Texas Senate approves latest school reform bill

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — House Speaker Gib Lewis said he hopes lawmakers will send Gov. Bill Clements a school finance reform measure by the end of the week that could present the governor with difficult choices:

— Vetoing the bill and possibly putting reform in the hands of a judge.

— Approving the bill without new state education funding, which could shift money from property-rich to property-poor school districts.

— Breaking his vow to veto new taxes and allowing the $555 million funding level lawmakers want for next school year.

The Democrat-controlled Legislature wants to help pay for school reform with a half-cent sales tax increase, which the Republican governor vetoed in the last special session that ended last week.

"The governor will just have to do what he feels is necessary, as we feel we have to do what we feel is necessary," Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said Monday. He said the choice is between a higher state tax or higher local property taxes.

The governor this session — lawmakers' third on school finance — backed his own $250 million reform plan, to be financed with budget cuts and an increase in the state fee for driving records.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, sponsored Clements' plan in bill form.

But Leedom wasn't present for the education debate Monday, when senators passed virtually the same reform measure Clements killed with his tax veto.

Parker, D-Port Arthur, said if at least $550 million isn't put into the Legislature's plan — the amount Parker deemed lawmakers' bottom line — he would support simply redistributing current state funds to meet the Texas Supreme Court's order for change.

That could require local property tax increases or budget cuts in wealthier school districts.

But Parker said under the Senate plan, lawmakers would be forced to put in new state money or dismantle the finance system next year.

"Even if we had to suffer through one more year of unequal, inadequate funding, it would give us better hope for future generations," he said.

"If the governor chooses to disrupt or impede the efforts of this Legislature to put funding with the reform bill), then that's the choice he makes, and he and his party can then be judged by the voters of this state," said Parker, Senate Education Committee chairman.

Unlike last session — when the reform bill was wiped out by the tax veto — Clements would have to directly act on this school reform bill.

Because the bill's funding would be in a separate measure, it wouldn't have to wait at the comptroller's office to ensure revenues exist to pay for it.

If lawmakers and Clements don't write a reform plan by June 1 making more money available to property-poor school districts, a state judge has said he would appoint a court master to do it for them.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said if a court master is appointed, he would blame Clements, who has refused to budge from his stand against new state taxes.

"I think the Legislature has acted extremely responsibly," Hobby said.

Clements wasn't at the Capitol on Monday. Aides said he was traveling from Taos, N.M., to Dallas and issued a statement quoting Clements as saying the Senate bill is so costly it would require a state income tax to fund it.

Parents and their students mark Home School Week in Pampa

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Parents and students who home school in Pampa met Monday at Mr. Gatti's Pizza for a tour and celebration of Texas Home School Week.

Declared by Gov. Bill Clements last year, Home School Week recognizes and honors the efforts of those who choose to educate their children in the home.

Gail Winter, who gave up her fashion consultant job to educate her children at home, said home schools in the state are fortunate to be recognized by the governor.

In spite of the fact that courts have repeatedly ruled that home schools using approved curriculum are viable private schools, some states, including Iowa, have chosen to attempt to remove children from the homes of private schoolers.

"It did a tremendous lot of good for our morale to have the governor recognize us," Winter said, "because there is a lot of fear over truancy officers and that kind of thing."

However, she said some school districts in the state still attempted to force home schoolers using approved material to attend public schools.

"It is purely a form of intimidation, because they can't legally do that," Winter said. "It is totally legal and we are accountable to the extent that private schools are."

Home education advocates such as Summit Christian Academy in Dallas point out in material that home schooling was the predominant form of teaching in the world for the 6,000 years prior to World War II.

They promote home schooling as a "tutorial" form of education, as opposed to the "institutional" method in classrooms.

Winter said she chose to home-school her children to give them a Christian influence during every subject, as well as to give them an environment that is much freer of negative peer pressure.

"Parents can more regulate the people they are around," Winter said. "It's a known fact that who the kids are around the most, that's who they will be most like. I want them to be most like God, and hopefully Raymond and I reflect Him."

In addition to the religious benefits of home schooling, advocates list one-on-one attention, customized curriculum, moving at the student's speed, fewer distractions and a lack of fierce, destructive competition as benefits.

The majority of home schoolers in Pampa, as in most of the nation, describe themselves as evangelical Christians who want the teachings of Jesus Christ and the Bible to be a primary, daily influence in their children's lives.

"My convictions about where I stand and what I believe God has taught parents to do were the reasons we started home schooling," Winter said, noting that God established the family as the primary institution for learning and being nurtured.

Winter and other home schoolers said outings such as Monday's trip to Mr. Gatti's give their children the social opportunities and peer group exposure they miss in the public school classroom.

'Home schooling is a new thing, but when our kids are tested, they are grades ahead of public school kids.'

Katrina Hart, who is graduating from a home school this year, said she has received a superior education.

"Harvard and Yale will take home schoolers in a minute because they know more and are eager to study," Hart said. "Some of the state colleges, though, won't take you. But I'm having no problems."

Winters said home schooling puts a strong emphasis on reading and that "the first book you reach for is the Bible."

She said there is a certain social stigma attached to a teen-ager being home schooled, but that education of the public can help erase that misconception.

Overall, though, she said she has no regrets due to the quality of her education.

Majaunta McKean, a home school parent, said she once had her children in parochial schools, but withdrew them to provide a more disciplined atmosphere.

She and numerous other home schoolers agreed that while parents of public school students are constantly talking about wanting to keep their children away from the scourge of drugs, profane language and pre-marital sexual pressure, home schoolers have accomplished just that.

"My children were coming home with the same junk that they were getting in public school," McKean said of her children's experiences.

Home schoolers also note that while private school is very expensive, home schooling is affordable to everyone.

"I wish my parents had taken me out of public schools sooner," Cindy Torio, a home schooling graduate who now home-schools her children, said. "We didn't have an excessive amount of money and wasn't like most of the kids, and kids can be so cruel. We have my husband's niece and she has been mistreated and I don't want her in public schools getting the same kind of abuse I got."

Torio said that while students in public schools often graduate with inferior reading abilities, home schooling insists on mastery before graduation occurs.

Melody Ferguson, president of the Pampa Home School Support Group, said the number of home schoolers in the city is growing every year, as parents continue to grow disillusioned with the negative, anti-Christian influences that seem to pervade peer groups and curriculum in public schools.

With home schooling, Ferguson said, it is not only up to the mother

School trustees canvass election, review facilities

Trustees with the Pampa Independent School District met Monday night to canvass results of Saturday's school board election and review mechanical facilities in the district.

Dr. Keith Teague, the only opposed incumbent, was declared a winner over Harold Murray. Also officially declared winners were unopposed incumbents John Curry and Lonnie Richardson.

David Norton of ServiceMaster, which holds the contract for service and maintenance in the district, led a discussion on a district-wide replacement and service schedule for the PISD's $37 million worth of properties.

Among the issues dealt with during the non-action-item discussion were campus lighting, parking lots, water lines, mechanical operations and heating and cooling.

Norton answered questions raised by board members and, based on the discussion, will come back to the board during the next regular meeting to suggest a priority list for upgrade of existing facilities.

The board voted last year to privatize the maintenance and service aspects of their operations as a money-saving device for taxpayers. District officials have also noted that efficiency has been improved by the move.

D.C. mayor faces more drug charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal prosecutors intend to seek additional drug charges against Mayor Marion Barry, according to sources familiar with the investigation.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Monday that U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens wants a federal grand jury to return up to five additional misdemeanor drug possession charges against Barry.

The legal action could come as early as today, the sources said.

During a neighborhood walking tour today, Barry reacted to the report, saying, "I don't lose any sleep over allegations. Justice is done in the courts. The best answer to a lie is the truth."

The mayor already faces five misdemeanor cocaine-possession charges and three felony counts of lying to a federal grand jury about his alleged drug use. Barry, arrested in an FBI sting operation Jan. 18, has pleaded innocent to all eight counts returned by a grand jury on Feb. 15.

WRC-TV, also citing anonymous sources, reported Monday that the new charges would relate to alleged drug use by the mayor in the weeks before his January arrest.

Judy Smith, a spokeswoman for Stephens, would not comment on the possibility of new charges against the 54-year-old Barry.

When Barry was indicted on Feb. 15, Stephens said he was continuing to explore a "broad range of allegations" against the mayor. The grand jury that indicted Barry has met regularly since then, and several social companions of Barry's have testified before the panel.

Also, court papers filed on Monday reported that hair samples taken from Barry on the night of his drug arrest showed that he had used cocaine repeatedly in the preceding weeks.

In the filing, Stephens opposed a move by Barry's lawyer to suppress the hair test evidence.

R. Kenneth Mundy, Barry's attorney, argued in an earlier filing that because cocaine residue normally takes one to four days to reach a suspect's hair follicles, tests taken in the hours following Barry's Jan. 18 arrest would not be relevant to the case.

The tests were administered after the mayor was arrested in a downtown Washington hotel room by undercover FBI agents, who officials say videotaped him smoking crack cocaine with a female companion who was cooperating with authorities.

Stephens argued that the tests should be admitted at Barry's trial to help the government try to rebut any argument that the mayor was coerced into using drugs.

"It is hard evidence based upon the concrete results of a scientific test and it directly establishes that the defendant used cocaine in the weeks immediately preceding his arrest," Stephens wrote.

Concert Choir named 'Best in Class'

The Pampa High School Concert Choir was named "Best in Class" in the Six Flags Over Texas Choral Festival during the weekend.

The Concert Women, accompanied by Jennifer Scoggin, also won "Best in Class." The Concert Men group was awarded second runner-up.

The Concert Choir and Concert Women received straight 1's from all three judges.

Judging the festival were Dan

Rash, formerly of Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos; Donald Baily, director of choirs at Arizona State University; and Lula Hedgeman of Memphis, Tenn.

All three judges were complimentary of the groups.

Also competing in the festival were two 5A honors choirs which had sung at Texas Music Educators' Association in the past two years.

The Pampa choir traveled to Dallas to compete in the 4A-5A division.

Sponsors for the trip were Pampa Choir Booster officers Clark and Irene Webb, Bill and Karen Bridges, Ray and Jane Mouhot, Lloyd and Kay Harvey, Susie Edwards, Karen Keyes; Pampa Middle School directors Suzanne Wood and Jennifer Scoggin; PHS Assistant Principal Pat Farmer; Chris Kirkpatrick, nurse; and Fred Mays, PHS choir director.

Enrollment begins Wednesday for public school kindergarten

Parents of children who will be attending public school kindergarten in Pampa during the 1990-91 school year need to enroll their students beginning at 2:45 p.m. Wednesday.

Enrollment will be at the child's neighborhood school. Eligible students are those who will be five years old by Sept. 1 of this year.

Parents should bring the children's birth certificate, Social Security number and immunization records.

Enrollment at Lamar, Horace Mann, Travis and Woodrow Wilson schools will be in the cafeterias. Austin Elementary will enroll in the school library and Baker students will register in the kindergarten classrooms.

On Thursday, at 7 p.m., parents of incoming kindergarten parents will meet in the middle school library to meet their students' teachers and take part in an orientation program on kindergarten curriculum and opportunities.

Congressional Democrats debate high-level deficit-reduction talks

By ALAN FRAM
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' top Democrats are debating whether to join President Bush in deficit-reduction talks that the White House says can include discussion of possible tax increases.

Republican congressional leaders planned to discuss next year's budget with the president at a meeting today. Several insisted Monday that such bargaining is the only way to break the fiscal logjam, and they predicted that Democrats would eventually agree.

"I believe the answer will be in the affirmative," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "We need to do it."

Democratic leaders of the House and Senate, meantime, planned to meet with rank-and-file members to gauge their feelings about budget bargaining in an election year.

Sixteen top Democrats met for an hour Monday in a closed-door session.

"We've had different views expressed," House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said afterward. Pressure has been building for action on the budget because of the slowing economy and the increasing cost projections of the federal bailout of the savings and loan industry.

The weaker the economy, the less revenue the government can expect to collect and the greater the federal deficit.

As a result, the amount of budget cuts the administration says will be necessary for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1 has ballooned from $36 billion to $56 billion or more. This has led many lawmakers of both parties to argue that those savings can only be achieved by considering higher taxes and cuts in benefit programs.

"You sure aren't going to get that without starting this process and having the right people there arguing all of it on the table," said Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico, ranking Republican on the Senate Budget Committee.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said there would be "no preconditions" to holding the negotiations. Republicans denied that such a statement is inconsistent with Bush's campaign pledge of "no new taxes."

"There isn't any president who hasn't tried to make good on his promises. There's no president who hasn't lived through times that change, and maybe outdated some promises," said Rep. Bill Frenzel of Minnesota, top Republican on the House Budget Committee.

Frenzel said he favors a package paring next year's deficit by $55 billion, including some form of new taxes would be "the only way (Bush) can do the job," Frenzel said.

Domenici said he would want to reduce the shortfall by between $42 billion and $50 billion. Higher taxes should be open to negotiations, he said.

Last week, the House passed a Democratic-written spending plan that includes $36 billion in deficit reduction. The Senate Budget Committee approved another Democratic plan containing $43 billion in savings. Both proposals would give the military nearly $10 billion less next year than Bush wants.

Bush proposed a budget in January that claims to shrink the shortfall by $36 billion to just under $64 billion. The Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law requires that next year's budget gap not exceed $64 billion.

Home School

Of the support group, Ferguson said, "We are a support group for the moms to get together and we are organizing field trips for the kids to go on."

"It's also a means to keep up to date on what's going on legally and if there are any bad bills in the Legislature."

Ferguson described home school material as being designed so that a parent who can read and write can teach, even if they do not have mastery in the subject being covered. "Everybody is a home schooler," she added. "You don't realize you are constantly teaching your children."

However, she said many families in which children are told to go watch television and leave their parents alone are being taught all the wrong things.

