PAMPA — The Pampa Art Club will have its annual showing Tuesday and Wednesday at the Lovett Memorial Library auditorium, featuring work done by the club's members during the past year.

The art on display will be various mediums such as oil painting, watercolor, decorative painting, wood carving, tile painting, china painting, copper enamel and basket weaving.

Tuesday will be Guest Tea Day, by invitation only, from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. The show on Wednesday is from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and is open to the public.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Baseball stars Roger Clemens and Kirby Puckett are teaming up with the Goodyear blimp and Curious George, the storybook monkey, to get out the word that new food labels are on the way. They're helping introduce the Food and Drug Administration's "Nutrition Facts" label that manufacturers must start using by May 8 — the first major change in food labels since they were introduced in the 1970s.

Ten years in the making, the labels are designed to show health-conscious consumers how particular foods fit — and don't fit — into their diets.

"Our message is simple: There is something for everybody in this new label," said FDA Commissioner David Kessler, who was to announce details of the promotional campaign today.

FORT-WORTH (AP) — The garage sale ad beckoned folks to "Come on Down." And nearly 1,000 people did, including hundreds seeking autographs from "The Price Is Right" announcer Rod Roddy, who returned home this weekend to help sell off the remains of his Fort Worth family's estate.

Even a downpour and chilly temperatures didn't deter the bargain hunters and fans who flocked to the home of a Roddy family friend in Mansfield. A two-car garage provided shelter for the items accumulated over 50-odd years in the modest, two-bedroom home Roddy grew up in near Texas Christian University.

Furniture, books, glassware and albums that Roddy sent home while traveling the country as a disc jockey were among the goods up for sale.

"Everything, they saved everything," Roddy said of his parents, aunt and grandmother, who at various times shared the residence.

HOUSTON (AP) — A state law that permits non-voters on juries allows a panel that is more sympathetic to the criminal defendant, judges and prosecutors say.

The law took effect in September 1992 and mandates that counties call on its licensed drivers, as well as its registered voters, to serve jury duty.

However, Harris County judges and prosecutors say that since the law's implementation, jurors pooled for selection have become increasingly like the criminal defendants they are asked to judge — uninformed, young, poor and unconcerned about their community.

"We need the people who care about the community and want to address the problems of the community," said Assistant District Attorney Margaret Harris. "If they're not civic-minded enough to vote, then I'm not interested in having them as a juror."

Criminal defense attorneys, however, say the law provides their clients a better chance to be judged by actual peers.

EL PASO (AP) — The families of teenagers who use a local computer bulletin board have become the targets of vandalism, police said. Two families told police they've been victimized by "Hydro," a nickname used on an electronic bulletin board shared by a small group of El Paso teenagers.

"It's strange, and it's very scary," said Rio Grande Free Net operator Don Furth, who operates at the El Paso Community College. "These local bulletin boards are very busy at night."

"There are a lot of people who sit in their rooms, and they're so wrapped up in this virtual environment they've created," he said.

The FBI has jurisdiction over threats sent on communications lines. However, authorities have not determined whether the messages crossed state lines, a prerequisite for a federal violation, FBI spokesman Al Cruz said Sunday.

DALLAS (AP) — Society stacks the deck against the chances black Dallas County inmates have to earn work-release privileges, according to a published report.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that a computer-assisted study showed 25 percent of nearly 1,200 inmates allowed to leave jail to work last year were black. Of the work-release inmates, 75 percent were white, the newspaper said.

Bentsen presses Japan on trade markets

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite Japan's unsettled political situation, the Clinton administration is insisting on internal changes to help pry open Japanese markets, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen says.

Japan is groping for political stability following the sudden resignation of reform-minded Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa and the parliamentary shakeup that left his successor, Tsutomu Hata, leading a minority coalition.

Nevertheless, Bentsen said Sunday it was "imperative" that Japan open its markets and lower its $60 billion trade imbalance with the United States.

"We do think it's also very important that from a macroeconomic side that they stimulate that economy of theirs" by cutting their income tax to increase domestic demand and promote sales of imports, he said on NBC's Meet the Press.

However, the administration has backed away from immediately targeting Japan for possible trade sanctions over telecommunications and medical disputes. On Saturday, officials said they were granting an additional 60 days of talks to resolve differences.

U.S. firms say they are blocked from competing fairly for Japanese government contracts in those two areas. But administration officials discussing that move said with Hata's minority government struggling for survival, this would not be a good time to push for trade concessions.

On the domestic front, Bentsen warned that an increase in long-term interest rates would damage the economy, especially the housing market.

Asked about rumors that the Federal Reserve Board would boost short-term interest again later this month, Bentsen said, "If you had a substantial increase in long-term rates beyond what we see now, that would have some contractionary effect without a question ... and particularly in interest-sensitive areas such as housing."

"I would prefer we did not see that."

Bentsen said inflation "appears to be well under control," with rates approaching 3 percent for the year.

The Fed has been gradually inching up the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other for overnight loans. The Fed began this effort in early February as a pre-emptive strike to keep inflation from getting out of control.

At the time, Fed officials argued that by showing early resolve against inflation, it would calm investor fears and result in lower long-term rates. That did not happen, and markets have pushed long-term rates up out of concern that the economy was growing too rapidly.

Mideast peace talks

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher, confident Israel and Syria are on a productive negotiating track, is already planning to come back to the Middle East in mid-May to push for a land-for-peace settlement.

Despite some sour notes from Damascus, Christopher declared today: "The parties are talking on a broad range, a comprehensive range, of issues." And that, he said, was significant.

Christopher made the statement after a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. The two discussed the response Christopher got Sunday from Syrian President Hafez Assad on an Israeli proposal to withdraw from part of the Golan Heights and to remove most of the 13,000 Jews who live in the border enclave.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said the report was received "with great interest" by the Israeli leadership. "The subjects are very serious and complicated," he said.

But within Rabin's ruling Labor Party and among the electorate, heated opposition to his conciliatory approach erupted in parliament, at a party meeting and among the public in Tel Aviv.

Three motions for no-confidence in the Rabin government were introduced in the Knesset.

Critics said Israel was not getting anything in return for its overtures to Assad. Israeli sources acknowledged the gap between the two sides remained wide.

The prime minister's response was that he had not drawn a line of withdrawal on a map for the Syrians. The sources, declining to be identified, acknowledged, though, Christopher did not return with any specific Syrian concession.

Christopher will go to Cairo on Tuesday for the expected signing on Wednesday of an agreement between Israel and the PLO to launch Palestinian self-rule in Jericho and Gaza. He will then fly home, being due in Mexico next weekend for a scheduled meeting on U.S.-Mexican relations.

But next week, U.S. officials said, Christopher is planning for a meeting with Western and Russian foreign ministers on proposals for a settlement of the war in Bosnia and tentatively to go on to the Middle East for some more Israeli-Syrian diplomacy.

Assad's response was tightly held, but even though Syria publicly has criticized the Israeli package, American officials said before Christopher's meeting today with Rabin that it had not been rejected.

Assad gave it detailed consideration and framed a careful reply, the U.S. officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Christopher paused as he left his hotel to talk to the father and mother of an Israeli sergeant missing in Lebanon since 1982. He assured Yonah and Miriam Baumel of Jerusalem the U.S. government was trying to help in their search for information about their son, Zachary.

While waiting for Christopher to conclude talks in Damascus with Assad, the Israeli leader met with his Cabinet Sunday and heard a report from Finance Minister Avraham Shohat on an economic agreement with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Israel and the PLO are putting the final touches on an agreement for Palestinian self-rule in Jericho and on Gaza. The economic accord, signed last week in Paris, regulates trade, taxation and financial and tourism activities between the Palestinians and Israel.

Tired but buoyant, Christopher declared in Damascus Sunday night that Israeli-Syrian negotiations, dormant for more than two months, had entered "a new, more substantive phase."

U.S. rejects Rwanda intervention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rejecting direct U.S. involvement in Rwanda's civil war, the Clinton administration is reviewing a range of options to help ease the bloodletting.

One idea under consideration is to organize and help pay for African nations to send peace-keeping forces to Rwanda to restore law and order, officials said Sunday.

The officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, stressed that the administration's thinking is in its earliest stages and that no final decisions have been made.

Western officials have not even ascertained whether the African nations would be willing to do so, how much the mission would cost and whether it would work.

One thing was clear: The U.S. was not actively considering direct American action to stop the civil war, one of the officials said.

A camp in Tanzania bulged Sunday with 250,000 refugees seeking sanctuary from the weeks of bloodshed.

United Nations officials were stunned by the number of people who left Rwanda, Tanzania's northwestern neighbor, in just 24 hours Thursday and Friday to flee the ethnic slaughter. Thousands of refugees were still trudging in the rain Sunday, walking the 10 miles from the frontier to the camp.

South African Archbishop Desmond Tutu called on the United Nations on Sunday to send more peacekeeping troops to Rwanda.

The United Nations should have increased its forces in the central African nation instead of deciding to withdraw its 1,700 troops when the recent chaos began, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner said on ABC's This Week With David Brinkley.

"I would want to call on the United Nations to try to be as firm in its actions in Rwanda as it is trying to be in Bosnia," Tutu said.

Commissioners select Morris to be tax assessor

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Sammie Morris was sworn in this morning as Gray County's newest tax assessor/collector.

The decision to appoint Morris was made by Gray County commissioners during the morning session of their meeting today and followed comments by a handful of residents supporting Morris and others supporting the appointment of Donna Daugherty to the post.

Both Morris and Daugherty have worked in tax assessor/collector's office for a number of years along with the Margie Gray, the former Gray County tax assessor/collector, who recently died.

Prior to the commissioners' decision to appoint Morris, County Judge Carl Kennedy said that both people had his confidence and that he believed both are qualified.

"It's my opinion that they are qualified," he said. "We have an entire office of qualified people."

Morris will be in charge of the Gray County tax office until the canvassing of the votes in the November election, when the voters will decide who they want in the office.

Gray had an additional two years left in her term.

The decision to appoint Morris to run the office was based on a 1987 letter from Gray in which she said it was her wish to have Morris succeed her, in case of any problems, until an election could be held.

In addition, a number of commissioners said they had talked to Gray in past years about a successor and that she indicated

Morris was her choice.

Tom Mechler, chairman of the Gray County Republican party and one of the people to speak in support of Morris, said that she was best qualified for the job and that if Daugherty wanted to run for the office, she could do so in the Nov. 8 general election.

