachers, doctors, anyone that might contribute.

Ask for details including date, place, age, occasion, etc. You might want to organize the material by date or into sections by people or location. Leave some pages for future entries and possibly room for Dad's comments to each memory.

Have fun! I think children enjoy this as much if not more than adults. Everyone can be involved, making it a family activity.

Swindell hurls Texas past Arizona

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Drill Arizona State coach Jim Brock tried to make it sound as if he doesn't like Greg Swindell. But actually, Brock would like to have a pitcher just like the freshman left-hander who helped Texas beat the Sun Devils 8-4 in the College World Series Thursday.

"The guy's a jerk," Brock said following the battle between the only two unbeaten teams in the Series. "That was more hits. I think than anybody has gotten off him: we got a lead on him. (he) had every reason for any decent, law-abiding freshman to fold."

"Obviously he didn't," Swindell struggled through the first four innings, when Arizona State broke out to a 4-2 lead. But the 19-year-old from Houston shut out the explosive Sun Devils over the final five frames to improve his record to 14-1.

Brock's club entered the contest averaging over eight runs per game, and the Sun Devils had tied a Series record by scoring 23 times in their previous outing. They managed 10 hits against Swindell, but the southpaw gave up no home runs and walked only one.

"I was pumped up after the third or fourth inning, and when I get pumped up I throw a lot better," said Swindell, who relied primarily on fastballs.

A crowd of 12,469 watched the defending national champions, 60-12, take the lead for good when their first four batters in the fifth inning scored. David Wrzesinski's two-run double off the left-field wall put the Longhorns ahead 5-4.

Wrzesinski had grounded out with the bases loaded in his previous at-bat.

"That bothered me a little bit," the Longhorns' left fielder said. "I haven't been coming through with men on base. I was just trying to relax that last time."

Bill Bates and Doug Hodo followed Wrzesinski's double with RBI singles. Those were two of 15 singles Texas collected against five Arizona State pitchers, including loser

Kendall Carter, 10-2.

"You have to give them credit for handling the bat awfully well," Brock said.

The Sun Devils, 55-19, were scheduled to face Cal State Fullerton, 63-20, this afternoon. Texas was to meet Oklahoma State, 60-14, at 7:10 p.m. CDT. All but Texas have one loss in the double-elimination event.

"With our hitting, I figured I could give up nine or 10 runs and win," said Swindell, who became the first pitcher in the 1984 Series to go the distance.

Five Longhorns got at least two hits, with first baseman Rusty Richards rapping four of Texas's singles and Dennis Cook three.

The Sun Devils scored a pair of early runs, but three singles in the second inning resulted in a run for Texas as Jamie Doughty's RBI single knocked out Arizona State starter Mike Thorpe.

Cook's two-out RBI single in the third tied the score, 2-2.

Arizona State, 55-19, bunched four singles to score twice in the fourth. Oddity McDowell drove in the second run with a two-out single.

Texas's victory assured the Longhorns of a berth in the championship final, either Saturday or Sunday.

"I'm not really surprised we're here," Texas coach Cliff Gustafson said of the Longhorns' beating Arizona State to become the only team still unbeaten in the double-elimination tournament.

"I knew this would be a tough game because they're a great ball club. But with Swindell pitching and us hitting the way we're capable, I knew we had a chance to beat them," Gustafson said.

If Texas in its game against Oklahoma State, 60-14, at 7:10 p.m. CDT today, three teams would remain with one loss. Texas would get a bye Saturday, and the championship game would be Sunday.

Should Texas win tonight, the Longhorns would play the winner of the Arizona State-Cal State Fullerton game, scheduled for 4:10 p.m.

DUGOUT ERUPTS — Members of the Texas baseball team empty the dugout after the Longhorns defeated Arizona State, 8-4, Thursday to become the only unbeaten team in the College World Series. Texas pitcher Greg Swindell went the distance to lift his mound record to 14-1. (AP Laserphoto)

Swale favored in Belmont Stakes

By DICK JOYCE
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Trainer Billy Turner, not one for brash statements, is hoping Play On can make it a three-way split in the 1984 Triple Crown races by winning Saturday's richest Belmont Stakes.