"Home schooling is not that hard to do if you're committed," she said.

Several students at the Mr. Gatti's gathering, when asked about home education, said they particularly enjoyed the time they spend with their parents that many of their friends don't get, and the ability to work ahead that home schooling provides.

Winter said last year there were about 27 students in Pampa receiving home education and that by next year that number will swell to almost 40, according to commitments made already by local parents.

Those interested in finding out more about the home-schooling option can call Ferguson at 665-6131.

Rural areas evacuated as flood waters roll south

By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — River flooding that continued to move downstream from record rains in North Texas forced hundreds from their homes as authorities issued warnings for people and livestock along the waterways today.

"They're still expecting record flooding this week," said Kelly Kerbow, a police dispatcher at Liberty in Southeast Texas, north of where the rain-swollen Trinity River empties into Trinity Bay.

The river was over its banks at a depth of 26.41 feet, she said. Authorities said the flooding, which could affect about 7,000 residents, would be the worst to hit the area since the early 1900s.

Authorities stepped up evacuation efforts and the American Red Cross sent teams to prepare shelters in East Texas as the river continued to rise.

"Right now, we're anticipating maybe having problems with the Trinity (River) ... in five or six more counties," said Judi Oestreich, public affairs officer for the Red Cross.

"We're just sort of moving along with the water, so to speak," she said.

High water blamed for six deaths in last week's thunderstorms also was prompting other river flooding. Ranchers were warned to remove livestock from the Guadalupe River channel bottom from above Victoria and downstream.

The National Weather Service predicted lowland flooding near Dupont in South Texas by today. Overbank flooding was also forecast for the Nueces River above Cotulla and downstream to above Tilden, the weather service said. More flood advisories included the Brazos, Trinity, Sabine, Navasota and Neches rivers.

Brazos flooding hit marinas and dwellings around Lake Whitney and closed the Kimbell Bend Bridge on Texas Highway 174 near Cleburne. Many residents still couldn't return to their homes and businesses Monday.

"Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock, the bridge was closed," said Charles Thompson, a Bosque County resident.

"There's so many people in the Metroplex who live in the country and work in Dallas-Fort Worth," he said, explaining that the bridge across the Brazos is a main route. "We are turning that 1 1/2-hour drive into a three-hour drive."

Across North Texas, the Red Cross has opened shelters and served meals for evacuees since the start of heavy rains, flooding, tornadoes and high winds a week ago.

Through Sunday, 1,564 people had been sheltered, more than 19,000 meals had been served and 28 shelters had been opened, although only three shelters remained in operation Monday, Ms. Oestreich said.

In Dallas, 84-year-old Ellen Hickman said the flooding was the fourth such experience she had gone through. But the latest flooding caused water in her home for the first time.

"You don't cry, you don't moan; you do the things you have to," she said.

Diseases, including encephalitis, were also a concern in the wake of flooding. Some animals in flooded areas had been diagnosed with encephalitis.

"In most folks," said Dr. Charles Haley with the Dallas County Health Department, "it (encephalitis) results in bad headaches. But in some people, particularly the elderly, it can result in coma and death."

About 50 homes near Palestine, about 90 miles southeast of Dallas, were destroyed or severely damaged in the lake side community of Long Lake.

"We can't tell exactly how many residences are affected yet, because we can't count underwater," said Bill Walters, manager of a temporary Red Cross shelter set up in a campground about 100 feet above the river.

He said 25 people had come to the shelter by Monday after being driven from their homes.

The families are being fed and housed in cabins donated by the campground, and the shelter is gearing up to operate at least through the end of the week, Walters said.

"The (victims) saved practically nothing. The water came up too quickly," he said.

Walters said although the Trinity has widened to about two miles at Long Lake, many residents are reluctant to leave.

"These people are pretty stubborn, as all Texans are. They think they can stick it out, but they really can't do it," he said.

About 80 people had been evacuated from Long Lake by late Monday, said Ray Lively, emergency management coordinator for Anderson County.

Dallas worker Richard Bridges removes wet carpets from the streets in the Rochester Park area Monday afternoon. As flood waters recede, residents are beginning to clean up their homes.

State rests its case in Treaty Oak trial

AUSTIN (AP) — Defense witnesses are expected to take the stand today in the trial of a man who faces life in prison if convicted of poisoning the historic Treaty Oak.

The state rested its case against Paul Stedman Cullen on Monday after a chemist testified that 11 of 14 samples taken from Cullen's truck contained the herbicide used to poison the giant centuries-old tree.

Also on Monday, a drug counselor testified that Cullen had sent her a love letter several months before the tree was poisoned. That testimony bolstered the state's contention that Cullen poisoned the landmark in a ritual designed to rid himself of his love for the counselor.

Today, attorneys for Cullen, 46, will present testimony that is expected to include a chemist who will challenge the findings of the Du Pont chemist who said Cullen's truck contained numerous traces of the herbicide Velpar. Treaty Oak was poisoned with Velpar last year and is now clinging to life.

Du Pont chemist Richard Summers testified that several soil samples, paper, a garden spade and a frying pan in the bed of Cullen's pickup all contained various levels of Velpar.

"It will leave a trail of death wherever it is poured," said Summers, who works at the La Porte plant, the only place the herbicide is manufactured.

Cullen's attorneys would not say Monday whether they expect Cullen to testify.

Earlier Monday, Suzanne Coers, the counselor with whom Cullen supposedly had fallen in love, gave her testimony: Cullen had signed a release allowing her to discuss information that otherwise would be considered confidential.

Of the love letter Cullen had written, she said, "It scared me. It made me feel uncomfortable."

State witness Cindy Blaco, who received methadone treatment at the same clinic that Cullen did, concluded her testimony Monday saying she agreed to secretly tape a conversation with Cullen "because a wrong has been done ... and it needs to be corrected."

When the defense cross-examined Blaco, Jenkins tried to suggest she made the tape in an effort to collect $11,000 in reward money. Blaco received $500 from the Crimestoppers tip program but the $11,000 has not been distributed. The defense also attempted to show that Cullen was attracted to Blaco and was claiming to have poisoned Treaty Oak to impress her.

Also Monday, prosecutors had a librarian read a portion of a book titled The Black Arts that details occult practices. Blaco testified that Cullen had read the book.

The portions that were read Monday referred to drawing circles around powerful plants before digging them up, and to a Biblical demon named Apollyon.

The jury had been shown pictures of Cullen's truck that included a sign he had in his rear windshield that read, "Apollyon at the Wheel."

Apollyon, from a word meaning "to destroy," was a name given to the angel of the bottomless pit in the book of Revelation. The name has since become another name for the devil.

Cullen is charged with a felony count of criminal mischief.

Genaro Camacho waits in a Dallas courtroom Monday as the jury decides the sentence for his murder conviction.

Jurors sentence Camacho to death by lethal injection

DALLAS (AP) — Jurors who sentenced Genaro Ruiz Camacho to death by injection in a Pleasant Grove man's execution-style slaying were told by a judge that the case was akin to that of Charles Manson.

The jury deliberated a little more than six hours Monday before sentencing Camacho in the death of David Wilburn, who unwittingly walked into a house where Camacho was preparing to kidnap a woman and her 3-year-old son.

After the sentence, State District Judge Ron Chapman told jurors that the trial featured "the most grotesque and bizarre set of facts ever heard in a courtroom in this nation since the Charles Manson killings in California."

Chapman also said that he has presided over six capital murder cases and "every single one of them has had a common denominator, and that's been drug abuse."

"Every (capital murder) defendant has committed his crime while high on drugs," Chapman told the six-man, six-woman jury. Several jurors had cried as the judge delivered the punishment.

Camacho, 35, showed little emotion and made the sign of the cross as he was escorted from the courtroom by sheriff's deputies. He was convicted April 26 of capital murder in Wilburn's 1988 slaying.

Police said the 25-year-old Wilburn was shot once in the back of the head after he entered a house where Camacho was preparing to kidnap 31-year-old Evelyn Banks and her son, Andre, in May 1988.

Jurors in the two-week trial also heard testimony that Camacho killed a Dallas topless dancer and a South Texas man, and ordered the deaths of Ms. Banks and her son.

Assistant District Attorney Hugh Lucas, during closing arguments in the trial's punishment phase Monday, showed enlarged photographs of all five victims, both as they appeared alive and after death.

Photos included that of the remains of dancer Pamela Miller, 23, whose body had been fed through a tree mulcher after she was beaten to death.

Last week, an accomplice and witness told the jury that Camacho ordered the woman's body dismembered and fed through the tree mulcher in a field outside Stephenville after he became angry about a failed drug deal.

But Julius Whittier, a defense attorney, urged jurors not to let the photographs anger them into assessing the death penalty. He said most evidence against Camacho was questionable testimony from former accomplices.

Whittier also reminded jurors of earlier testimony from a former parole board member who said Camacho probably would be in his 60s before he became eligible for parole if he were sentenced to life in prison.

But Lucas, pointing at Camacho from just a few feet away, told the jury that Camacho deserved no leniency. As he reviewed photos, he held up that of the boy, Andre Banks, and said Camacho ordered him shot four times in the head.

Jury in fifth day of deliberations in newspaper feud

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County jury returned for a fifth day of deliberations today to decide whether the Dallas Times Herald is entitled to millions of dollars from the rival Dallas Morning News for the loss of about two dozen comics and features last year.

The Times Herald is seeking $33 million, plus punitive damages, from The Morning News and parent company A.H. Belo Corp. in the antitrust suit now in its sixth week.

After four weeks of testimony, the jury in State District Judge David West's court last Wednesday began deciding 12 questions spelled out in the charge.

Entering today's deliberations, jurors had the case for more than 17 hours, including 5 1/2 hours of discussions on Monday.

"I'm not going to do anything unless they indicate to me they are hung up," West said.

On Monday, the jury made its first request of the court since Thursday, asking to see testimony from Morning News Editor Burl Osborne and Robert Duffy, vice president of sales at Universal Press Syndicate Inc., which distributes the features that moved from the Times Herald to The Morning News.

West said the jury could see specific passages in the testimony but declined to turn over the entire transcript. The jury did not respond.

Also Monday, Morning News and Belo attorneys asked the judge to reconsider his refusal of an earlier jury question about whether the relevant product market in the case was UPS features. Morning News and Belo attorneys said the relevant product was newspapers, not features. There was no action on the request.

The lawsuit challenged a Belo joint venture with Universal Press Syndicate that stripped the Times

Herald of 26 features, including Doodlesbury, Dear Abby, The Far Side and Erma Bombeck.

The Times Herald said the action violated antitrust laws and was intended to strengthen a Belo and Morning News market dominance in Dallas and help drive the smaller Times Herald out of business.

The lawsuit also contended the Times Herald's rival interfered with a contract it had with the syndicate and that Morning News and Belo officials conspired to get the features.

Belo and The Morning News defended the TV deal — which will use syndicate comics characters in television programs and commercials to encourage newspaper readership — as a good business decision.

A syndicate requirement of the venture mandated that all Universal Press features in the Times Herald be moved to The Morning News.

The Times Herald said the five-year deal and The Morning News's right of first refusal for any new syndicate features amounted to a restraint of trade. They also alleged Belo and Morning News officials conspired to interfere with the existing contract the Times Herald had with the Kansas City-based syndicate.

The Times Herald estimated the features loss cost it a permanent circulation drop of 10,800, which their experts calculated was worth the $33 million.

Morning News attorneys repeatedly referred to circulation figures that showed the Times Herald is in better shape now than it was before the features were moved.

Times Herald officials, however, testified that in order to stop the circulation slide, they began a $1 million reader lottery promotion to boost circulation and produced winners who termed the lottery a short-term and temporary solution.

Turf Club ordered to answer motions

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. District Judge David Hittner has ordered the Houston Turf Club to answer motions filed by Gov. Bill Clements and other state officials asking that the track group's $1 billion racing conspiracy be dismissed.

Hittner ruled Monday that the Turf Club's president, Leslie Valone, did not have to submit to a sworn deposition. But he ruled against the club's request for certain records from an accounting firm having a $2.5 million service contract with the Texas Racing Commission.

The Turf Club must file responses by June 1 to all motions by the defendants to dismiss the lawsuit, the judge said.

The suit alleges Clements, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, State Comptroller Bob Bullock, certain racing commission members and several other state officials and private individuals conspired to control the state's horse racing industry. Lawyers on both sides were pleased with Hittner's rulings.

"I'm sorry we cannot get the (accounting firm) Deloitte & Touche records, but it's fair to both sides," said Turf Club attorney Stuart Collins.

Attorney Joe Jamail, who represents Clements, Bullock and Secretary of State George Bayoud, said Hittner has prevented the Turf Club from going "on a fishing expedition" prior to considering Clements' dismissal motion.

Collins sought the Deloitte & Touche records regarding its work for the racing commission. He told the judge last week commission officials have said some of the money paid the firm cannot be accounted for.

The Turf Club also wants any records of any contributions the firm or its employees gave Clements, Collins told the judge.

Oil well fire erupts, injures three people

DILLEY (AP) — Fire broke out at an oil well drilling site early today, sending flames shooting into the sky and injuring three people who were taken to a hospital.

"There was a lot of smoke and a lot of flames," Mike Prestwood, a representative of Wilson Oil Field Supply in Dilley, said after seeing the blaze.

"It was blowing out from the well head there was oil coming out from the well head flowing out to the ground." Authorities evacuated a quarter-mile area around the well in a remote part of Frio County, Prestwood said.

The well is owned by BDK Drilling, he said. The blaze erupted at about 4 a.m. and continued to burn throughout the morning.

Law officers and firefighters were not immediately available for comment, but a Frio County Sheriff's Department dispatcher who would not identify himself said three men were injured, although not seriously.

The dispatcher said the injured men were taken to a hospital in San Antonio, located about 60 miles north of Dilley.