For her part, Daugherty said she plans to run in November.

Zetha Dougherty, chairman of the Gray County Democratic party, said she was unhappy with the choice of Morris as the tax assessor/collector, arguing that both Daugherty and the Democratic Party have "gotten the shaft."

She contends that in January Gray told office workers that Daugherty was her choice to run the office and that Daugherty has seniority in the office.

As for the letter, Dougherty said that meant nothing and that Gray hadn't gotten around to changing it.

Both Morris and Daugherty, however, said they expect no interruptions in the operation of the tax assessor/collector's office due to the appointment or the election.

At 7 p.m. on Thursday, the Gray County Republican Executive Committee will meet in the headquarters in the Hughes Building to select a candidate for the Republican nomination to the tax assessor/collector's office.

As for the Democrats, Dougherty said that it's her understanding that they are supporting Daugherty.

Anyone wishing to run as an independent candidate for the office has 30 days from April 21 in which to file.

New techniques allow peek into undersea salt formations

HOUSTON (AP) — New seismic techniques have enabled offshore oil drillers to peer for the first time beneath the Gulf of Mexico's numerous salt structures. And that's good news for the industry.

For years, the salt formations that cover as much as 60 percent of the Gulf floor made muck out of seismic data. But three-dimensional seismic equipment and supercomputers have made it possible to see through the distortions and evaluate the geological formations below.

With all the flurry over new finds beneath the salt, the Gulf of Mexico is expected to dominate the 26th annual Offshore Technology Conference, beginning today in Houston.

"The Gulf is the hottest offshore market in the world right now," said Gary Flaherty, Baker Hughes' manager of market research.

About 33,000 participants are expected at the Astorhall for the conference. More than 1,300 manufacturers and suppliers of offshore equipment and services are scheduled at the event.

Much of the excitement over the Gulf can be traced back to the Mahogany discovery, where Phillips Petroleum Co., together with Houston-based Anadarko Petroleum Corp. and Amoco Production Corp., found an estimated 100 million barrels of oil underneath a sheet of salt.

Anadarko and Phillips are already testing a second subsalt play called the Teak prospect, while Anadarko is working on a third, known as Mesquite. Anadarko was so confident about the subsalt potential of another block near Mahogany, it coughed up $40 million to lease the block.

Anadarko's willingness to spend cash to grab up potential subsalt plays helped enable the Minerals Management Service to enjoy its most successful lease sale in years.

"On the tip of everybody's tongue is the subsalt play," said Jeffrey Robertson, an analyst with Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Dallas. "That is probably the most intriguing exploration play going on, certainly in the U.S. and maybe anywhere."

Not everyone can afford to hunt for oil and gas below salt structures. Yet a number of independents are hungry for Gulf properties, thanks to the healthy natural gas prices that have continued relatively strong while oil prices foundered.

Fisher campaign wants to carry border momentum into general election plans

By JOSH LEMIEUX
 Associated Press Writer

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Richard Fisher, often speaking Spanish during campaign stops and on TV spots, has introduced himself successfully to border voters.

The Democratic nominee for U.S. Senate won 11 of the 15 border counties in the April 12 runoff against Jim Mattox, who had traditionally run strong among Hispanics, especially in South Texas.

Fisher, who gave a bilingual victory speech, is expected to continue sprinkling Spanish into his campaign in Hispanic-dominated areas during his bid to unseat Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison, who doesn't speak Spanish.

"I expect him to just lay a tent down here on the interstate and campaign in the Valley all the time," said Juan Hinojosa, chairman of political science at the University of Texas-Pan American in Edinburg.

Mattox won the four other border counties — Brewster, Culberson, Hudspeth and Maverick — by a total of only 337 votes. In contrast, Fisher overwhelmingly took the more populated counties containing El Paso, Laredo, McAllen and Brownsville.

"His money and his Spanish speaking made quite a dent," said Gary Mounce, another UT-Pan American political science professor who tracks Hispanic voting patterns. "I don't think it had anything to do with ideology because he was just as unknown to the Hispanic people as he was to everybody else. He has no track record."

Mounce said many Hispanic voters weren't aware that Fisher — a wealthy Dallas investor who spent part of his childhood in Mexico City — had joined the unsuccessful presidential campaign of Dallas billionaire Ross Perot.

Perot's strident opposition to the North American Free Trade Agreement alienated many Mexican-Americans.

Hinojosa said the well-financed Fisher campaign was able to win new South Texas voters — those less influenced by the old-style, boss-run political machines.

Also, traditional South Texas Democrats who supported Mattox have seen their power slowly erode in the past decade, he said.

Both Hinojosa and Mounce predicted that Fisher will carry the heavily Democratic Rio Grande Valley against Hutchison in the November general election.

"The only guess is the percentages and the turnout," Mounce said.

But Hinojosa and Mounce added that Mexican-American voters will not automatically favor a Hispanic or Spanish-speaking candidate. Mounce pointed out an old Mexican saying: "Never trust a gringo who speaks Spanish or a Mexican who smokes cigars."

For example, Hutchison became the first GOP statewide candidate to carry Hidalgo County in a 1993 special election against Democrat Bob Krueger, a Spanish-speaking former ambassador to Mexico.

Hidalgo County, encompassing McAllen and other fast-growing cities, is a key for any Democratic statewide campaign.

In the Fisher-Mattox runoff, Hidalgo County trailed only Dallas County and Harris County (which includes Houston) in total voter turnout. Twenty-one percent of the registered voters voted in the runoff here, compared with only about 8 percent statewide.

And Fisher trounced Mattox here, 61 percent to 39 percent.

"He relates to South Texas very well. He understands the culture," said Fisher supporter Joe La Mania Jr. of McAllen. "I just think he's got a tremendous potential."

But Hutchison consultant Karl Rove said he was unimpressed.

"While Fisher did beat Mattox, I suspect it was largely because he wasn't Mattox," Rove said. "He didn't develop a lot of enthusiasm."

Rove said Hutchison will not ignore South Texas.

"She'll be campaigning in the Valley," he said. "South Texas is going to be Hutchison country, as it was in 1993," he said.

Court nixes university's random drug testing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to let the University of Colorado resume requiring random drug tests for student athletes, trainers, managers and cheerleaders.

The justices, without comment, left intact a Colorado Supreme Court ruling that said such testing violates those students' right of privacy.

Today's action, although not a decision on the constitutionality of the university's invalidated drug-testing program, could hamper other state-run schools' efforts to keep their athletic programs drug-free.

The University of Colorado began a drug-testing program for student athletes in 1984. By 1986, the school's definition of student athlete had expanded to include student trainers, managers and cheerleaders. Students found to have used drugs were given a one-year suspension for a first offense and permanently suspended for a second.

It was in 1986 that David Dordeyn, a member of the Boulder school's cross-country running team, sued over the mandatory urinalysis.

A Colorado judge ruled that the random drug-testing policy was an "unreasonable search" under the Constitution's Fourth Amendment.

The amendment covers government searches only, and usually cannot be used to challenge drug testing by private schools or private employers.

That judge's decision invalidating the university's drug-testing policy was upheld by a state appeals court and by the Colorado Supreme Court.

In its ruling last November, the state Supreme Court rejected the school's argument that student athletes don't have the same expectations of privacy as other students.

"We have not been persuaded that CU's athletes have a greatly diminished expectation of privacy, nor are we persuaded that CU's program is not significantly intrusive," the state Supreme Court said.

In the appeal acted on today, university officials argued that such drug tests are necessary "to preserve the integrity and fairness of athletic competition and to protect the health and safety of its students."

Recounting the cocaine-related death of University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias, the appeal said drug testing "has become pervasive in professional and amateur athletics."

The appeal also contended that student athletes essentially waive their privacy rights when they consent to drug testing as a condition of participating in athletic programs.

The state Supreme Court ruled that students are coerced into signing such consent forms under the threat of losing athletic scholarships, making such consent invalid.

The nation's highest court previously has upheld mandatory random drug-testing of some public employees — railroad employees involved in rail accidents and of Customs Service agents who investigate drug smuggling, carry guns or have access to classified information.

Environmentalists protest Fort Worth's toxic waste program

FORT WORTH (AP) — City officials say their toxic waste collection program is legal and saves money.

However, environmentalists say that is not good enough.

As more than 1,100 people unloaded pesticides, old paint and car batteries at the city's collection effort in the Tandy Center parking lot, protesters complained that some of the materials will end up in the air after being burned at cement plants.

The protesters distributed leaflets urging arriving drivers to take their hazardous waste home and store it until they're offered a safe means of disposal.

The city has an agreement with Laidlaw Environmental Services, which sends some hazardous waste to cement kilns for use as fuel. Burning of hazardous waste at such kilns is not as strictly regulated as at commercial incinerators.

As much as 10 percent of solvents and other wastes collected will be blended into fuels for burning in cement kilns, said Brian Boerner, senior environmental quality specialist with the city's Department of Environmental Management.

"You can send it to an incinerator, or you can save hundreds of dollars and send the material to a cement plant," Boerner said.

The city's method also allows more material to be collected and probably makes little difference environmentally, he said.

"The emissions are probably not significantly different," Boerner said, though admitting he has no scientific proof of that.

Jim Schermeck was unmoved.

"You may think you're getting this stuff out of your household, but you may just be putting it into the air you breathe," said Schermeck, a longtime local environmental activist.

Construction spending up 0.8 percent in March

WASHINGTON (AP) — After declining during an unusually stormy winter, construction spending rose a modest 0.8 percent in March, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said residential, non-residential and government spending totaled $495.4 billion, up from $491.7 billion in February.

Spending had been down 1 percent in February and 2.3 percent in January after having increased for each of the previous eight months.

The recovery in March was less than most analysts expected and was held down by a drop in government spending, which slipped 2.7 percent to $126.9 billion. Government spending in February declined 0.3 percent.

The severe winter prevented builders from laying foundations, and raising roofs in many areas of the country. But analysts say there is still considerable momentum in the construction industry.

Spending on residential construction rose 1.5 percent in March to $234.4 billion, after increasing 0.3 percent in February and 0.4 percent in January. With revised figures for January — which previously had shown this category unchanged — residential construction now has risen 11 straight months.

Home buying has been advancing this year despite an increase in mortgage lending rates from the 25-year lows reached last October. Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 8.32 percent last week, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

Spending on apartment buildings was up 1.8 percent in March, the third straight increase.