"I think he'll run very well," said the 34-year-old former steeplechase jockey who was satisfied with the Welcome Farm colt being the third early-line choice at 4-1 among the 11 3-year-olds entered in the 1 1/2-mile Belmont.

Turner said he expected Preakness winner Gate Dancer and Kentucky Derby winner Swale to be favored in that order with Play On rated third.

After Thursday's post position draw, the Belmont Park oddsmaker made Swale the early 5-2 favorite with Gate Dancer the second choice at 3-1 and Play On next.

Turner tasted Triple Crown glory in 1977, saddling Seattle Slew, the only horse ever to win the Triple Crown with an unbeaten record.

But he was fired by owners Mickey Taylor and Dr. Jim Hill before the year was out, and hadn't saddled a horse in one of the classics since until putting the lightly-raced Play On in the May 19 Preakness.

Play On finished a fast-closing second, 1 1/2 lengths behind record-shattering Gate Dancer in the 1 1/2-mile Preakness.

The extra three furlongs in the Belmont could benefit the son of Stop the Music.

"I expect the pattern to be about the same," said Turner. "I expect Gate Dancer to be leading at the sixteenth pole."

He wouldn't go as far as to say he thought Play On would catch Gate Dancer, but the implication was there.

The colt, owned by a group of Pennsylvanians headed by retired builder Robert Winn, won the one-mile Withers at Belmont May 9 by one length. He has never been worse than second in five career starts. Jean-Luc Samyn is the rider from the No. 1 post position.

Meanwhile, trainer Woody Stephens promises that racing fans will see a different Swale than ran in the Preakness.

"He's the horse to beat," said Stephens after the son of Seattle Slew registered a final workout of 48.35 for the half-mile.

Laffit Pincay Jr., who rode Stephens' horses, Caveat last year and Conquistador Cielo in 1982, is trying for his third successive Belmont win.

Stephens said Swale's fast workout before the Preakness was reason for the colt's seventh place finish, his only time out of the money in 13 starts.

With Angel Cordero Jr. aboard, Gate Dancer will be running without the diuretic Lasix, which is banned in New York. The colt ran in the Derby, when he was disqualified from fourth to fifth for interference, and Preakness on the drug.

The 116th Belmont field in post position order with odds after Play On: 2. Coax Me Chad, 20-1; 3. Silent King, 12-1; 4. Gate Dancer, 3-1; 5. Minstrel Star, 30-1; 6. Swale, 5-2; 7. Romantic Tradition, 30-1; 8. Morning Bob, 8-1; 9. Exaltic, 15-1; 10. Back Bay Barrister, 10-1; and 11. Pine Circle, 30-1.

CBS will handle the radio and television broadcasts. Post time: 5:38 p.m. EDT.

Lakers survive mugging, prepare for another war game with Celtics

BOSTON (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, feeling they were mugged on their home court, expect no less from the Celtics with the National Basketball Association Championship Series back in Boston.

"Maybe that is their type of game," said Laker center Swen Nater. "I'm sure we'll see more of that in Boston. There's no doubt it will be a war," when the deadlocked series resumes tonight with Game 5.

Wednesday night in the Forum, the Celtics found the winning tactics — hit their shots, the offensive boards and the Lakers — to cool Los Angeles' blazing fast break, and gain a 129-125 overtime victory.

Both Boston victories in the best-of-seven series have been in overtime.

"Some of the fouls were a little brutal, but that was the way we had to play," said Boston forward Cedric Maxwell. "We had lounged around in the sun (in Los Angeles) and we just became too relaxed, too laid back, too Hollywood. I said before that we'd be tougher, more aggressive, and that we'd win the game and the series."

Midway through the third quarter, Kevin McHale stopped a Laker fastbreak with an arm to the neck of Kurt Rambis, who went sprawling as both benches emptied.