The blaze broke out in a hole where an oil well was being drilled, according to Prestwood, who said it was not known what sparked the fire.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Ayatollah's ghost still haunts Iran

Now that hostages Robert Polhill and Frank Reed have been freed by their terrorist captors, attention turns to those hostages still being held. How can they be freed?

President Bush has properly ruled out any deal with Iran, which seems to have great influence with the terrorist groups holding the hostages in Lebanon. Bush had an armchair seat for the Iran arms scandal that crippled the last two years of the Reagan administration. In that scandal, arms were shipped to Iran and David Jacobsen, an American hostage, was released on Nov. 1, 1986.

Some intelligence sources do indicate that arms and money were swapped for Polhill, but by Iran as a bribe to the Islamic Jihad group in Lebanon, believed to be the major hostage takers. According to The New York Times, the deal was arranged "in the last four weeks by Mahmoud Hashemi, the brother of President Hashemi Rafsanjani of Iran." This isn't good, though Iran might have planned to ship the arms all along and chose this moment to save face.

Rafsanjani is the allegedly "moderate" leader of Iran. The Reagan administration was ridiculed, with some reason, for trying to deal with such "moderate" leaders. Nevertheless, Rafsanjani cannot help but be more moderate than Ayatollah Khomeini. The world remembers the ayatollah as a fanatic who conducted an eight-year war against neighboring Iraq (though Iraq started the war, Khomeini long refused peace offerings), and a 10-year jihad against "the Great Satan," the United States. Khomeini's actions helped bring down the Carter administration and nearly brought down the Reagan administration.

But Khomeini is gone. And Rafsanjani has a much more proximate worry than "the Great Satan" on the other side of the world: Iraq, which has been trying to build a nuclear artillery piece that could rain radioactive death down on Tehran, as well as on Israel and parts of the Soviet Union. Since the Iraqi regime of dictator Saddam Hussein used poison gas on Iranian troops as well as on his own Kurdish minority in Iraq, the Iranians are wise to worry about what he would do with nukes.

Rafsanjani may realize that to protect his people he will have to end Iran's self-imposed isolation. He may also realize that, despite his government's past crimes, the world may be willing to listen to his complaints against Iraq. No one wants Hussein to start flinging atom bombs or poison gas. And Hussein's recent execution of a British journalist reminded the world of his unending brutality.

Rafsanjani also cannot help but see the shifts taking place in Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union and elsewhere. This is a time in which freedom is increasing, tyranny decreasing.

Despite all this, Bush should proceed with extreme caution in any dealings with Rafsanjani or any other "moderates" in Iran. He should welcome the release of Polhill and Reed and call for the release of the other seven Americans and 10 other Westerners still held hostage in Lebanon. But Bush should remember that the ayatollah's ghost still haunts Iran's government palaces.

Bush declines moral crusade

As secretary of state, John Quincy Adams offered his view of the place of human rights in international relations. "Wherever the standard of freedom and independence has been or shall be unfurled," said Adams, "there will be America's heart, her benediction and her prayers. But she goes not abroad in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own."

It has been a long time since that view of foreign relations has had much in common with U.S. government policies. But lo and behold, the Bush administration and congressional leaders have watched the unfurling of freedom's standard in Lithuania and decided against any monster-slaying expeditions, at least for now.

No one can have any doubt that Americans want to see the Baltic republic emancipated from Soviet rule. But instant independence isn't something the United States or the Lithuanians can expect or should demand.

The bitter words from Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis were spoken with more passion than wisdom. "We were afraid that America might sell us out," he declared. "This is another Munich."

Wrong. At Munich, Britain let a portion of an independent country (Czechoslovakia) become part of a tyrant's empire. Lithuania, which has been part of a tyrant's empire for half a century, has been ceded the right to become an independent country. The fight with the Kremlin is not about whether Lithuania will be free. It's about when, and on what terms.

The Bush administration has properly sided with Lithuania in this dispute. But it has properly refused to let its policy toward Mikhail Gorbachev be dictated by his policy toward Lithuania.

If Gorbachev had offered two years ago to establish a plausible procedure by which any of the Soviet Union's 15 republics could secede, Americans and Lithuanians would have been stunned and elated. Now that he's done exactly that, he finds himself painted as an ogre for not throwing all the exits wide open immediately.

The critics ignore the crucial points: Gorbachev admits what the world always knew, namely that Lithuania was annexed illegally. The Kremlin has already accepted in principle the republic's demand to be allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

This is a world of difference from what prevailed for 50 years in Lithuania. Having gotten the world from Gorbachev, it would be a bit excessive for Washington to insist on the moon and all the stars as well.

It would also be futile. A man worried about keeping his country from flying apart isn't going to be crowded by a few economic sanctions. If Gorbachev had to worry only about Lithuania, he might be far more indulgent. His challenge is to contain secessionist sentiment not just in one dispensable republic, but in several indispensable ones like the Ukraine and Georgia. For him to tolerate Lithuania's defiance of Soviet laws would invite not only the Soviet Union's destruction, but his own.

Given the stakes, denying Gorbachev trade or postponing the upcoming summit would probably have about as much effect on his policy toward Lithuania as comparable Soviet penalties would have on America's handling of Puerto Rican demands for statehood: just slightly more than zero.

Just as the United States would bitterly resent another government trying to dictate the status of Puerto Rico (or Hawaii, or the District of Columbia, or Rhode Island), the Kremlin is likely to treat Western demands on Lithuania scornfully, and not without some justification. Many Americans would grant Gorbachev less latitude in dealing with Lithuania than we grant ourselves in dealing with Panama, Grenada or even Nicaragua.

The president, fortunately, has resisted this sort of counsel. Unlike his critics, he has not already forgotten the revolutionary changes Gorbachev has brought about or their immense value to the United States and its allies, the nations of Eastern Europe or the Soviet people.

The United States has a large stake in Gorbachev's success in steering his country toward democracy and capitalism. It may prefer that Lithuania get its freedom now instead of five years from now. But in the still dangerous world of foreign relations, vital interests take precedence over mere preference. On Lithuania, Bush has chosen a sound policy over a pointless moral crusade.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, May 8, the 128th day of 1990. There are 237 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 8, 1945, President Truman announced in a radio address that World War II had ended in Europe.

On this date:

In 1541, the Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto discovered the Mississippi River.

In 1846, the first major battle of the Mexican War was fought at Palo Alto, Texas, resulting in victory for Gen. Zachary Taylor's forces.

In 1884, the 33rd president of the United States, Harry S. Truman, was born near Lamar, Mo.

In 1886, Atlanta pharmacist John Styth Pemberton invented the syrup for a beverage that came to be known as Coca-Cola.

In 1958, Vice President Richard M. Nixon was shoved, stoned, booed and spat upon by anti-American protesters in Lima, Peru.

In 1970, helmeted construction workers broke up an anti-war protest on Wall Street in New York.

In 1973, militant Indians who had held the South Dakota hamlet of Wounded Knee for 10 weeks surrendered.

Watch out for those fat clouds

Earth Day has come and gone, but I could not let it pass without commenting on what I fear is going to become a serious environmental problem if something isn't done about it.

I'm talking about fat. Yes, fat. Excess baggage. Spare tires, The Dunlap disease, as in "Your belly has done lapped over your belt."

We are living in the most fat-conscious period in our history. Thousands, millions of people are losing thousands and millions of pounds of fat each day, except in Wisconsin.

I was reading recently that Wisconsin has the highest level of obesity in the nation because people in Wisconsin eat a lot of dairy products like cheese and butter.

But Wisconsinites, I fear, will also become fat-conscious after hearing that they now live in "The Blubber State," and that is going to make the threat to our environment even more serious.

What, you ask, does losing weight have to do with environment?

I can answer that question with a question of my own: When people lose fat, where does the fat go?

I'll tell you where it goes. It goes up into the atmosphere.

Every day, Americans are shedding unwanted fat and every day it ascends toward the heavens, gets mixed up with all that junk from spray cans, forming huge fat clouds that smell a lot like your wife's hair.

I talked with environmental expert, Dr. Gunther R. Guntherson of the University of Tennessee.

"How serious," I asked Dr. Guntherson, "are fat clouds?"

"Very serious," he answered. "Fat tends to be quite thick and the more fat clouds that form, the more chance there is that we may eventually be blocked out from the sun and all die."

"Does that mean, then," I went on, "that the fear of global warming is unfounded?"

"Indeed," said Dr. Guntherson. "How can the earth get any warmer when Oprah Winfrey has lost enough weight by herself to block out parts of Wyoming and Utah from the sun?"

I asked Dr. Guntherson what the effect would be if, in fact, people in Wisconsin stopped eating dairy products and started losing all that weight.

"The Midwest would become nothing more than an isolated, frozen tundra," he said.

"So," I concluded, "no more diets?"

"Eat, drink and be merry," he said. "Or tomorrow the Cubs will be playing in Peru."

Or, just say, "Pass the butter, please," and stay plump.

Your planet needs you.

Outlining Puritanism's changing shape

By SARAH OVERSTREET

I'm not sure when the outline of the female breast became something to be hidden in polite company, but I know it wasn't early in this century.

In our family photos from the 1920s and 1930s, it's obvious many of the woman weren't wearing bras. I've noticed the same thing in movies from that era, as actresses moved about unselfconsciously unbound. But somewhere along the line, before I reached the age to have to worry about it, women began to wear brassieres. By the early '60s when I did have to worry about it, bras were firmly entrenched as part of every woman's wardrobe.

I realize many of you reading this belong to the gender that has never worn bras, so you'll have to rely on what we women tell you. Here's what most of us will tell you: Bras are not always comfortable. Sometimes they are darned uncomfortable. Whether they are comfortable or not often depends upon a woman's build. Some women are more comfortable wearing them, and others are decidedly more comfortable without them.

So it was with a great degree of joy and relief that many of us greeted the braless era of the late '60s and '70s. But another segment of the population, those whose memories of history didn't include the braless years of their mothers and grandmothers, were extremely uncomfortable with the new, unfettered fashion trend.

The unbinding signified something sinister and threatening. Some of the women who followed the new convention were fired or sent home from classes. Some men, probably owing in part to the fact that women's bosoms had been tightly covered for much of their adult lives, took it as a free pass to gawk.

And I'm not sure when the female breast began to be viewed as something primarily sexual instead of for its main purpose, which is to nourish our young. I guess we can thank

Playboy magazine for some of it, but that's only part of the puzzle: Playboy just uncovered breasts. It was something else in our culture that insisted that even their outline was too shocking to view. Their outline hadn't bothered our grandparents, but suddenly, bosom shapes were something to be concealed.

With the shift toward conservatism in the late '70s, many women who had gone without bras began to wear them again. Some women followed fashion, some decided they wanted the physical support, some were afraid they would be thought ill of. And some, unfortunately, realized that as members of a dwindling minority, they would be gawked at even more.

Yet many of us believed we had at least turned a cultural corner during the "natural" era, that we as a society had again begun to consider women's breasts as what they are: natural and functional. Then we pick up a newspaper and read that a nursing mother was asked to leave a restaurant, or that a judge found a woman in contempt of court because she wasn't wearing a bra.

When Melissa Thurston appeared in a Harrison, Ark., court last month, she was wearing a high necked sweater but had no bra on underneath. Municipal Judge Don West said he believed she "was improperly dressed for the courtroom" because "it was my impression and several other people's impression that her breasts were obviously showing."

There is no dress code that bars the outline breasts in public buildings in America, just as there is not one in West's court. West will probably never understand the insult he dealt women by finding Thurston too "contemptible" for his courtroom.

To my friend, a 19 year-old exchange student from France, where it is customary to sunbathe topless, it is just another American attitude that I can't seem to explain satisfactorily.

184 House members can take the money and not run

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If he quits his job, Rep. Stephen Solarz could become an instant millionaire. So could Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

Democrats Solarz and Rostenkowski are the two could-be millionaires among 184 House "grandfathers" who can put their campaign cash to personal use if they retire from the House by January 1993.

Put more simply, they can take the money and not run.

Congress last year voted to close the loophole that allows certain House members to take their campaign funds with them when they retire, but the new restrictions did not take effect immediately.

The rules allow those who were eligible — House members in office as of Jan. 8, 1980 — to hang on to their campaign funds and take the money with them, as long as they leave office by January 1993.

They can keep whatever campaign funds they had on hand as of Nov. 30, 1989, which adds up to roughly $40 million for the 184 House members covered by the "grandfather" clause.

Most House members are reluctant to discuss whether the deadline will affect their political plans for 1992, saying they are concentrating first on legislative business and the 1990 elections.

But the aging of many senior House members and redistricting after the 1990 Census already has led to speculation that 1992 would be a high turnover year anyway.

"Retirement in 1992 is going to be attractive to a lot of older members," said William Schneider, a political analyst at the American Enterprise Institute.

Older incumbents who see their safe districts shaken up by redistricting may "be tempted to just retire and keep their campaign money," Schneider said. "Of course they'll come up with any number of other public reasons for deciding not to run."

The Senate has a rule barring members from converting campaign funds.

Solarz is one of the House members whose futures could be affected by redistricting. New York City probably will lose a congressional seat and Solarz could end up in a race against a fellow incumbent, perhaps Democrat Charles Schumer.

But Solarz, who had a $1.5 million campaign war chest at the cutoff, repeatedly has said he has no plans to retire before 1993 and that he would not take his campaign leftovers with him if defeated.

Rostenkowski is unopposed for re-election this fall, but many of his colleagues think the Chicago congressman will retire after one more term. He had $1 million in campaign funds at the cutoff and has been vague about his plans.

"We're focusing on this year's agenda and winning re-election in 1990 and then we'll worry about 1992," said Rostenkowski spokesman Jim Jaffe. Rostenkowski has not said whether he would take his campaign funds with him if he left office before the deadline, Jaffe said.

"But it's the law that members can convert, and he supports the law," Jaffe said.

