Prolonged For Another Month

United Press Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON (UP)-President Eisenhower and congressional leaders of both parties turned thumbs down today on immediate tax cuts to revive the economy.

They said a decision on this won't be made until later. Their parallel disclosures came in the face of a government report that unemployment in February reached a 16-year high of 5,173,000 jobless persons.

House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (Mass.) said after a White House economic conference that a decision on whether to cut taxes can be delayed another month, to see whether an upturn develops. The White House said this also is President Eisenhower's view.

At the same time Speaker Sam Rayburn, key figure in Democratic Valedictorian tax strategy, said a tax cut won't help the man with no taxes to pay because he is out of job. He said than a point, John Mead became "other courses" would put more valedictorian of the seniors at people to work faster than a re- Pampa High. Miss Jones qualified duction in taxes.

SNEAK ATTACK TARGETS?-The U.S. Navy, according to Rep. Clarence Cannon (D-Mo.) has issued a report warning that Russia could use missile ships disguised as merchant vessels to stage a "decisive" atomic attack on this country'. Cannon, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said such ships could rain devastation on any U.S. city within 550 miles (white areas on Newsmap) of either coast. Forty-three of the nation's biggest cities and an estimated 85 per cent of the country's vital industry are located less than 500 miles from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Cannon said there normally were about 75 undientified ships within 500 miles of the U.S. coast at any given time.

It's an Easy Step from Dreaming to Driving!

Here he is at last-just a few miles out on his maiden journey-with his hands on the wheel and his head in the clouds. It's his!

And yet, truth to tell, he does have one regret. For he knows that he needn't have waited this long, had he but realized what an easy step it is from dreaming of a Cadillac to driving in a Cadillac.

Like a great many motorists, for instance, he was not aware that a Cadillac-in view of its obvious virtues-could be so modest in price. Nor did he appreciate, until the facts were presented, how economical a Cadillac is to maintain or how wonderfully it holds its value over the years.

And little did he suspect how accommodating his dealer would be in welcoming him to membership in the great and distinguished family of Cadillac owners.

HOLLYWOOD FISH STORY-This fish story is a true one. Four 25-pound Royal Chinook salmon were recently flown alive, complete with a "salmon-sitter," from Portland, Ore., to Hollywood for a fishing derby in a local cafe's private fish pond. It was the high point of a party for 25 ABC-TV stars. Here Kathy Nolan, who plays Kate in "The Real McCoys," expresses delight—or something—at the sight of the beauty that the chef is about to pop on the broiler.

CATERPILLAR CAMERA-Focused on targets two miles away, this nine-foot camera has brought new information about aerial haze penetration in research at Eastman Kodak, Rochester, N.Y. Looking like a huge caterpillar with its diaphragm ribs encased in a weather jacket, the unit is operated here by scientists, from left, Stanley B. Saunders, H. R. Condit, and Peter C. Trapalino. Condit, program head, said that differences from normal contrast in target pictures made with the 95-inch focal length camera help to indicate what films can best "see" through haze.

Carried To Extremes

The subcommittee report, still in manuscript form, will list the scores of specific examples to document the charge that military and scientific secrecy has been carried to absurd extremes. Here are a few:

-More than one million military and civilian employes have authority to classify documents as top secret, secret or confidential. The documents in federal custody which bear security classifications would fill a file drawer 575

Holding The Tide

President Eisenhower says that by next month the recession will have vanished. Vice President Nixon says that a depression will "not be permitted."

There is a pleasant fable told about King Canute (the great) when he and his Danish followers were attempting to overcome a naval opponent. Canute stood on the shore and bade the tides to hold still so that his ships would have the advantage in the encounter. There is no evidence that the king's command was obeyed.

