

McLean bank closed, sold, then reopened

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

"Good morning, McLean Bank of Commerce."

The employee who answered the phone in a cheerful voice this morning at the only bank in McLean gave no indication that just Thursday her employer was called the American National Bank or that more than a change in name had taken place.

Shortly after 3 p.m. Thursday, 50 federal officials swarmed on the bank, declared it insolvent and ordered it closed.

Working into the wee hours of the night Thursday, the federal auditors and officials went through the bank's books, approved its sale and reopened the bank under the new name this morning.

The U.S. Comptroller of the Currency closed the bank because of bad loans related to business, agriculture and oil.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation announced that it would guarantee all $13 million of the bank's deposits, regardless of the amount.

Bank examiners had reportedly been investigating the McLean bank for the past five weeks, but Thursday's sudden closure took the town's residents and bank customers by surprise.

The first indication of the government's action came when the federal banking officials in three-piece suits arrived at the bank en masse, said Linda Haynes, former publisher of the McLean News and a long-time McLean resident. Haynes was across the street and watched the swarm of officials and armed guards descend on the bank.

"This entire caravan filled up the parking lot. It was the scariest thing I ever saw in my life," Haynes said.

She said guards immediately blocked the front and rear doors, while two others stood by the bank vault. Employees were reportedly locked inside and told that they couldn't leave. They were allowed one phone call, Haynes said.

Word of the bank failure spread quickly through the small town, which was recently bypassed by Interstate 40. Within 30 minutes, a large crowd had flocked to town. The curious could only peer through the windows of the locked building and read a sign posted at the night depository. The sign reported the federal comptroller's declaration of insolvency and closure of the bank.

"The phone at the (McLean) News was ringing off the wall. People were calling and saying, 'My God, we've lost our life savings. We didn't know what was going on,'" Haynes said.

"There were a lot of people in town who were concerned simply because the bank examiners had been there so long," she said, adding that the suspicions weren't strong enough to result in a "run" on the bank before the surprise announcement.

The McLean bank was established on Sept. 30, 1909. It was acquired in the late '70s by majority owner William K. Irwin of Bushland. The president of the failed bank, Lloyd Kurtz, had been named to head the operation just five months ago.

Kurtz said he inherited the problems that brought about the failure.

Kurtz had replaced Jim Allison, a 19-year American National employee and its president for those past 10 years, who resigned effective last Dec. 31. Allison cited personal reasons and new opportunities as the reasons for quitting.

The whirlwind purchase of the bank Thursday was made by a group headed by E.W. Williams Jr. of Amarillo. The group formed to buy the bank, Gray Co. Bancshares Inc., paid the FDIC a $52.515

"premium" and acquired the deposits and performing installment loans. The group also put up about $850,000 in operating capital.

The FDIC will take over the bank's bad loans. It will collect some of the overdue debts and liquidate others, an FDIC spokesman said.

"The FDIC gets the garbage. The McLean Bank of Commerce gets only the good loan portfolios," said Jeff Hacker, an FDIC attorney.

Hacker said auditors found no "smoking gun" in any certain type of bad loans leading to the bank's downfall. He said the non-performing agricultural loans

John De Lorean and his wife, Cristina Ferrare, leave the courtroom.

De Lorean found innocent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John De Lorean wept tears of joy after being acquitted of cocaine-trafficking charges, but he still faces huge unpaid legal fees, lawsuits, a bankruptcy case and a British probe of $17.5 million allegedly missing from his failed sports car company.

"Would you buy a used car from me?" the onetime millionaire automaker joked Thursday after a federal jury decided he had not conspired to distribute cocaine worth $24 million.

The British government, which poured more than $100 million into De Lorean's defunct sports car venture in Northern Ireland, issued an immediate invitation for him to answer questions about the unaccounted-for $17.5 million.

But Thursday, De Lorean was a happy man as he heard the words "not guilty" pronounced eight times in a hushed courtroom, clearing him on all counts in a cocaine conspiracy indictment.

Defense attorney Howard Weitzman called the jury's verdict a condemnation of the government's controversial

"sting" operations. He said the jury "sent out a message to the Department of Justice that you can't do to our citizens what you did to John De Lorean."

But De Lorean's future was clouded by court cases in Miami and Detroit and the ongoing British inquiry into his business dealings.

In London, legislators demanded Thursday night that the government ask De Lorean what happened to $17.5 million that a House of Commons investigative committee concluded was paid to a firm called GPD. GPD was described as a small Swiss company registered in Panama with no known assets and about which almost nothing was known.

In Miami, meanwhile, 132 investors including Sammy Davis Jr. and Roy Clark have filed a $414.7 million suit alleging De Lorean misappropriated funds intended for research and development of the gull-winged sportscar that bore his name.

In Detroit, a bankruptcy court is attempting to unravel the complex claims filed by unsecured creditors of De Lorean Motor Co., which filed for protection under federal bankruptcy laws just days before De Lorean was arrested. A creditors committee has filed liens on all of De Lorean's assets, including his homes in New Jersey, San Diego County and New York.

Civil litigation also is pending in New York state. Government prosecutors had portrayed the narcotics case against De Lorean as open and shut, supported by the best evidence possible — videotapes vividly depicting the defendant's alleged drug conspiracy.

The six men and six women found De Lorean had been illegally entrapped by FBI and Drug Enforcement Administration agents who dangled a lure of quick money before the financially besieged De Lorean as his company sank in a sea of financial woes.

The prosecutors, apparently stunned by their defeat, would say nothing more than that the outcome of the trial was a shock

PISD adopts budget

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Trustees of the Pampa Independent School District adopted an $11.8 million operating budget during its regular board meeting and budget hearing Thursday.

The new budget represents a 12.7 percent increase over the $10.4 million operating budget for 1983-1984.

Superintendent James Trusty said the major increase resulted from mandated teacher salary increases passed in House Bill 72 this summer by the Legislature.

Trusty explained that the budget committee — board members Dr. Robert Lyle, Curt Beck and Jerry Carlson — had prepared a more conservative budget of $10,775,500, representing only a 3 percent increase, before passage of HB 72 required revisions of expenditures.

Because of the impact of the bill and its mandated salary increases and Career Ladder Level 2 supplements, the committee formulated a new budget of $11,790,493 with "bottom-line figures," Trusty explained. The new budget approved last night represented a 9.4 percent increase over the budget developed earlier this summer, he said.

Trusty said about $5.2 million had been budgeted last year for instruction-level teacher salaries. Before HB 72, the 1984-1985 budget had allotted $5,287,000 for the salaries. But the state-ordered increases resulted in allotments of $5,993,000 in teacher salaries for the coming school year.

In addition, about $120,000 in career ladder supplements have been included in the operating budget, he said.

Trusty said the new budget also provided about $173,000 for construction and renovation of school facilities for projects that "have been lingering around for a number of years."

He said the board would need to consider expenditures for such items as vocational building roof repairs, $25,000 - $35,000; updating of the security systems for the schools (mainly changing locks on the doors); $4,200 - $19,000; replacing the bleachers in the Pampa High School McNeely Field House, $30,000 - $40,000; replacing the Pampa Middle School gym floors, $4,000; and constructing a livestock feeding facility for agriculture students, $50,000 - $100,000.

In addition, the district should have a building maintenance contingency fund of $25,000 to take care of emergency repairs or unexpected maintenance needs, such as possibly having to replace old boilers in a school, Trusty said.

The construction and maintenance projects costs are estimated at $151,000 to $289,000. Trusty said the board would have to consider the projects on a priority basis for the $173,000 allotted in the 1984-1985 budget.

Trusty said changes in state funding arising from HB 72 "did some serious things to us."

In 1983-1984, the district received $4,644,860. But this year, state funding will total $4,677,438, only about an additional $33,000. Trusty said.

That slight increase "won't go

Petroleum engineer testifies

Special to The Pampa News
LUBBOCK — A petroleum engineer testified Thursday that Harlow Corporation is not producing casinghead gas in its West Panhandle Field oil wells.

Clarke Gillespie, a Fort Worth consultant hired by Dorchester Gas Producing Company, said he found that Harlow has sold more than 174,800 Mcf. of gas for more than $431,000 since late 1981.

The figures on production and gross sales were obtained from reports to the state Comptroller's office and represented Harlow's activities related to production from the brown dolomite, he claimed.

Dorchester is seeking more than $500,000 in damages and a halt to Harlow's gas production from its oil wells on Section 117 south of Pampa. Harlow, the first of many independent oil operators Dorchester is suing to go to trial, contends it has a right to produce oil and, with it, casinghead gas.

Visiting District Judge Robert Montgomery has ruled that Harlow owns gas indigenous to an oil stratum and produced from there with oil. But that statutory definition of casinghead gas being used by the court remains a point for debate by both sides.

Gillespie claimed on the stand Thursday that the brown dolomite layer, into which Dorchester claims Harlow has perforated, produces only gas and no oil. Gillespie said his tests indicate the dolomite gas is "dry gas," not any type of casinghead gas coming from oil, as Harlow has claimed.

His tests showed that the conditions of the gas — specifically, its dew point — are such that it could not be in close contact with oil, as Harlow claims it is, Gillespie said.

(The dew point is the temperature at which a liquid will condense out of gas.)

Certain oil-producing qualities are absent from the brown dolomite, he said, but he noted it can produce some oil from gas. Gillespie also said the oil bailed out of Harlow's wells was not native to the brown dolomite formation. That is in line with the conclusions drawn by previous Dorchester witness Phil Moses of CORE Laboratories.

Broadus Spivey, lead Harlow attorney, tried to refute Gillespie's testimony by showing that pressure in a nearby Dorchester gas well dropped and production declined. At the same time, Harlow's oil wells produced increasing amounts of gas from the same depressurized zone.

Spivey asked Gillespie to figure how much actual surface area is exposed to gas producing zones in Dorchester's gas well.

After some figuring, Gillespie initially answered with 3,318 square inches or about a 5-foot square. Then he corrected himself and recalculated the area to be more like 33,476 square inches, which Gillespie estimated as equal to a 15-foot square.

Spivey tried to show that while that area in the brown dolomite produced 11,000 Mcf. of gas, Harlow's wells produced many times more gas from perforations totalling about 25 square inches.

Spivey's contention was that if Harlow was producing more gas from a smaller area than was Dorchester, either the figures are wrong or Dorchester is intentionally not producing gas.