Federal Election Commission records show that dozens of members eligible to take campaign funds with them had six-digit account balances at the cutoff date.

A handful of those retiring from Congress this year could convert their campaign funds to personal use. If they lose races for other offices, another handful would join that group.

One retiring member, Kansas Republican Robert Whittaker, has said he would not use his $500,000-plus in excess campaign money for personal purposes. Georgia Democrat Doug Barnard, who plans to make his next House term his last, has more than $500,000 and has said he might convert some.

Retiring Rep. Bill Frenzel, a Minnesota Republican who has more than $300,000 left, plans to refund all 1989 and 1990 campaign contributions, pay off bills and give the rest to other candidates.

Most of the others who are eligible avoid the subject.

"They don't like to advertise it because it just makes people angry," said Schneider.

Jewish leaders meet at villa where Nazis planned Holocaust

By KEVIN COSTELLO
Associated Press Writer

WEST BERLIN (AP) — In a solemn ceremony at the picturesque mansion where Nazi leaders plotted their "Final Solution," the World Jewish Congress is paying tribute to the 6 million Jews killed in the Holocaust.

The ceremony at the Wannsee villa comes on the final day of a three-day conference that some Congress delegates declined to attend, considering a trip to the heart of Nazi tyranny to be too traumatic.

"The most important thing about going to Wannsee is what we are going to say there, which is: 'Aside from how horrible you were, we lived,'" the president of the congress, Edgar M. Bronfman, said Monday.

He described the villa as "the head office of all concentration camps."

A formal declaration written by Nobel Peace Prize winner and concentration camp survivor Elie Wiesel was to be read at the ceremony, which falls on the 45th anniversary of Germany's unconditional surrender in World War II and is designed to keep alive the memory of the victims.

"If the past is suppressed, then there is an even greater danger that things will happen in the present that also must be condemned," said Michel Friedman, a leader of the Frankfurt Jewish community.

The decaying Wannsee villa is where SS security chief Reinhard Heydrich and others planned their systematic efforts to achieve Germany's "Final Solution."

Heydrich detailed plans to use Jews as slave laborers and to build concentration camps, gas chambers and crematoria.

But even before the Wannsee conference on Jan. 20, 1942, Nazi troops had been slaughtering Jews in occupied Polish and Soviet territory.

Today, the once-elegant villa is in a state of disrepair, and the city of West Berlin has started work to turn it into a Holocaust memorial.

Outside the villa's high gates, a plaque reads: "In this house in January 1942, the infamous Wannsee conference took place. To the memory of the fellow human beings slain by the Nazi tyranny."

At a news conference at the heavily guarded West Berlin Jewish Community headquarters, the Jewish congress leaders on Monday discussed their concerns about German reunification.

"The Jewish people have something to say to the new Germany that is going to be created in a short time," Bronfman said.

He said Sunday that a unified Germany must "forever teach" about the Nazi Holocaust, "the lowest point ever reached in man's inhumanity to man."

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said it was Israel's duty to demand that "in a united Germany there would be a perpetual educational effort, so that the generation growing up there would remember. In all parts of Germany, the government must wage a war against anti-Semitism."

The Polish-born Shamir escaped the Holocaust, but his parents and two sisters were killed.

The leaders of the Jewish Congress pointed to signs of growing anti-Semitism in Eastern Europe, which they said was exacerbated by economic hardship.

"Unfortunately, as the economic situation worsens, particularly in the Soviet Union, and the search for scapegoats goes on, the age-old scapegoat, the Jew, again takes his place in the forefront of those to be kicked around," Bronfman said.

NATO begins pre-summit meetings

WASHINGTON (AP) — NATO is at a critical phase as it struggles to adapt to change in Europe and tries to make "a partner in security" out of the Soviet Union, the alliance's secretary general says.

"We are looking at this alliance not as an instrument of confrontation, but as an element of cooperation in a new security structure," Manfred Woerner said Monday.

Speaking on the eve of the opening of a new round of NATO meetings, Woerner also dismissed Soviet suggestions that a unified Germany become neutral or hold dual membership in both the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact.

"Neutrality is no alternative. And to be a member of both pacts is just neutrality without a word," the former West German defense minister said.

Woerner was in Washington for talks with U.S. officials before flying today with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to Calgary, Canada, to attend the spring session of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group.

Woerner said the alliance is at a "decisive ... phase of its history" as it attempts to adjust its military and political role to the changes in Europe and its traditional foe, the Warsaw Pact.

The alliance sees itself as fostering "an element of cooperation in a new security structure" for Europe, he said, and NATO will be "one of the essential pillars, if not the essential pillar, in such a structure."

This structure must involve the Soviet Union and Warsaw Pact member countries, he added.

"Clearly, we are looking towards the Soviet Union as a partner in security, and we want them to look at our alliance not as an antagonistic institution," the secretary general said.

The NATO Nuclear Planning Group, composed of the defense ministers from the alliance's 16 member nations with the exceptions of Iceland and France, holds its formal sessions Wednesday and Thursday.

President Bush's announcement Thursday that he was scrapping plans to modernize short-range Lance nuclear missiles in Europe and to upgrade nuclear artillery shells was expected to be the prime topic at the session.

Under intense pressure from the West Germans, NATO agreed last year to postpone a decision on modernizing the aging Lance missiles, which are expected to become obsolete in the mid-1990s.

The updated weapons — designed to fall on East German soil — were deemed politically impossible to deploy, given the developments in Eastern Europe and the prospects for German unification.

Fire aboard guided-missile destroyer kills one

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A fire broke out early today aboard the guided-missile destroyer USS Conyngham about 80 miles off North Carolina, killing one crew member and injuring at least nine others, the Navy said.

Five of the sailors had injuries serious enough to require evacuation, Capt. Paul Hanley, a U.S. Atlantic Fleet spokesman, said. Three were flown to the nearby guided-missile cruiser USS Normandy and two brought to shore, he said.

The Conyngham was conducting routine operations with about 360 crew members when the fire broke out at 5:35 a.m. in the ship's engineering area, officials said. Fleet spokesmen had no information on the extent of the blaze or damage to the ship.

Hanley said three Coast Guard cutters were standing by along with the Normandy and the destroyer USS Briscoe as the Conyngham crew fought the blaze.

"The cause of the fire is unknown at this time. The primary fire is out. The crew is fighting secondary fires," Air Force Maj. Tom Johnson, joint duty officer at the Norfolk naval base, said at mid-morning.

Hanley said the ship was able to move under its own power toward port at about 3 mph.

The 437-foot ship, commissioned in 1963, has two five-inch guns, torpedoes and a number of surface-to-surface missiles, Hanley said.

TENSION HEADACHES

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.

Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure or dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.

The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.

Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief-but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.

Waters begin to recede in Lake Texoma region

By LINDA FRANKLIN
Associated Press Writer

The commute from Judy Peterson's Lake Texoma home has been a tortuous, 56-mile affair of boat and car for the past week, after record flooding made impassable the 18-mile route she normally drives to work.

With the 27 extra feet of water in Lake Texoma dropping about 6 inches a day, the Madill public works clerk expects to keep running her boat-car shuttle for another week, at least.

"It's really getting old," she said.

Waters that had forced hundreds of other Lake Texoma residents from their homes are receding after the lake crested at a record elevation of 644.76 feet. The lake was down to 644.3 feet Monday afternoon.

"We're tickled to death," said Mike McCoy, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers spokesman in Denison, Texas.

The lake, popular for recreation in both Oklahoma and Texas, had been rising steadily because of heavy rains in both states in recent weeks. Its height Saturday was 4 feet above the top of the flood control pool and more than 27 feet above the normal elevation of 617 feet.

McCoy said he expects it will take 45 to 60 days for the lake to return to a "decent" level.

Residents of Marshall County are paying attention to today's forecasts of up to 30 mph winds, which Civil Defense Director John Martin said could bring even more problems to the region.

"This is a very, very large lake. When winds are out of the south, it pushes the water and you can get 3-4 foot waves. It's kind of like a mini-hurricane," Martin said.

"If we get additional heavy rains and high winds, things could go from disaster to catastrophic," he said.

Two homes in the Cardinal Cove area collapsed into the water Sunday, and if the winds rise as expected, "I expect to see a lot more homes collapse," Martin said.

"When you get that kind of wave action there's just nothing you can do," he said.

McCoy said the Corps wants to try to lower the lake level by at least a half or three-quarters foot each day. Within seven to eight days, he hopes the level will be low enough that all the water will be off the spillway.

The lake topped the spillway early Thursday for the first time since 1957.

McCoy said he didn't want to speculate on the amount of damage the Corps will find when the water recedes.

But he knows some work will be needed and is already thinking ahead to cleanup and ordering supplies to make the repairs.

A preliminary count made Sunday found 83 homes in Marshall County partially submerged.

"If you take the number of displaced and apply it to Oklahoma City, it would amount to approximately 20,000 displaced people," Martin said. "They would have difficulty dealing with something of that scope," he added.

AIDS patient Willie Stuart of Wolfforth is one of those suffering loneliness and difficulties in receiving proper medical treatment in rural areas of Texas.

AIDS patients in rural Texas having difficulty getting medical treatment

DALLAS (AP) — The difficulty that AIDS victims have in getting adequate medical treatment in Texas larger cities is multiplied several fold when they live in small Texas towns, officials say.

With AIDS spreading in rural Texas communities, health officials say residents need to acquaint themselves with the facts about the deadly disease.

The Texas Department of Health has reported cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in more than 150 of the state's 254 counties. Nationwide last year, AIDS cases in rural areas increased 37 percent, compared with a 5 percent rise in cities.

AIDS is an affliction in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to disease. The virus is most often transmitted through sexual contact, mostly between homosexual males, and through the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles or blood products.

Ignorance is the reason most often cited for discrimination against AIDS patients in both rural and urban areas.

Rosemary Sanderfer of Beaumont, executive director of the Triangle AIDS Network, said she still is asked by people in Jefferson, Orange, Hardin and Chambers counties whether AIDS can be transmitted through mosquito bites.

"In the beginning, it didn't make a difference what I told people; they wouldn't believe me anyway," said Ms. Sanderfer, a former teacher. "No one had any trust in what the government said or the (scientific) reports. But now people say they don't feel like they're going to breathe AIDS in."

Sanderfer said some doctors are reluctant to treat people with AIDS because they fear a backlash from other patients. Many of the 60 AIDS patients in Jefferson County must go to the University of Texas Medical Center in Galveston — a 180-mile round trip — for care, she said.

"What's needed is awareness that small towns and rural areas are not exempt from AIDS," said June Osborn, chairwoman of the National Commission on AIDS in Washington, D.C.

Experts say the "ruralization" of AIDS in Texas has given new life to the misconceptions, fear and discrimination associated with the disease.

And the need for medical care for rural AIDS patients has revealed what some call serious problems in the health care system.

"The lovely, small-town dynamic turns into something rather poisonous for sick people with AIDS when fear and ignorance are involved," Osborn said.

Last month, the commission visited Waycross, Ga., to look at problems faced by rural AIDS patients. Members talked with people who couldn't find doctors, and with health and social workers who couldn't handle the emotions associated with AIDS.

They also heard tales of small hospitals reluctant to treat indigent AIDS patients, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Such instances are possible in Texas, where more than 8,806 people are known to have AIDS and tens of thousands more carry the virus. About 30 percent of the cases are reported outside Dallas and Houston.

New York, California and Florida are the only states with a higher incidence of the disease.

"Texas is a microcosm of the nation when it comes to AIDS," said the Rev. Chris Steele of Houston, formerly head of the state's Legislative Task Force on AIDS. "These problems are characteristic of the disease, but there are places not ready to look at them."

Colombians arrested for trying to buy missiles

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Federal agents arrested two Colombian nationals over the weekend who were trying to buy Stinger anti-aircraft missiles for use against the Colombian government, FBI officials said Monday.

An undercover drug investigation in Polk County in western central Florida eventually led to the federal sting in the weapons deal, which also included an attempt to buy automatic weapons, federal agents said.

Lawrence Crow, Polk County sheriff, said the sting shows "a correlation between narcotics and terrorism."

"This time, instead of Stingers, the cartel was stung," said Bonnie Tischler, head of Customs in Tampa.

Authorities on Saturday arrested two Colombians, 47-year-old Alfredo Antonio Ramos Tinoco and 28-year-old Luis Fernando Arcila-Giraldo. Tinoco was arrested at a Tampa hotel bar, Arcila-Giraldo on a road near Miami International Airport.

Both are charged with conspiracy to receive stolen property and export arms illegally as well as aiding and abetting the importation and possession with intent to distribute marijuana and cocaine.

The FBI said the men said Arcila-Giraldo was an associate of Medellín drug cartel chief Pablo Escobar.

No weapons exchanged hands, but federal authorities said there were also discussions of importation of narcotics.

Federal officials Monday said they had no information that the missiles would be used to assassinate the Colombian president, but said they were targeted for the cartel's violent campaign against the Colombian government.

Earlier, a federal official had said that the plotters may have planned to use the shoulder-fired missiles to assassinate Colombian President Virgilio Barco.

'Clovis News Journal' publisher arraigned on charge of embezzlement of $250,000

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — Former Clovis News Journal publisher James Griffin was arraigned Monday on a charge of embezzling funds in excess of $26,000.

Magistrate Richard Burke set a $10,000 appearance bond, meaning Griffin was released without paying money but would be fined $10,000 if he didn't appear for trial.

A preliminary hearing will be scheduled in magistrate court.

The Clovis Police Department filed a complaint in court Friday accusing Griffin of embezzling more than $250,000 from the News Journal.

The complaint followed a five-week investigation by Clovis police Lt. Raymond Mondragon. The investigation was prompted by a statement from Joseph Barletta, executive vice president and chief operating officer of Freedom Newspapers. Barletta said there was an undetermined amount of money missing over a period of time from the Clovis News Journal, a member of the Freedom group. Barletta named Griffin in the statement as a possible suspect.