"I tried to grab him," McHale said. "I didn't mean to body-slam him. There are other guys on that team I'd like to body-slam but not him. He came up swinging, rightfully so. I just backed off."

About a minute after that incident, Boston's Larry Bird fouled Kareem Abdul-Jabbar while they battled for a rebound. Bird was hit by Abdul-Jabbar's elbow and they traded heated remarks.

Bird, who had 29 points and 21 rebounds, also backed Los Angeles' Michael Cooper into the semi-finals.

A pair of Midland women, Ann Coombes and Kelle Mobley, advanced to the championship flight finals with semi-final wins Thursday.

Miss Coombes scored a 5 and 4 win over 1982 champion Penny Hughes of Farwell, while Miss Mobley reached the finals with a 3 and 2 decision over Odessa's Nancy Swann.

row of photographers as the Celtic tried to put the ball into play.

"Boston's whole strategy," said Laker James Worthy, "was to throw us off our game by turning it into a rumble-tumble contest. It affected our concentration."

"We wanted to be physical," said McHale. "We wanted to play good, hard-nosed basketball. This was more our type of game. We really banged the boards."

After being out-rebounded 63-44 Sunday in a 137-104 rout that gave the Lakers a 2-1 advantage, and prompted Bird to call his team sissies, Boston enjoyed a 52-46 edge in that category Wednesday night.

Their 27-12 bulge in offensive rebounds was even more pronounced and helped the Celtics take 26 more field-goal attempts than the Lakers.

Perhaps the most important offensive rebound of the game was by Robert Parish, the center who had been criticized for his subpar play in the championship series.

Trailing 113-108 in the final minute, he followed up Dennis Johnson's miss and missed himself. But he fought off a group of Lakers to get the rebound, score and draw the foul.

His three-point play cut the lead to 113-111 with 39 seconds left in the fourth quarter.

"That was a great play," Maxwell said of Parish's

Lowrey, Maddox place

Lee Lowrey of Pampa won the calf roping with a time of 11:88 Thursday in the opening go-around of the Tri-State High School Rodeo Association Finals in Amarillo.

Lowrey, who is currently fourth in the all-around race, was also third in ribbon roping with a time of 10:312.

In the girls' division, Lisa Maddox of Pampa placed sixth in pole bending with a time of 20:223.

The second go-around is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Amarillo Fair Park Coliseum.

Biggs: stronger and smarter

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)— Tyrell Biggs, a two-time world super heavyweight champion, said Thursday that Cuban slugger Teofilo Stevenson should be thankful his country withdrew from the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

"He's going to be lucky he didn't have to go to the Olympics," said Biggs, who has never beaten Stevenson. "It's a good thing he won't be there. He couldn't carry my bags."

Biggs, of Philadelphia, was knocked out the first time he fought the Cuban Olympic champion but lost 3-2 in a split decision the second time.

"I wanted revenge and it's somewhat disappointing that Cuba withdrew," said Biggs. "I think I won my last fight with him (in February) convincingly."

Cuba is one of 14 countries participating in a Soviet-led boycott that will not be attending the Los Angeles Games.

Biggs, who has a career amateur record of 105-6, said, "I'm a stronger and smarter fighter than I ever have been. It's evident my skills are paying off at the right time."

Using the jab almost exclusively, Biggs outpointed Hassan Shabbaz of the U.S. Army in a unanimous decision Wednesday night.

Biggs meets Michael Williams in Saturday's semifinals of the U.S. Olympic boxing trials.

"Williams is big and strong but I'm not impressed with his legwork or mobility," said Biggs.

Williams stopped Kimmuel Odum at 2:31 in the third round of their quarter-final match.

Biggs has turned into more of a dancer and a boxer in the trials and shunned the toe-to-toe exchanges which many fans associate with the super heavyweights.

"Right now the object is to hit and not get hit," Biggs said. "That's why they have the white portion of the glove. I'm going to use my speed and reflexes and mobility. There's no way I'm going to stand toe-to-toe."

He said he may change his style when he turns professional.