Dorchester attorneys, who may rest their case today, read Thursday morning from portions of a deposition by Lawrence Hagy. He has intervened in the suit on

Annexation request approved

Members of the Pampa Planning and Zoning Commission approved a request for annexation, which will be presented to the City Commission, and discussed the need to consider other annexations during their regular meeting Thursday afternoon.

The commission gave its sanction to a request by G.M. Walls Sr. and G.M. Walls Jr. to annex a tract of land between Harvester and Browning streets near the Pampa Country Club.

The land is located in the southeast quarter of Section 92, Block 3, I&GN RRC Survey for Gray County.

Forrest Cloyd, technician with the city engineering department, said the city commission would have to make the final decisions on annexation according to state laws and city ordinances.

Cloyd noted the annexation request by the Wallses is being made by volunteer action for their land. He said other property owners were involved in the same area, and the department had recommended the entire tract be annexed. If the other owners have any objections, the City Commission may have to consider regular annexation procedures, he said.

Cloyd said the tract involved already had existing city water and sewer lines.

The Wallses also have requested that the area be rezoned from agriculture to Single Family 2 classification. Cloyd said the zoning request could not be granted until after the annexation is approved by the city.

Commission member Jay Johnson, in discussing the Wallses' annexation request, said he had favored bringing the area into the city earlier when he served on the City Commission. He said several other areas around the city also needed to be brought into the city limits.

Johnson said the commission should consider a long-range project "to our benefit" to study future annexation of properties near the current city limits.

Commission member Milo Carlson, a former mayor of the city, agreed. "I think we're doing a disservice to the city when we don't push" to get other areas into the city limits because of population growth and increasing property development, he said.

The commission agreed to begin studying future annexation projects that could be presented to the city.

In other business, the commission members approved the preliminary plat revisions for Block 7 of the Davis Place Unit III concerning water and sewer line placements. The plat request had been made by John R. Davis and Sons.

Cloyd said the plat "meets our approval" from the engineering department.

Lubbock trial

Harlow's behalf along with Sybil Harrington and the Harrington Foundation.

Hagy testified the original gas well drilled on his lease in Gray County produced no oil from the brown dolomite. He also said that he knew his wells were in that layer and that he did nothing to stop Harlow from drilling into the formation.

Hagy admitted in the deposition that he received 12 times the monthly revenue from each Harlow oil well as he did from Dorchester's gas well on his property.

In reference to the disputed farm-out agreement, which gave Harlow preliminary permission to drill, Hagy said rights to oil and casinghead gas were given to protect himself and the Harrington interests as well as Harlow.

Spivey failed again Thursday in attempting to introduce Texas Railroad Commission rulings into evidence. He claimed Dorchester had "opened the doors" during testimony Wednesday by its vice president, John Dannelley.

Montgomery denied one request late Wednesday afternoon and rejected two more requests Thursday after considering them overnight. Harlow wants RRC guidelines discussed because the Commission does not deal with lease titles in its definitions and has designated the West Pdanhandle Field a common reservoir.

Dorchester does not want to discuss commission policies because its case is based on title agreements and its tests of what is actually being produced and not on what the RRC definitions specify.

Montgomery has granted a Dorchester motion severely restricting discussion of commission regulations.

McLean bank

might be blamed on the several straight poor years for the farm economy. Also, most of the bank's non-performing oil loans were made to oil-related businesses, rather than to "wildcat" oil drillers themselves, Hacker said.

"The new bank has no connection with the other," he said. "No problems will be experienced by anybody."

After buying the failed bank, Williams named his son, J. David Williams, to replace Kurtz as bank president.

The younger Williams said Kurtz will stay on at the bank with a still undetermined title.

The new president said customers haven't lined up for a run on the bank. Actually, deposits at the bank were up this morning by about $50,000, he said.

"We're having everybody putting their money in. We couldn't be more pleased," Williams said.

He said customers need do nothing to keep their accounts at the bank. Checks written on the old bank will be honored and may be used until they are gone. Customers' account numbers will remain the same, he said.

Williams said his father, who owns interests in several Texas banks, including the National Bank of Commerce in Pampa, was named chairman of the board. The younger Williams and Richard Kimbrough also were appointed as officers late Thursday. Williams said the board would meet today to appoint the remainder of the officers.

The closing of the McLean bank reportedly brought to 50 the number of U.S. bank failures so far this year.

"We've had more bank failures this year than since the Great Depression," Hacker said.

Some congressmen, including Kent Hance, have criticized the federal government for its treatment of smaller failing banks, compared with the treatment of larger failing institutions, such as Continental Illinois.

Hacker said the federal government can't measure the bank failure in McLean with the failure of Continental Illinois.

He said if Continental had collapsed, many other banks would have gone down with it, creating "a crisis situation" in the entire U.S. banking industry.

Haynes said the McLean residents don't know whom to blame for the bank failure. Some have cited several years of depressed cattle markets, recent bankruptcies of a few McLean businesses, and an oil boom that lost its steam.

"We don't know who's to blame...I think the economy," Haynes said.

Miami approves city budget

MIAMI—City council members approved a budget of $72,450 for fiscal year 1984-85 Tuesday.

The budget, which includes a biennial street appropriation of $6,000, is up from 1984's budget of $67,850, which includes a $7,200 appropriation to the Roberts County sheriff's office for law enforcement services. Mayor Paul Goodman was budgeted a $100 per month stipend; attorney M. Kent Sims was budgeted $150 per month for legal services.

City secretary Evelyn Heare expects $25,000 in sales tax revenues and $14,000 in revenues from taxes on utilities this year. She said there could be a $2,700 surplus and $2,700 from such items as delinquent tax payments.

Anticipating about $28,000 in ad valorem tax revenue, the city set a tax rate of 27 cents per $100 valuation. This is one-half cent over last year's tax rate of 25 1/2 cents per $100 valuation.

Also approved was a $15,400 budget for the sewer system. City water is privately owned. Heare anticipates $15,000 from city sewer rate collection and $400 from miscellaneous expenses.

Questions city residents had about animal control, streets and zoning prompted the city council to set up a public opinion poll. Heare said, noting that the city may place a "ballot" at City Hall so that people may register their opinions in city issues.

City officials also heard a report from city worker Larry Bryant about a waste water school he recently attended in Pampa.

PISD budget

far" toward the new salary increases, he said, noting the local district will have to raise more money through local taxes.

Trusty said that "on the bright side," local property values have increased for assessment purposes. "It speaks well for what's going on in the community and certainly helps us," he said.

Discussing the new budget, board member Curt Beck said, "I feel it's a lean budget as far as discretionary funding goes."

In other business, the board approved the revised contract with the Gray County Appraisal District concerning consolidation of tax assessing and collection duties.

Business Manager Jerry Haralson said the revised contract clarifies the dates of payment from PISD to the appraisal district for its services.

The contract calls for installment payments for each calendar quarter to be paid on or before the first day of the calendar quarter. Payments will be due Jan. 1, April 1, July 1 and October 1.

For the initial payment under the new system, payment for August and September this year was due Aug. 1, the contract specifies. The district's initial payment was $63,030.

The contract allows for the GCAD to request additional payments in case expenditures exceed advance payments or to reimburse the district if expenditures cost less than the advances.

The board approved a report on the Chapter 75 Implementation Plan concerning curriculum revision in the local schools.

John English, assistant superintendent, said the plan provided for improvements in teaching essential elements in courses "that must be taught" for mastery by students on statewide testing.

English said the district had been concentrating on reading, writing and mathematics for the past couple of years to meet compliance. The district is in partial compliance with science, social studies and health in the elementary schools, he said.

Full implementation of the plan is scheduled for the 1985-1986 school year, meeting the deadlines established by the state, he said.

The board met in executive session to discuss personnel matters.

The trustees accepted the resignation of Lou Allred as Austin Elementary School physical education instructor. Reassignments approved by the board were Lynn Wolfe as special education counselor and Adrian Hannah as elementary Spanish teacher.

The board approved the employment of Mary Ann Blue, Austin physical education instructor; Dixie Phillips, three periods of science at Pampa Middle School; Norma Baker, Lamar Elementary School fifth grade; and Irene Norman, part-time speech therapist.

In other matters, the trustees approved due bills and invoices and heard a current budget status report.

PROTEST SITE—Workers set up tents on a field to be used by demonstrators during the Republican National Convention in Dallas next week. The city skyline is visible in background.

Controversial fence refuses to fade into convention background

DALLAS (AP) — It has come to be known as The Fence — a 1½-mile-long, 6-foot-high chain link barrier that snugly encircles the site of the Republican National Convention.

It keeps Republicans in, protesters out. Although the metal was been covered with green vinyl, in hopes it would blend into the scenery, that strategy hasn't worked.

Protesters say the fence has reduced demonstrations to "a cry in the wilderness," since they will be virtually invisible from the Dallas Convention Center. They view the fence as the manifestation of civic and political paranoia.

But others see the fence as a key element in Dallas' game plan to pull off a flawless performance as a convention host city.

When city officials decided to erect the $70,000 barrier, they were blunt about its purpose: it would provide a comforting buffer between the convention and the unpredictable — and possibly unmanageable — world outside.

The fence would keep delegates and other convention-goers from "being harassed or bothered by people with signs," city street director John Teipel explained. And it also would keep protesters and the news media from "milling around and seeking each other," he said.

The Republican National Committee soundly endorsed the fence, and no one will be allowed inside the barrier without credentials from the committee.

"I think it is a great idea," said national committeeman Peter Seccia. "When our people come out, who wants to run into 115,000 strangers?"

From the outset, though, the fence struck some people as a bad idea.

"It almost says you've got a war zone," complained Dallas Councilman Max Goldblatt, chairman of the council's public safety committee.

A consultant paid to advise the city on convention demonstrations said the fence was an overreaction and predicted it would create more problems than it would solve. In short, said Richard Tankerson, it was an "exceptionally dumb" idea.

"It's going to signal to conventioners that there's a threat — and to all the rest of the people outside that they are the threat," he said.

Despite objections, the fence began going up a few weeks before the convention, defining the perimeter of the convention center grounds and the officially sanctioned protest site, which city officials call the "special events area."

The initial fence line confined demonstrators to the rear third of a parking lot, about 700 feet from the convention center entrance across a sea of cars, a cemetery, a wall and a hill.

On July 5, they took the city to federal court, saying the fence violated their First Amendment right of free speech.