Griffin, 60, who had been employed by the News Journal since 1960, resigned March 26 after serving as publisher since Feb. 20, 1973. Bill Salter, a 14-year veteran of Freedom Newspapers and former editor of The News Herald in Panama City, Fla., replaced Griffin as publisher March 28.

A seven-page affidavit filed by Mondragon in magistrate court said Griffin told a corporate officer of Freedom in March that he had taken money from the News Journal for personal expenses.

The affidavit said Griffin used News Journal funds to help buy a motor home, buy a car and pay numerous bills.

The affidavit said most of the checks were written and signed by Millie Teeters, office manager and head bookkeeper of the News Journal, upon receipt of handwritten notes from Griffin instructing her to write the checks.

Teeters, a News Journal employee for 38 years who is retiring June 1, was granted immunity from prosecution in the case. Teeters said "she was just an employee doing what she was told," according to the affidavit.

The affidavit indicates Teeters became concerned about Griffin's use of company funds for personal expenses. She said "most of the defendant's personal accounts were paid by Clovis News Journal checks," according to the affidavit.

The affidavit said there also was "evidence of bartering transactions (one including a $30,000 boat) where it appears that Griffin may have traded advertising for personal goods and/or services."

Measles program in Dallas faulted

DALLAS (AP) — Health experts say the measles outbreak that has claimed five lives in Dallas County was a disaster waiting to happen because tens of thousands of preschool children never received immunization shots.

"Anytime you've got that many children not vaccinated, the situation is right for measles, and the fuel is there to start a rather substantial outbreak," said Dr. William Atkinson, a medical epidemiologist with the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Dallas has reported more cases of measles than any other place in the country, Dr. Atkinson said. More than 2,040 cases have been reported in Dallas since the local outbreak began in December. Of the five residents who died of measles, four were children. Two out-of-county residents also have died of measles in Dallas hospitals.

Los Angeles has reported 3,000 cases and 25 deaths since 1987, but Dallas has a higher per capita rate, Dr. Atkinson said.

The measles epidemic has forced public health officials to re-examine their immunization programs, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Officials say they are seeking ways to vaccinate more children. But first, they say they must understand why so many children failed to get immunized before the outbreak.

Dallas' measles cases, like those nationwide, have been concentrated among preschool children who live in poverty, said Dr. Charles Haley, chief epidemiologist for Dallas County.

In Dallas last year, the city and county health departments vaccinated 23,188 people for measles, according to the departments' figures. More than 50,000 people were immunized in the first three months of this year.

Health experts say public apathy contributed to the low vaccination levels. Parents have failed to get shots for their children for a variety of reasons, including poor education and lack of resources, officials say.

Poorly organized immunization programs and fragmented health departments in the city of Dallas, Dallas County and suburbs have confused people about where and when to get vaccinations, experts say.

"What all these measles epidemics represent to me is the failure of public health, the failure of vaccination programs to get at everybody," said Dr. Jeffrey Starke, a specialist in pediatric infectious diseases at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

Before the outbreak, the county's staff of 12 nurses operated 11 clinics in Dallas County, outside the city limits. The city operated five clinics. Since the outbreak, the city and county have extended hours and offered special weekend clinics.

Dr. Starke said Dallas should have anticipated a measles outbreak.

"Your measles epidemic this year was perfectly predictable," said Dr. Starke, a pediatric infectious disease specialist from Houston.

"With Houston last year sitting down here with 1,800 cases, you'd have to be a fool not to think that Dallas is going to have a big outbreak of measles at some point in time," he said.

In Houston last year, 10 people died from measles-related illnesses. On April 21, the Dallas city, county and local pediatrics and nursing groups sponsored a mass immunization. But only 6,000 of an expected 20,000 unvaccinated people showed up.

'Miracle worker' has a mission: To turn basket cases into treasures

By LYN BLACKMON
 Texarkana Gazette

REDWATER, Texas (AP) — Her mission, should she decide to accept it, would be to take an ugly dresser and chest combination covered with sickly green and pink paint and try to restore it.

The mission looked impossible. The piece was as ugly as a hairless dog.

But Marianne Mason took the mission. After stripping off the green and pink paint from the wood and handles, sanding and refinishing, Mrs. Mason found a beautiful antique oak bonnet chest with solid brass pulls.

It took between 50 to 60 hours, but the mission was accomplished.

Mrs. Mason owns a business called Greene Country Antiques that she operates in her home and workshop between Texarkana and Redwater.

She restores antique furniture people bring to her, and she collects pieces that she restores and sells. She is a collector, a craftsman, restorer, wholesaler and retailer.

Her husband, Jim Mason, has restored an old barn behind the house where they keep stacks of old furniture and trunks the Masons have collected.

Mrs. Mason said she works with "basket cases" that she has rescued from garages, attics and basements and turned into treasured possessions.

People come in and select an old piece, and Mrs. Mason quotes a price for the finished piece.

Looking at a seemingly hopeless chair with a broken bottom, the customer has to trust Mrs. Mason to work a miracle and turn it into a beautiful and valuable antique piece.

This chair needed to have the seat caned, a process of weaving fine fibers by hand into a beautiful design that once was popular on fine furniture.

Caning is only a small part of Mrs. Mason's business, but it is the most exacting and skillful work she does.

"This is called seven-step caning," she said as she worked. "The seats of chairs always wear out first. Caning originated in the Orient and was brought to England during the William and Mary era. It probably started out by weaving reeds together to make seats."

The very thin strips of rattan steams Mrs. Mason uses in the caning process have to be kept wet so they are pliable.

Pegs hold the tails of the strands to keep the strips taut.

'This is a labor of love. It takes so long — about 20 hours — that I never really make any money out of it, but I enjoy it.'

She is working on a design called a lace weave.

The strands are secured first from the back to front, then Mrs. Mason goes from right to left, facing the chair, and weaving the strands carefully as she goes.

The real pattern does not show up until she begins the diagonal weaving. The fibers make a firm seat but have a lacy look — the holes in the "lace" weaving seem perfectly aligned.

"I had to learn to do this from a book," Mrs. Mason said. "But after doing this for 10 years, I know the designs by heart."

After the caning is finished and dried, she will varnish it. The varnish will match the wood of the chair and will give it an old look, and the chair will look much like it did originally.

"This is a labor of love. It takes so long — about 20 hours — that I never really make any money out of it, but I enjoy it. I often will take it from the workshop to our home to work on at night while I visit with the family or listen to music."

Nearby is a chair with "splint seat," a common chair seat usually made from bark and woven in a basket weave.

These are sturdier, more everyday chairs in contrast to the beautifully carved dining room chairs Mrs. Mason has been caning.

The weaving in the splint seats is much simpler and more solid. Cat tail stalks, hickory, corn husks and rawhide are sometimes used for splint seats.

The Masons began to collect and restore furniture 19 years ago. It was trial and error, without much in the way of guidelines, they said.

"With Marianne it is a business, with me it is a serious hobby," Mason said.

Pieces they have bought and restored are sold to four outlets, two in Texarkana and two in Jefferson.

"Texarkana is gaining a reputation as an antique center," Mrs. Mason said. "Jefferson has been interested in restoration for a long time, but a lot of good American antiques, which is all we are interested in, are found around here."

"We have a special love for American furniture that I believe is a love of heritage."

Trunks and chests are popular now, although the pieces come to the Masons in terrible shape, they say.

For some reason the style was once to paint over everything, including fine wood and brass fixtures, Mrs. Mason said.

"Sometimes it is hard to part with a piece," she said. "With us, it is more than business, it is a passion."

"We are still crazy about it. We get excited about pieces that people bring to us. We would like to have everything we have worked on in our home."

"Of course, not only would that end the business, we would never have room for everything. We don't advertise at all, but we stay very busy."

The Masons originally were from New Mexico and then Jim Mason joined the Army, and they moved 13 times in 10 years.

They chose this area to settle in for a number of reasons, but mostly because they think it is beautiful. The place is quiet and the Masons said they have good neighbors and have made lots of friends.

And there seems to be an endless supply of "missions" ahead.

Veteran congressman, populist attorney general vie for Senate

By MARK WARBIS
Associated Press Writer

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Republican James McClure's decision to retire from the U.S. Senate has set up a struggle between two would-be successors in a plot straight from a Frank Capra movie.

Jim Jones, a plucky, populist attorney general with almost no cash or campaign staff, is giving five-term congressman Larry Craig a spirited but possibly futile run for his money in the May 22 Republican primary.

"I've always been an underdog in my political races," said Jones, who ran for the House twice before winning the state's top legal office in 1982. "It's a role that I don't mind; you have to try harder."

Craig, 44, is campaigning on his record and generally playing the role of the cautious, veteran politician above the fray.

Jones, 47, is cast as the scrappy, nothing-to-lose challenger with a folksy, accessible style and independent agenda.

"I've got more courage and innovation than Craig has," Jones said. "He's been in Congress for 10 years and has done very little."

The Craig campaign is a juggernaut fueled by essentially the same field and fundraising organization that made McClure all but unbeatable for three House and three Senate terms. McClure, however, has made no formal endorsement.

Through the first three months of the year, Craig had built up a war chest of $260,000 while spending $135,000. Jones had received contributions of less than $19,000 and most of it was quickly spent.

The winner of the GOP primary is expected to face Boise businessman Ron Twilegar in November. Twilegar, 46, is a former state Senate minority leader who faces token opposition in the Democratic primary.

While Craig is the heavy favorite, there is a perception he remains a relatively untested and possibly thin-skinned campaigner, with a formal, somewhat stiff manner.

Democrats had to scramble to find replacement candidates to challenge him when the 1984 nominee died in a car accident and the front-runner in the party's 1986 primary was killed in a plane crash. The implication irks Craig. "I've won, but I've worked hard in each case," he said.

With a network of volunteers in every county, Craig contends he has made quick progress in heavily Republican eastern and southern Idaho, where most of the party's statewide primaries are decided.

"We've spent a lot of time there, and I may run very well in the south and southeast, better than I had anticipated," he said. "I'm finding the support for Jim Jones there is very soft."

If true, that may be partially a result of Jones' lack of money for major advertising in a far-flung state where key markets are separated by mountains and hundreds of miles.

Jones has tried to get his message out through news conferences and personal appearances, usually traveling alone. His primary focus has been on pocketbook issues such as consumer protection, possible pricing collusion in the oil and meatpacking industries and action needed to reduce the federal budget deficit.

Jones has tried to undercut Craig's position as a primary sponsor of a proposed balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Over the past 10 years, Jones contends, Craig has "continually weakened it to the point where it's meaningless in an effort to get more co-sponsors."

Jones knows his kind of underfinanced, one-man campaign has not succeeded in Idaho since Democrat Glen Taylor, known as the "Singing Cowboy," won a Senate seat in 1944. But he remains optimistic.

"It's a disadvantage, but it's something that can be overcome by just sheer determination, hard work and free publicity, and I've been pretty good over the years in generating coverage," he said.

Craig is clearly ahead, but he won't reveal the results of his own polling. He credits organization, but chafes at Jones' contention it was inherited from McClure.

"I inherited nothing," Craig said. "Jim McClure did not call anyone or ask anyone to work on my behalf. I did it myself."

Opera spectacular coming to Giants Stadium

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Stone-faced Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry was the closest thing to the Sphinx ever seen in Giants Stadium — until now.

A 55-foot replica of the Egyptian wonder is coming to New Jersey in June for a spectacular $7 million production of the opera Aida.

While most operas aren't over 'til the fat lady sings, this one won't be done until 1,200 cast members, a 100-piece orchestra, a menagerie of exotic animals and the eight-ton Sphinx are paraded through Giants Stadium for two nights.

Promoters are hoping for 39,000 people each night for the June 1-2 shows, not including Jimmy Hoffa, the ex-Teamsters boss allegedly buried in one end zone.

The promoters are also aware that a stadium off the New Jersey Turnpike, deep in the heart of Bruce Springsteen country, is not the usual spot for a musical work that premiered 119 years ago in Cairo.

So they're going for the hard sell, sending costumed Egyptian wannabes to shopping malls in an effort to plug the show.

Ads in the local media proclaim "THINK SPHINX," while ad copy trumpets "The Opera Spectacular."

Twenty New Jersey malls were targeted for the blitz, with folks dressed as Aida, Radames, Egyptian soldiers and high priests spreading out from a midtown Manhattan motel and heading into the Garden State.

Giants Stadium is the latest stop for the opera, which is billed as the biggest production of any opera, ever. Aida has played in Montreal, Sydney, Melbourne, Vancouver, Tokyo and Toronto in the past two years. In Japan, 102,000 people attended.

But Aida is more than an opera, said Tony Attanasio, who has been training the mall roamers. Verdi wrote his grand opera with jugglers, animals and dancers, designed for grand-scale popular entertainment, the publicist said.

Maestro Giuseppe Raffa, who is directing the production, said

"opera is for the people" rather than the privileged few.

Attanasio said auditions for the opera's 500 extras bear the maestro out.

Raffa, 38, got the idea for the traveling spectacular after watching Italian film director Mauro Bolognini direct Aida in Giza, Egypt, with the real Sphinx and Pyramids in the background.

The 1987 show inspired him to put together the financing and hire Bolognini, the set producer and the costume designer.

The traveling Aida had to build sand dunes, Pyramids, the Nile and a Sphinx.

They went the real thing one better, putting motors and drivers inside the 55-foot, eight-ton replica Sphinx and letting it split and show its profile on each side of the stage during the Triumphal Entry scene.

After Giants Stadium, Aida will play the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum June 29 and 30, San Francisco in mid-July and possibly Washington, D.C., in September.

A giant screen on each side of the stage will show closeups and the words in English. A $1 million amplification system has been built in Holland.

But the Aida production will not bring the only Sphinx to Giants Stadium this summer.

