SPACE SPECTERS — There's something unearthly and menacing about this picture. Could be the Zombie crew of a Martian spaceship preparing to land on earth. Really, it's just a line-up of pressure suits used by high-flying pilots at Richards-Gebaur AFB in Missouri. When not in use, the suits are kept in a cool, temperaturecontrolled foom. Each costs $800 and is individually made for its wearer.

Grow a Dream Vacation in a cotton field?

It's not fantastic! And here is why:

One prominent Texas farmer used Phillips 66 Ammonia to realize an added net profit of $54.32 per acre on his cotton, after deducting the cost of ammonia. Just 50 acres of cotton like this means over $2,700 extra profit . . . enough to enable a family vacation in some of the world's finest spots.

Ask your Phillips 66 Distributor to help you work out a complete fertilizer program on all your crops.

THIS IS THE LIFE-With the Manhattan skyline forming a backdrop, Bob Coppage skimmed over the Hudson River during this demonstration of some new water skis. He's dressed in a waterproof suit to protect him from ice spray kicked up by the 22-horsepower outboard motor that propels the 150-pound craft over the waves.

SHOOTING STAR-During a hunting trip along the Dee River, near Aberdeen, Scotland, actor James Stewart bagged that pheasant he's holding. A bird in the hand is very good reason to bring a smile of satisfaction to his face.

HE'S THE FIRST - Bob Conrad, star of TV's "Ha-waiian Eye," is TV's first "beefcake." He spends almost as much time in Hollywood in a swim suit as he does fully clothed. He's a former Chicago dock worker.

COME WHAT MAY-Golfer Sam Snead and pretty Faye Penick, Queen of the World Series of Sport Fishing, seem to have latched onto a big one in the surf at Pompano Beach, Fla. The fishing series was being held there and Snead and other master anglers vied for the all-around world championship trophy in sport fishing's first world series. The fiveday round robin tournament provided a lot of fish and a lot of fun for participants and onlookers.

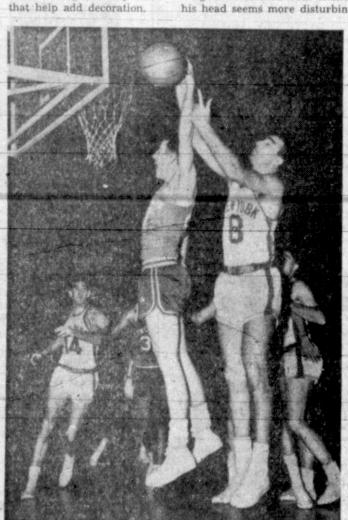

IN-AND OUT-Caught in mid-plunge as he dove into the Tiber River in Rome, Rick de Sonnay was taking his annual birthday plunge (left). After it was over, the 61-year-old Belgian celebrated with friends along the river bank (right). A bottle of wine poured over his head seems more disturbing than the cold water of the Tiber.

inations. The function of securing a sound currency must pass into new hands, into those of the whole nation. As soon as Gresham's law begins to come into play and bad paper drives good gold out of the pockets of the common man, there should be a stir. Perpetual vigilance on the part of the citizens can achieve what a thousand laws and dozens of alphabetical bureaus with hodes of employees never have and never will achieve; the preservation of a sound currency".

Von Mises' Concluding Remarks Von Mises ends the new part of his book with the following

"The present unsatisfactory state of monetary affairs is an outcome of the social ideology to which our contemporaries ar committed and of the economic policies which this ideology begets. People lament over inflation, but they enthusiastically support policies that could not go on with out inflation. While they grumble about the inevitable conequences of inflation, they stubbornly oppose any attempt to stop or to restrict deficit spending. "The suggested reform of the currency system and the return to sound monetary conditions presuppose a radical change in economic philosophies. There cannot be any question of the gold standard as long as waste, capital decumulation, and corruption are the foremost characteristics of the conduct of public affairs. "Cynics dispose of the advo cacy of a restitution of the gold standard by calling it utopian. Yet we have only the choice between two utopias: the utopia of a market economy, not paralysed by government sabotage, on the one hand, and the utopia of totalitarian all - round ning on the other hand. The choice of the first alternative implies the decision in favour of the gold standard".

NOTES: After all these years a British firm has at long last made an objective motion picture on the subject of Jack The Ripper and called, simply enough, just that'... The fiendish crimes committed 72 years ago by the long mysterious assassin have beguiled dozens of writers, but the simplest and possibly the correct approach was in a relatively obscure science-fiction short story printed two or three years ago and written by an author at this time unknown to me . . . What the writer put together was this: a scientist, after long development, perfected a Time Machine that really worked ... He invited a close friend, an Inspector from Scotland Yard, to make the trial run and asked the Inspector what period in the past he wanted to visit . . . The Inspector named the date of the third murder by Jack, got into the machine, was sent back into time, and in 15 minutes was back Into our time in present-day London..."Did you see Jack The Ripper?" the scientist cried...

And I'll mark off the calendar days until March 2nd and meet you there . . . There is no thrill, for me, like settling down in the seat of a fast, sleek, compact little car and driving it until one of us cries "Uncle." And there is no place to do it like the vast stretches of the desest in the Southwest . . . The hum and whine of speed under proper addiction for which there is no AA or comparable group designed to curb a habit Speaking of AA, there have been in five months, six acting examples on TV of men or women suffering from alcoholism. ... It is only mildly interesting to note that of the six principle portrayers of this state, four are active members of AA... If you thought their acting was superb and without error, you now know the reason... But don't be dismayed or offended. Is this not, after all, proof that TV now is honest and doesn't fake anything? But this has to be said: he is trying to write about people with less explicitness than has been his custom and, who knows, he may achieve a novel yet with not one Anglo-Saxon monosyllable in it ... In any case, "Ourselves To Know" is an interesting excursion into a new form of construction for him and he has brought it off excellently, And, as usual his people are dimensional, their speech is astonishingly accurate and the portrait of a town is detailed and precise . . . This is his real talent, the creation of realities, whether in character or speech, he having an acute and discerning ear, and he again proves it . . . Poor D. H.