Veterans support, oppose settlement on Agent Orange

HOUSTON (AP) — Vietnam veterans say a proposed $180 million settlement for servicemen exposed to the toxic defoliant Agent Orange is inadequate to meet the financial needs of veterans and their families.

Others argued the agreement should be accepted to avoid delays in settling the case.

"If I get $50 a month to help me pay my light bill, that will be better than nothing," said Lana Reedy of Spring, Texas, whose husband died five years ago at age 30 of colon cancer she said was caused by exposure to Agent Orange. She clutched the U.S. flag that draped her husband's coffin.

Testimony was scheduled to resume today in a hearing to determine whether veterans believe the $180 million settlement is "fair, adequate and reasonable."

Similar hearings have been held in New York and Chicago. Other sessions are scheduled for Atlanta and San Francisco.

In often emotional testimony

Falwell expects no serious problems

DALLAS (AP) — At least two groups planned today to protest the Moral Majority's presence at the Republican National Convention, but the Rev. Jerry Falwell says he doesn't expect any problems because "there's not as many weirdos" in Dallas as in San Francisco.

People objecting to the controversial Moral Majority staged large protests when Falwell was in San Francisco last month for the Democratic nominating convention, and today the first two of several groups planning similar demonstrations in Dallas were set to picket Falwell's hotel.

But Falwell, president of the Moral Majority, said on Thursday he expects the Dallas demonstrations to be more subdued.

"I do not doubt that there might be some protesters, but I don't think we'll have problems," Falwell said Thursday after opening Family Forum III, a pro-family gathering being held before the four-day Republican convention, which convenes Monday. The forum also met in San Francisco before the Democratic convention.

"There's not as many weirdos here," Falwell said, adding that "if you live through San Francisco, you can live through anything."

Thursday before U.S. District Judge Jack Weinstein of New York, veterans opposing the settlement said the numerous medical difficulties they have experienced could not be met by the amount of money being offered.

"I have been waiting for 15 years for the court and the American public to stand up at this injustice," said Gerald Stone, a former Marine who served in Southeast Asia in 1967 and 1968. "I don't believe this settlement was offered in good faith. I believe it was a bone offered to a hungry dog."

Daniel Salmon Jr., the son of a Vietnam veteran who died in 1983, said the settlement offered by the chemical companies would not bring his father back to life.

"One hundred and eighty million dollars...what's that? A tax write off?" said Salmon, who lives in Austin.

But some attorneys said veterans should accept the settlement to avoid delays that might occur if the case was heard by a jury.

"The only way I know how to address this is East Texas style and talk turkey," said Houston attorney Benton Musslewhite, one of the architects of the settlement.

"You must consider time. Justice delayed is justice denied and for a lot of Vietnam veterans the decision would have been justice denied," he said.

Potential education board members suggested

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislators have a list of more than 300 names from which to select the 45 people who could become the 15 who serve on the new State Board of Education.

The list, a compilation of suggestions from the public, includes 23 members of the current, elected Board of Education, familiar names from politics and business and self-recommended teachers.

"It's not going to be as easy as we first anticipated because of the huge number of people submitted," said Speaker Gib Lewis, chairman of the Legislative Education Board.

The 10-member LEB will nominate three people from each of the 15 districts. Gov. Mark White will make the appointments. Lewis said his committee would meet on Sept. 6 to consider nominations. The 317-name list includes U.S.

Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock and textbook critic Mel Gabler of Longview, but does not include the chairman and vice chairman of the current board. More names will be accepted until next Thursday.

Board Chairman Joe Kelly Butler of Houston, Vice Chairman Paul Mathews of Greenville and Paul Stevens of Fort Worth have not been suggested. Board member William Kemp of Houston was on the list, but asked to be withdrawn.

The Legislature this year voted to junk the 27-member elected Board of Education and replace it with an appointed panel that will revert to an elected board in 1988.

Several of the more familiar names suggested also withdrew, including former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan of Austin, former state GOP Chairman Peter O'Donnell of Dallas, San Antonio businessman Charles Butt and San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros.

Dallas Morning News writer Ann Melvin, who was suggested by Perot, also withdrew her name.

White said Thursday he would make his appointments shortly after he gets the 45 nominees.

"I will move just as quickly as I can after I get those names submitted to me. I'd like to do it within several days," he said. "It's a very difficult task to find the talented people who have the time to serve."

White said the board should include some members with strong business backgrounds.

"One of the worst problems we have in our school system today is the management factor. That's one of the weaknesses," he said.

Lewis said he wants "a proper balance" on the board "to make sure we are not loaded up with business people."

The list submitted to the LEB Thursday includes:
 — Former State Rep. Hamp Atkinson, New Boston.
 — State Rep. Bill Hammond, R-Dallas.
 — Former U.S. Secretary of Energy Charles Duncan, Houston.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Beware of more government power

It is difficult not to sympathize with advocates of a constitutional amendment requiring that the federal budget be balanced.

Considering the irresponsibility of Congress, and its aversion to constitutional restraints on its free-spending ways, it is also difficult not to sympathize with those who advocate a constitutional amendment and submit it to the states for ratification.

At present, 32 states have passed resolutions requesting Congress to call a constitutional convention to write a balanced-budget amendment. If the number reaches 34, Congress will theoretically be obliged to call a convention, though it's unclear how such a mandate would be enforced.

Some balanced-budget-amendment advocates see the call for a convention as a device to pressure Congress into passing such an amendment and submitting it to the states for ratification — to avoid the uncertainties of a constitutional convention. Others seem to welcome the idea of a new convention.

Some convention advocates assure us that a convention could be limited only to the topic mentioned in the resolution that called it. If a new convention were assembled, however, it might ignore such a limitation.

It is well to remember that the convention that gave us the Constitution whose tattered remnants are still the law of the land was called to revise the Articles of Confederation, not to write a new constitution.

Given the political situation at that time, it is unlikely that a convention frankly called to write a new constitution would have received support. Once assembled, however, the convention threw the Articles out the window and proceeded to draw up a new document.

In that light, it is well to note that an "establishment" group of prominent academics, lawyers and other interested parties has been formed under the sponsorship of former Secretary of the Treasury Douglas Dillon and Washington lawyer (former presidential counsel) Lloyd Cutler. The Committee on the Constitutional System has had some exploratory meetings and come up with some preliminary proposals.

Like many Americans, members of this committee seem entranced by something resembling a European parliamentary system with strong parties. Thus they flirt with ideas like permitting the president to dissolve Congress and call for new elections, and letting some House members run "at large" rather than in districts. Other ideas include forcing people to cast a ballot for a party "slate" including president, vice president, representative and senator, and increasing terms in the House from two years to four years.

Most of these proposals are slanted toward a more "efficient" government — i.e., one able to act quickly, without some of the difficulties imposed by checks and balances and the necessity to get a consensus rather than a bare majority. It is highly doubtful whether a government "liberated" to become even more activist than the present one would be a boon to the American people.

Perhaps the saving grace is that any constitutional change, whether proposed by Congress or a convention, would require ratification by three-quarters (38) of the state legislatures. As advocates of the Equal Rights Amendment can testify, such ratification is by no means a foregone conclusion.

It would be ironic, however, if a move designed to rein in and discipline government resulted in granting more power and authority to government. Balanced-budget-amendment advocates should be aware that there are groups waiting in the wings to do just that.

Berry's World

"You've gotten a DEMOCRAT hairdo!"

William Rusher

Demos strategy won't work

NEW YORK (NEA) — Now that the Democrats have launched their presidential campaign, it is possible to stand back a bit and grasp their "sorry scheme of things entire" — the fundamental strategy on which their campaign is to be based.

There won't be any more talk about "new ideas," for the sufficient reason that the Democrats don't have any. To be entirely fair, really new ideas aren't all that common in politics. Instead, the standard formula for a party out of power is to "point with pride" to the party's past achievements, and "view with alarm" the supposedly dreadful misdeeds of the incumbent opposition.

In the case of the Democrats, however, Walter Mondale is understandably reluctant to "point with pride" to the record of the Carter-Mondale administration; and it is almost equally impossible to "view with alarm" today's booming economy, in which inflation has been tamed, interest rates are down and even unemployment is at or below that Carter levels. One can, of course, worry loudly about the deficit, but deficits have never alarmed the American electorate unduly.

Sensibly, therefore, rather than discuss the past or the present, Mondale has announced that he will talk about the future.

But the future, as described by Democratic spokesmen, has an oddly familiar look. Suddenly it's the 1930s again, only now it's not just "one-third of a nation" that is "ill-housed, ill-clothed and ill-fed." Far from being Mr. Reagan's "shining city on a hill," America today is, as New York Gov. Mario Cuomo sees it, a "tale of two cities," in one of which a mother is denied food for her children, to provide tax breaks for Mr. Reagan's millionaire friends in the other.

To populate the first of these cities — the "have-not city," if you will, whose allegiance they claim — the Democrats seek to mobilize a whole series of voting blocs, each consisting of a particular category of "certified victims" of injustice: blacks, Hispanics, women and homosexuals, to name only four of the largest groups. (Compare these with the very different Roosevelt coalition of the 1930s: the "solid — and solidly white — South," the relatively few blacks who voted, the Irish-dominated wards of the Northern cities and the Jewish community, plus most small farmers and blue-collar workers.)

But the Democrats have been watching Mr. Reagan and have evidently noted his success in invoking such powerful concepts as the family, patriotism and religion. So, the Democrats' "have -not city," as on display at San Francisco and subsequently, is full of rhetorical references to the family, positively awash in American flags, and so aggressively religious as to insist that Mr. Reagan is not truly a Christian at all.

To keep the Democratic Party's real function as the architect of the Handout State out of sight of voters not in one of the favored categories, the Democratic platform is "uncharacteristically stingy with specific promises. But in pledging to raise taxes, ostensibly "to reduce the deficit," Mondale gave the game away. No Democratic administration has ever expended one thin dime of tax revenues to reduce the deficit, and none ever will. Mondale is undoubtedly sincere in saying he will raise taxes (albeit spectacularly dishonest in asserting that they will fall only on corporations and "the rich"), but every nickel he takes out of the hide of the American people will be rushed promptly to his party's client blocs.

Will it work? Almost certainly not — even among the target blocs (save for the blacks), many of whose members realize that not even they individually would benefit in the long run from such debilitating largesse.

But then, what would you do if you were a Democratic strategist?