The rock band Kiss is coming to town in the summer, and their stage show will feature a towering version of the Egyptian monument too — one with an attitude, promised Kiss vocalist Paul Stanley.

"Ours is going to talk, and it hates opera," Stanley said.

Lawsuit claims divorce list invades privacy

By KAREN SCHWARTZ
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A Newport newspaper's inconspicuous list of divorces could become a test of a state's right to bar public information from being reported by the news media.

The U.S. Supreme Court has refused to say whether states can put off-limits otherwise public information by invoking privacy concerns — and a Newport divorce lawyer contends Rhode Island's privacy law is such a shield.

Attorney Thomas W. Kelly is suing The Newport Daily News on behalf of a woman who wants to keep her name out of the newspaper's monthly listing of divorces granted in Newport County Family Court.

"The Supreme Court has opened the door for the first time," said Kelly, citing its June 1989 ruling clearing The Florida Star newspaper after it published the name of a rape victim despite state law against such publication.

The paper was not liable for invasion of privacy, the high court ruled, but said there might be a "zone of personal privacy within which the state may protect the individual from intrusion by the press."

Rhode Island's 10-year-old privacy law provides the right to be secure from "unreasonable publicity" of a fact "which would be offensive or objectionable to a reasonable man of ordinary sensibilities."

Kelly acknowledges his chances of winning are slim, but argues his client is entitled to privacy because she is not a prominent figure and has not run for public office.

He wants the newspaper to "discern the newsworthiness" of the divorces it publishes. A hearing on the case is set for Monday, when the court is expected to consider the newspaper's motion to dismiss the lawsuit.

Jane Kirtley, head of the Reporters Committee for the Freedom of the Press, said the lawsuit is frivolous. In open court, she said, "the press' role is to act as a surrogate for that portion of the public which cannot be there."

Harvard University law professor Alan Dershowitz, who defended Newport socialite Claus von Bulow on charges he attempted to murder his wife, said there is "no possibility" a state can bar publication of a public record.

"The only way for the state to get around that is to say divorce is not a matter of public record — but of course it is," Dershowitz said.

David B. Offer, the newspaper's editor, said divorces are noteworthy, regardless of the people involved, because of their effects on the community, its businesses, schools, churches and welfare programs.

"Some may call that voyeurism or scandal," Offer said. "But it seems to me that if (divorces) are of interest to a segment of the community, that people have a right to read about them in a community newspaper."

Kelly also contends divorce carries a social stigma, an argument dismissed by sociologist Frances Goldscheider of Brown University. "If 50 percent of marriages end in divorce, it can't be much of a stigma anywhere," she said.

Focus on water use habits

Did you know that you use about 123 gallons of water every day and the average residence uses 107,000 gallons per year? It is recommended that a person drink 2 1/2 quarts of water a day to stay healthy and that costs us less than a quarter a day on the average.

National Drinking Water Week is May 6-12. This is a time we can all focus on our water use habits. Only one percent of the earth's water is suitable for drinking. Review your use of water and make plans to change some old habits to prevent waste.

As consumers, we can help assure an ample water supply in the future by adopting some simple conservation measures. Let's look at some specific ideas for conserving water in the bathroom and kitchen.

The bathroom may be the smallest room in the house, but that's where 50 to 75% of a family's water use takes place. From 26 to 45% of a family's water use flushes the toilet and 23 to 30% is used for bathing and grooming. There are several ways to save water in the bathroom.

A typical shower without a water-saving shower head uses 5 to 10 gallons of water each minute, so keep the length of your shower to around 5 minutes. A kitchen timer might be used as a reminder. Turning the water off while you soap up or shampoo also saves water and energy. Some shower heads have a cut-off button so that you can shut water off temporarily without turning off the water faucets. If your shower head does not have a cut-off button, you can purchase a flow cut-off valve which can easily be installed on most shower heads.

If you prefer baths, don't fill the tub too full - one-fourth of tub should be enough. Every inch of water in the tub uses about 4 1/2 gallons of water. When you are brushing your teeth, don't let water run the entire time you brush because each minute that the water is on, four or five gallons of water are running down the drain.

Homemakers' News

Conserving water in the toilet is easy. Cut off the top of a plastic gallon or half gallon jug. Add a few clean stones to the jug to weight it down, and place it in the toilet tank away from the flushing mechanism. Each time you flush, you save the amount of water that remains in the jug or bottle. Inexpensive toilet tank inserts also can be purchased to reduce the amount of flush water by one to two gallons. Don't use a brick, though, because it can crumble and damage plumbing and fixtures. Water conserving toilets are now being manufactured which use only about 3 1/2 gallons of water per flush. Other toilet systems can reuse water from a bathtub or washing machine (greywater) instead of the clean drinking water normally used to flush away wastes.

From 16 to 25% of household water use is attributed to activities that take place in the kitchen and laundry room. Here are several ways to cut down on the amount of water families use in these activities.

A kitchen faucet can deliver five gallons of water a minute, so don't let water run continuously. Hand washing dishes requires anywhere from 8 to 20 gallons of water. A dishwasher typically uses between 9 to 13 gallons of water per cycle. Since it uses the same amount of water whether it is completely full or only partially full, waiting to operate your dishwasher until it is loaded to capacity saves water and energy.

If you let the water run so that you can get a cold drink of water, you are sending a lot of good water down the drain. Instead, keep a jar of drinking water in the refrigerator.

Many washing machines use the same amount of water for a half-full load as for a full load. Most machines use 40 to 60 gallons. Some of the newer machines have water-saving features built into their design, but it's up to you to make sure that the proper water level is set for each load. Loading your machine to its rated capacity is one of the best ways to save not only water, but energy and time as well.

Leaking faucets waste more than you might expect. A faucet that drips a drop a second can waste more than 2,000 gallons of water in a year's time. You might also consider installing a flow-control aerator to the faucet if it does not already have one. Its built-in restrictor can reduce the flow of water coming out of a faucet from an average of five gallons a minute to about 2 1/2 gallons.

Saving water in the home now can mean more drinking water for the future. Challenge yourself to conserve water by changing your own water use habits.

For more information on water quality and conservation, contact your Gray County Extension Office.

Panhandle Bird Watch

by Jan Elston

The Western Kingbird is one of the most beneficial birds found in the Panhandle (actually, it is found throughout the West, from southern Canada south to Mexico). It winters in Central America, and usually arrives in this area toward the end of April. It is such a welcome summer resident, because it is constantly on the watch for insects, and consumes large numbers of those pests.

They are common about farms and along streams where scattered trees provide nesting sites, but they are more numerous in towns, and are frequently found around houses, buildings and cemeteries. When you are waiting for the light to change, at a busy intersection, look up on the wires, and you are likely to see one or more Kingbirds. (I have no idea why they choose busy intersections to watch for flying insects - maybe someone else can answer that question.)

This handsome bird (which is called a "Bee Martin" in Oklahoma) is about 8" long, has a grayish-olive head and back, dark wings, and a black tail with narrow white edging on each side. There is not white band across the tip of the tail (which is diagnostic when trying to distinguish it from some of the other similarly-colored Kingbirds).

The call is a sharp whist, which you may hear during warm summer nights (or one morning you get a chance to sleep late!). Rest assured that that Kingbird is keeping watch around your house, ridding your area of scores of insects, or even hundreds of insects when the parent Kingbirds are trying to keep their hungry baby birds fed.

It is amazing to me that such a neat looking bird can build such a ratty-looking nest! One family built a nest on a low branch, near one of our windows, and we watched the couple bring in long pieces of grass, twigs, and even a long piece of string which they didn't bother to weave neatly, but just left about 18" of it hanging out of the nest. We were surprised that it held together until the babies hatched but it did and the babies were fun to watch as they vied to receive the nest-proffered insect. When the babies were old enough to leave the nest temporarily, they were so cute. Four little balls of yellow fluff, all lined up on the same limb.

One day we heard a terrible racket outside, and looked out to see what must have been every Western Kingbird from this end of town, trying to attack a Blue Jay who had probably tried to snatch a baby Kingbird from a nest. The screaming adult birds swooped and dived relentlessly at the Blue Jay, until he took refuge on the ground, under a low Juniper shrub. He hid there for 15 or 20 minutes, until the "reinforcements" returned to their own yards.

Watching Kingbirds is one of the easiest ways to become proficient in using your binoculars, since the behavior of the birds in the fly-catcher family is more predictable than that of most birds. They will usually sit very still on a branch or wire, then they will dive out to catch a wasp, moth, or other winged insect, and then return to their original perch. Usually you will be able to see the captured insect, before it is eaten.

Watch for these birds which were seen during the past week: Chipping Sparrow, White Crown Sparrow, Song Sparrow, Lark Bunting, Redhead Duck, Black-crowned Night Heron, Bickissel, Red-breasted Nuthatch, Abocet, and Yellow-headed Blackbird.

Hospital plans activities for special week

May 6-12 marks National Hospital Week in Texas and Coronado Hospital has planned a week-long slate of activities to commemorate the special week. This year's theme is "Sharing the Gift of Health" and Coronado will host a series of events for its employees to highlight the gifts they share.

On Monday employees met with administration for doughnuts and coffee to talk about the progress of the employee-owned company.

Wednesday employees will "Share the Calories" at a special ice cream social at the hospital.

On Thursday and Friday, employees will "Share the Talent" by displaying their arts and crafts in an exhibit in the Private Dining Room of the hospital.

Throughout the week, employees are encouraged to write thank you notes to employees in other departments of the hospital. Each day five of those notes will be drawn and the writer and the employee written about will receive a prize. On Friday, the winners will each receive $100.

On Thursday evening, employees will attend the annual service awards session at the Pampa Country Club. Employees with five years, ten years, 15 years, 20 years and 25 years of service will special Coronado Hospital pins. Tom Neill, in charge of employee relations for HealthTrust, Inc., Coronado's parent company, will be guest speaker.

Woman in affair can't decide if she must pay or still play

DEAR ABBY: About six months ago, a guy I work with asked me to go out with him. Knowing he was married, I told him no, but he kept begging me, so against my better judgment, I finally agreed to go. (I planned on showing him a lousy time so he wouldn't ask me out again.) Well, we had a great time and became very close friends in the next couple of weeks. Within two months, we were more than friends. I never thought it would happen, but I really fell in love with him.

Somehow his wife found out about us and threatened to kill herself if he didn't quit seeing me. I found out later that she was eight months pregnant at the time. Needless to say, he stopped seeing me. I was heartbroken.

Three weeks ago, he started calling me and coming to see me. I tried to play it cool because I didn't want to get hurt again, but we went out one night and ended up in bed!

He told me he never meant to hurt me - he still cared for me and wanted to keep seeing me. He said he wasn't happy at home, but if I would be patient, one day we would be together. He also said he couldn't file for divorce because he's afraid he'd lose his two children. Abby, I'm not sure if I should try to forget about him, or be patient and let him try to work things out for us.

Please help me, Abby. I'm confused.

IN LOVE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR IN LOVE: I'm glad you asked, because it's time you realized you have no future with this man. He will keep seeing (and using) you as long as you let him. Furthermore, you knew he was married when you started seeing him, so if you are "hurt," you asked for it.

Back off. You can't build happiness on the misery of others. And if he were finally to divorce his wife and marry you - what kind of prize would you get? A man who cheated on his wife, then dumped her for somebody else.

DEAR ABBY: I recently saw a local TV show featuring a panel of women who had had breast cancer. The host of the show was a male who stated that the show was for women since the subject was breast cancer.

Ironically, I was watching the show in an out-of-town motel room as I was preparing to go to the hospital to visit my husband, who had had surgery the day before for breast cancer! He had a modified mastectomy in which the nipple, some nodes and some chest muscles were surgically removed.

Although it's rare, breast cancer can happen to men. Fortunately my husband saw his doctor immediately after he discovered the lump. As with female cancer, some lumps are malignant and others are benign. My husband's was malignant.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Abby, please encourage your male readers to examine their breasts and underarms. Breast cancer is not exclusively a female concern.

A WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Thanks for a worthwhile item. Women, tell the man (or men) in your life to check for lumps. Gentlemen, a word to the wise.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, while taking my children to school, I accidentally ran over our family dog.

In my haste to comfort him, I never crossed my mind that he would turn vicious from being in such pain. I received several nasty bites on the hand, but feel fortunate that one of the children didn't reach him first. His powerful jaws could have crushed their small fingers - or worse.

Abby, please warn your readers to explain the dangers of an injured animal to their children. We just don't expect our beloved pets to lash out in such a way.

LESSON LEARNED,
WEBB CITY, MO.

DEAR LESSON LEARNED: Beloved pets - like beloved humans - can go out of their minds temporarily due to severe pain. Thanks for passing on some valuable information.

DEAR ABBY: My granddaughter is getting married soon. She is having a large church wedding. Her grandfather and I have been divorced for more than 20 years. I am happily remarried and so is my ex-husband. (The bride is the daughter of our son.)

Is it necessary for us to be paired together at the wedding? It would make me uncomfortable, and I'm sure he would feel the same way about it. Would it be possible for each of us to sit with our present spouses and share the grandparents' pew?

We want to do whatever is proper. Thank you.