"When I turn pro, the punches will accumulate over five or six rounds but three rounds is just not long enough to go for the KO," he said.

He said winning the gold medal would be "the highlight of my life. I'm very confident I can win it."

Asked who could be his biggest roadblock should he get to Los Angeles, Biggs named Italy's Francesco Damiani.

"I think Damiani will be the one," Biggs said. "I beat him twice but I wasn't at my best. I know it won't be a cakewalk."

Biggs admitted he was probably not colorful enough for many fans who expect super heavyweights to swing from the heels.

"I'm just a nervous, shy guy without a lot of charisma," Biggs said. "I guess I'll have to start being a hot dog and do a shuffle or something so the fans can go crazy."

Lloyd waltzes to French Open finals

PARIS (AP)— In the women's singles at the French Open tennis tournament, the queen is the pretender.

Chris Evert Lloyd, defending champion and a record-tying, five-time winner on the red clay at Paris' Roland Garros stadium, is seeded No. 2. Martina Navratilova, despite being ousted here in last year's fourth round, is top-seeded and considered virtually unbeatable.

But the apparent contradiction is buried under an avalanche of available evidence.

Navratilova, a Czechoslovakian-born naturalized American, has lost only two matches in the last two years. She has dominated Lloyd recently — 10-0 in their last meetings. And, always intimidating, Navratilova may be invincible here now that she's going for the Grand Slam.

A win in Paris would make Navratilova only the fifth player in history — and only the third woman — to win Wimbledon and the U.S., Australian and French Opens in a row.

Rain marred Lloyd's match Thursday and wiped out the scheduled contest between Navratilova and No. 3 seed Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia. Instead, they met today.

Following the women's semifinals were the men's semis. No. 2 seed Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia played fourth-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden and top seed John McEnroe met fellow American Jimmy Connors, seeded No. 3.

Lloyd cruised to a 6-0, 6-0 victory Thursday over 17-year-old American Camille Benjamin. Unranked, the Bakersfield, Calif., left-hander had a nightmarish match. Lloyd, ever the professional, played steadily and simply let Benjamin's mistakes pile up.

The victory extended to 51 her record of winning singles matches at the French Open. Earlier in the tournament, she broke Bjorn Borg's old record of 49.

But everyone's eyes remained on Navratilova.

Lloyd, however, put on her game face for reporters, sidestepping any implications of defeatism and concentrating on winning.

"I don't want to play the match to stop Martina from winning the Grand Slam," she told reporters. "I'm playing for myself. It would be great for my career to win this tournament for a (record) sixth time."

Soccer camp is scheduled June 28

Former professional soccer player Hank Liotart will hold a soccer camp for boys and girls ages 6-16 with the first session scheduled for June 18-22 at the Amarillo Indoor Soccer Center.

Players will receive personal instruction in all aspects of the game during the 15-hour course. The clinics will be held indoors at the soccer center (Old Sports Arena, County Fairgrounds on East 10th), but some instruction will be held outdoors as well.

The schedule for the camp will be as follows: June 18-22—under 8; June 25-29—under 10; Aug. 6-10—under 12; and Aug. 13-17—under 14. Some players will be invited to participate in an advanced clinic Aug. 20-24. Sessions will run from 8:30 to 11:30 in the morning.

For registration forms and further information, contact Hank Liotart, 721 S. Roberts, Amarillo, Tex. 79102.

University to computerize

HOUSTON (AP) — The University of Houston is hoping to become the nation's most computerized public college by entering into a deal worth as much as $70 million with Digital Equipment Corp., the world's second-largest computer maker.

"We are exceedingly pleased and eager to assume this pioneering role in charting new horizons for education in years to come," Charles Bishop, president of the 44,000-student University of Houston System said Thursday.

But the school still needs to find some way to raise as much as $35 million to gain the full benefits of the four-year project, school officials acknowledged.

"We are going to have to raise some money," Bishop said. "There's no good way to tell you how much money the university will have to spend. But it will be more than $5 million or less than $35 million." The money will come through fundraising, legislative appropriations or other sources.