CAPTURING A TERRIBLE FEDERAL DEFICIT: THE MONDALE PLAN

Today in History

Today is Friday, Aug. 17, the 230th day of 1984. There are 136 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 17, 1807, Robert Fulton's "North River Steam Boat" began chugging its way up New York's Hudson River on a 32-hour round trip to Albany that would include a stopover in the town of Clermont.

On this date: Ten years ago: A cease-fire agreed to with Greek Cypriot forces was broken by Turkey as its armor and artillery moved southward on Cyprus.

Five years ago: The United States proposed that Israel support a UN Security Council resolution on Palestinian rights. Israel immediately said no.

One year ago: Lyricist Ira Gershwin died at his home in Beverly Hills, Calif., at age 86.

Today's birthdays: Actress Maureen O'Hara is 64. Actor Robert DeNiro is 41.

Thought for today: "Many people get a reputation for being energetic when they're merely nervous." — anonymous.

Homicidal mania epidemic

The National Institute of Mental Health is accumulating evidence that some forms of madness could be anticipated if we could look inside the human brain.

That means that human time bombs conceivably could be defused before they explode.

In our nation, we have recently apprehended two so-called "serial killers." They played cat-and-mouse with their victims and with our lawmen.

They moved from one location to another, killing without apparent motive.

The FBI describes them as "recreational killers;" they kill for fun.

And there are hundreds such monsters presently loose in our land.

LIFE magazine — in peace or war — has never published a more ominous picture than the one in its August issue of Henry Lee Lucas.

He claims to have slaughtered 360 men, women and children in 13 Sunbelt states. In this two-page photograph, he calmly, without apparent feeling, displays photographs of his victims.

Henry Lee Lucas roamed the highways and byways of our country for eight years on the lookout for young women alone in cars so that he could abduct and kill them.

"I hated women," he says, "and wanted to destroy every woman I could find. And I was doing a good job of it...."

Among the suspected common denominators among recreational killers are these:

—Most recreational killers are men, are above average in intelligence.

—An alarming one in 10 ten are doctors, dentists or other health professionals.

—Most, when they are not enraged with sadistic lust, appear reassuringly normal, even charming, as they wander the highways and the shopping centers on the prowl for easy victims.

—The recreational killer rarely knows his victim, according to Dr. Joel Norris, a student of serial murder in America.

—Most have cell damage in the brain from abuse or neglect before or after birth. Most feed on pornography.

—One victim is never enough. The blood lust revives soon and the predator goes hunting again.

Our FBI guesstimates that last year in the United States serial murderers killed 5,000 Americans.

"Homicidal mania is epidemic."

Families and friends of victims are not spared anguish, as corpses go undiscovered for months or years or forever.

As one police detective said it: "We are in pursuit of a strange and terrible beast and the quest is as frustrating as chasing bolts of lightning; we're almost always too late."

Shielding folks from folly

The government's taking over of the Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Company, Chicago, one of the largest banks in the United States, is another example "of shielding folk from their folly," which Herbert Spencer warned against.

This bank has made dubious loans, especially to Latin American countries that are broke and cannot keep up their payments. At present, it has $3 billion in loans to Latin America. It also has extended rash credit to domestic borrowers.

The bank's stock has plummeted, to the dismay of its 21,000 stockholders, and many of its employees are quitting. Its depositors have withdrawn $10 billion since May 1.

Fearful that failure of Continental might precipitate runs on other banks, big and little, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is said to be supporting Continental far beyond its usual limit of $100,000 of deposits. One report has it that the FDIC will assume $4.5 billion of its problem loans.

Of more than 12,000 banks in the nation, some small ones fail every year, and the government does not strain every nerve to save them. Their stockholders and in some cases their depositors lose money. But when the Continental, one of the big 10, gets in trouble, the government through its FDIC takes extraordinary measures to save it.

Spencer would say, "The Continental is failing because of its folly in making big loans to poor payers. If the government rescues it, other banks will be reassured that they, too, will be protected if necessary. Hence, the lending of large sums to likely defaulters will continue. Leave the Continental to its own troubles. Don't shield it from folly."

All bankers are subject to the temptation to lend too much. The art of commercial banking is to know just how insolvent your bank can get without running out of money.

A conservative policy is essential in banking. It takes a tightwad to be a good banker. One may be sure the loan policy of the Continental bank will be more cautious in future than it has been in the past.

But there is more to this affair than one bank's extension of loose credit. Other big banks have made large loans to Latin American countries. Manufacturers Hanover has 10 percent of its assets in such loans, and its stock has fallen in value. Security Pacific and First Interstate Bancorp each have sums equal to 3.1 percent of their assets loaned to Latin American countries.

Did they make these loans out of sympathy for the people down under, looking upon them almost as gifts rather than repayable loans? Is the FDIC bailing out Continental because of compassion for an over-eager giver? Or could it be doing so at the request of President Reagan? One wonders: Did Washington urge the big U.S. banks to lend to Latin America to strengthen opposition to the spread of Communism in that area?

If international politics is involved — if welfare was the object, the government itself should have written the big checks to Latin America. Then it would have been a matter of public record, as all of Uncle Sam's international generosity presumably is, and no financial earthquake such as near-failure of a big private bank would be involved.

Neither political party trusts Soviets and both willing to spend on defense

DALLAS (AP) — Democrats and Republicans are sharpening their presidential campaign differences over military affairs, but they agree on at least two things: They don't trust the Soviet Union, and they are willing to spend lots of money to keep the U.S. guard up.

While Republican platform writers met in Texas this week to proclaim "a sober view of the Soviet Union" as "a threat to freedom and peace on every continent," Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale was using strikingly similar words in a speech in Arkansas.

"To see Soviet behavior through sober eyes is to know that we live in a dangerous world," Mondale said as he roughed out a strategy to meet the danger by building up conventional forces instead of relying on nuclear deterrence.

David L. Aaron, a deputy director of the National Security Council under former President Carter and a Mondale adviser, told reporters the details of the strategy have not been worked out, but added, "It is not a strategy on the cheap."

"It would cost a lot of money to strengthen conventional forces," Aaron said, but he added that Mondale is convinced it would deter war more effectively than President Reagan's policy of forcing the Soviets to the bargaining table by a nuclear buildup.

The Republican platform, adopted by the platform committee late Thursday subject to ratification next week at the GOP convention, pledges to "do everything necessary so that, in case of conflict, the United States would clearly prevail" over an adversary.

It does not mention the Soviet Union.

Some conservatives sought tougher language, specifically calling for military "superiority" over the Soviets as the 1980 GOP platform did. The White House objected, saying this would call into question the administration's commitment to nuclear arms talks.

"We will continue to modernize our deterrent capability, while negotiating for verifiable arms control," the proposed GOP campaign document says.

It also supports the president's "star wars" program for long-term research aimed at developing a system to shoot down incoming missiles, but expresses hope that military spending can "level off in the near future."

At the Democratic National Convention that nominated him in San Francisco last month, Mondale shunned efforts by the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson and former Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota to put the party on record as favoring cuts in defense spending.

The plank favored by Mondale, and adopted by the convention, calls for continued growth in military expenditures, but at a slower rate than the large increases proposed by Reagan since he took office in 1981.

Aaron, however, said that regardless of who is president, Congress is expected to increase defense spending by about 3-to-4 percent per year for some years to come.

The argument, Mondale and Aaron said, is not so much how many dollars are spent, but how effectively they build up the nation's security.

"The issue in this campaign is not whether the Soviets challenge us, but whether our defense is adequate to meet that challenge," he said.

Convention fund goal met

DALLAS (AP) — A group of businessmen raising private funds to help defray the city's costs for the Republican National Convention say they have met their goal but still don't know how much money will be needed.

"I get to announce that (chief fundraiser) Bill Cooper has raised $3.9 million to furnish the funds that the city of Dallas needs to have the Republican convention come to Dallas without any cost to the Dallas taxpayers," real estate developer Trammell Crow told a Thursday news conference.

Crow, who chairs the Dallas Convention Fund, said, however, that he did not know where the extra money would come from if the private fundraising falls short of the city's needs.

"We're going to keep on raising money until the end of next week," Cooper said.

Cooper said no one knew how much money would be needed because "the city won't know until after the convention how much it cost."

"The city will need the entire $3.9 million by about the 23rd of August," the last day of the four-day convention, Cooper said. He said $3.3 million was in hand and that $3 million had already been turned over to the city.

Crow and Cooper said more than half of the money came from individual rather than corporate donors.

"We don't plan to release the list and that's that," Cooper said.

Crow said the largest donation was $150,000 and the smallest was "about a dollar." He said the fundraising effort cost $300,000.

Donors gave money out of "do-good-ism" and not for personal or corporate benefit, said Crow, though he added, "whatever I do to help Dallas helps me."

Cooper said the presence of the Republican convention here would boost Dallas' popularity as a convention city in the future.

Burford heads anti-Ferraro campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the official displeasure of the White House, Anne M. Burford has jumped back into the political cauldron by spearheading a conservative group's assault on what she calls "the real scandal" of Democratic vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro.

Mrs. Burford, who has resigned under a storm of criticism from two environmental posts in the Reagan administration, presented herself Thursday as the head of an anti-Ferraro "truth squad" and the star of a television commercial which assails the New York congresswoman for withholding information about her family finances.

The effort is sponsored by the National Conservative Political Action Committee, an independent, pro-Reagan group headed by John T. Dolan, brother of the president's chief speechwriter, Anthony Dolan.

Mrs. Burford told reporters she had not discussed the mission to discredit Ms. Ferraro with anyone at the White House or in the official Reagan-Bush campaign, and "I don't intend to." John Dolan agreed with that version, noting "it's against the law" for independent groups supporting a presidential candidate to coordinate with the regular campaign.

Anthony Dolan said "I was completely astonished," when he learned of the announcement by his brother and Mrs. Burford.

But President Reagan's chief spokesman, Larry Speakes, said the Reagan team had learned of Mrs. Burford's plans at the last minute and "protested and urged her not to do this," to no avail. "It's not the way we want to run the campaign," Speakes said.

In the TV commercial, not yet aired, Mrs. Burford begins by saying: "Witch hunt. That's what I call it when the liberal media decides to create the news instead of report it. I ought to know."

"Now there is a real scandal on Capitol Hill, but you don't know about it. Did you know that Geraldine Ferraro refuses to disclose her husband's finances?"