We cannot help believing that in certain respects the posturing of King Canute and of Eisenhower and Nixon were cut from the same bolt of cloth. Yet there is ample reason to believe that Canute's followers felt that their king really had the power to prevent the tide from advancing. And with similar trust in superstition, there appear to be many American people who feel that the present administration can alter the course of economic history by taking

Just how fallacious and silly such histrionics are should be readily apparent to any person of sound mind. Mr. Eisenhower has no way of knowing the ups and downs of the economy, any more than the rest of us have. And as for Mr. Nixon's palm-raised order, it is on a par with that of a colonel of our acquaintance, who issued a directive to his command stating: "The personnel of this post will have high

The economy, like morale, does not respond to the use of force. Economics is the science of human action in the market place. That is all that it is. And no scientific fact is the least bit impressed by political wishes, however forcefully expressed.

What we are experiencing at the moment is simply, the result of certain causes. If those causes are understood, the result, although not the timing of the result, is readily predictable. And it is probably true that if we understood all of the causes well enough, even the timing could be ascertained in advance.

Very well, what are the causes of the current recession? There are only three. 1. The use of government force to collect taxes. 2. The use of government force to support union demands for higher wages than can be justified by production. 3. The use of government force to control and regulate business and agriculture by means of subsidy or

These three practices in combination accomplish these things: 1. They remove from our productive citizens a large share of their surplus and thus prevent the citizens from saving or spending their money in a manner which would be pleasing to them, and stimulating to the market. 2. The compel management to reward workers, not on the basis of what is accomplished by the workers, but on the basis of the alleged need of the workers. 3. They reward the least fit and the least deserving by penalizing those who are fit and hence those who are successful.

The sum total of these actions is to slow down the activity of the market place to such a point that government action in the market place is now considered of greater import and significance than human action in the market place. A recession is inevitable

Now, what do Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon propose as a means of halting these abuses? They do not propose to halt the abuses. Instead, they propose to expand the abuses by relying more and more upon government activity in the market, government doles to non-producers, and greater government debt.

In sum, having adopted a program which is ruinous to free entreprise, they propose to prevent the ruin by expanding the program which is bringing ruin. And to top it all, the economy is now commanded by a politician to hold still until things are adjusted.

What is wrong with the American economy is the use of government force within the economy. What those who are doing the wrong now intimate is that they can stop the flow from our economic wound, by opening the sore so that the flow will be geater.

As any surgeon can tell you, this is not the way to heal a wound, but the way to guarantee that the patient will proponents of myth, we can now place a bust of Mr. Eisenhower and one of Mr. Nixon alongside that of King Canute.

BETTER JOBS

"Social Responsibilities Of Organized Labor"

The National Council of Churches of Christ in America's book, written by John A. Fitch, has a chapter on "Strikes." It starts out with this statement "Most collective - bargaining negotiations in the United States lead to peaceful settlements; only a minority end with resort to strike and picket line. Yet the possibility of a strike is present in the consciousness of every negotiator and influences every bargaining conference."

It is hard to conceive how there can be any peaceful settlement at a collective - bargaining table when either party threatens to strike and damage the other party if they do not agree to their

Would those people who believe that wages should be established by the threats of strikes contend there would be a peaceable settlement if a highwayman held a gun at the individual and demanded his money or his life? It is just as rational to contend that a man who concedes a demand for increased wages under the duress of threatening his business is peaceably settling wages, as to contend there is a peaceable settlement in any robbery. There is no real bargain under duress or threats of same.

Would the apologists for collective bargaining contend there would be a peaceable settlement of wages if the employers had gotten together and told the workers that if they did not accept their offer other employers would join together and close their plants and refuse to hire any of the workers until they conceded? If it is not just and moral in one case, it is not just and moral in

The author goes on to say: "To be sure, as management and labor grow in their experience with and understanding of the value of collective bargaining and as, through manifestations of honesty and fair dealing, each develops greater confidence in the other's integrity, reason and logic will play an increasingly important role in contract negotiations."

It is hard to see how there can be any growth and understanding of the value of collective bargaining that is based on the threats of strikes. A man quitting and telling his employer that if he doesn't grant his demands he will find a better job, or does not care to work on that condition, is an entirely different matter than combining with other men to simultaneously stop without warning if the demands are not granted.

