problems are looked at together One significant point seems t be emerging out of the varied and" often conflicting scientific opinon aired in the present debate. Since there is conceivable danger in the radioactivity to which man is normally exposed in his environment, any increase except for approved medical purposes is not good. The objective must, therefore, clearly be to end or to control tests under international auspices. How shall this be done and under what conditions?

Differing Approaches

Differing approaches to this question bring forth a variety of answers, but two points of view seem to be most prominently expressed. Those who believe that the danger to health in the present circumstances is exceedingly grave argue that the tests should be stopped immediately, and they are only secondarily concerned with related problems or safeguards to ensure compliance with treaties. Others, while recognizing a danger to health but not considering it of immediate gravity, believe that a margin of tibe is allowed for negotiating agreements which will most fully utilize available scientific knowledge and will as adequately as possible pro-tect the security of nations.

PERRYTON - Construction the Northern Natural Gas Company's dehydration plant was begun June 17, and is expected to be completed by July 20.

The construction contract is held by the Dresser Engineering Company of Tulsa, Okla., and they have 40-man crew working on the unit. A pair of 16-inch lines, raised above the ground on concrete supports, have been laid to divert gas into the dehydration unit, and back into the main lines.

The new plant straddles the two main lines of Northern Natural which carry natural gas across the Panhandle into northern and middle west markets.

Another line, a 30-incher, is to be laid in the near future and rightof-way has been secured. This line will parallel the two existing lines, but will be larger. The new plant is located on an 80-acre site in the southwest part of the county,

The Straight Line

Man's inner conviction must precede man's outward

As a rational being, man does not move without due cause. It is wholly false to presume that correct action can occur in advance of correct thinking. The currents of energy which drive each human being originate within him and move outward. These currents cannot be reversed. It is important that this matter be understood. The actionists among us seem to fail of this understanding on occasion. They presume that without thought, without conviction, man can be directed by others. This can only seem to occur if the individual surrenders his own volition and trusts blindly in the absoluteness of a leader. It matters not whether that leader be a government representative, a union racketeer or a church dignitary. To surrender one's own processes to the control of others is contrary to life itself and is, if we look closely, actually impossible. Life moves from the invisible, from whence we all sprang, into the visible. Cause must inevitably precede the effect. Since, in this world of ours, we tend to concentrate upon effects, the importance of selecting the precisely correct method to arrive at the effect we want, is of paramount importance. The means to the end are, in a sense, the tools we must use to achieve. If we select the wrong tools, thus, the wrong means, the end cannot be what we envisage. No end can possibly be desirable if to achieve it, we must use immoral and evil methods.

Strangely, almost mystically, man tends to become that upon which he concentrates. A man proccupied with earning money, placing money as his immediate and all encompassing goal, is very apt to have a great deal of money. The reason more people do not have more money, is simply because they do not concentrate upon this one thing. Instead, they permit themselves to be drawn away from that objective, thus scattering their energies upon a thousand devious things. Their actual progress in a given direction is related directly to their ability to concentrate upon that direction. To achieve mightily, intense concentration is mandatory.

In discussing the nature of freedom and the problems which must inevitably come up when we think of a totally free society, we note the ever ready willingness of persons to abandon freedom as a goal and to permit themselves to be sidetracked. Mst persons who believe in freedom, for example, will admit that a certain amount of defensive force is inherent in freedom. If there are persons in our midst, and who could deny it, who will not govern themselves, it follows that something or someone outside themselves must govern them. Control is essential, lest chaos ensue. The problem is to create a desire within the individual that he will practice self-control. When he does so, mere is no further necessity for worrying about him. If he is governing himself, there is no necessity for someone

But it is at this point that many otherwise good students of liberty turn aside. Instead of concentrating upon liberty, they strike off on a tangent, busying themselves with seeking to find ways and means of controlling others. And what they concentrate upon, they tend to become.

It might be said that this is mankind's basic trap. For having acknowledged that defensive force is necessary, we must accept the corollary that it is necessary only when aggressive force is present.