In the commercial Mrs. Burford asks: "Come on, Ms. Ferraro, what are you trying to hide?"

While campaigning in the Northwest, Ms. Ferraro reacted to Mrs. Burford's comments in the commercial by saying: "One would expect the Republicans to run a negative campaign, and that was just the beginning."

Asked if her efforts might not prove an embarrassment to the Reagan campaign in light of her own controversial background, Mrs. Burford said: "I'm very proud of my record in this administration."

Mrs. Burford resigned as administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency in March 1983 in the wake of mismanagement charges. Several of her subordinates were fired, and one, Rita Lavelle, was convicted of perjury.

Early this month, Mrs. Burford resigned on the eve of her scheduled swearing-in as chairman of an environmental advisory commission. Both chambers of Congress had asked Reagan, by overwhelming votes, to withdraw that appointment, but he refused. Mrs. Burford called the job a "nothingburger"

FBI said to be investigating Block

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary John R. Block says he has nothing to hide from a reported FBI investigation into his farmland transactions and suggests that some of the controversy about his finances has been politically motivated.

Block responded Thursday to earlier reports in Minnesota and Iowa that the FBI also is checking to see if he could benefit from a $400,000 loan by the Farmers Home Administration to a business partner.

The FBI would not confirm or deny that an investigation was under way.

Jim Nichols, Minnesota state agriculture commissioner, said Wednesday that the FBI is trying to discover whether Block disclosed all his assets in financial statements required of government employees.

Nichols, a member of the Democratic-Farm-Labor coalition party, has frequently criticized Block and the Reagan administration's farm policies.

Block was asked at a news conference whether the FBI had contacted him in connection with the investigation.

"No, they haven't contacted me at all, and I don't know anything about it," Block said. "As far as my involvement, I have nothing to hide and I see no problem at all. Whatever they want to look at, they're welcome to look at."

As he has before, Block suggested that recent criticism of his financial situation involving his partners, including John "Bill" Curry of Galesburg, Ill., may be motivated in part by politics. Block said in Davenport, Iowa, on Tuesday that part of the problem has been stirred up by Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, who is running for the Senate.

"The politics this year have become more ridiculous by the week and by the month," Block said. "I guess I've come to realize that any citizen that might want to stir up something is quite open to go to the FBI and ask for a routine investigation, and the FBI is obliged to do that."

Block was asked if he would be willing to make public a full and complete financial statement in order to counter what he termed political thrusts.

"I'm not sure exactly what that means, they have quite a bit."

Police shrug at offer of help

DALLAS (AP) — Guardian Angel leader Curtis Sliwa says 200 members of the crime patrol group will be in Dallas to help out during the Republican National Convention.

"We'll have a contingent at each of the events," Sliwa told reporters Thursday. "Obviously, having just come from the San Francisco convention, we know which groups might pose the most difficulty in terms of potential violence."

Sliwa said his group is "not political in any sense of the word" and would not take sides if there are confrontations between protesters and convention-goers.

Dallas police, who have not been receptive to the group in the past, said they had no problem with the Angels' presence.

"We certainly appreciate any citizens' help in curbing crime so long as they don't try to take on any kind of enforcement role," said police spokesman Bob Shaw.

Shaw said the police were, however, unlikely to meet the Guardian Angels' request for an assigned command post near the Convention Center.

Sliwa said Thursday night that the Angels will patrol the tent site where protesters to the convention will stay overnight. He said the agreement was reached with the Angels and officials of the Association for Community Organizations for Reform Now.

Sliwa also said the Angels will meet with police officials Friday and will provide police with personal information in hopes "they might give us a small spot in the downtown corridor to dispatch our patrols from."

Block said. "It seems to me, what hasn't been written about me doesn't deserve to be written. There's been so much already in the press, and it's almost to the point of being redundant."

Block also said he is trying to gradually reduce his partnerships and concentrate on his own family operation in Illinois. "That's the way it should be," he said. "That's the way I want it to turn out."

Prosecutors defend strings as valuable tool

NEW YORK (AP) — Although defense lawyers and one of the jurors who acquitted John Z. De Lorean say the case should have an impact on future government undercover operations, some prosecutors say the "sting" is too valuable a tool to be abandoned.

"That's one of the great jury verdicts of all time," said noted trial lawyer Melvin Belli after De Lorean was acquitted of narcotics trafficking charges Thursday. "That jury stood up and said they were not going to cotton to cops coming in and acting like a bunch of bums."

Paul Rothstein, a Georgetown University law professor who specializes in evidence-gathering techniques, said the jury had to decide whether or not De Lorean was bent on crime before the government operation began.

"If that were so, then he was a criminal," said Rothstein. "But if he was merely an innocent who had been seduced into committing a crime by police, then it was entrapment and he should get off."

Juror No. 36 — jurors names were not used and were not revealed even after the verdict — said that without considering predisposition "we would have had a hung jury."

"I think the important thing to come out of this case is there is going to be an impact on the future," said juror No. 140. "...the way the government agents operated in this case was not appropriate."

"They sent out a message to the Department of Justice that you can't do to our citizens what you did to John De Lorean," said attorney Howard Weitzman, the automaker's chief defense attorney.

Sting operations have had their share of success since the FBI shifted emphasis from street crime and began to focus on sophisticated white-collar criminals. Between 1977 and 1983, at least 1,496 undercover operations led to more than 3,000 convictions, including six congressmen and a senator in the Abscam case, and the recovery of millions of dollars in stolen goods, the FBI says.

But some of the stings have been criticized by innocent people on the fringes of the probes. In hearings before a House panel in 1982, several victims of sting operations gone awry wept openly and recounted suicide attempts, nervous breakdowns, bankruptcies, repossessions and divorces brought about by their involvement in the operations.

In all, more than $500 million in lawsuits have been filed against the government by dozens of people who claimed they were unintended victims of the stings.

On May 1, the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights said its four-year Abscam-inspired study of FBI sting operations "demonstrates that many, if not all, of the potential dangers in undercover operations are being realized."

Subcommittee chairman Don Edwards, D-Calif., said he did not expect legislation based on the report this year. But the De Lorean verdict may have a more immediate impact.

Charles Whitebread, a University of Southern California law professor specializing in entrapment defense, said he expects the case to make future juries more likely to question the credibility of government witnesses.

"If the jury believed the entrapment claim, then I would expect a lot more of these defenses in drug cases in the future," he added. "Normally it is very hard to win on that theory because the predisposition of the defendant to commit the crime is usually fatal."

F. Lee Bailey, the well-known defense attorney, said the jurors were obviously influenced more by defense allegations of entrapment and accusations that prosecution witnesses lied than they were by government hidden-camera videotapes.

Those tapes showed De Lorean exulting with undercover agents over the up to $24 million he supposedly would have gotten from the drug deal to bail out his failing auto company.

"Certainly there were ample grounds for a jury to get angry and say, 'We're not going to put up with this.' On the other hand, the tapes were pretty heavy stuff," Bailey said.

He said one possible reason the FBI has been more successful in gaining convictions in past stings — such as Abscam, Brilab and Greyford — is that the targets in those cases included congressmen and other officials who held offices of public trust, rather than private businessmen with no previous record of involvement in crime.

Prosecutors, on the other hand, said the De Lorean verdict may not mean anything to future sting operations.

"Sting operations can be an extremely valuable tool," Pennsylvania Attorney General LeRoy S. Zimmerman said. "I am certain that a not guilty verdict in one case, however celebrated, is not going to cause prosecutors to abandon them."

"It all depends on the facts in the case and how they are presented," said Jim Dedman, director of training at the National College of District Attorneys in Houston.

ANTHONY'S

CIVIL RIGHTS CHAMPION—Attorney Otto Mullinax poses with his recently written book, "Thus Spake Idion." The book contains a collection of Mullinax's weekly columns written for the now-defunct Athens newspaper, the "Pea Picker." (AP Lazerphoto)

Thirties-era firebrand continues to 'spake' philosophy of liberals

By ANN LEVIN
Tyler Courier-Times-Telegraph
TYLER, Texas (AP) — The law firm alumni include a state senator, a state Supreme Court justice, a Court of Criminal Appeals judge and the Attorney General's first assistant.

His friends, some of more than 50 years standing, recall with relish the political fights of the 1930s, when the Legislature tried to fire a University of Texas economics professor for teaching New Deal economics.

Called before a legislative committee investigating Dr. Bob Montgomery's alleged godless communist teachings, young Otto Mullinax of Willsboro, on his way to becoming a champion of civil rights and organized labor in Texas, was asked, "Do you believe in God?"

Otto, said, "I don't know if I do or don't," and, "well, Katie bar the door," recalls Houston attorney Chris Dixie, a Democratic party activist and Mullinax's schoolmate in the 1930s.

The Legislature voted to let Dr. Montgomery retain his post, even though they stayed convinced, in the words of Marshall attorney Franklin Jones Sr., 80, "there was a communist with a bomb under every bed."

Says Dixie of the era, "The most left-wing thing we did was support FDR and Social Security."

The only son of a Willsboro horse trader, Otto Mullinax, now 72, was the "sun" of the family, says Mrs. Johnnie Johnson of Athens, one of three adoring sisters. "The whole family revolved around him."

In Willsboro, 40 miles north of Tyler, there existed a "basic southern attitude" towards blacks, Mullinax says of his boyhood.

But as a youth, Otto became entranced with an illiterate black man, dubbed "the village idiot," who nonetheless had a photographic memory. The man, who young Otto called "Idion," would stand on the trading lot Saturdays and recite the King James Bible for an hour without dropping a line.

Mullinax was so impressed that many years later he created a fictional Idion, based on his memory of the black man. The make-believe Idion lives on the outskirts of Athens, Texas, and is a repository of the O'crazy wisdom of the ages. His total recall "gives him the power to enjoy the pleasures to be found in savoring differ s he d by men at different times throughout history."

A weekly column published in the late 1970s in the now-defunct Athens newspaper, the "Pea Picker," explored Mufn stbeliefs in a series of conversations with Idion.

The columns were compiled and published this year under the title "Thus Spake Idion" by an old friend of Mullinax, Mark Adams, a retired newspaperman who wants to publish a history of the old friends who came together in the 1930s under the banner of New Deal politics.

Mullinax, a cheerful, ruddy-complexioned man who dotes on his wife, Ernestine, and dedicated the book to "Eleanor Roosevelt, Sarah T. Hughes and my wife, three wonderful women," graduated from law school in 1937.