DEAR UNSURE: You may sit with your present spouses. Be sure to make your wishes known to the bride so there will be no misunderstanding.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol
May 8, 1990

An alliance of long standing will be strengthened to an even greater degree in the year ahead. Both parties will enjoy increased benefits and advantages from this re-structured union.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20) Partnership arrangements could be a trifle more complicated than usual today. Even if things look good on the surface, a negative shift is still possible. Taurus, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Spot check critical assignments you have delegated to others today. A lack of monitoring or inspection could result in a repetition of effort.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Don't be jealous if a charismatic friend steals the spotlight from you today. Your ego will survive the event and you'll have top billing at a later date.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) People in your charge today will resent unreasonable restrictions. If you pull on the reins too tightly, they may snap.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your views and opinions stand a good chance of being challenged by others today. Be prepared to back up your positions with proof or facts, or both.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) For the sake of your economic health, you'd be wise at this time to first clear up old obligations before assuming any new ones. Keep everything in balance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Opinions you render today may be diametrically opposed to those of people with whom you're involved. You could be asking for trouble if you're presumptuous and speak for them.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) A failure to keep pace with your duties and responsibilities could catch up with you today, and create some rather severe pressures. A bad attitude will only make matters worse.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It may be wise not to get involved in an activity today that includes a person you dislike. Neither is likely to behave in ways that will improve the relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) It's silly to get into situations today where you know going in the odds are stacked against you. Use your smarts and wait until you have a more level playing field.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) For the sake of harmony and good will, it might be better to go along with the majority today instead of trying to convert them to your way of thinking.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If you're purchasing an expensive item today, make sure it's properly covered with a guarantee and warranty. They should be in writing, not verbal.

Knicks invade Palace Bulls open with victory over Sixers

By The Associated Press

Now that they have exorcised their most terrifying demon, the Boston Garden, the Knicks will play the Palace.

They'll also have to play against the Detroit Pistons, who call the Palace at Auburn Hills their home.

The Pistons also rule the NBA, having won the 1989 title. They swept Indiana in the opening round this year, while New York became only the third team to rally from an 0-2 hole to win a best-of-5 series. In doing so, the Knicks broke a 26-game losing streak in Boston.

"Hey, we lost 26 straight games in Boston," Wilkins said. "And we said, 'It's time for a change.' We've lost four straight to Detroit, and it's time for that to change, too."

The Knicks aren't kidding themselves about the enormity of their chore. They simply have discovered they can handle such challenges.

"This team matured a lot over the last week," Trent Tucker said.

"I think we're playing simply a great basketball team," Knicks coach Stu Jackson said. "The mountain we have to climb is enormous. But the Celtics' series gave us the confidence that we have a chance."

The Pistons also were impressed by what the Knicks achieved by winning three straight against Boston.

"New York showed everybody they don't quit," Bill Laimbeer said. "They showed a lot of heart. They had young legs and maybe they tired the Celtics out."

Also beginning tonight is the Western Conference series between Phoenix and the Los Angeles Lakers. Game 2 of the San Antonio-Portland series will be played after the Trail Blazers won the opener.

Chicago won its opener against Philadelphia 96-85 Monday night as Michael Jordan scored 39 points.

The Bulls were in control when they suddenly couldn't find the basket for the first 31/2 minutes of the fourth quarter. Once the 76ers got within two points, however, the Bulls started scoring again. Jordan had 15 points down the stretch.

"We were getting the shots, but no one could get it to fall," said Jordan. "But it was important that our defense stopped them and they couldn't make up much ground. When your offense is off, your defense has to be consistent."

The Suns survived the first round on a last-second jump shot by Kevin Johnson in Game 5 against Utah. Now, Johnson gets a look at Magic Johnson in what should be a spectacular matchup.

Phoenix carries its own negative streak onto the Forum court: 21 straight losses.

"Streaks don't mean a thing, especially in the playoffs," Michael Cooper of the Lakers said. "It's the team that's ready to play with some aggressiveness and some passion that's going to win."

Nobody shows more passion for the game than the Johnsons. Kevin's speed and agility could present problems for Magic, who, in turn, will use his size and strength to hurt the Suns.

Portland, without center Kevin Duckworth, kept rookie of the year David Robinson under control in the first game. Robinson can't have another weak effort if San Antonio hopes to stay in the series.

"It was different from the first round," said Robinson, who was held to nine points. "It was something that a lot of our players had never faced, as far as the intensity level and being physical."

"It was a bit of a wake-up call," he said, "but I don't think any of our guys are intimidated at all. I think we're going to come out and respond."

Philadelphia's Charles Barkley (34) gets bumped out of the lane as Michael Jordan of Chicago goes for the slam Monday night.

Harvesters can capture playoff spot with a win

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Editor

The Harvester baseball team climbed a notch to No. 9 on this week's Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association poll, but entering today's game against Lubbock Dunbar, there are at least three things more important than those rankings.

Pitching, hitting and fielding. Indeed, Pampa's entire season has been squeezed into a single game, the regular-season finale beginning 4:30 p.m. today at Harvester Field. The Harvesters can earn their first playoff berth in 10 years with a victory over the third-place Panthers.

The Harvesters, currently 21-2 overall, are tied with Lubbock Estacado for first place, each with 13-2 records. Dunbar is one game back at 12-3. Estacado takes on Hereford today, and should the Whitefaces and the Harvesters both win, they'll share the District 1-4A crown and play a one-game tie-breaker to determine playoff seeds.

However, if Pampa wins and Estacado falls, the Harvesters will claim sole ownership of the 1-4A title.

A loss won't necessarily end Pampa's postseason hopes. If the Harvesters and Estacado both lose, the district race will end in a three-way tie for first place with a three-way playoff to determine postseason seedings.

A Pampa loss and an Estacado victory is the only combination that can eliminate the Harvesters.

Whew! That's plenty to keep straight, but the main thing to remember is that Pampa can sew up that elusive playoff berth with a win over Dunbar today, no matter what else happens.

And that means avenging the 14-0 whipping the Panthers handed Pampa last month. It was by far the worst loss of the year for the Harvesters, and the only time they've been shutout in 23 games.

On the upside, the Harvesters get the chance to clinch a playoff berth at home, where they're undefeated this season. Senior left-hander Brandon Knutson, 9-1 after Saturday's win over Levelland, will start on the mound for Pampa again today.

Sammy Flores (3-3), who also pitched Dunbar's 14-0 win over Pampa, will start for the Panthers. Gametime is 4:30 at Harvester Field.

Mets bury Astros, 7-1

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Viola is on a roll. He pitched his worst game of the season, labored half the game with muscle spasms in his hip, and still won.

"I didn't have much tonight," the New York Mets left-hander said. "I didn't have my good changeup. I didn't have good location. And I didn't feel very good from the fourth inning on. It was a real struggle. But my teammates did a great job of pulling me through."

Viola became the National League's first six-game winner Monday night, raising his record to 6-0 as the Mets defeated the Houston Astros 7-1 for their third straight victory.

Viola scattered eight singles — four by Eric Yelding — over 6 1/3 innings while walking two and striking out five. Off to the best start of his career, he leads the league with 45 strikeouts and a 1.05 ERA.

The only run charged against him, breaking a streak of 20 consecutive scoreless innings, came after he left in the seventh.

But Viola didn't exactly breeze through the Astros lineup. He allowed two baserunners in the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh innings and retired the Astros in order just once, in the second.

"We had him on the ropes all night but couldn't put him away," Astros manager Art Howe said. "I can't say we couldn't hit him because we could."

The Astros stranded 11 runners as Viola continually pitched out of jams.

"I kept on reaching back for that one big pitch, and I got all but one," he said. "And I got away with that one, even though it was brutal pitch."

The pitch was a full-count, belt-high fastball to Craig Biggio in the fifth. Biggio popped it up to end the inning.

After the game, Viola had a brief closed-door meeting with Manager Davey Johnson.

"I just told him not to worry about me," Viola said. "I said, 'My hip'll be fine. Just give me the ball and let me pitch.' I may feel a little uncomfortable out there but nothing is going to keep me off the mound."

The Astros scored in the seventh with rookie reliever Wally White-hurst pitching. With one out and the bases loaded, Glenn Davis drove home Yelding with a slow roller past the mound that shortstop Kevin Elster booted.

Whitehurst recovered nicely and, with his one-hit performance over the final 2 2/3 innings, notched his first major-league save.

Daryl Boston's first NL homer, a two-run shot off reliever Xavier Hernandez, capped a three-run seventh and boosted the Mets' lead to 7-1.

Missouri cage program in peril with NCAA

By DOUG TUCKER
AP Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Two of the 15 allegations against Missouri may put Norm Stewart's basketball program in particular peril.

As expected, the NCAA is charging the Tigers with having an agent help them recruit a specific area. The area would presumably be Detroit and could constitute a serious violation since so many of Stewart's finest players have come from there.

Secondly, NCAA-watchers learned long ago the Enforcement Department dislikes being lied to. And allegation No. 13 says a member of the athletic department "...

provided false and misleading information ... acted contrary to the principles of ethical conduct ..."

And, "... demonstrated a knowing and willful effort on his part to operate the university's intercollegiate men's basketball program contrary to the requirements and provisions of NCAA legislation by his involvement in this case."

All names were carefully blacked out in the copy of the inquiry distributed at a news conference Monday. But all key staff members on hand during the years in question, roughly 1985-89, are still in place.

Stewart, who has directed the basketball program for 23 years, acknowledged some of the allegations are true. But he, Chancellor Haskell Monroe and athletic director Dick Tamburo all refused to answer specific questions regarding the charges.

"With regard to the specific allegations contained in the letter of inquiry, I cannot comment much other than to say that the allegations are merely allegations. They are not conclusions," Stewart said in a statement.

"Some of the allegations we have already admitted," he said, apparently referring to assistant coach Bob Sundvold, who was suspended temporarily by Missouri after allegedly buying airline tickets for recruit P.J. Mays of Cincinnati.

Amarillo High takes two from Pampa

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Editor

Amarillo High's boys and girls remained undefeated and captured district soccer championships Monday with victories over Pampa in the regular-season finale at Harvester Field.

The Lady Harvesters suffered a 5-1 setback to enter the postseason tournament in fourth place at 2-5-1. The Harvesters were defeated, 3-0, to capture third place with a 6-3-1 record.

"We did a good job compared to the last time we played Amarillo High and got beat 10-1," said Pampa girls coach Scott Flynn. "We wanted to score a goal in the last ten minutes and instead they scored two quick ones on us."

Rochelle Pritchard scored Pampa's only goal to knot the score at one apiece early in the first half. The Lady Sandies scored once more to take a 2-1 lead at intermission.

"That was one of our better first-half efforts," Flynn said. "We came out mentally ready for the game, like we haven't in the past. It usually takes us the first half to get going, but we were ready against them yesterday."

Amarillo High, which finished the regular season with a 7-0-1 mark, added three more goals after halftime to complete the scoring.

"We did a good job on defense in the second half," Flynn said. "They pass really well and work the ball well. That's their game."

The Lady Harvesters open the postseason tournament tonight against the league's No. 5 team, Caprock. The game is scheduled to begin 6 p.m. at Field #3 at Southwest Park in Amarillo.

The Lady Longhorns finished the regular season winless at 0-7-1. The loser of tonight's game will bow out of the tournament. However, a double elimination format is adopted after the first round in both boys and girls competition.

In the boys game, Pampa suffered its first shutout of the season to finish half a game behind second-place Palo Duro (7-3), while Amarillo High remained perfect at 10-0.

"This happens often in a big game," said Pampa boys coach Mike Redwine. "The kids were trying so hard that we ended up playing one of our worst games of the year. The effort was good, but the kids were pressing and trying so hard to win the game that they never settled down and played soccer."

"However, Amarillo High is the kind of team that can make you look that way. They're experienced and they pass the ball well."

The Harvesters trailed only 1-0 at the half, but were unable to score into the wind after halftime.

"We had the wind the first half, but we weren't able to take advantage of it," Redwine said. "That kind of got the kids down, even though we were only down by one. But we felt the game slipping by us when they scored the second and third goals."

The PHS boys play a first-round game tonight in the postseason tournament. Pampa faces the No. 6 team, Canyon, at 8 p.m. at Southwest Park's Field #4.

Canyon enters the game with a 1-8-1 record, although the Eagles appear to be hitting their stride late in the season. In their last three games, they tied Caprock 1-1, beat Tascosa 5-2, and lost to Amarillo High 3-1.

"They have really been playing competitive soccer these last few weeks," Redwine said. "With the exception of last night's game, we've been on the top of our game as well."

"We're going to have to play a very, very good game to win tonight. If you lose tonight, you're out. It's important to us to win this one, because we're not ready for our season to end."

Outlaws rally to edge Lyle's Cubs, 14-13

The Thompson Parts Outlaws edged past Lyle's Cubs, 14-13, in Rookie League action last week.

The Outlaws rallied to win the game after trailing by three runs, 13-10, going into the bottom of the sixth inning.

John Towles opened the sixth with a single. After Cody Perkins grounded out, Donnie Keim and Ryan Sells hit back-to-back singles, followed by a triple by Jesse Francis to knot the score at 13-13. Greg Lindsey's single drove in Francis for the winning run.

Top hitters for the Outlaws were Jesse Francis, double and triple; Greg Lindsey, single, triple and home run; Matthew Heasley, single and triple; Donnie Keim, two singles, and Ryan Sells, two singles.

Top hitters for the Cubs were Jason Roark, two singles and double; Brent Coffee, single and home run; Jeffrey Atkins, single and double; Johnathan Waggoner, two singles and triple, and Jeremy Silva, two doubles.

In another Rookie League game, Danny's Market defeated Hall's, 28-10.

Danny's Market was led at the plate by John Bailey, Caleb Snelgrooves and Adam Wright with four hits each.

Optimist roundup

Scott James, Compton Bailey, Breck Hoggatt, Trilyn Deeds, Marcus Ross, Danny Kirkpatrick and Chase White had three hits each. Shawn Funk and Cory Bromwell had two hits each.

Bailey, Snelgrooves and Ross each had a home run. Alisha Furnish and Mark Bailey turned some good defensive plays for Danny's.

Travis Lancaster, Jimmy Story, Matt Rains, Kris Jones, Reed, Defaveer and Trevor Stowers led Hall's with three hits each.

Collecting two hits each were Ryan Black, Justin Davis, Tyson Curtis, Jason Coble, Chase Carpenter, Ryan Howard and Lake Arrington.

Travis Lancaster hit a home run for Hall's.