No winner for Lotto; jackpot at $15 million

By The Associated Press

The jackpot for the midweek Lotto Texas is expected to reach $15 million, state lottery officials said.

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly game, officials said.

However, a prepared statement Sunday said 168 tickets matched five of the numbers to each win a $1,316 prize. Another 8,101 tickets matched four numbers to each win $98 prizes.

The weekend drawing included the numbers: 13, 22, 32, 37, 39 and 48.

Honesty not best policy for drug suspect

FORT WORTH (AP) — Honesty didn't do a whole lot of good for a driver anxious to convince officers that the silver objects on his car's back floorboard were not pipe bombs.

No sir, he said.

But, in an apparent attempt to ease the concerns of the officers who had backed away, the frazzled suspect reportedly blurted out, "Oh man, it's kilos, it's crack cocaine."

The motorist was asked to repeat his comment and, when he did, officers arrested him and read him his rights, said Sgt. Oscar Ramirez.

"That's when he got the idea that maybe he better shut up," Ramirez said Saturday.

According to police reports, the man was stopped Friday night in east Fort Worth by street gang officers who saw he was not wearing a seat belt, and that his car was missing its front license plate.

Officers spotted silver cylinders on the car's back floorboard, protruding from a beer carton, and thought the objects might be explosives, Ramirez said. The objects turned out to be three packages of cocaine, wrapped in duct tape, Ramirez said.

The suddenly quiet suspect was booked into the Tarrant County Jail on suspicion of possession of a controlled substance, with formal charges not yet filed.

ANC poised to declare victory, but vote count delays continue

By TINA SUSMAN
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The African National Congress expected to declare victory late today in the country's first all-race election, but new violence and frustration over slow vote-counting dampened celebrations.

By midday — six days after the election opened — only one-third of an estimated 22.7 million paper ballots had been counted. Nelson Mandela's planned appearance at an ANC victory party was in limbo for a second straight night while the black majority awaited the official end of white rule.

The ANC appeared certain to win a majority in the new 400-seat Parliament, but it was expected to fall short of a two-thirds majority that would allow it to write a permanent, post-apartheid constitution single-handedly.

In a bid for national reconciliation, the ANC suggested Sunday night that white conservatives and Zulu nationalists could join in the new government.

Police reported a resurgence of political violence, saying at least 23 people had been slain since Friday in the eastern province of KwaZulu-Natal. The region has long been the center of fighting between supporters of the ANC and the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party, but violence had unexpectedly dropped off during the voting last week.

"People have been preoccupied with the election. With hopelessness and joblessness, violence is something to do," said Inkatha's campaign manager, Arthur Konigkramer.

With 36 percent of the ballots counted, the ANC had 59 percent of the vote, followed by President F.W. de Klerk's National Party at 26.2 percent. Mangosuthu Buthelezi's Inkatha was a distant third at 6.6 percent, followed by the pro-apartheid white Freedom Front at 3.2 percent.

The Independent Electoral Commission, which organized the vote and counting, said final results might not be available until Tuesday.

But in some places, counting that was supposed to have started at 6 a.m. Saturday still had not begun. And many of the teachers and bank tellers hired to hand-count ballots had to return to work today, leaving counting posts unstaffed. At other stations, disputes arose over the use of party supporters to count ballots.

In another example of the disarray, the commission had to drastically scale back the results of the white, liberal Democratic Party after a computing error sent the group surging to fourth place. After the correction was made today, the party sank back to also-ran status.

The slow-moving process raised allegations of irregularities from many political leaders. An election commission spokesman, Humphrey Khoza, said 500 complaints had been lodged.

"There have been irregularities, there's no question about that. It is a matter of grave concern," de Klerk said Sunday night.

Konigkramer said Inkatha submitted a 40-page report today alleging serious breaches of electoral and counting procedures.

However, there were no indications any party would reject the results, which were about what polls had predicted.

According to a formula aimed at creating a broad-based government, any party receiving at least 5 percent of the vote gets a Cabinet seat in the new government. But with the Freedom Front, Inkatha and other parties faring so poorly, ANC officials hinted at relaxing that rule to ensure wider participation by opposition parties.

ANC spokesman Pallo Jo. dan said the group wanted "to make government as inclusive as possible."

"We would not exclude the idea of the IFP being part of a government of national unity" even if it finished with less than 5 percent of the vote, Jordan said Sunday night.

The same could apply to the Freedom Front and smaller parties such as the Democratic Party and the black militant Pan Africanist Congress.

Provincial results clearly illustrated the country's ethnic divisions.

In the Western Cape region, which has large mixed-race communities, the National Party led after a campaign that played on mixed-race fears of life under black domination. But in the other predominantly mixed-race province, the Northern Cape, the ANC moved ahead today.

Chasing city water flow? Follow caffeine trail from tea and coffee

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists studying the flow of domestic wastewater down rivers are learning to follow the coffee, tea and cola.

Caffeine — present in all three popular drinks — turns out to be an excellent tracer for the movement of domestic waste, according to researchers from the U.S. Geological Survey.

And while the scientists were discovering a new research tool, their pollution study led to, both good news and a surprise, said Larry B. Barber II, a USGS researcher.

The good news: Water quality in the Mississippi River is getting better.

The surprise: Pollution is more concentrated in the upper part of the river than the lower reaches.

Barber and a team of scientists were trying to track the movement of chemicals along the river and needed a way to sort the domestic waste from industrial, farm and other chemicals.

When they tested water near cities, caffeine kept turning up, and "that turned the lightbulb on that here is an important chemical," Barber explained.

Since caffeine from coffee, tea and cola moves through people and water treatment systems relatively unchanged, the chemical compound became their tracer for urban waste.

By comparing how much caffeine is present to the amounts of particular chemicals that occur both in domestic and industrial waste, they were able to calculate what share of the pollution in an area came from domestic sources and what share was industrial or farm-related.

Knowing that will allow researchers to determine changes in these ratios in future years, to see if various anti-pollution projects are working.

Caffeine showed up in high concentrations near the Twin Cities in Minnesota, around the confluence of the Illinois River carrying the flow from Chicago, and near cities such as St. Louis.

The team of water experts analyzed 450 samples of Mississippi River water collected in 1991 and 1992, seeking to measure the amounts of pollution in the river and its patterns of change over the seasons.

Barber said the team is going back this summer to take samples of river bed sediments. They want to compare the chemicals in the sediments now with those they found in 1992, to see what effect last summer's floods had.

In the earlier river water studies, they found 32 different organic compounds in the river, with at least some of the pollutants turning up in about one-quarter of the water samples.

However, significant concentrations were found in only three areas: below the Twin Cities in Minnesota, below the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi at Cairo, Ill., and between New Orleans and Baton Rouge, La.

Barber said none of the chemicals detected was concentrated enough to be hazardous.

Most of the chemicals found in the river are byproducts of wastewater discharge by cities, urban runoff, power plant cooling water discharge, pulp mill waste, feed lot runoff, river traffic, refueling spills and industrial discharge.

Concentrations were highest during low water periods and least during spring flooding, a simple result of dilution.

"Frequently, it's thought that water quality decreases as you move down river, and there is some truth to that, but there is so much more water that chemical concentrations are very low," Barber said.

"People think New Orleans' water quality is low because of all the waste from up above, but the most susceptible part of river seemed to be above St. Louis, where it's a relatively small river," Barber said. "It's no cliché that dilution is the solution."

In addition to natural processes, improved wastewater treatment and reductions in discharges into the river are helping improve water quality.

"If we look back to records of the 1800s and even 1920s and 1950s, our general conclusion is that the water quality of the Mississippi is much better today than it was 20 or 50 years ago," Barber said.

"It's pretty good news to us."

Barge runs aground in Texas channel

PORT MANSFIELD (AP) — A barge hit bottom and one of its tug boats sank in Laguna Madre north of the Mansfield Cut, the U.S. Coast Guard says.

"There were no injuries, fatalities or pollution reported," said Gregory Sealy of the Coast Guard's Marine Safety Office in Corpus Christi.

The Coast Guard received word of the sunken vessel at 5 a.m. Monday, Sealy said.

Salvage crews were on their way to the accident.

Sealy said there were no reports of leakage from the double-hulled barge, which was hauling sodium hydroxide — a white brittle solid with corrosive base. Called caustic soda, it is used in especially in making soap, rayon, paper and in bleaching.

Authorities at the Port Mansfield Navigation District said there were reports that the sunken tug boat was leaking diesel fuel.

Sealy said the barge had run into the bay bottom outside the Gulf Inter-coastal Waterway — a dredged barge channel in the shallow lagoon along the South Texas Coast.

Clinton picks up pitch for assault weapons ban

By RON FOURNIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Playing to a crime-weary public, the Clinton administration is stepping up pressure on Congress to ban assault weapons. "It's an uphill fight," the White House said today.

President Clinton has promoted the ban for weeks, but the campaign shifted into high gear in recent days. The latest effort was coming today at another White House event featuring menacing-looking guns, tough-looking cops and testimonials about the evils of assault weapons.

The House votes this week on legislation to stop production and sale of 19 specific assault guns and copycat models and limit detachable magazines to 10 rounds. The bill exempts 650 named rifles and shotguns.

Similar provisions were incorporated in the Senate version of the crime bill still being reconciled between the two houses.

Administration officials say they are still at least 15 votes shy in the House. "It's going to be difficult to get ... but we're working hard at it," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers told reporters today. "It's tough. It's an uphill fight."

Clinton's political advisers are telling him the public is anxious for any crime-fighting legislation and would support an assault weapons ban.

He wrote an open letter to hunters on Saturday, urging them to help outlaw firearms "designed for the battlefield."

President Bill Clinton

He wrote newspaper editors, labeling the guns as weapons of "mass destruction" and provided "profiles" of the targeted guns designed to show their harmful capabilities.

And he sent Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen to NBC's Meet the Press on Sunday armed with the latest ammunition from the White House's public relations staff.

Noting ammunition restrictions placed on hunters, Bentsen asked, "Why should we have laws that protect ducks more than human beings?"

Clinton, who has personally lobbied some lawmakers, was appearing today with Police Chief David Steingraber of Menomonee Falls, Wis., before an audience of police officers. They will talk about a Wisconsin police captain who was killed last week by an assault weapon.

The White House hopes the event will put some heat on Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner, a Menomonee Falls resident who opposes the ban on assault weapons. The bank robbery that preceded the shooting occurred in Sensenbrenner's district; the shooting itself occurred in the adjacent district of Rep. Gerald Kleczka, D-Wis., who supports the ban.