He says he became a liberal in college, when he and other "poor boys" did not have the money to join fraternities. Since the all-male clubs were designated by Greek letters, they formed an alternative society named after the pillagers of the Classical world, "The Barbarians."

More serious organizing was also afoot. With Dixie and others, including Creekmore Fath, a retired Austin attorney who managed Sissy Farenthold's 1972 gubernatorial campaign, Mullinax formed the University of Texas chapter of Young Democrats.

In 1936, he lost a bid for a seat in the Texas House of Representatives. Abandoning Willsboro, the young attorney moved to Dallas, where he and L.N.D. Wells Jr. founded the first law firm in the South to represent the Teamsters.

Advocates of the underdog and unpopular causes, the firm handled the first lawsuit filed by East Texas asbestos workers against a group of Tyler companies. The suit, and thousands more to follow, claimed company officials knew the health risks of cancer-causing asbestos fibers.

Dam changing Yantze River life

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer
GEZHOUBA DAM, China (AP) — Bats flutter noisily around the floodlights, welding sparks glow in the distance, and the outlines of giant cranes tower eerily overhead.

At night, the work on Gezhouba Dam on the Yangtze River, the biggest hydroelectric project in China, looks like a scene from "Close Encounters of a Third Kind."

Gezhouba is the first dam ever built on the world's third longest river. It stretches more than a mile from bank to bank.

One-third of China's one billion people live along the Yangtze, which flows 3,900 miles from mountainous Tibet to the fertile rice-growing plains of central China and on to the East China Sea.

Scheduled for completion in 1986, Gezhouba Dam already is generating enough electricity to transform life in the adjacent city of Yichang and surrounding Hubei Province.

In a nation struggling to catch up with the world, the mammoth $2.27 billion undertaking — Chinese-designed and Chinese-built — is heralded by the government as an engineering showpiece.

"Six hundred thousand people a year visit the dam," says a recording in English for tourists who are shown a model of the site.

For the 400,000 residents in the Yichang district, the project has virtually eradicated unemployment, improved housing and brought television and refrigerators into a previously Spartan lifestyle.

"Before the dam, there was electricity from two small power plants, but only in the old city," said newspaper reporter Li Ning, who has followed the project since its inception in 1970. "In the suburbs, people used oil lamps. Now all nine counties in Yichang Prefecture have electricity."

When finished, the dam will produce 14.1 billion kilowatt hours of power a year, more than three times China's entire output when communist rule began in 1949.

By the end of the decade, a 500,000-volt transmission line will carry power to the nation's largest city, Shanghai, 670 miles to the east, easing a serious energy shortage.

Most of the project's 60,000 workers are laborers, earning an average of $27 a month, plus housing and other subsidies.

With the help of imported heavy vehicles, they will have poured 385 million cubic feet of concrete and moved 10 times as much earth and rock by 1986.

The Yangtze was successfully dammed for the first time in history on Jan. 4, 1981, and the coffer dam withstood an early test when the highest floodwater for 80 years stormed through the sluice gates six months later.

Phase one of the project was completed in 1983 when a seven-turbine power plant with a capacity of 965,000 kilowatts, reached full operation.

A second 14-turbine power station of 1,750,000 kilowatt capacity is under construction now.

Harnessing the river, which carries 80 percent of China's inland waterway traffic, was first envisioned by Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai in the 1950s.

Texas trucking team finds home sweet home on the road

BY KEN PELLIS
Lufkin Daily News

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Home, sweet home, is a fantasy for some long-distance truckers who, instead of a welcome-home kiss, may receive an ultimatum from a fed-up wife or find a suitcase packed and sitting outside.

Like those in any job requiring considerable time away from home, it's a truck-or-me type of situation," says Jimmie, who will probably never have to face this dilemma himself.

For 2½ years, he and his wife, Donna, have been sharing driving duties and topping fellow Melton truckers in gross revenue.

The Hills, both 47, live in Cushing and are based in at Melton's terminal in Lufkin.

They were happily married before the professional arrangement, and things haven't changed since. They were high school sweethearts.

Donna says she likes the travel and the unpredictability of the job. "Every day's a surprise," she says. "You think you are going to California, and all of a sudden you are going to Maine."

Married trucker teams are a growing phenomenon nationwide, says Jimmie, who estimates that Shreveport-based Melton has about 40 couples now. The company encourages the arrangement, figuring that truckers will be happier and more safety-conscious with their wives along, Donna says.

A former pre-school teacher and restaurant manager, Donna became interested in trucking after her husband ate some shrimp at a company awards banquet and collapsed to the floor with an allergic reaction. He is allergic to the iodine in seafood.

Donna worried that a similar thing would happen on the road, stranding him without medical help. Also, their three children were grown, "and it was a good way to get a vacation and see the country," she says.

At first, the thought of driving a truck "terrified" her.

"I hated to drive a car to town. It was so big, and I needed more room to stop, and the added weight behind... I figured all the cars were out to get me." And she worried about running through a "little car" in front of her.

A two-month course at Mississippi Delta College in Greenville gave her the basics, and she has been learning the rest from her husband. She can now drive any sort of truck in any state.

"Until you know what your machine can do and will do, you're going to be apprehensive. And a lot of it is knowing what you can do," she says.

Jimmie says the addition of a second driver allows them to travel all night without breaking laws that limit truckers' driving time and distance. The result is flexibility in assignments and more of them, he says.

Donna's participation, according to Jimmie, has helped them through financially lean trucking times. "Now we're starting to see a shortage (of trucks)," says Jimmie, but the "rates haven't come up yet" to conform supply and demand.

Last year, the Hills' gross revenue of $150,000 made them Melton's top producer for the second year in a row, says Jimmie. The Hills got $121,000 after the company's share, but that amount had to cover $39,000 for fuel, $2,264-a-month for payments on their truck, new tires and other expenses. "It's still a struggle," he says.

Asked if he enjoys the team set-up, Jimmie says, "Oh sure, outstanding. It's been so long that I hate to go out alone to eat now." Adds Donna: "That's something I've noticed; the male truckers look so lonely eating alone."

Jimmie can't think of anything about his wife's company that bothers him. She suggests her puns might, but he says they don't. Donna admits his habit of chewing toothpicks to relieve job tension gets to her some, noting the "piles of toothpicks on the floor." Once in a while, Donna will get a CB message like, "Hey darling, I want to talk to you. Come back."

GOP convention drawing foreign dignitaries

DALLAS (AP) — It may not draw the contingent that the Los Angeles Olympic games attracted, but when the Republican National Convention convenes next week, foreign dignitaries from Algeria to Zaire will be on hand.

And Dallas officials, eager to show off their city, "have them booked for every minute they're in town," says Judy McCall of the Dallas Office of Protocol.

More than 70 ambassadors to the United States are to attend at least one day of the four-day convention, which opens Monday.

Other foreign officials from the International Democratic Union also are expected to visit Dallas during the GOP gathering. Ms.

McCall said. "It's more than attended (the Democratic National Convention) in San Francisco," Ms. McCall said Tuesday. "I don't know exactly why, but perhaps it's because the president is attending."

Or, she said, perhaps it is because foreigners "just want to see Dallas," which appears to be known outside the U.S. primarily as the home of television's nefarious J.R. Ewing and clan.

Whatever the reason, the visitors will be treated to parties and tours of the town as well as to seats at the final night of the convention, when President Reagan and Vice President George Bush will make their acceptance speeches, Ms. McCall said.

Dear Abby

Teens think Mom's open-door policy reveals a closed mind

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a 16-year-old girl and I need your help to settle something between my mother and me.

When I have a boy over, my mother thinks it's horrible if we shut the door while we're in my room. She always yells loudly, "Leave that door open!" It embarrasses me in front of the boy. My brother, who is 18, also has to leave his door open when he has a girl in his room.

If my brother and I ignore our mother's wishes (or the door should accidentally blow shut), she will come by, knock once, then fling the door open. It's like she wants to catch us doing something. But the point is, we aren't doing anything.

Please don't say that if we aren't doing anything we don't need the door shut. I like my privacy and so does my brother when we have friends over. We usually just sit on the bed and talk or listen to the stereo.

It seems like our mother doesn't trust us. It makes me feel trashy that my own mother thinks the worst of me when I have a boy in my room. How do I handle the situation?
NOSY MOTHER TROUBLE

DEAR TROUBLE: Thank you "nosy" mother for caring enough about you to do what a mother is supposed to do—minimize the human temptations all normal kids eventually encounter. She trusts you. She trusts your brother. She also remembers your father and the temptations of her youth. I'm sure she trusts the friends you invite into your bedrooms to "sit on the bed and listen to the stereo"; she just wants to make sure you don't get carried away by the music until you're sufficiently mature in every way to handle it.

DEAR ABBY: I hope you can help me because no one has been able to so far. My problem is that I'm an 18-year-old girl and I'm only 4 feet 10 1/2 inches tall. Abby, I can't handle being short anymore. It wasn't bad when I was younger because people thought I'd probably grow some more. Now I have no excuse, and I'm so sick of people kidding me about it.

I've heard every short joke and been called every short name. As soon as people meet me, they mention my size.

As far as dates are concerned, forget it. What guy would be crazy enough to go out with a girl a foot shorter than he is? There are too many normal girls with nice long legs around. If I were a guy, I wouldn't go out with me either.

Is there a doctor somewhere who can give me some pills to make me grow? I wouldn't mind letting him experiment on me. I have nothing to lose. I'd rather be dead than short.

HALF-PINT, SHORTY, SHRIMP, ETC.

DEAR ETC.: First, see an endocrinologist to find out if you have some kind of physical abnormality that can be treated. If not, there's nothing wrong with you that your mind can't change.

In the meantime, commit this little prayer to memory: "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can, and wisdom to know the difference."

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice on a problem that has been bothering me for some time. I am 40 years old and am married to "Betty," a good woman who loves me very much. I loved her when I married her, but I fell out of love with her over the years and became very unhappy at home. I moved out two years ago and found a job 500 miles away. I have continued to send Betty money for her support. (There are no children.)

Now I have fallen in love with "Lori," a wonderful person with extremely high morals. We have never made love. Lori and I are talking marriage, and I must now decide between her and Betty.

My heart tells me to divorce Betty and marry Lori, but my conscience keeps interfering. Lori did not take me away from Betty. My love for Betty was dead when I left home. Meanwhile, Betty keeps calling and begging me to come back.