There is no more chance of gaining understanding about the value of collective bargaining based on strikes than there is the value of any form of exploitation; any form of a combination to get something by injuring others than by benefiting them.

On Page 57 the author admits that strikers stop working and contend that they have a right to their jobs no matter how much they try to injure the other party to the contract. He admits that the legal right to a job as a property right has not yet come nto being. Evidently he is pleased with the condition that has come about that the employer, in the final analysis, has to have the consent of the government in order to discharge a man who belongs to a labor union, and does not believe in the free and unhampered market system of arriving at

The harder it is for a man to select his help so that he can better serve his customers, the more unemployment there will be.

Then the writer tells what he wrote 30 years ago as explanation of the point of view, which he says he sees no reason to modify.

He wrote at that time "The striker. . . has quit his job. not because he is through with it but because he wants to make it a better job. He has no thought of abandoning the industry or the employer. He has withdrawn temporarily in the hope that his withdrawal and the consequent inconvenience to his employer will have an effect on the job. He hopes that changes will be made as a result of which the job will be a more satisfactory one when he goes back to it. He thinks of it, therefore, as his job. He is undergoing hardship and loss in behalf of that job. He has an eye on the future and on the opportunities that it will hold for his children, as well as for himself. Now, along comes a rank outsider and walks into the plant and takes the job that belongs to another man, and for which he has sacrificed noth-Despite the fact that he has had the same opportunity that the striker had to get a job of his own, he has deliberately chosen to reach out and take what bea thief, in the striker's opinion, for the ordinary thief only takes money or goods, the results of past effort. The strike - breaker steals the future; he takes hope and opportunity and the worthwhileness of living from a man who had done him no wrong. He writes in commenting on that statement: "What is needed further before we can find a way through the maze of industrial conflict is recognition that the psychological and emotional atmosphere engendered by strikes has its origin in attitudes and points of view that are capable understanding that is the prerequisite of enlightened action."

Of course it is hard to understand, and never will be under-

Tail Of The Kite

Robert S. Allen Reports

WASHINGTON - Atomic Commission Chairman Lewis Strauss is going to try for a second term, . after all.

Present term of the controversial New Yorker expires June 30. Several months ago he let it be known he'd had enough of the Capital, and eagerly looked forward to returning to private life. But no more.

In a complete backstage flip-flop, Strauss is now doing his utmos to ensure retention of his $22,500

That will take quite a bit of doing - in the Senate!

So far as the White House is concerned, Strauss' reappointment is a cinch. In fact, his explanation for changing his mind is that it was solely at the behest of President Eisenhower.

As Strauss relates it, when he informed the President of having difficulty in "finding a suitable successor," the President insisted he continue as AEC chairman for the remainder of the Administration. In addition to being AEC head, Strauss is also the President's personal atomic advier, and selected the four other members of the present Commission.

Says Strauss, "I could not refuse the President's request to stay until he leaves office in 1961. I owe it to him to serve as long as he wants me to."

But while ace high in the President's esteem and dead certain he will rename him. Senate approval is highly conjectural.

Strauss' standing with the Joint Atomic Committee is very different from that at the White House. For most of the five years he has bossed the AEC, he has been atbitter loggerheads with leaders of this powerful congressional group.

On two occasions, they enacted legislation for the express purpose One of these exceptional provisions requires Strauss to keep the other Atomic Commissioners apprized of what he is doing. He had been making important policy without consulting them. Currently, he is. hotly feuding with Committe leaders over two major measures: A large - scale atomic power program, and exchange of secret data with friendly nations.

stood, how actions that have no regard for the rights of other people can ever be understood by both parties.

Just how would Mr. Fitch, or any other member of the directors of the National Council of Churches of Christ in America, arrive at wages if both the worker and the employer do not have a right to exchange his services on a voluntary basis, without interference, to the world's highest bidder? If an exchange is not made on that basis, it is to be made by lot, by needs, by seniority, by retation, by force or intimidation, or otherwise by what other measurable personal eternal rule is to be used to determine the value of the product of each Individual?