Depending on how much money the school raises, Digital is granting up to $35 million in hardware and technical assistance.

The project is supposed to enable the school's administrators, staff and students to share a system for such tasks as word processing, library access, research, and analysis to assist in classwork.

"The goal of the project is that if computers are to be useful, you don't have to be a computer expert to use them," Richard Van Horn, chancellor of the school's main campus said.

Computers will not be installed in classrooms, but will be placed around the school's four campuses — all of them within 30 miles of downtown Houston — as "work stations."

In addition, students who already have home computers, including most non-Digital brands, will be able to use a telephone link to gain access to the school system, Van Horn said.

Up to 4,500 Digital computers, ranging from personal computers to industry-standard systems, will be installed, according to the university.

"Most of these experiments have been carried out in small, private schools," Van Horn said. "This will be a model for a large number of schools in the United States."

Negotiations between the university and Digital have been going on for six months. No contract has yet been signed although the two sides have reached a "formal statement of understanding," Bishop said.

According to plans, the first installations will go to faculty involved in research. Another early system will be made available to the school's college of engineering. It would not be until the fall of 1985 before computing facilities for students would become available, Van Horn said.

Three lakes bring changes to East Texas hamlet

By MARISA COOK
Longview Morning Journal
BLODGETT, Texas (AP) — At first glance, the tiny, reddish-brown frame building resembles an old general store — plain and simple.

But the door — which serves as a barrier between today and yesterday — opens to a different era as a melody reminiscent of a late, late show soothes diners who frequent Benson's Crossing Restaurant on FM 127 at FM 21 in Blodgett.

Benson's Crossing is only one of the small number of restaurants and shops springing up amid the piney woods surrounding Lake Bob Sandlin, Lake Cypress Springs and Monticello Lake between Pittsburg, Mount Pleasant and Mount Vernon.

All three lakes offer sportsmen a variety of marinas complete with fishing barges, cabins and boat ramps. In fact, Monticello holds the 1980 state bass record.

Before the lakes were built, all since 1960, the unincorporated neighborhood of Blodgett was a ranching and farming community including a saw mill and a syrup mill.

"I know the man who the community was named for," said old-timer Lewis F. Benson, whose relatives also were Blodgett pioneers. "He was old man John Blodgett."

"I'm not sure that John was his first name. I do know he had a son named John," Benson, 86, recalled. "He used to run a little country store. At that time mail came to his store. But I don't recall how. There weren't any mail carriers at that time."

Born and reared in Blodgett, Benson attended school in a one-room schoolhouse.

"The school district was a named Liberty," he said. "My daddy was a trustee. He had a general store here."

Benson said the community not only had a general store and a school, but also a Baptist church and a Church of Christ. Although the school no longer exists, the two churches remain.

After completing courses at Liberty School, Benson attended a subcollege and taught at the nearby Monticello School, as well as Union School in Camp County, later, Benson served as superintendent for Gladewater schools around 1919 and 1920.

Becoming tired of "taking care of everybody's kids," Benson graduated from East Texas State in Commerce and began studying law at the University of Texas where he twice graduated.

After Benson received a law degree from Blackstone College of Law, he took up practicing law in Mount Pleasant. From there, he went on to become Galveston County's first district attorney.

"I practiced law in Galveston for nearly 20 years," he said.

Not only does this country boy have a prestigious law career, he also has a fascinating military career.

As Benson neared retirement, he decided to return to his home place.

Although Benson isn't sure how and when Blodgett originated, he does know a lot of the history surrounding it.

"In 1919, a storm came through here and blew the whole darn thing away. There was a store sitting right here (Benson Crossing Restaurant). And half of this store was torn off and canned goods were out on the ground," he said.

"The Blodgett home was destroyed, as well as several of the homes and the churches."

At that time, the community was basically a farming community, Benson said.

"This country raised mostly cotton and corn," he said. "Now they would hardly know what a cotton plant looks like."