I've talked to my pastor, who says I must honor my marriage vows with absolutely no regard for love. What do you say?
—GUILTY CONSCIENCE

DEAR GUILTY: I say you are shopping around for advice hoping to find someone who will give you approval to divorce your wife and marry your new love. Your problem is an unwillingness to make a choice and take responsibility for your own actions—a hallmark of immaturity.

Grow up. And when you no longer feel the need to ask what to do, you will be a man, my son!

Garment bag eases travel woes

By STEVIE BALDWIN
There's only one thing worse than packing to travel: unpacking when you've reached your destination. Actually, if you fly, it's not a matter of unpacking. It's a matter of locating and gathering the garments that have fallen out of your suitcase into oblivion.

I finally figured out where missing luggage goes. Sometimes it's sucked out of a small opening in the plane. Other times, it's flown to another country. If that's not the case, it has been carted off by an irate passenger who could not locate his or her own. But I usually get my belongings back in the long run—one garment at a time.

I still haven't found a way to take the headache out of flying, but I did find a solution to keeping my garments together: the garment bag. It's a classy-looking, fully-lined zipper bag made from nylon-cotton fabric, and features a cross-stitched monogram and leather-and-fabric handle.

Our easy-to-follow plans will save you a bundle of money when you make your own garment bag. Plans include a complete materials list, step-by-step instructions, illustrations, some full-size patterns, scale drawings, and a cross-stitch graph for the monogram. Also provided are complete cross-stitch instructions.

To receive plans for the Garment Bag, simply specify Project N. 1374-2 and send $3.95. Mail your order to Makin' Things, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 159, Bixby, Okla., 74008.

The outer bag is assembled first, then the lining. The outer bag consists of an upper front piece (shaped like one-half of a stop sign); two lower front pieces, each 13 1/2 x 29 inches; one back piece, 23 1/2 x 39 1/2 inches; two sides gussets, 5 1/2 x 45 1/2 inches; two top gussets, 3 x 5 1/2 inches; and one bottom gusset, 5 1/2 x 19 inches.

The monogram is stitched onto aida cloth, bordered with piping, and framed in a window at the center of the upper front bag piece.

To make the window, first cut a facing piece from the outer bag fabric and stitch it to the upper front piece, right sides together. Cut away both layers of fabric inside the stitching lines. Clip the corners, turn the seam allowances to the wrong side, and stuff one layer through the open window. Press.

The handle is a 2 1/4 x 7-inch piece of bag fabric stitched to an identical piece of leather fabric. Fold the handle in half lengthwise and stitch one short end to the right side of one top gusset section. Whipstitch the two halves of the folded handle together along the short end.

The lining pieces are identical to the outer bag pieces, except that you need not cut the two top gusset pieces, and the side gussets should be 2 1/4 inches longer than specified.

The lining is installed by first turning the outer bag inside out and inserting a sturdy hanger. The lining is then placed over the bag, right side out. After you've assembled the inner and outer layers, separate the halves of a nylon fastener strip and whipstitch one half to each side of the center front overlap.

Genia on Genealogy

By GENA WALLS

Many of the records for the state of MAINE have been published including town histories of the early communities. Before 1819 Maine was under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, but kept possession of legal records in the various townships.

For example, Portland has very complete records dating from 1712. The first settlers came mainly from England, but many German families came between 1740 and 1800. They were followed by Swedes working in the ship yards and Finns occupied large lumber camps. Records before 1892 can be obtained from the city clerks or from the Maine State Archives Building, State House, Augusta, Maine, 04333.

Freedom of religion played an important part in the growth of MARYLAND when the founders with Lord Baltimore announced that religious tolerance and protection would be extended to all Christians of whatever religious belief who would come to establish permanent residence in the area. Religion was not the only reason for settlers as thousands of Irish immigrants came to dig canals and later turned to farming and mining.

As in most all our states, you will find a variety of different nationalities in Maryland from 1677 to the present.

Write the county clerk for information first and if not available, write the Division of Vital Records and Statistics, Department of Health, 201 W. Preston St., Baltimore, Md., 21201. Land grants can be obtained from the Land Office, Annapolis, Md., 21401.

Both Maine and Maryland have excellent published church records and many of the county libraries participate in an exchange - loan program.

Researchers often overlook this method of obtaining information. Librarians are usually helpful in answering inquiries about the history and people of the area. Many of them will send the name and address of persons with your surname. I routinely request the names from the area phone books when writing for information. Remember to include that all important self-addressed, stamped envelope.

LOOSE MARBLES

LISA PATMAN

I just got a letter from a lady who calls herself a "family resource management specialist." From what I can figure out this means she tells us peons how to spend our money. In fact, this particular specialist specializes in an even more specialized specialty than just the spending of money. This specialist's speciality is spending YOUR Christmas money.

Boy, was I glad to hear from her. There I sat, worrying about how I could afford clothes for the school year when all along I should have been thinking ahead to December and Christmas presents. What a fool I've been. Lucky for me this lady wrote me in time.

I knew right away she meant business when she wrote, "If you don't read on, you'll only have yourself to blame when Christmas catches you unprepared this year."

instead. Most people will have more time to enjoy an off-season party, and you won't be nearly so rushed." My dear Miss S., have you ever tasted eggnog in August? Disgusting.

On the other hand, you do have me in my regular Christmas shopping mood. Just thinking about serving breakfast for three months to some lunthead in bed has put me in a surly, rude and sadistic state of mind. I think I'll go out, buy a couple of early Christmas gifts, knock a few sales person's head together, and snarl at store owners.

I just hope that Miss S is working part time at the gift shop during her summer vacation. That would really give me the Christmas spirit.

Miss Specialist suggests, "Make a list - now - of all the people you'll give gifts to. This list probably won't change much by Christmas." Who is she kidding? I don't know whether I'll still be married, whether I'll be speaking to my children, whether the cats will still like me, whether my ship will come in, or whether my brother will kick me out of the family. It's risky for me to count too far ahead of time. In fact, Christmas Eve is about as close as I can get without risking much.

Next she says, "start your shopping tasks - now. Think how much easier it is to shop now rather than later in stores crowded with people who didn't plan ahead. Besides, by starting now, you can spread your purchases over several months instead of over - extending the budget at the end of the year."

I don't know about you, Miss Specialist, but I like shopping whenever the stores are crowded with the other filthy swine who forgot to shop early. I like being surly, bumping into people, and clawing my way to the cash register. It's the only time of the year I can be rude and nasty without having to explain myself. As for spreading my purchases over several months, I do. It's just that I've spread last year's Christmas purchase payments over this year's months. Where were you when they invented charge cards, Miss Specialist? I could have used your advice then. Ah, you were out shopping for your next year's Christmas present, I'll bet.

Here's another dandy hint. Miss S. suggests, "If you always have a Christmas party, have one now

Families of mentally ill need support

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Sheila Stacks knows from experience the "nightmare" of having a mentally ill family member. Her oldest son, Mark, is a schizophrenic who has been in and out of mental institutions for eight years.

"For a long time, I couldn't talk to anyone about it," she said. "I hoped people wouldn't ask me about my kids, and if they did, I always waited to discuss Mark until the very end."

Now, however, Ms. Stacks wants to share her story in hopes it will help others in similar situations. She also is helping to organize a Dauphin County Mental Health-Mental Retardation support group for families of the mentally ill.

"This (group) is something that is so needed," Ms. Stacks said. "When you're dealing with mental illness, there's still a tremendous amount of misinformation ...

people don't talk to you because they don't know what to say, they don't understand mental illness. So you must just keep everything bottled up inside, and it wears at you."

She hopes the support group will help alleviate some of this stress.

"One of the good things about these groups is that you can look at the person and say, 'Hey, I understand,' and they know you do," she said.

Ms. Stacks said her family's ordeal began about nine years ago when Mark, then 19, became "unruly, combative, rebellious."

At first she chalked it up to "typical teen-age behavior," but when he began hallucinating, she knew it was something more.

Doctors eventually diagnosed Mark as having schizophrenia, an illness that makes distinguishing between fantasy and reality difficult. He was put on medication, but his delusions got worse.

REV. FRANCIS P. O'MALLEY

Reception set for O'Malley

Rev. Francis P. O'Malley, C.M., assistant pastor at St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church parish in Pampa, will celebrate 40 years of priesthood Saturday at his home parish of St. Thomas More in Chicago, Ill.

He will be honored Saturday night with a reception held by his family and friends.

Father O'Malley was ordained Dec. 18, 1943, at the Vincentian seminary in Perryville, Mo. His first assignment was as professor at De Paul University Academy in Chicago.

He was also director of athletics and later became president of the Chicago Catholic High School League.

Father O'Malley was called to active duty in 1951 as a chaplain with the United States Navy. For the next four years he served with Marine Corps units at Camp Pendleton, Calif., and with the Marines in Korea.

While attached to the 1st Marine Division, FMF, he was awarded the Bronze Star for ministering to the wounded and the dying during the Korean conflict.

On later duty assignments he served aboard aircraft carriers in the Pacific. He retired from the Naval Reserve in 1972 with the rank of commander.

Speaking of the priesthood, Father O'Malley said, "The priesthood has been all that I expected. It was and it is a distinct challenge to me in carrying out the work of the Lord."

Continuing his remarks, he noted, "I have been very happy in my assignments and feel that I have done some good in the vineyard of the Lord. My heart is full of gratitude to God for calling me to the priesthood."

He concluded, "My special thanks to my wonderful family and my many friends who have spiritually supported me during these forty years."

While on two-month sabbatical leave from the Pampa parish, Father O'Malley will attend courses in conversational Spanish at the University of Mexico at San Antonio, Texas.

Hi-Land Christian schedules speakers

Hi-Land Christian Church, 1615 N. Banks, will have two special speakers during services Sunday.

Walter Birney, a graduate of Dallas Christian College, will speak during the Sunday School hour beginning at 9:45 a.m. and the morning worship service beginning at 10:45 a.m.

A minister of the Copeland Christian Church in Kansas for 26 years, Birney resigned his position in June to serve the National Missionary Convention on a full-time basis. He has served as coordinator of the convention for 18 years while serving with the Copeland congregation.

Birney will discuss activities in the mission fields. The National Missionary Convention will be held Sept. 9 through 12 in Phoenix, Ariz. The convention, with more than 20,000 expected to attend, will feature more than 1,000 missionaries.