The NRA's Wayne LaPierre took issue with Clinton's distinction between hunting rifles and assault weapons that Clinton says are designed for the battlefield and should be outlawed.

"The good guns they don't want to ban and the guns they want to ban all fire the same — none fires any faster, none makes any bigger holes, none shoot any harder, none make any bigger noise," LaPierre told NBC. He insisted that "there is simply no distinction at all."

Bentsen and California Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein, a leading supporter of the ban, said the fight in Congress is still uphill. But Bentsen, a former senator from Texas, contended Congress should know that the sizeable volume of mail they get opposed to gun control is in fact generated by the NRA.

The NRA accuses gun-control proponents of using the measure as another toothed in an overall scheme to ban all guns.

Bentsen said that is not his goal and that he believes in gun possession for the protection of homes.

Asked if the administration would seek more gun-control legislation if it succeeds with the assault gun ban, he said, "I would not."

Diet stimulant investigated in death of Austin woman

AUSTIN (AP) — State health officials warned dieters with health problems to consult a physician before using an over-the-counter stimulant as a diet aid.

The stimulant ephedrine recently sent 10 Texas teenagers to emergency rooms, and officials say it may have contributed to the death of a 43-year-old Austin woman.

Some diet pills sold in health food stores or by independent distributors contain the stimulant, which is legal but chemically similar to speed, said Dennis Baker, consumer affairs chief at the Texas Department of Health.

"We would recommend that a person with health problems consult their physician prior to using anything for dietary purposes," Baker said.

An emergency room physician at Brackenridge Hospital, who helped treat six Austin students in March, said the pills they took contained ephedrine. Taken in sufficient quantities, ephedrine could cause a heart attack, stroke or seizure, said Dr. Brian Dillon.

One day before the incident with the Austin teens, four Amarillo high school students were treated for overdosing on over-the-counter pills containing ephedrine.

Friends of the Austin woman, whose doctor and family asked that she not be identified, told the Austin American-Statesman in Sunday editions that her use of an over-the-counter diet pill might have aggravated an existing health problem.

The woman suffered a heart attack April 14 on the tennis courts at the Austin Country Club, said Sally Muir, a spokeswoman for Austin Emergency Medical Services.

It could not be determined what brand of pill the woman took. But neighbor Judy Byrnes said many Austin women are taking a diet pill called Formula One.

"Out of a table of six at lunch the other day, four said they had taken it at one time or another," she said.

"They said it made them feel peppy. They either hated the rush or they liked it. Most I knew were taking it because they wanted to lose weight."

Larry Cantrell, vice president for marketing for Formula One distributor Alliance USA, said the pill is marketed as a nutritional supplement, not a weight-loss product.

Cantrell said the drug's manufacturing process removed the negative effects of ephedrine.

The state Health Department has been concerned for some time about health problems being aggravated by ephedrine-based diet or pep pills and is investigating possible fraudulent labeling of some of them, Baker said.

He declined to specify which ones.

The six Austin students at Burnet Middle School, all female, consumed excessive doses of Mini-Thin's, nonprescription pills described on the label as a treatment for asthma. The Amarillo students took Go Power, officials said.

Teleconference to discuss multiple sclerosis treatments

A nationwide video-teleconference on multiple sclerosis (MS) will be presented this Saturday, May 7, from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. for people who have MS, their families and care-givers.

The program, titled "Taking Control: Options to Maximize Your Health," is a live discussion with Dr. George Kraft, M.D., a specialist in rehabilitative medicine, and Dr. Marci Catanzaro, PhD and RN, and a specialist in the management of MS symptoms.

They will take questions from audiences located in different cities across the country.

The Pampa Shepard's Crook

Nursing Agency is scheduled to carry this live teleconference. Other places in the area that will also hold the teleconference are the High Plains Baptist Hospital in Amarillo; Plains Memorial Hospital in Dimmitt; and the Oklahoma Highway Patrol in Guymon, Okla.

For those looking to interview or attend the teleconference at any of the four sites, contact Anna Lee at 665-2210, Pampa; Fredricka Gens at (806) 372-4429, Amarillo; Fred Bolton, 647-3730; or Yvonne Ralstin, (405) 338-2215.

MS is an unpredictable disease which can strike at anytime, affecting people in various ways, and leaving them feeling helpless, health officials say.

The people in the video teleconference will show how exercise, Tai Chi, nutrition and physical therapy are used to help manage disease symptoms.

The Panhandle Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society offers this service to help others maximize their health while living with this unpredictable disease.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Mandatory service gives bad message

Late last month, students and parents from around the country rallied at the nation's capital to demonstrate opposition to enforced community service as a mandatory part of the curriculum at high schools.

Billed as National Youth Service Day, the event publicized two lawsuits by the Washington, D.C.-based Institute for Justice against public school districts in North Carolina and New York that are requiring specified "community service" before students can graduate. Students are being compelled to perform these good deeds as anointed by their public school systems, — even while being denied credit for some laudable endeavors of their own choosing.

The institute cites a 1994 Educational Research Service survey that found more than 25 percent of schools nationwide have begun implementing such community-service requirements for graduation even though, the institute maintains, six out of 10 teenagers nationally already volunteers their time.

And some of the activities the public schools cast aside as unacceptable in fulfilling the service requirements defy explanation, like the extension volunteer work that one of the suit's plaintiffs, Chapel Hill, N.C.'s, Aric Hemdon, performs as an Eagle Scout. Plaintiff Daniel Immediato of Mamaroneck, N.Y., meanwhile, supplements his family's income by working as a lifeguard in the evenings after school. That's a community service, to be sure, but his school district says it doesn't count because he gets paid a nominal wage.

Fundamentally, this new approach pre-empts the very essence of charity by making it mandatory. That flies in the face of the freedom of the individual in society to help fellow human beings as a matter of principle and not law.

Mandatory voluntarism is of course an oxymoron, kind of like the old Army joke about the drill sergeant who picks his "volunteers." But assorted public school systems in the country don't seem to grasp that. To be sure, some of their enforced programs may well be praiseworthy. But by depriving these young people of their freedom to choose, the schools are robbing any good deeds of their meaning. These kids' only lesson will be that community service is drudgery — another empty exercise to perform for the powers that be.

"The usual."

To Richard Nixon: R.I.P.

Clare Boothe Luce once remarked that all public figures will be associated with a single achievement, never mind how complex their career. And, true, we can say about Abraham Lincoln that he won the Civil War, about Thomas Edison that he discovered electricity, about Francisco Franco that he rescued Spain.

But with what achievement will Richard Nixon be associated, a generation from now? Only a negative achievement: He is the only American president in history to be kicked out of office.

Even so, in America and in much of the world, he has been the dominant political figure. It can be said only of men who take very large strides in history that in one year he could win re-election with a runaway majority and in less than two years leave the white House in greater ignominy than was ever before suffered by a departing American president.

His excommunication from public life was so decisive, his subsequent return has to be interpreted as a personal victory, the most spectacular reopening in contemporary political history. Remarkable not only because he came back, so to speak, into power, but that he did so notwithstanding the implacability of those hostile to him.

In the darkest days of August 1974, it would have seemed unlikely that a single member of the Washington press corps could be persuaded to be civil to Richard Nixon. Ten years later, addressing the Washington Press Club, he was given a standing ovation.

It is an important part of his singular story to remind oneself that he had, really, no spectacular personal talent. He was not a great orator, nor a great writer. The one professional skill he had, he was formally disbarred from using. He had only the force of his peculiar personality and his mastery of the political craft. He competed during his career in 40 state political primaries. He lost one.

Donald Rumsfeld was his chief of staff when Nixon left the White House. "As you'd have guessed," he reminisced a few years ago in conversation, "when Nixon got to Casa Pacifica in California late that afternoon in August, the White House line was still connected. He was in a daze: President of the United States until noon, one minute later — nothing. He was master of a villa which, without a president to preside over it, was simply a big house on the Pacific Ocean.

"But when Nixon got there, he used the telephone to the White House exactly as he'd been doing for six years. He must have called 10, 15 times a day, and of course the White House operators didn't want to be responsible for breaking the trance, so they'd put him straight through to me, as though I were still his chief of staff."

How did he get the message that it was all over? I asked.

"On the fifth day I recognized that reality had to get to him. So when he called the next morning, I told the operator to put him on hold. ... It had the magical effect. Suddenly he realized he wasn't president, and that he would henceforth be treated, in calls through the White House, as anyone else might be."

But Nixon didn't abandon his sense of priorities. A day or so later he reached, in Geneva, the late Irving Lazar. The exchange was given to me as follows:

"Mr. Lazar, you are known as the No. 1 agent in America."

"Well, thank you very much, Mr. President. Yes, I suppose I'd have to own up to that reputation."

"Well, I'd like to see you tomorrow morning here in California."

"Mr. President! I have five days' appointments backed up here in Europe, appointments made weeks and months ago!"

"I take it you do not want to handle my memoirs? I have been told by someone who knows his way about in the publishing word that my memoirs may be worth as much as a million dollars. ..."

"Of course I'd be glad to handle your memoirs, but there simply is no way I can get to you by tomorrow."

"Well then, make it the day after tomorrow."

Irving Lazar finally succeeded, so to speak, in putting President Nixon on hold, but by the time he got to Casa Pacifica a week later, he brought Richard Nixon contracts for his memoirs worth $2.5 million.

He had begun the return journey. Retirement suited Nixon singularly well. Henry Kissinger, in his own memoirs, had remarked on how little Nixon actually enjoyed the life he had struggled so hard to achieve in the White House. He hated meeting with the press and state functions, and engaged in much that chiefs of state engage in with a visible detestation of ceremony and light talk.

That now was all gone, and he had only his tiny staff, his yellow pads, and the publishers waiting for book after book. He resumed those travels he did enjoy — briefing foreigners, being briefed by them; renewing the company of men and women he had met when he was sun-king.

Gradually the agents of power everywhere in the world acknowledged that Richard Nixon's prestige didn't derive exclusively from the office of president. He had a sense for the feeling of the American political scene invaluable to those who needed to feel that they had a confident grasp of it. And although it was never quite like going down to the club and having a drink with old Tricky Dick, meetings with him were thought rewarding by the men and women who ran the affairs of Europe, the Soviet Union and Asia.

He did not deceive them about what to expect from America, or by America. When most recently he visited Moscow and Boris Yeltsin canceled an appointment because Nixon had given interviews to Russian rivals, the sympathy was immediately with Nixon, rather than with his host: Nixon was being Nixon, and that, after all, was why he continued to be so eminent a figure.