Danny Market's also claimed a 21-7 win over Ingersol-Rand.

Pampa Hardware downed Bowers Ranch, 16-6, in a Babe Ruth 14-15 year old game played Monday.

Winning pitcher was Clarence Reed, who gave up 10 hits while striking out 10 and walking four. Dave Davis had four singles and Jimmy Fossett had two singles and a double to lead Hardware's hitting attack.

Also with hits were Kurt West, single and double; Cory Davis, Erik Kirkpatrick and Chris Gilbert, one base hit each.

Chad Dunning had two singles and a double while Matt Finney had three singles for Bowers.

Pampa Hardware has a 1-1 record while Bowers Ranch drops to 0-2.

Todd Finney and Rayford Young combined for a no-hitter as Glo-Valve Service topped Holmes Sports Center, 11-1, Monday in Optimist Major Bambino League action.

Finney faced 10 batters in three innings, giving up one unearned run while striking out eight and walking one. Young pitched the last inning, giving up no runs and no hits.

Young started the Glo-Valve hitting barrage in the first inning with a single. He advanced to third on a double by Aaron Davis and stole home. Finney hammered a home run high over the left field wall. Brett Manning was hit by a pitched ball, advanced to third on a single by Mike Weatherly and scored on a wild pitch.

Canseco hits two homers in A's victory

By The Associated Press

Cecil Fielder, Kelly Gruber and Jose Canseco staged their version of home-run derby, with the Oakland slugger winning a round.

On Sunday, Fielder hit three homers and Gruber two, while Canseco was shut out.

Canseco got started early Monday night, hitting a three-run homer in the first inning and adding a solo shot in the eighth as the Athletics beat the New York Yankees 5-1.

The two homers raised Canseco's total to eight for the season. But that's still short of Fielder and Gruber.

Fielder, who played in Japan for two seasons, hit his major-league leading 11th home run in Detroit's 5-4 loss to Milwaukee on Monday. He also leads the majors with 27 RBIs.

Gruber helped Toronto beat Chicago 6-1 with his 10th home run of the season. All 10 have been hit at the SkyDome.

It was Canseco's 17th and 18th lifetime homers against New York since he joined Oakland in 1985. He has hit two homers in a game 10 times, the last time coming Aug. 29, 1989, against the Yankees.

"I made a mistake with those balls to Canseco," pitcher Tim Lary said. "I maybe could have been more aggressive. When I gave up that three-run homer, it was a big letdown right there."

Canseco entered the game in a 5-for-32 slump.

"Not too many pitchers will try to challenge me inside like that all night," Canseco said. "I respect him for trying. But if you're going to keep challenging me, we'll see what happens."

Dave Stieb (5-1) improved to 19-4 lifetime against Chicago by allowing seven hits in 7 2/3 innings.

Gruber's homer scored Tony Fernandez from third to snap a 1-1 tie in the fifth against Jack McDowell (1-2).

Brewers .....5
Tigers .....4

B.J. Surhoff hit a three-run homer in the fifth inning to power Milwaukee past Detroit at County Stadium.

Surhoff's second homer of the season followed a walk to Dale Sveum and single by Paul Molitor off Jack Morris (2-4). Morris walked seven and gave up four hits.

Royals .....4
Indians .....2

Bo Jackson singled home the go-ahead run in the 11th inning as visiting Kansas City defeated Cleveland for its second straight extra-inning victory.

Jeff Montgomery (2-1) got the win after the Royals' sloppy defense in the ninth inning cost him a save. Montgomery pitched four hitless innings. Mark Davis pitched a perfect 11th for his fifth save.

Red Sox .....5
Mariners .....4

Tom Brunansky, acquired by Boston last week, sparked a four-run third inning with a two-run double as the Red Sox edged the Seattle at the Kingdome.

The Red Sox scored four runs in the third inning off Erik Hanson (3-1) to erase a 2-0 deficit. Dwight Evans, who had three hits, also had a two-run double in the third.

Greg Harris (3-1) pitched 6 2-3 innings for the victory and Rob Murphy worked 2 1-3 innings for his first save.

Phil Bradley's two-run double capped a five-run seventh inning that carried Baltimore past California at Anaheim.

Reds notch first four-game sweep of Cards since 1966

By The Associated Press

The Cincinnati Reds and St. Louis Cardinals are streaking in opposite directions.

Tom Browning pitched a three-hitter Monday night as the Reds beat the Cardinals 3-0 to complete their first four-game sweep at St. Louis since 1966.

It was the fifth straight win for the Reds and fifth straight loss for the Cardinals, who were outscored 20-6 in the Cincinnati series. After scoring three runs in the series opener, the Cardinals' run production dropped to two, one and zero in the final three games.

"We got progressively worse," St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog said. "That's what you call a real team batting slump. There's nothing you can do. Just keep sending them out there."

Browning (3-2), who threw the first perfect game in Reds history in 1988, limited the Cardinals to three singles — by Rex Hudler in the fourth, Jose Oquendo in the eighth and pinch-hitter Tom Pagnozzi in the ninth. He struck out three and walked one in the Reds' first complete game of the season.

In other NL games, Montreal edged San Francisco 7-6, New York beat Houston 7-1, Pittsburgh downed San Diego 4-1 and Atlanta defeated Chicago 9-8.

Paul O'Neill's run-scoring single in the sixth broke a scoreless tie and little-used reserve Luis Quinones added a two-run double in the inning as the Reds improved their record to 18-5, best in the major leagues.

Herm Winningham beat out a bunt and Barry Larkin got a bloop single to start the rally. With one out, O'Neill singled home Winningham and Quinones followed with a double into the right-field corner.

Loser Jose DeLeon (2-2) went six innings, giving up three runs on seven hits.

Slow Pokes quicken their step

IRVING (AP) — Jimmy Johnson has rid all doubters of his unquenchable thirst for speed — first by taking Alexander Wright and Stan Smagala in the NFL draft, then by bringing in Randy Smythe.

Smythe is a training specialist who began a two-day orientation Monday for his over-speed training concept the slow-poke Cowboys will employ this year.

"There is no coincidence I'm here and Johnson is here," said Smythe, president of The Speed City U.S.A., a Portland, Ore.-based company who began implementing his learn-to-run-faster theory in 1982.

"He wins with speed. That's the whole thing with Jimmy Johnson. He won with speed before at (University of) Miami and he will win with speed again. We're birds of a feather on this."

On Monday, though, the Cowboys resembled harnessed birds. Smythe's training concept is based on resistance. It uses waist harnesses and Flexicord, which can be anchored to the ground or between two players.

At Montreal, Andres Galarraga broke out of a 1-for-16 slump with a three-run homer in the sixth inning and a game-winning double in the ninth.

It was the Giants' fifth loss in their last six games.

Delino DeShields started the Montreal ninth with a walk, but was thrown out at second on Marquis Grissom's sacrifice attempt. Grissom stole second and Tim Lincecum was intentionally walked by loser Steve Bedrosian (0-3) before Galarraga hit a long fly ball over left fielder Kevin Mitchell's head to score Grissom.

Pirates .....4
Padres .....1

At Pittsburgh, Barry Bonds homered in a four-run first inning as the Pirates won for the ninth time in 11 games.

Bob Walk (2-3) allowed five hits over six innings.

Bonds homered as the leadoff hitter in the first. Jay Bell reached when third baseman Mike Pagliarulo bobbled his grounder and scored one out later on Bobby Bonilla's double.

After Jeff King grounded out, Don Slaught beat out an infield single to third and Bonilla scored on Bruce Hurst's third wild pitch of the season. Andy Van Slyke followed with an RBI single off Hurst (1-4).

Braves .....9
Cubs .....8

At Chicago, Jeff Blauser hit two homers, including a game-winning two-run shot in the ninth.

Mark Lemke led off the Atlanta ninth with a walk. Blauser then homered to left off Mitch Williams (0-2).

Charlie Kerfeld (2-2) got the victory with 1 2-3 innings of relief.

Brush with history: Copies of masterpieces entering art market

By BRIAN MURPHY
AP Business Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Next door to a lunch counter advertising a grilled cheese special is a gallery where Van Gogh's Irises shares the walls with Monet landscapes and works from the Italian Renaissance.

"They're all fakes. They're all for sale. 'A forger? Yes, we're expert forgers you could say. But we make no attempt to deceive. We don't pretend to sell original works. We sell reproductions,'" said Ernest Thomas Cummins, president of Heritage House Trading Group Ltd.

"We have all the thrill of being a forger, but no risk." With prices for original art rising into the tens of millions, some art lovers are turning to high-quality copies done by expert artists. In addition, some museums confronting skyrocketing insurance premiums are considering stashing the authentic pieces and displaying reproductions, Cummins said.

No major U.S. art museum is known to be displaying reproductions in place of originals. Such a practice would raise questions about why people visit museums in the first place. But museum security has become a growing concern.

Last month, a man in Amsterdam sprayed a Rembrandt with an acid solution, causing minor damage. In March, thieves dressed as police officers stole 11 paintings and other objects from Boston's Gardner Museum.

Bids for paintings have climbed at auction houses. In 1987, Australian investor Alan Bond agreed to pay a record $53.9 million for Irises.

At Fort Lauderdale-based Heritage House, prices run from about $1,000 to $10,000 for paintings of paintings, depending on the size and complexity of the original, said Cummins, 34, a founder of the upscale Robb Report magazine. Heritage House, which started producing the repainted masters in 1987, also has a shop in Carmel, Calif.

The Heritage House works are full paintings rather than photographs or prints.

"We deal with people who want to live with great art, not just visit it," Cummins said.

A telephone call to the storefront gallery usually begins the three-to four-month process of making a reproduction.

Cummins contacts one of the nearly 200 European artists used by the gallery. In Europe, where copying masterpieces is a centuries-old craft, painters often use pigments and brushes typical of the period of the original.

The painting is placed in a frame closely resembling its era. Sometimes, the gallery purchases 17th century furniture to use the wood for frames, said Cummins.

The final step is the antiquing process using chemicals and heat and humidity. "We can make special types of cracks from little spider-web types to long splits," said Cummins.

To guard against misrepresentations, the canvases and frames are stamped and the paintings contain markings visible only under ultraviolet light.

"We're working in techniques that have been handed down for centuries," said Cummins. "The master copier hands down his knowledge to the apprentices and so on. There is nothing new to what we are doing."

Only recently, however, has the demand for near-perfect reproductions reached beyond a handful of collectors.

Several European galleries now specialize in copies of priceless museum works. Parisian gallery owner Daniel Delamere has gained status in the art world for selling reproductions and promising never to copy the same work again.

Thomas Hoving, editor of Connoisseur magazine and former director of New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, said there may be a limited market for quality reproductions, but he knows of no major U.S. museum displaying copies.

"Some people may want these paintings in their home. I do not see any market for museums," he said.

But even known forgeries are finding a niche among art auctioneers. Last month in London, Bonhams gallery put on the block 30 paintings by the late master forger Elmyr de Hory. Nearby, the British Museum's exhibit "Fake? The Art of Deception" features nearly 600 skillful imitations.

Cummins closely guards the identities of his copiers, claiming many fear disclosure would drop the prices for their original pieces and draw ridicule from peers.

Death row inmate asks for a speedy execution date

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A Texas death row inmate who says his greatest fear is becoming a ghost that would have to hang around prison "for another 300 years" has asked that he receive his death sentence as soon as possible.

"Nine tonight would be fine with me," said James Edward Smith, 37. "The sooner the better."

Smith, 37, was sentenced to death for the 1983 robbery-shooting of insurance agent Larry D. Rohus, 44, of Missouri City.

Although Smith does not have an execution date, he was the second death row prisoner in as many days to insist on being executed.

On Tuesday of last week, Jesse D. Jacobs told State District Judge James Keeshan he's tired of attorneys appealing his conviction of the 1986 abduction and murder of Etta Ann Urdiales, a 25-year-old Conroe paramedic.

The last inmate executed also ordered his lawyers to stop their appeals.

On April 21, Jerome Butler was executed for the 1986 murder of a taxi driver.

Butler was the 34th inmate to be executed in Texas since the state resumed capital punishment in 1982. The total is the highest of any state.

He was the 122nd inmate executed in the United States since the Supreme Court in 1976 allowed states to resume the death penalty.

Smith, a former voodoo priest and tarot card reader, came within six hours of being executed in May 1988.

Despite his insistence that no one interfere in his case, Smith's mother, Alexine Hamilton, won a temporary reprieve when she asked the court to allow her to challenge the death sentence on the basis that her son was mentally incompetent.

The U.S. Supreme Court, however, later rejected the Indianapolis schoolteacher's plea. It upheld lower court findings that Smith is competent to waive his appeals.

Last week, the Supreme Court ruled in an unrelated Arkansas case that there is no constitutional guarantee to appeals of death sentences and that third parties have no right to assert those claims on behalf of another.

Smith said he hopes the ruling speeds his own death sentence.

"I haven't been doing anything ... (except) sitting here, wasting away," Smith told the Houston Chronicle.

"Once you come in there's no way out except by execution or some fluke in the system. The American gulag is in Huntsville, Texas," he said.

The Texas Department of Corrections is located in Huntsville, where death sentences are carried out.

So angered was Smith by his unwanted stay of execution, that he told reporters he not only killed Rohus but participated in six ritualistic killings in New York, Florida and North Carolina, claims never substantiated.

Smith insisted last week, however, that he did not kill Rohus but admitted to his earlier crimes so people could be disgusted with having saved his life.

He did, however, ask to clarify what he called the mistaken notion that he had asked prison officials for dirt as his final meal.

Smith said what he asked for was a type of clay used in some voodoo ceremonies so he could mark his body with it.

That, he said, would ensure "the spirit doesn't become a ghost" and his body wouldn't be degraded and used for witchcraft.

"That scares me more than anything — becoming a ghost," Smith said. "I'd be stuck here around (the prison) for another 300 years."