Donnie Taylor, a student of Dallas Christian College, will be speaking at the evening worship service at 6:30 p.m. Sunday. He is the son of Myrna Ray and Robert D. Taylor of Wilcox, Ariz., and the grandson of Harold and Nina Taylor of Pampa.

Along with his studies at DCC, Taylor also plays basketball. This summer he spent two weeks working in the mission field in Haiti along with members of the Hi-Land Christian congregation.

Taylor is working on a Bachelor of Arts degree with a major in Bible and a minor in Biblical languages and pastoral ministries.

His sermon text will be Acts 12:1-19.

Pastor DeWayne Wright said the public is invited to attend the special services Sunday.

The Marvels of God's Creations

WHY DO FISH LIVE IN WATER? We can answer this question partially by saying: that their lungs were created to draw oxygen from the water. However, to know how and why, we must look to God's word.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." ... "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life . . ."

Attend Church and worship the one who created these marvels.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

FEAST FOR A PANDA—Ying Xion, a male panda on loan to the Los Angeles Zoo from the People's Republic of China, munches on a sparerib at the zoo during its first public feeding. Although the mainstay of a panda's diet is bamboo, the pair on loan to the zoo receive spareribs twice a week at their home in China. (AP Laserphoto)

Homeowner wins right to needle condo

AUSTIN (AP) — Speech doesn't have to be nice to be protected, a judge says, and that includes a "Condos Stink" sign emblazoned across a west Austin homeowner's garage.

Last fall, Grant Lannon started raising a stink over an 18-unit condominium project that overlooks his home. He erected signs in his backyard — in full view of the development — saying "This view will get worse" and "Condos Stink."

Robert Hughes, the condos' owner, went to court to make Lannon pull the signs down because he said they kept him from selling the last 11 units. He won a temporary injunction last week against the irate homeowner.

But this week the case came to an end.

Saving bluebird the aim of project

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Little by little, Marie Morgan's family is growing. The Akron woman is the stepmother to more than 100 bluebirds, hatched, raised and banded along three bluebird trails in Summit County over the last six years.

The project — the brainchild of Mrs. Morgan — was designed to assist the colorful but threatened Eastern bluebird.

The male bluebird has a bright blue back and wings with a reddish-brown breast and white belly. The female is slightly duller. It is an insect-eater known for its soft, melodic warble.

The bluebird's numbers have declined over 25 years, believed due to competition for nesting sites with other birds and due to man-made changes in the environment. About 20 bluebird boxes were installed in 1978 in O'Neil Woods near Norton, and in the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area. The boxes were mounted on 5-foot poles to keep predators away.

At the same time, Mrs. Morgan, president of the Greater Akron Audubon Society, began banding bluebirds with color-coded aluminum bands. Recently, she encountered her first case of one of her banded birds, now a 3-year-old father, raising two nestlings at O'Neil Woods.

"That was really neat," she said. "It shows that we are making a difference. We honestly don't know if we're making a big difference or a little difference, but we're trying to help the bluebird make a comeback."

Mrs. Morgan said that maintaining the bluebird trails is a time-consuming effort that includes weekly checks on nests and examining nestlings.

Success will not be denied you in the coming year if you rely on your logic at all times. Even issues that appear hopeless can be revived with intelligent approach.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Success may be denied you today if your goals are disproportionate to your abilities. Be realistic when assessing your talents. Major changes are in store for Leo in the coming year. Send for your year ahead predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You are endowed with acute critical faculties and it's easy for you to spot faults in others, but today you'd be wise to wear blinders. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Try to be as prudent as possible today in the management of your resources. Be doubly cautious if you're handling another's finances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Mistakenly, you may think you need strong allies for major undertakings today. Actually, you'll do better operating independently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you allow others to lay their burdens on you today, your own undertakings could suffer. Take care of your business before doing someone else's job.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Someone may attempt to lay a guilt trip on you in hopes to get you to do his or her bidding. Fortunately, you'll recognize this for what it is.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your own personal desires may have to be put aside today because duty calls in other areas. Although it may be annoying at first, you accept the facts of life. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) It's quite possible you may have to deal with someone today who has a fixed outlook, yet you'll manage to handle this person with making a ripple.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be called upon to repay an old obligation today. However, if you negotiate a bit, the terms could be rather painless.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If possible, do not let others manage important matters for you today. Things could go awry when you delegate your authority.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Seek strong, energetic assistants today when performing work and be extra careful that you don't exceed your physical limitations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your attitude will have a great influence upon those with whom you pal around today. Strive to be festive instead of dour or serious.

SERVE RETURNED— Pampa's Monica Kelley (34) returns a serve while teammate Amy Voyles (50) looks on during volleyball action Thursday night against Hereford. Pampa defeated Hereford, 15-5, 15-17 and 15-10, to open the season. (Staff Photo)

Pampa wins volleyball opener

Pampa overcame opening-night jitters to defeat Hereford, 15-5, 15-17, 15-10, Thursday night in high school girls' volleyball action in Clifton McNeely Fieldhouse.

"I was pretty pleased with the girls' performance," said Pampa coach Phil Hall. "We did lose our concentration in the second game and allowed them to come back on us when we were ahead 14-4."

Pampa's defense, led by Monica Kelly and Teresa Perkins, was a dominant factor in the first game. Mistakes coming hurt the Lady Harvesters in the second game.

"It wasn't like we played poorly the second game, but it just seemed like we made errors at the wrong time, like on match points," Hall said.

Setter Shaun Simmons, a starter on Pampa's 1983 district championship team, suffered a knee injury in the second game and sat out the remainder of the match.

"I don't believe her injury is that serious," Hall said. "She should be able to play again soon."

Laura Horne and Carrie Carter took over as setters the last two games.

"They did a good job of covering for Shaun," Hall said. "I was also pleased with the steady performance of Irene Perez. "This was her first start as a varsity player."

Pampa JVs also won their match, 15-8, 15-7. Both Pampa teams travel to Palo Duro for matches Tuesday night, beginning at 6:30 p.m.

"The JV girls played well. They were a little nervous and scared just like the varsity players," Hall said.

Pampa women golfers have club tournament

The Pampa Ladies' Club Golf Championship tees off Saturday at the Pampa Country Club course.

Nita Hill won the 36-hole tournament last season and was also medalist with a first-round 78.

There are 34 entries in the four-flight competition. Awards in each flight will be given for the longest drive, closest to the pin, and winners of a chipping and putting contest.

Oilers making progress

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oiler General Manager Ladd Herzog has been intent on rebuilding the Oilers through the National Football League draft since he took charge in 1981.

After three successful drafts, he's beginning to see progress but he's not ready to pronounce them playoff-ready.

"I think if we can finish 8-8, it would be a major accomplishment," Herzog told the Houston Chronicle in an interview from the team's training camp at San Angelo.

The Oilers finished 2-14 last season and tied Tampa Bay for the worst record in the National Football League.

"It depends on how fast our young people come along because we have an awfully young team," Herzog said. "Just looking at our projected starters, we could have 17 of 22 who have been with the team three years or less."

The Oilers host Phillips and the New Orleans Saints Saturday night in the Astrodome in an exhibition game.

"Based on last year's results and how young we are, I don't think we can be considered playoff material this season," Herzog said. "There are a lot of question marks in our division, though. Anything's possible."

The Oilers' signing of quarterback Warren Moon to a $5.5 million contract and giving No. 1 draft choice Dean Steinkuhler a $2.6 million deal, signaled the Oilers desire to return to playoff contention.

"A lot of people second-guessed us when we selected Steinkuhler over two linebackers but Steinkuhler has lived up to all of our expectations," Herzog said. "The injury to Doug France makes the Steinkuhler pick even better."

Steinkuhler has been thrust into a starting position by the loss of France, who recently underwent shoulder surgery.

The Oilers passed up chances to traded running back Earl Campbell, who has yet to play in the preseason because of a bruised knee. Campbell suffered the bruise in an early training camp drill on the same knee that underwent arthroscopic surgery in May.

Cowboys lose to Steelers

IRVING, Texas (AP)— The Pittsburgh Steelers' rich crop of rookies shook Dallas veteran quarterback Danny White on defense and made the clutch offensive plays to remain unbeaten in the National Football League preseason.

Rookie Chris Brown of Notre Dame intercepted White twice and rookie Terry Echols of Marshall recovered a fumble that led to the second of two touchdowns by Anthony Corley in a 20-10 victory Thursday night.

Corley is yet another rookie, a free agent no less, from Nevada-Reno.

He has an excellent shot at making the Steeler team.

He scored on runs of one and nine yards after White mistakes and Gary Anderson kicked two 49-yard field goals in a joust of unbeaten.

Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said "Anthony Corley has played well for us and I'd say he is cementing a position on this football team. He's been doing well as a running back and on specialty teams.

"He has a knack of slithering through there with power. Others have some slither, but they don't have the power that he has. Corley is a strong runner."

Asked if he missed contract holdout Franco Harris, Knoll said "Franco who? I don't know who he is."

Cowboys' Coach Tom Landry didn't appear too upset at his team's first loss of the preseason.

"Their second team beat our second team" said Landry.

Landry said "The game wasn't a total loss. We got to see a lot of our players get ready for the cut to 60 next week. We played pretty good when our first units were in there."

Pittsburgh raised its record to 3-0 while Dallas dropped to 2-1.

White suffered two interceptions and fumbled a snap away to the Steelers.

White did throw an 18-yard fourth period scoring pass to rookie Kirk Phillips of Tulsa to cut the Steeler lead to 13-10, but later fumbled away to Echols at the Cowboy 30. Four plays later Corley broke a tackle and scored from nine yards out.

"I'm not that disappointed," said Landry. "I think we are showing some positive signs. I can't say we are on schedule but I think we will play better each week now. White made some good plays and he made some bad plays. Some were when the second unit was in there."

Steeler linebacker Jack Lambert said the victory over Dallas was important even if it was in the exhibition category.

"It's always nice to beat the Cowboys, no matter when you are playing them," he said. "I think our football team is really looking good, especially our running backs."

Safety Ron Johnson of the Steelers added "It's always special to come to Texas Stadium and beat the Cowboys. It's a big rivalry."

Pittsburgh is 4-6 against Dallas in preseason games but has a 12-10 edge in regular season and playoff games, including two Super Bowl victories.

Noll said he planned to start Dave Woodley next week.