It did not surprise the diplomatic community that Yeltsin backed down, and that one of the earliest tributes logged by the hospital in New York wishing Nixon adieu was from Boris Yeltsin.

In America, Nixon was always thought of as a towering figure of the conservative camp, yet this was so only when the perspectives were narrowly confined. As the candidate who ran against John F. Kennedy, Nixon was the incarnation of American presumption. And, at the earliest conspicuous moment in his career, he was seen as the man who believed Whittaker Chambers, and accused Alger Hiss.

During the 1950s, anti-communists were heavily mobilized against the anti-anti-communists, and when Dwight Eisenhower permitted himself to reveal that he had not yet decided whether to put Nixon back on the re-election ticket in 1956, the American right spoke threateningly to Eisenhower, and Nixon stayed on.

During the Goldwater upheaval, Nixon was the loyalist, but he had learned in 1962, in California, the lesson he never forgot. We were driving through Central Park in 1967 after a television program. "I learned in 1962," he told me, "that you can't do without the support of conservatives. But I learned also that you can't win with just the conservatives."

A year later he won the presidency. During those ill-fated years he lost the Vietnam War, pulled out of the Bretton Woods alliance, declared wage and price controls, and traveled to China. Not exactly a majestic roll for a right-wing American president.

For all the talk about the triumphant resumption of diplomatic relations with China, it has never been clear just what was achieved by going to Beijing in 1972, instead of waiting another few years until Mao and the Cultural Revolution had run their course. Indeed, one more remarkable achievement of Richard Nixon is how he earned the special affection and admiration of U.S. conservatives without ever significantly advancing their cause.

In the final analysis, he was a heroic personal figure, whose life was lived on the public stage. He was at once the weakest of men and the strongest; a master of self-abuse and of self-recovery. He was stained by worldliness and was driven by the hunger to serve.

For Americans under 70, there never was a world without Richard Nixon. Not many people can pitch whole generations into loneliness, as he has done. R.I.P.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Monday, May 2, the 122nd day of 1994. There are 243 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On May 2, 1863, Confederate General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson was accidentally wounded by his own men during the battle of Chancellorsville, Va.; he died eight days later.

On this date:
In 1519, artist Leonardo da Vinci died at Cloux, France.

In 1670, the Hudson Bay Company was chartered by England's King Charles II.

In 1885, Good Housekeeping magazine was first published by Clark W. Bryan in Holyoke, Mass.

In 1890, the Oklahoma Territory was organized.

In 1932, Jack Benny's first radio show made its debut on the NBC Blue Network.

In 1936, Peter and the Wolf, a symphonic tale for children by Sergei Prokofiev, had its world premiere in Moscow.

In 1945, the Soviet Union announced the fall of Berlin, and the Allies announced the surrender of Nazi troops in Italy and parts of Austria.

Science taps into power of prayer

Science, at long last, is tapping into the power of prayer.

Baylor Bill Moyers, intrigued by increasing evidence of mind/body medicine, undertook for PBS a series of interviews with physicians, scientists, therapists and patients in small private clinics and large public hospitals at home and abroad.

So similar were their conclusions that they have been published in a book called Healing and the Mind.

It was a shotgun wedding between medicine and meditation, between physiology and philosophy, between drugs and vitamins, and between acupuncture, herbal portions, massage — and prayer.

But it is proving to be a compatible marriage. Moyers emerged from this project satisfied that "healing can occur even when a cure is impossible."

Gurney Williams in Longevity magazine notes that most of us pray when we are frightened.

Any threat to our health gets us on our knees. But scientists now concede that prayer can help the healing process.

A University of Akron sociology professor says, "Most people are not good cosmic listeners.

Prayer, which should be a dialogue with God, becomes a monologue — a recitation of a wish list."

He says it is only in meditative prayer that one finds serenity and healing.

"Be still and know that I am God."

That phrase, for proper interpretation, perhaps should be written with five words in bold type: "BE STILL — and know that I AM GOD."

A study of cardiac patients at San Francisco General Hospital demonstrated that asking God for help does get results and that PRAYED FOR patients got better EVEN WHEN THEY DID NOT KNOW THEY WERE BEING PRAYED FOR.

The late Norman Cousins wrote excellent books, including The Healing Heart, which contributed much to an improved understanding of the relationship of our emotions to our health.

He demonstrated the biblical principle that laughter is good medicine and that mind/body interactions work miracles.

Much of what government proposes as "health care" is really "disease care." It will be infinitely less costly to the personal budget and the public purse when we involve the patient in mind/body disease prevention.

Some scientists are understandably uncomfortable in dealing with the power of prayer, but they are beginning to do so anyway.

Dean Ornish, Preventive Medicine Research, University of California at San Francisco, writes, "I am coming to believe that anything that promotes a sense of intimacy, a sense of community and connection can be healing. In a way, mind/body healing goes beyond mind and body onto a spiritual dimension."

He says, "Most of us have had moments when we felt as though we were part of something larger than ourselves. Some call it God."

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from Roger Gilman about airport announcements that come booming over a loudspeaker, which nobody can understand. Mr. Gilman touched only the tip of the iceberg.

Everyone including waiters, waitresses, doctors, lawyers, appointment secretaries, clergy — anyone who has occasion to communicate with older people — should assume that we do not hear as well as we used to.

So in order to compensate for our hearing deficiency, we read lips — or try to. Obviously, while listening on the telephone, we cannot read lips, eyes or faces. Almost every time a strange voice calls, I must ask him or her to slow down and repeat the message two or three times.

Those new telephone answering devices used by large companies are especially bothersome: "If you want 'A,' press 1; if you want 'B,' press 2," and so on. I sometimes have to dial the same number two or three times before I can decipher the instructions.

My suggestion: If you are in the company of older people, speak slowly and clearly, and do not hide your mouth behind your hand. We try to read lips.

Thank you, Abby, for bringing this to the attention of your many readers. I hope it helps.

RICHARD ZYLMAN IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR MR. ZYLMAN: So do I, and thank you for a very important letter. My older readers — and many younger ones with a hearing problem — will bless you.

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you, but after reading the letter in your column stressing the importance of life jackets, I had to write.

In August 1990, I lost a wonderful brother. His name was Tobin McAuley. He, his buddy and two girls went sailing off the coast of Mexico. There were no life jackets on the boat.

About a mile and a half from shore, Tobin's buddy and the girls jumped into the ocean to swim, and his buddy got leg cramps and called for help. Tobin maneuvered the catamaran as close as he could to his friends. Then the girls swam for the boat, leaving his buddy, so he dove in to try to rescue his friend.

The girls didn't know how to sail, and the boat drifted off. There was no way my brother could swim such a long distance back to shore.

They eventually managed to get the boat to shore, but not in time to save Tobin and his friend — they both drowned. They were 29 and 30 years old.

I'm sure when they left the dock it never crossed their minds that they were in any danger.

Abby, some people don't like to wear life jackets — they think they are a bother and are only for sissies. Now my children will miss having known a loving uncle — and all because of a tragic accident that could have been avoided. You may use my name.

ANDRYA HALVERSON, DALLAS

DEAR ANDRYA: Thank you for writing and also for giving me permission to use your name. Too bad we will never know how many readers who never wanted to bother with life jackets will change their minds as a result of your letter.

Pampa Art Club to hold 46th annual show

The Pampa Art Club will be presenting their annual showing Tuesday and Wednesday at the Lovett Memorial Library.

The show will feature works created by the club's members during the past year, said Betty Fletcher, publicity chair. The various art on display will be mediums such as oil painting, watercolor, and decorative painting.

"We have some wood carving, toile painting, (painting on wood), and basket weaving," said Fletcher. China painting, which is painting on pieces of porcelain or earthenware, and copper enamel, which is paint enameled on copper, will also be featured.

The Guest Day Tea will be held Tuesday. This event is by invitation only and will be from 2 p. m. to 6 p. m.

The show on Wednesday is from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. and is open to the public.

The 46-year-old club, founded in June of 1948, focuses on doing projects throughout the year, enjoying field trips, and studying new art and craft methods.

Spring suits soften up, lighten up for career women

By FRANCINE PARNES For AP Special Features

Spring suits are popping up all over, and they're as refreshing for today's career woman as a gentle breeze.

Taking a gentler approach to the work week, suits have relaxed silhouettes such as cardigan jackets, easy wrap skirts and loose pants with drawstring waists. And colors from pale to bright suggest that women don't have to forsake their femininity to prove their merit.

There is little construction, and shoulder padding is light to none. Fabrics are featherweight, such as washed silk, limp linen and soft cotton gabardine.

"A suit is always going to have two sleeves, a couple of buttons and a skirt or pants," says Kevin McLoughlin, president of J.G. Hook suits in New York. "So the way to make it different is by softening up."

Part of the new silhouette, he says, is the result of tight money.

"The career customer is buying less," McLoughlin says. "If she's going to buy two suits, she has to know they will carry her through more than they did before — to work and to dinner and the theater afterwards."

The season's jackets are as soft as a shirt, and some can even take its place. One from J.G. Hook is a rayon viscose jacket with jewel neckline and fabric buttons. The suit, with slim skirt, is about $200 in red, coral, fuchsia or jade.

New York designer Jennifer George believes that less is more.

"My suit is unlined, it has no shoulder pads, it has no buttons, no buttonholes, it's not typical," she says. "Even my blazer has loosened up tremendously. It's not as fitted, it doesn't have as many darts, it's just easier."

Your suit can be a matte jersey cardigan with bias side panels, a simple matte jersey skirt and little T-shirt, all monochromatic," she says.

Jennifer George has produced about two dozen styles in matte jersey, cotton gabardine, silk and viscose blends and silk and wool faille.

about $600 to $900, they come in a myriad of colors with short wrap- and button-front skirts.

As for hems, skirts are up, jackets are down.

"An extended, mid-thigh jacket that almost touches the hem of the skirt is important fashion news," says Lavelle Olexa, fashion director for Lord & Taylor in New York. "The hem of the skirt could be an inch below the jacket, but sometimes the jacket is even longer than the skirt."

Lord & Taylor pays tribute to the new proportions with a long Mandarin-collar jacket and short contoured skirt. By Patrick, the pale celadon silk suit is about $220.

Liz Claiborne is likewise long on jackets.