At Strauss' last appearance before the Committee, he clashed angrily with Senators Clinton Anderson (D., N.M.), vice chairman and Albert Gore (D., Tenn.), who led the fight against Strauss several years ago on the stormy Dixon-Yates contract.

Relations between Straus and Committeemen have become so strained that he is now staving away from them as much as he can.

For the first time, he is letting other AEC members, particularly Dr. Willard Libby, former University of Chicago chemistry professor, carry the ball in dealing with the Committee on important legis-

Also in his effort to win friends and influence senators, Strauss is giving luncheons and dinners.

There have been a number of these social occasions in the past month, and others are contemplated. They have been very pleasant affairs but have suffered from a serious deficiency.

None of Strauss' critics on the Joint Committee, and few Senate Democrats have accepted his in-

Senators Anderson and Gore are making no bones of their intention to fight his confirmation for a second term. Says Anderson, "We will scrutinize his record line by line, and look him over hair by hair." Gore is even more specific, "The whole Dixon-Yates mess will be rehashed in full detail."

So it is very much a toss-up whether Strauss' decision to seek a second term will work out or

FALLOUT - The Atomic Energy Commission is investigating reports of "spying" at the Sandia Base in New Mexico. These charges were made by employees of this highly classified installation where atomic weapons are made. . . The Navy is being asked for a report on plans to build a huge atomicpowered dirigible. Word of that has reached Representative Melvin Price (D., Ill.), chairman of the Joint Atomic Research Subcommittee and he wants to know what it's all about. . . Closer nuclear relations between the U.S. and France are urged in a forthcoming report by the Joint Committee. It will state: "The French atomic program is generally under-estimated in the U.S. Committee members were greatly impressed with the magnitude of France's effort and the national pride in atomic developments for the conservation of food, drugs and other materials. Explaining this plan to the Joint Committee, AEC Chairman Strauss wrote, "This study is being undertaken since it appears that successful application of radiation of high pow-national economic significance.

The Army has been pursuing an intensive food irradiation program.

Possible applications other than in

Crates Of Things 'We Had To Have' Another - and I trust final crate of "things we just had to wrapped was a pair of slippers that I had made for me by a Libvan desert cobbler about 100 miles outside of Tripoli. These were bought just a year ago when we were on location with John Wayne' and Sophia Loren for the shooting of "Legend of the Lost.

I had forgotten all about the slippers, and it's a pity that I didn't forget about them a year earlier. They are made of genuine camel skin, and as if to prove it the cobbler left the camel hair on the soles. Not the king of camel hair you associate with coats, but black, stubby bristles.

The slippers are as stiff as an ice pick and would hurt the feet of a stone statue. They also have a strong odor reminiscent of a camel, which cancels any plans we might have of using them for door stops or book-ends.

The next indispensable purchase to come out of the box was a horn for calling sheep that, to the best of my recollection, was bought in Greece. Only two things make it useless - I don't have any sheep, and I can't make a sound with it And it isn't something you would hang on the wall for decoration unless you were a bachelor and lived is an extraordinarily dark

The sheep horn was followed out of the box by - and this is the truth - a baked clay figurine. about six inches high, of a dog playing a harp. I don't remember where I bought it, and don't want to. The dog is a sort of bloodhound with long ears, and is sitting on his haunches with one paw on the strings.

Both Mary and I laughed when the dog haprist came to light, but they were hollow laughs. We couldn't help but wonder what sort of people we were. Did other travelers ever spend their money on such items? We were afraid, honestly, to go any deeper into the crate and reveal further evidence of our quote taste unquote.

But we did, and out came a life - sized china reproduction of a man's head, as bald as an egg. and divided by black lines into squares circles, and rectangles. It was used - so said the inscription on the base - by a Dr. Kelly in 1860, in his work as a phrenologist. The squares and circles were marked "Imagination." "Curiosity." "Honesty." "Humor." etc.

This was bought in London on Petticoat Lane, and why we thought we had to have it is something a phrenologist, I suppose, will have to read our bumps to find out.