If the amount of aggressive force in evideice at a given time is diminished, it follows that the necessary amount of defensive force would diminish in the same exact ratio. For more defensive force to exist than aggressive force made necessary, would be for force presumably defensive in charcter, to become itself aggres-

Thus, it will be seen by keen students of human nature that if we concretate our energies upon providing adequate defensive force, we will in all probability exceed the requirement for such force. Instead, if we can concentrate upon freedom and upon attaining greater andgreater self-control in ourselves, then the need for defensive force will diminish as the possibility of aggressive force being used diminishes.

In the end, we will be that which we concretate upon. Shall we renew our concentration upon freedom? Or shall we succumb to the tempatation to concerrate upon security, protectionism and, finally force?

The Doctor Says

By EDGAR P. JORDAN, M. D.

Not long ago L. B. asked several questions in connection with the disease known as trichinosis. First, she asks, "Is bacon treated or cured in any way before reaching the consumer to destroy trichinae?" I believe the answer is that it usually is not treated in a manner which will always destroy all parasites, if any are present, Federal meat inspectors require that all meats containing pork which are eaten without further cooking shall be treated by heating, freezing or drying in order to kill trichinae. Of course, bacon is not eaten raw and trichinae, if present, are as a rule killed by complete cooking.

L. B. also wants to know whether she is correct in assuming smoking of pork does not destroy this parasite. She is correct. The parasites are destroyed only by satisfactory heating, freezing or drying and by a method of "gamma Trichinosis is an important health problem. The disease is caused by a tiny animal parasite known as trichinella spiralis. It has been estimated that about 25 million inhabitants of the United States alone harbor the parasite. Each year about 350,000 persons acquire new infections Apparently most of those who become infected do not show any symptoms. Only about 16,000 persons each year are expected to take enough of the parasites into their systems to cause obvious trouble. Of those who do develop symptoms, about one in 20 may

The parasites usually enter the human body in contaminated pork or pork products. When live trichinae are swallowed in this manner they pass through the wall of the intestines and are carried to the muscles in various parts of the body. Whether symptoms will be produced depends on the number of parasites.

Nausea, vomiting and watery diarrhea are common symptoms. abdominal pain ent. The worms develop in the intestines, and about the ninth or 10th day begin to invade the muscles.

Again, if they are present in large enough numbers, they may produce tenderness of the muscles, especially in the arms and legs. Sometimes a reddish rash occurs on the skin. Fever may be present. Puffiness and swelling of the face, especially around the eyes, is common.

In mild cases the symptoms may last for only 10 or 12 days. In severe ones they may be present for six or eight weeks.

of its exemption from internal conflicts and external wars." "For a century and more there has been a lengthening of the human life span. In this country, during the National Period, the average span has risen from 30 to almost 70 years - more than doubled in a century and a half. This has been due, doubtless, to an unexampled freedom during most of this time from governmental or other compulsions and a consequently enormous extension of the area, the complexity and the productivity of free contractual relations. This made possible a continuous rise in the supply of the necessities, and enormous improvements in the physical and other conditions favorable to the extension of life.'

DRINKS ON JOHN FOSTER N. Y. Daily News

You can look with charity, we think, on the $223.49 found by House probers to have been spent for liquor on one occasion out of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles' $1,000,300 confidential fund for emergencies. There are times when a drink or a fifth or a case of liquor falls definitely into the emergency class. But the expenditure of $350,000 since 1951 on public opinion polls to find out how people thought Dulles was handling his job seems pretty loose-handed - especially since in one instance 58 percent of those queried said Dulles was doing a good job but only 52 percent knew what his job was. Here we have an interesting sidelight on government waste; and last Saturday another such was provided by the air show put on at Andrews Air Force Base (near Washington) in honor of Gen. Nathan F. Twining's winding up as Air Chief of Staff to be come Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman. Some 260 planes performed splendidly-and come to find out, they burned up $400,000 worth of fuel.

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.) says the show was justifiable because the pilots got some good training out of it. That's like saying the actual running of the Kentucky Derby improves the breed of horses. Gradually the taxpavers are