"We have several fit-and-flare redingote jackets that hit past the hip," says spokesman Corbin Womlesley in New York.

In single-breasted or double-breasted polyester crepe, they come in black; brights such as red, royal, wine, amethyst and jade, and pastels including lilac, sage and ivory. Suggested retail is about $200 to $250 for skirt and jacket.

At Dana Buchman, a subsidiary of Liz Claiborne, president Gail Cook says "The newest suit look is a long silk tunic with a skirt ... The only thing that really differentiates it from a jacket is that there's much less construction in the shoulder area, which gives it a more relaxed look."

Dana Buchman's banded-collar tunic with French knot buttons comes in dusty rose, petal pink, straw and chocolate, about $198 in heavy silk crepe. The matching skirt is $142 suggested retail.

"It's very finished-looking, you button up, add a skirt and you look very dressed," Cook says. "You're done in two pieces, for which there seems to be quite a bit of appeal."

But don't forget the ease of pants.

"They're extremely important," Olexa says. "A lot of women are wearing pantsuits and becoming accustomed to that look. As a suited look it's an appropriate way to dress for biz situations. So going forward, women will have the option of pants as well as a skirt."

Monochromatic pantsuits look most professional. Vests add credibility.

"You don't want pajama pants, which are extremely wide and, I personally feel, should be reserved for casual occasions or evenings," Olexa says. "But at same time the pants should have some softness and perhaps a drawstring waist."

It's hard to believe he's turning 13!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Success is indicated today if you are truly self-reliant. If you aren't, persons upon whom you are depending for assistance may not be available and you won't get done that which you desired. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Instead of doing what is expected of you today, there's a possibility you might concoct remarkable excuses as to why you shouldn't.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Occasionally you have been rather fortunate in taking calculated risks, but today this or other types of gambles could backfire. It may not be your day for getting something for nothing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Persons with whom you're involved today might be as adamant as you are about having their own way. Ties could produce a bad experience.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Problems could result today if you try to exceed your limitations and capabilities. You're well aware of your boundaries, so don't take on things you may not be able to manage.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Usually you have a pretty accurate assessment regarding the values and worth of things, but today could be an exception, so be careful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're a pretty good starter today, but there are indications you might run out of steam in the home stretch and leave unfinished that which you began.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Instead of doing that which you know is best for you today, you might unduly concern yourself with the opinions of others and do what you think will please them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An acquaintance who understands your generous nature to a "T" and who has taken advantage of you previously may have you in his/her sights again today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There is a possibility you might take competitive situations too seriously today and end up tripping over your own feet. Enjoy challenges for challenge sake and not as a matter of life or death.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today you might find yourself in a development similar to one you didn't handle too well recently. Profit from past mistakes. Do not repeat them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Someone who considers you a close friend has a secret he/she doesn't want you to know. If you get too nosy, it could cause this person to withdraw from you.

PAMPA — The Pampa Harvesters host Amarillo Caprock at 5:30 p.m. today in District 1-4A action. Pampa is 1-7 in district play and 12-10 overall. Caprock is 2-6 and 8-14. The Harvesters close out the season Tuesday at home against Dumas. An earlier schedule had the game being played at Dumas, but the site was switched due to a track meet conflict.

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas wide receiver Mike Adams needed 50 stitches to close a wound in the palm of his left hand caused by a knife fight with former Longhorn basketball player Al Segova, according to authorities.

Adams, who gained 1,854 all-purpose yards last season as a receiver and kick returner, says he suffered some nerve damage and loss of feeling in his ring finger. But he said doctors have told him the feeling should come back and that his football future shouldn't be affected.

According to a University of Texas police report, Segova stabbed Adams with a wood-handled knife with about a 4-inch blade after an argument. The incident occurred at the Jester Dormitory at about 4 a.m. Saturday, the report said.

Adams told the Austin American-Statesman he hasn't yet decided whether to file charges against Segova, a junior whose basketball career at Texas ended last season after a knee injury.

Segova, who received a medical exemption after the injury which allows him to complete his education on scholarship at Texas, did not return messages left by The Associated Press at his dormitory room Monday morning.

"As of right now, there haven't been any charges filed," said Capt. Rollin Donaldson of the University of Texas Police Department.

"Until the investigation moves along a little further, we wouldn't like to comment."

Texas football coach John Mackovic visited with Adams at Brackenridge Hospital on Saturday before leaving town on vacation to the Cayman Islands. Mackovic said he would await more information before taking action, if any.

Texas basketball coach Tom Penders also is on vacation and couldn't be reached for comment, according to Texas assistant sports information director Dave Saba.

Adams said the fight broke out after he and Segova had argued about whether to continue socializing out on the town early Saturday morning. Adams, who is 20, told the American-Statesman he and Segova had been drinking before the fight.

"He got mad and started calling me names," Adams said. "He said, 'I've been wanting to take you for a long time.' We went up in the dorm. He came out of his room, and we started fighting again. We started swinging, and he grabbed me, and my hand was cut wide open."

Adams is sitting out the spring semester to work. He is expected to re-enroll this fall, when he will be a junior.

COLLEGE BASEBALL

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Tech's Robin Harriss had two hits and two RBIs, and Eric Newman hurled a four-hit, complete game Sunday as the No. 26 Red Raiders beat No. 24 Texas, 4-2, in the final game of the Southwest Conference regular season.

Harriss had six hits and six RBIs in the three-game series to help Texas Tech (38-15, 12-6 SWC) secure third place in the SWC and the third seed in the postseason tournament. The Red Raiders face second-seeded Rice May 12 in the tournament opener.

Texas (37-19, 9-9) finished the regular season in fourth place and meets top-seeded Texas Christian in the late game May 12.

The Longhorns' 19 losses were the most under coach Cliff Gustafson in his 27 years at Texas.

Newman (5-3) did not allow a hit after the sixth inning and survived nine walks to earn the victory and his third complete game of the season.

J.D. Smart (10-3) took the loss for the Longhorns after surrendering four runs and nine hits in nine innings of work.

With the score tied at 2-2 in the seventh, Clint Bryant singled and moved to third on another single by Matt Debuc. Bryant raced home with the deciding run on a groundout by Harriss, and Debuc scored an insurance run one out later on a single by Mitch King.

Knicks' Oakley cuts down Nets

By The Associated Press

With Patrick Ewing unexpectedly missing, Charles Oakley gave the Knicks the boost they needed to take a 2-0 lead in their best-of-5 series with the New Jersey Nets.

Oakley grabbed 24 rebounds and scored 14 of his 25 points in the final six minutes of the second quarter Sunday after Ewing was ejected with his second technical foul. The burst gave the Knicks a 55-33 halftime lead, and they went on to a 90-81 victory.

"I usually just try to get rebounds and let other guys get the points," said Oakley, who had season highs in points and rebounds. "Scoring is just a bonus for me. I don't get any plays called for me."

The Nets made a game of it in the third quarter, starting with a 21-4 spurt in the first 5:10 to pull to a 59-54 deficit. It was 70-64 after three quarters, but the closest the Nets got in the fourth quarter was 70-66.

Ewing was ejected with 5:21 left in the second period when he and Derrick Coleman exchanged bumps. Both were called for technical fouls, but because Ewing also was part of a double technical with Benoit Benjamin in the first quarter, he was tossed.

"I don't think I did anything that warranted the second technical or the first," Ewing said.

New Jersey shot just 21-for-72 (29 percent) from the field, breaking the NBA playoff record-low of 22 field goals by St. Louis at Minneapolis in 1956.

In other games, Chicago beat Cleveland 105-96, Phoenix downed Golden State 117-111 and Houston beat Portland 115-104.

On Saturday, Atlanta beat Miami 104-86, Utah defeated San Antonio 96-84, Seattle stopped Denver 97-87 and Indiana took Orlando 103-101.

Bulls 105, Cavaliers 96
At Chicago, Scottie Pippen scored 22 points and the Bulls wore Cleveland down with their size and bench strength to take a 2-0 lead in the series.

Horace Grant had 18 points and 12 rebounds, B.J. Armstrong had 16 points and Tom Kukoc a career-high 11 assists. For the three-time defending NBA champions, who again harassed Cleveland's Mark Price into a sub-par game (14 points on 5-of-14 shooting).

"The way Price goes, the Cavaliers go," Scottie Pippen said.

Chicago had a three-point lead at the start of the fourth quarter and built it to 10 with 7:06 left.

Suns 117, Warriors 111

At Phoenix, Kevin Johnson scored a playoff career-high 38 points, including 17 in the third quarter when Phoenix took the lead for good.

Johnson scored 15 points in the final 5:02 of the third quarter. Danny Ainge started the fourth quarter with a 3-pointer, putting Phoenix ahead 94-86, and clinched the game with 3:05 to play on a corner shot that made it 116-104.

The Suns, who lead the series 2-0, didn't make another field goal, but the 12-point lead was too much for the Warriors to overcome.

"Once we started to make our run, they got confused and started to talk to each other," said Phoenix's A.C. Green.

Charles Barkley scored 20 points and Dan Majerle added 17 for the Suns. For the Warriors, Chris Mullin scored 19 of his 32 points in the third period. Latrell Sprewell finished with 19 and Chris Webber had 17.

Rockets 115, Trail Blazers 104
At Houston, Hakeem Olajuwon scored 46 points and put on a late-game shot-blocking display, giving Houston a 2-0 lead in the series.

The Trail Blazers stayed within striking distance throughout the fourth quarter, but every time they tried to get the deficit below five, Olajuwon was there to stop them.

Olajuwon blocked a shot by Clyde Drexler with 1:38 left. Then, with 1:11 to play, he caught up with Rod Strickland on a fast break and swatted away a sure-thing layup that would have cut Houston's lead to 104-100.

The Rockets had no problems staying comfortably ahead in the final minute.

Lady Harvesters win regional track meet

SAN ANGELO — The Pampa girls go into the state track meet with a perfect record after winning the Class 4A regional title over the weekend.

The Lady Harvesters have won eight meets this season. They scored 72 points at the regional meet while Wichita Falls Hirschi followed with 62.

Junior hurdler Mechelle Abbott was the only Lady Harvester qualifying for the state meet in an individual event. Abbott won the 300-meter hurdles and also qualified for state by placing second in the 100-meter hurdles and as a member of the second-place 1600-meter relay team. Pampa's 800-meter relay team placed second to qualify.

The top two finishers in each event advance to the state meet, which will be Friday and Saturday in Austin.