Although Blodgett hasn't lost its country charm, the lakes and industry are changing the area and affecting the economy here.

"I live on the old home place — the place where I was born and reared," Benson said. "It used to sit on about 115 acres. Now there's only five acres and water covers the rest."

Benson's grandfather, Jesse Benson, and great-uncle, Wiley Benson, moved to Texas from Tennessee. The two pioneers liked the looks of the East Texas pines and rolling hills and decided to call this area home.

"They bought several hundred acres from the state," Benson said. Benson said at the time his grandfather bought the land, the Cypress Creek made travel by wagon somewhat difficult.

"They didn't have any bridges then," he said. "My grandfather built a raft and he'd carry wagons and teams across by pulling this raft across that water."

"The water wasn't deep," he said. "But a wagon couldn't go through it. And he had an old cow horn so when he wasn't there, people needing to get across could blow that horn and he'd hear them and come take them right on across."

The restaurant, Benson's Crossing, was named after Jesse Benson and his famed crossing.

In the early 1940s, Jesse's grandson (Benson's brother) Earnest Benson and his wife Sudie opened Benson's Grocery. Later, it was closed and used as a hay barn, until Earnest and Sudie's daughter, Marie Wilbanks, reopened it for use as a restaurant.

Mrs. Wilbanks said she opened the restaurant in memory of her father, as well as her great-grandfather's crossing which remains underneath Lake Bob Sandlin.

Now, Mrs. Wilbank's son, Ricky, along with his wife, Vicki, operate the restaurant which attracts area residents, as well as businessmen, from East Texas cities on a regular basis. It also serves as a diner to visiting campers and fishermen.

Several of the wooden tables, a lovely old grandfather clock and a china cabinet, were handmade by Benson.

Down the road apiece from Benson's Crossing on FM 21 is a seafood restaurant, Dip Net, which also houses a bottery. And next door to the Dip Net is a gift shop.

Also along FM 21 and FM 127 are several convenience stores separated by a few farms and pastures of cattle.

But one pasture doesn't house cattle, instead it's home to Tim Moore's log cabin and gun shop.

"It helps to own the land, when you go into business for yourself," Moore said. He opened his shop about a year ago.

Although Moore's gun haven appears to be out in the middle of nowhere, he said he gets a lot of out-of-town business. "People come here from all over Texas," he said.

"I usually get a lot of customers from Dallas. My prices usually beat the dickens out of those big city prices," he said.

Along with gun sales, Moore offers gun repair — plus, he builds replicas of historical guns such as Davey Crockett's "Betsy" and Hawkins rifles once used by Rocky Mountain fur trappers. Moore's interest in guns began in his early teens when he collected guns. He also has an avid interest in the history of Fort Sherman which is part of Blodgett's history.

According to Moore, Fort Sherman was built (where FM 21 crosses Cypress Creek) as a refuge from the Indians who traveled the nearby Cherokee Trace through Texas to Oklahoma.

"I really like it out here," Moore said. "I built a shop to look like something I always wanted to see — sort of like a hunting lodge."

"On a cold day, I can build a fire and enjoy a hot cup of coffee," he said. "And, I figured when business is slow, I could just sit here and be comfortable."

With new business flourishing and attracting a lot of out-of-towners, Blodgett is changing.

Woman jogger gives chase

AUSTIN (AP) — A 5-foot-10 woman jogger gave chase when a 5-foot-8 man who she said looked "like a nerd" confronted her with a knife, authorities say.

"By chasing him, she was able to get a better description of him. I also believe she would have hurt him if she had caught him," said Curtis Weeks, spokesman for the Travis County sheriff's office.

Weeks said Thursday that the 29-year-old runner was jogging on a road west of Austin about 9:15 p.m. Wednesday when she noticed a parked black car which earlier had passed her several times.

A man was standing further down the road, Weeks said. "She thought he had car trouble and started toward him. When she got to him, she saw he had a knife in his hand," he said.

However, Weeks said, "She is an active person who jogs regularly, and she took off after him. He came pretty close to being the victim himself."