"There must be something in this box that makes sense," Mary said after I had followed up the phrenologist's head with a copper cookie mold that had more holes in it than a sieve.

And there was, thank goodness! There was a patchwork vest with no buttons, which I had bought on the Island of Rhodes with the idea of using it for a smoking jacket. And it would make a good smoking tacket if it only had buttons pockets, and wasn't five or six sizes too small. I must have bought the vest when I was asleep.

After that we found a folding

NEW YORK - I had not seen this little fellow for years and years, but no change of dimensions or hairline will obscure the astounding identity of that spectacular nose which was scraped off the back of his neck so many times in fights all the way from Coney Island to California camps long, long forgotten and absorged into greedy "metropolitan" areas. One reads and truly believes that blows on the skull and the base of the brain may cause hundreds of tiny hemorrhages having results that are called, in callous jocosity, fighters' dance and the mumbles. But for all of many terrible bleedings from that monstrous nose and a tracery of cuts above the eyes he is at 75 a bright, twinkling survivor of an era called the good old days and a cynical challenge to the pietistical ethics of prizefight commissions and sport-page defenders of the Honor of the Game. He never joined in such cant. Be it said merely that he was a great fighter whose courage seemed out of place in a soul so sordid, but that he had his principles, such as they

He haled me to a high stool at the far end of a shadowy bar for our first meeting since Atlantic City when Dempsey was training for the first Tunney fight, in Philadelphia, close by. I mounted carefully, feeling for the stirrups, and when we had settled into our slump I asked him about that time in Philadelphia. The time Jack McGuigan put him in against that altar boy in that little sixround club. What did he call it? The Adelphia? Olympia? Som ething classical.

"I have told you before and before," he said, "and it was true back then and it always will be Honesty is for hypocrites and I have never given it another chance since that night.

"Bill McCarney had this altar boy, a terrible little bum. He was good to his mother and McCarney promised her he wouldn't let the bum get hurt. So he wouldn't take me until I promised to carry him safe and sound. If I treated the little bum nice and didn't hurt him or dump him, well they was getting $200 and Bill was going to give me $50 out of their end. was having trouble getting work. I was so good in those days, so I promised Bill and I was doing my own business so I had to be very careful getting my bets covered. McGuigan promised me $600 and I had about $500 on me and I got very good prices this bum would go the distance. I mean six rounds. In California and Nevada the distance was up to 40 rounds in the hot sun.

"The first couple of rounds I would swing and swish and grab him under the arms. We didn't have no clocks, but I could time it pretty good and I would put on a big rally the last few seconds. didn't really hit him, but I missed loud and scowled and growled

"Round three and four I could feel him getting heavy on me. I thought what the hell is the burn doped? Is he going to sleep on

"I had to love the bum to keep him up. But I eased him past the fifth and I figured I was in. That was $600 for my end and $50 from Bill for treating him nice and those bets riding on the bum to stay six rounds.

"The sixth I did not let him get within eight feet. At last, when we had only a minute to go, I waltzed into a clinch and said, 'Nice going, kid, you can go home safe to mama', I had both hands under his arms. I was taking so

"McCarney was new then and you couldn't figure Bill until a few years went by. Then you could cut across lots and head him off. But this was early in Bill's career and he had the surprise on me, God rest his soul, honest or not, he was a nice guy at that.

"So we had about 30 seconds to go and I saw something white, like a pigeon, and I looked down and it was the towel. Bill had threw it in. I was so surprised I let go and the altar boy dropped like a sandbag and the referee, the louse, grabbed my hand and raised it up and yelled "Winner by &

"I never bore McCarney no hard feelings," my old friend said, "But I never gave him a nother fight. That was the only time I ever trusted an honest man."

REDS GO HOME-Soviet soldiers on their way home to Russia wave to East Germans from a train at Furstewalde, Germany. Limited withdrawal of Red Army troops will take about $1,000 soldiers out of East Germany, leaving an estimated 400,000. Western newsmen and photographers were invited to watch the first group leave.