"We didn't run as well as we had in the past," said Pampa coach Mike Lopez. "We gave in to the pressure a little bit. But the girls are young, they'll be back."

In the boys' division, Pampa tied for 21st place with six points.

Tonya and Nancy, again

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Jeff Gillooly was bad. So was Tonya's mother. Shawn Eckardt was stupid. And Tonya, what about Tonya? She's either a battered victim or a lying, self-centered brat. Or some combination of both.

The first television movie to tell the story of the most celebrated knee whack in history tread on mostly familiar ground to anyone who was close to this sordid tale. It took a few factual liberties and fabricated some inspired dialogue.

The faces, though, were remarkably familiar. I mean, Dan Schneider looked just like Shawn Eckardt.

"Tonya & Nancy, The Inside Story," which aired on NBC Saturday night (38-15, 12-6 SWC) secure third place in the SWC and the third seed in the postseason tournament. The Red Raiders face second-seeded Rice May 12 in the tournament opener.

Although she shared top billing with Kerrigan, this was mostly a story about Harding.

There she was, picking up pop bottles with her father to help pay for her skating. There she was, drinking beer, smoking cigarettes and playing pool. There was her mother, berating her. There was Gillooly, hitting her.

Alexandra Powers of the TV series "L.A. Law" had Harding's walk down pat. But she didn't quite have enough sass. The real Tonya, by some accounts no slouch as an actress herself, has much more life in her than the TV version.

James Wilder's Gillooly was smarmy, smug and generally rotten. But the real Gillooly at least has the satisfaction of knowing that the movie's account of Harding's involvement in the Kerrigan attack is, for the most part, the one he gave authorities.

Harding, as depicted in the movie, knew about the attack all along. In real life, Harding says she didn't know anything about it until after it occurred. She pleaded guilty only to plotting the coverup.

Schneider, of TV's "Head of the Class," copulently portrays Eckardt right down to the triple chin and plays him for the buffoon. He is, after all, the only one who seems to be making no money from any of this.

In the movie, when Gillooly meets Harding for the first time (in reality she was 15), there's Eckardt feeding his face in the background.

When Harding gives a smart-alecky answer to a TV reporter who asked her about her marriage, Gillooly is watching at home, and there's Eckardt drinking a beer in the background.

And Eckardt really didn't push people out of the way when, in that ridiculous trenchcoat, he served as Harding's bodyguard at the airport when she returned from the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

Then there is the dialogue, things you wish they would have said.

"What do you want me to do, make myself taller and skinnier and prettier? They don't like me." Tonya tells Jeff as they argue after her poor finish in a competition in Japan.

"I'm sorry for putting you down, for hitting you. I didn't know how to communicate," Jeff tells Tonya as he convinces her to reconcile.

Stars go after Canucks next

DALLAS (AP) — After waiting a week to learn who their opponent would be in the next round of the Stanley Cup playoffs, the Dallas Stars wish they knew more about that team.

The Stars have won three out of four games this season against the Vancouver Canucks, but Dallas defenseman Craig Ludwig says they need to know more about the team that advanced with a 4-3 overtime victory over the Calgary Flames on Saturday night.

"That's the team we probably know less about than the other two (still in the Stanley Cup hunt)," Ludwig said. "Actually, the way we've been looking at videotape all week, we probably know everything about them. We know their home addresses."

The first two games will be in Dallas, Monday and Wednesday. The Canucks are led by right wing Pavel Bure, who topped the league scorers with 60 goals.

The series will be sort of a family affair when the Canucks' Geoff Courtnall meets his brother, Russ, the Stars' right wing.

"They have a lot of difficult players," Russ Courtnall said. "They play well defensively and offensively. They have some tough guys. And they seem to play well on the road."

The Stars present a prolific scorer of their own in Mike Modano and a solid pair of goaltenders in Darcy Wakaluk and Andy Moog.

Dallas has been idle for a week since completing a four-game, first-round sweep of the St. Louis Blues. Wing Brent Gilchrist said the break should not be a factor for him and his teammates.

"It's always talked about: you shouldn't have rest or you should," he said. "The bottom line is you have to win four games. Where I'm sitting, we're fresh and ready to go. I'd certainly rather have the rest."

Black bass bountiful at Lake White River

Load up the kids and head on down to Lake White River. Located about 40 miles east of Lubbock and 15 miles south of Crosbyton, this normally 2,200 acre lake now barely covers 1,300 surface acres.

Despite the low water levels, the black bass fishing is terrific. At a recent big bass tournament, it took an eight pound bass to win and all the hourly winners caught bass in excess of four pounds. That's good fishing for any West Texas lake.

Key baits include a white buzzbait at sunrise, switching to a white spinnerbait during the morning. When the sun really starts beating down, work the stump fields and brush with a weightless black/white or green/chartreuse four-inch frog. The key to catching big bass is a slow retrieve, and no lure is slower than an artificial frog.

Prime bass fishing locations are the boat docks on the main lake and the island on the White River feeder creek. The cattails in the Sandy Creek side normally hold large numbers of big bass, but the current low water levels have left my favorite reeds high and dry.

TIP OF THE WEEK — Now is a great time to take a video camera and make a tour around the lake while recording the exposed stump fields, humps, and drop-offs. Pay special attention to those places where the creek channel meanders near the shoreline.

A three-bass Fun Tournament at Lake White River is scheduled on May 14. Entry fee is only $25 and all kids under seventeen may fish free when accompanied by an adult contestant. Registration at the Marina opens at 5:00 a.m. and the tournament hours are from 6:00 a.m. until 12:00 noon.

RON GRIFFITH continued to have "a hot hand" as he bested a field of 125 anglers at the 1994 Lake Stamford Open Tournament with a three-bass limit that weighted over 12 pounds. Couples with his victory at the March Big Bass Tournament on Lake Baylor, Ron has earned more than $2,000. Berkley PowerBaits may cost a little more than the unscented plastic lures, but Ron thinks they are worth the extra cost. His favorite colors are pumpkin, black/chartreuse, and red-shad.

In addition to the White River Tournament, interested anglers can participate in "open bass" tournaments at Lake Greenbelt on May 7th, at Lake Meredith on May 19th (Thursday evening), and at Lake Baylor on May 21st. The 1994 Crappieathon at Lake Meredith continues until June 7th.

Rangers use pesky offense to edge Indians

CLEVELAND (AP) — A year ago the Texas Rangers' lineup could have been described as powerful, or dangerous, or mighty. Now Will Clark has come up with another adjective for it: Pesky.

The team that led the American League in home runs in 1993 ranks fourth from the bottom in homers so far in 1994. So the Rangers used an infield single and Clark's sacrifice fly to beat the Cleveland Indians 5-4 Sunday.

"It's a pesky type of offense that makes for a lot of run-scoring, too," said Clark, who was hitless in the game after finishing April with a .395 mark, his best one-month average ever. "This team will hit home runs, but they're not coming now. So you make do with other things."

Cleveland's Mark Clark limited Texas to three runs, one of them unearned, through eight innings, but the Indians' bullpen blew the save for the eighth time in 16 chances this year.

Manuel Lee, the No. 9 hitter in the Rangers' lineup, started their two-run ninth by blooming a double to right against Derek Lilliquist. It was Lee's third hit and second double of the game.

A fly ball moved him to third, and Oddie McDowell drove him in with a slow roller off Jose Mesa (3-1) that never got past the infield grass. First baseman Paul Sorrento couldn't pick it up cleanly but had no time to make a play anyway.

"I was going to go home with it, but I don't think I even had a play at home," Sorrento said. "He just didn't hit it hard enough, you know?"

Jose Canseco's third single of the game sent McDowell to third, and he scored when Clark lifted a fly ball to left off Brian Barnes.

The win was the Rangers' fifth in the last six games.

"We've played better for a week to get us to a 10-12 record from 5-11," manager Kevin Kennedy said. "To come out of here winning two out of three is saying something. Cleveland has a tough club. I think they can win their division."

Winner Cris Carpenter (1-0) faced four hitters and got five outs, including a double play. Tom Henke pitched the ninth and got his fourth save, striking out Eddie Murray for the final out.

Murray had already homered twice in the game, and he had defeated Henke with a ninth-inning home run eight days earlier in Texas.

"You don't think about those things," Henke said. "He'll be in the Hall of Fame some day. He's a smart hitter. He tries to set you up. He did that in Texas. I was fortunate to strike him out."

Murray, playing despite a fever, hit a two-run home run in the first inning, then put the Indians ahead 4-3 with a leadoff homer in the seventh, his sixth of the season.

The home runs gave Murray 2,848 hits, tying Brooks Robinson for 32nd on the career list. With 447 home runs, Murray is five away from tying Carl Yastrzemski for 19th place.

Canseco singled home the Rangers' first run in the first, his 18th RBI in the last 14 games. Texas added single runs in the second on Esteban Beltré's RBI groundout and in the sixth on doubles by Juan Gonzalez and Lee.

The Indians scored three in the first after Texas starter Rick Helling began the game by throwing seven straight balls. Kenny Lofton walked, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Wayne Kirby's single, and Murray hit a two-out home run.

"Eddie was sick today, not feeling well at all," manager Mike Hargrove said. "It shows his professionalism that he played and did as well as he did."

Tabasco Cat is leading contender for Kentucky Derby crown

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — D. Wayne Lukas knows Tabasco Cat will always be "the horse that ran over Jeff." By week's end, he would also like him to be the 1994 Kentucky Derby winner.

"I know in some years past, I might have had to make an excuse for bringing them," he said. "I don't have to this year."

The Lukas-trained Tabasco Cat will be a leading contender in the Derby on Saturday at Churchill Downs. No excuses needed there. Not like when he brought such forgettable also-rans as Shy Tom to the Derby in 1989, or Power Lunch in '90, or Al Sabin in '92.

And he made no excuses for Tabasco Cat last year either, when, as a rambunctious 2-year-old colt, he got loose in the stable area at Santa Anita Park and ran over Wayne's son, Jeff, nearly killing him.

"It was just a case of a frightened horse running off," Lukas said.

Tabasco Cat is expected to be one of 15 or 16 entered on Thursday for the 1 1/4-mile Derby, first of the three Triple Crown races that test each year's 3-year-old thoroughbreds.

Co-favored, or close to it, will be Blue Grass winner Holy Bull and Santa Anita Derby winner Brocco, who also won the Breeders' Cup Juvenile last Nov. 6 at Santa Anita. Lukas said Tabasco Cat and Strodes Creek, who ran 2-3 in the Santa Anita Derby, should be added to that group as potential winners.

"After that, there's another five about the same," Lukas said. "A horse like Kandaly might win the Derby, but it would be a hell of a jump for him. In reality, there's only four or five horses that should win this race."

Tabasco Cat will be Lukas' 23rd career Derby starter, one short of the record by Dick Thompson in the 1920s and '30s. Thompson, however, had four winners. Lukas has had one, Winning Colors in 1988.

He hasn't had a Grade I stakes winner since Twilight Agenda captured the Meadowlands Cup in the fall of 1991.

Tabasco Cat was undefeated this year, winning a pair of graded stakes, until hooking up with Brocco at the Santa Anita Derby. He was third in the Breeders' Cup Juvenile behind Brocco and Blumin Affair, another probable starter on Saturday.

It was about a month after the Breeders' Cup that Tabasco Cat got loose in the stable area and ran over Jeff, an assistant trainer who was trying to corral the horse. Jeff Lukas was in a coma for about three weeks before beginning a slow, steady recovery.

He will watch the Derby from home, as yet unable and unready to stand the rigors of the large crowds and hoopla surrounding the Derby.

"Jeff is very attuned to what we're doing here," his father said. "I talk to him daily."

Holy Bull, a big horse bred of sprinter's blood, has a simple style. He gets out in front and tries to run the other horses into submission. So far, he's been successful. He comes into the Derby off front-running victories in the Blue Grass and Florida Derby.

There will be other horses in the race with speed, however, including Smilin Singin Sam and Ushes. They're both outsiders, but they could help set up Holy Bull for the come-from-behind horses.

Tabasco Cat and Brocco also have speed and will try to stay close to the pace.

"We have the kind of speed to go with Holy Bull. I don't see Holy Bull getting left in the gate. He stands in the gate very well, and he has an efficiency of motion," Lukas said. "He'll get out of there."

"The three most dangerous things in a racehorse are speed, speed and speed," Lukas said.

Large fields of inexperienced horses, ridden by jockeys under intense pressure, often create problems in the Derby for horses that like to come from way back, like Strodes Creek.

"In the Derby, you tell the rider, don't leave him too much to do. You have to be in contention at the eighth pole," Lukas said. "Tabasco Cat is very athletic. He handles all kinds of tracks. He's very competitive."

Heinen outduels Sutton to capture Houston Open

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — When Mike Heinen was learning golf in high school, he considered fellow Louisiana native Hal Sutton a hero.

Now Sutton's looking up at Heinen.

The 27-year-old PGA rookie outdueled veteran Sutton on Sunday to win the Houston Open, topping Sutton, Tom Kite and Jeff Maggert by three strokes.

"When I was growing up, I wanted to be like Hal Sutton," Heinen said. "He was from Louisiana. He was my idol."

He even managed to meet Sutton once back then, something Sutton says he doesn't remember.

"I know him now," Sutton said. "I threw some birdies at him. I saw no evidence of him bowing at all. He seemed excited to be there. He never acted scared all day long."

Few people may have heard of Heinen, but it's not unusual for a tour unknown to make his first big splash at the Houston Open: For the fifth consecutive year, the title went to a first-time winner on the PGA Tour.

"You wonder if this guy is going to be the next superstar or is this a fluke week where he just had everything going?" Kite said. "There's no way of knowing. We just have to wait and see how he handles it from here on out."

Heinen, who picked up $234,000 with the victory, finished with a 4-under 68 Sunday, playing steady golf with four birdies and no bogeys. His 272 for the four rounds was 16 under par at the Tournament Players Course at The Woodlands.

Kite and Maggert, who began play Sunday tied for the lead with Heinen, and Sutton shared second at 275.

Kite, the all-time PGA money winner trying to win in his home state for the first time, and Maggert, playing on his home course, struggled early and never were factors. Each shot 1-under 71.

"I couldn't seem to do a whole lot right," Kite said.

Vijay Singh and Bob Gilder were six shots back at 278. At 279 were John Daly, Gil Morgan and Peter Jacobsen.

Daly, sporting his new bald look, made a late charge with a 32 on the back nine, including a hole-in-one on the 193-yard 16th hole and three birdies to get to 10 under. But a bogey on the 18th pushed him back to a 67.

Sutton, looking for his first win in eight years, closed with one shot with three holes remaining. But Heinen refused to fold.

Instead, it was Sutton who cracked, missing a short putt at No. 17 for a bogey. He also bogeyed the 18th for a 69. Heinen finished with four straight pars.

Teen curfew takes effect for Dallas

DALLAS (AP) - It was ten minutes past midnight and groups of teenagers were still cruising the West End.

"Do you know about the curfew?" a lone patrol officer shouted to a truck carrying three boys in the bed. "You can get a $500 ticket starting today."

The wide-eyed teenagers proclaimed ignorance and promised to drive home. But there were a lot more youths. And only one officer patrolling the popular area on the first night of Dallas' new ordinance.

"They are all over the place," said Sgt. E.J. Brown, motioning to the youths who lined up on Lamar Avenue, some wearing T-shirts bearing gang names.

Sunday at 12:01 a.m. marked the beginning of Dallas' controversial new curfew, which requires youth under 17 to be at home or with chaperones after midnight Friday and Saturday night and after 11 p.m. on week nights.

Violators can be given an oral warning, a ride home or a $500 fine. They also can be taken into custody.

But police have said they are not going to aggressively enforce the ordinance.

"Officers are not going to look for curfew violators," said Dallas police spokesman Ed Spencer.

"If they encounter kids who may be underage, and if the officers are not on an assignment of greater importance, they'll do some investigation about whether or not it's a curfew violation."

Also in the West End Saturday night was Joe Cook, regional director for the American Civil Liberties Union. He was giving out pamphlets on how teenagers can defend themselves from the ordinance, which he has battled since its passage in 1991.

"Because of an ACLU lawsuit, the city didn't first enforce the law. Federal Judge Jerry Buchmeyer ruled the law unconstitutional, but the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans overturned that decision last November.

The ACLU has appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Other cities, such as Fort Worth, have decided to wait for that opinion before deciding whether to also implement a curfew as a way to cut down on violence among teenagers.

Recycling job

A Chinese man loads plastic bottles on to the back of his flatbed delivery tricycle before taking them to a recycling center on the outskirts of Beijing Monday. Some people in Beijing and other cities in China earn a living by collecting recyclable goods for which they are paid, by weight, by the recycling centers. (AP photo)

Cuban officials debate drastic measures to save peso

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — To try to rescue its economy, Cuba may freeze private bank accounts and issue a new dollar-linked currency. The moves would help slash spending and boost the value of the plummeting peso.

With Cuba still stunned by the loss of its former Soviet bloc trading partners and benefactors, lawmakers agreed in a Sunday session that drastic measures were needed — though not the capitalist-style reforms that have cleaned up other Latin American budgets at the cost of soaring unemployment and hunger.

The National Assembly was to approve general outlines today for policies, which would be enacted later by government decrees. One of the most drastic proposals was to freeze private savings accounts, which hold 60 percent of the country's cash.

"I really believe it isn't worth anything if we stop in the middle of the road," President Fidel Castro warned the Assembly. "If the measures are insufficient, it is a disaster."

The legislative session, the first this year, began Sunday and was to finish today. It capped a four-month series of 80,000 grassroots meetings across the country on how the government should close a 30 percent budget deficit and reduce inflation that has left the peso trading on the huge black market at 1 percent of its official value of $1.

With meat, vegetables, gasoline and most other goods hard to come by at cheap, subsidized ration shops, most Cubans supplement their diet on the black market, where four bottles of beer can cost a 200-peso month's wage.

Castro, one of the world's most famous Communists, found himself lecturing legislators on the laws of supply and demand.

"We have to be concerned that money is worth something and that people need money," Castro said. "If we really reduce the quantity of money in circulation... we are going to devalue the money... Things will be sold more cheaply."

But he insisted that the reforms were designed to save the essence of socialism — free education and health care and egalitarian social policies. Saving the peso is crucial, he said, to save the value of the Cuban worker's salary.

Finance Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez proposed a freeze on savings accounts and other measures to slash the 4.2 billion peso budget deficit and reduce the amount of money held by people who have nothing to buy.

Sixty percent of the country's cash, Rodriguez said, is held in private bank accounts. Savers might be given long-term bonds or urged to channel their money into specific purchases, he said.

A new currency in addition to the peso might be created for use in well-stocked supermarkets that only accept foreign currencies.

Savings bonds might be issued, he said, and insurance offered. The government may raise billions of pesos by increasing prices on cigarettes, alcoholic drinks, gasoline, electricity, telephones, bus fares and workplace lunches, a key meal for many ration-poor Cubans.

He said taxes could be raised on self-employed people and on property. School materials and some medicines could be charged a small fee, he said.

Chlorine-resistant parasite found in drinking water

HOUSTON (AP) — It takes just a small number of a chlorine-resistant parasite to cause illness in water drinkers with depressed immune systems, according to a federally funded study.

The parasite, called crypto-sporidium, caused diarrhea and flu-like illness in an estimated 400,000 Milwaukee citizens last year.

About 250 of the parasites can fit on the head of a pin. A study presented in Baltimore Sunday found 30 were enough to infect one-fifth of the study's volunteers. All of the 26 volunteers exposed to 500 or more of the parasites became infected within 11 days.

It takes 10 million cholera organisms, by contrast, to infect someone. "For most infectious diseases, the great majority of the people who become infected don't get sick," said Dr. Herbert DuPont, the primary author of the study and chairman of the infectious diseases department at the University of Texas Medical School at Houston.

"What is remarkable about this parasite is half of those infected become ill. This is a bug you can pick up off a table top," DuPont said. DuPont presented his findings at a joint meeting of the Association of American Physicians, the American Society for Clinical Investigation and the Federation for Clinical Research.

Most commonly, the parasite is transmitted by drinking water, infecting people and young animals — especially calves. It frequently latches onto people who come into contact with animals; AIDS victims; infants at day-care centers; and people who travel to developing countries.

Often considered a mere nuisance, the diarrhea can be fatal for people with AIDS because of their inability to produce antibodies that fight diseases.

The study, which was funded by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, could lead to further steps to clean up the nation's drinking water supply, DuPont said.

"The infectiousness of this parasite will undoubtedly change the way water is treated in this country," he said. "It gets into our water supplies via animal or human sewage. It is not killed by chlorine. Only heat or filtration is effective against it."
