WASHINGTON — Congressman Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, did not sign a letter to Speaker of the House Tom Foley specifically requesting a session to cut spending, the congressman's spokesman Phil Duncan said today.

Sarpalius was attacked last week by his Republican challenger, Mac Thornberry, for allegedly signing the letter but later withdrawing support of the "A to Z Spending Cut" bill.

Sarpalius did withdraw support for the proposed "A to Z" bill, citing his concern for the future of federal programs in the 13th District. Thornberry strongly criticized Sarpalius' decision, saying the congressman gave in to pressure from House leadership.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A woman who was shot and wounded by a police officer who then took his own life says the officer did not deserve a police honor guard funeral.

Corpus Christi Police officials say that George Cervantes, 32, a four-year veteran officer shot and wounded Guadalupe "Lupita" Torres, 21, and Gerardo Morales, 24, last Thursday. Cervantes then turned the gun on himself, officers say. An honor guard funeral was to be held for Cervantes today.

Ms. Torres and Morales were listed in stable condition Sunday at Memorial Medical Center. She told the Corpus Christi Caller Sunday that she is outraged that Cervantes will receive a full honor guard funeral.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Now that Arkla Inc. serves customers from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico, company officials say a name change is in order.

On Tuesday, shareholders will vote on a proposal to change the natural gas company's name to NorAm Energy Corp. The shareholders' meeting will be held in Shreveport, La.

Richard P. Straley, senior energy analyst and vice president of Stephens Inc. said that name changes are rarely rejected "and I would be surprised if this one didn't change."

Arkla serves 2.6 million customers in six states. The company's roots are in Arkansas and Louisiana and at one time Arkla had headquarters in both Shreveport and Little Rock.

Milt Honea, Arkla's chairman, chief executive and president, said the new name will be "a fresh start for the company and to recognize we span the country and go from border to border and might even in the future do more than that," he said.

DALLAS (AP) — In the syndicated comic strip "You Can with Beakman & Jax," science is explained so children can understand. But in Sunday's strip, a chemistry experiment was described that scientists say could cause an explosion: how to separate water into its two ingredients, hydrogen and oxygen.

"I looked at it and realized very, very quickly — hey, there's a real problem," said Dr. Gene Nelson, a biophysicist, computer programmer and fan of the comic strip.

Curry officially elected city commissioner

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Faustina Curry has officially been named the winner of the election Saturday night to fill the seat of Gary Sutherland, the outgoing city commissioner for Ward 4.

Saturday night, following the election earlier that day, the results from Ward 4 were accidentally locked in one of the ballot boxes at the polling place, Horace Mann Elementary School.

As a result, a court order from a district judge was officially needed to open the box and reveal its contents.

The ballot box was opened at 9:30 p.m. Sunday after District Judge Kent Sims issued the order.

Phyllis Jeffers, Pampa's city secretary, said the error was a simple one and that laws which cover voting procedure were followed exactly.

"It was just one of those things that happen," she said. "They were just mistakenly placed in the ballot box and sealed. Once the ballot box is sealed, to gain entry it takes a court order from a district judge."

Jeffers said that in addition to the actual results, two of the three recording sheets, the ones that go to the mayor and city secretary, were also sealed in the ballot box by W.J. Fletcher, the presiding judge in Ward 4.

A third recording sheet was kept by Fletcher.

Because the third recording sheet was available, the results of the election were available, although they couldn't be considered official until the box was unsealed and the ballots retrieved for counting, Jeffers said.

The results of Saturday's City Commission election, along with early voting totals, broke down the following way: Jeff Andrews received 508 votes, Curry received 354 votes and Gene Winegeart received 258 votes.

Andrews was running unopposed for Ward 2 and replaces outgoing city commissioner Jerry Wilson.

Both Sutherland and Wilson declined to run for re-election.

At the present time, Andrews said it was too early to address specific topics. Instead, he said he was going to take some time to familiarize himself with ongoing city projects.

Curry was not available this morning for a comment.

A special presentation and reception will be held in the City Commission chamber during the regular session of the commission which begins at 6 p.m. on Tuesday. Both Wilson and Sutherland will be given plaques for their contributions to the city.

Solar eclipse Tuesday

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A blazing ring of fire will arc across the sky Tuesday as the moon moves in front of the sun, leaving a circle of sunlight around a dark disk.

Astronomers call it an annular eclipse — a spectacular event, if not as dramatic as a full eclipse when the entire sun is covered.

An annular eclipse, like a full eclipse, occurs when the moon moves between the Earth and sun. But the moon's orbit isn't exactly circular and it's now near its farthest point from Earth, so it won't appear large enough to completely block the sun.

All of North America will be able to view at least a partial eclipse — given clear skies.

"This one is attracting a lot of attention because of its path of visibility" across the United States, said John Bangert, an astronomer at the U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington. "There are a lot of major cities in the path."

The eclipse will make a "wide track that covers perhaps a seventh of the area of the contiguous states," reports Guy Ottewill of Furman University in his book The Under-Understanding of Eclipses.

"If you're in the right place ... you will see the moon position itself directly between the sun and the Earth," said Fred Espenak, an astrophysicist at Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md.

The best viewing will occur in a path ranging from 140 miles to 190 miles wide crossing the nation from southwest to northeast during the middle of the day. The closer you are to this line, the more of an eclipse you'll see, said Espenak.

Bangert said a group from the Naval Observatory "is making it a commuter eclipse, getting a flight to Cleveland and renting cars there to drive close to central line of the eclipse."

If the weather is clear, the eclipse will first be visible to Americans in El Paso, Texas, at 10:07 a.m. local time, meteorologist Joe Rao reported in Weather-wise magazine.

The main portion of the eclipse, when the moon is visible for four to six minutes in various locations.

Rao calculated that the eclipse will arrive at Roswell, N.M., at 10:13 a.m.; Oklahoma City at 11:30 a.m.; St. Louis at 11:51 a.m.; Detroit at 1:12 p.m.; Cleveland at 1:14 p.m.; Buffalo at 1:21 p.m.; Concord, N.H. at 1:40 p.m.; and Portland, Maine, at 1:42 p.m. All times are local.

Moving away from the central track, the eclipse will be about 90 percent visible in New York, 80 percent in Washington and Los Angeles, 75 percent in Atlanta, 70 percent in San Francisco, 60 percent in Tampa, Fla., and 50 percent in Miami and Seattle.

As always, scientists are warning people not to look directly at the sun. They suggest projecting the image through a pinhole in cardboard or viewing it through a No. 14 arc-welder's filter, which can be obtained at welders' supply shops.

Clinton moderates policy on Haiti

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration said today its new policy of giving Haitian boat refugees an opportunity to seek asylum at sea won't result in new waves of immigrants flooding Florida's shores.

The policy, spelled out Sunday by President Clinton, also includes stepped up international sanctions against Haiti's military dictators and the appointment of former Rep. William Gray as special adviser on Haiti.

Economic refugees will continue to be returned to Haiti, but changes must be made to protect "some who genuinely fear for their lives," Clinton said.

Clinton's deputy national security adviser, Sandy Berger, said today he didn't think there would "be overwhelming numbers" of Haitians granted asylum because most would not be considered political refugees deserving of asylum.

"There were 1,300 people so far this year who were picked up on boats," Berger said, and probably only 5 percent qualified as political refugees.

"The real problem here is what's going on in Haiti," Berger said on ABC. "And the real solution is to get the military leaders who are perpetuating this terrible violence in that country to stop. The refugee problem is only a result of the fundamental problem, which is the growing level of violence in Haiti and the fact that democracy has not been restored."

Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles disagreed with Berger's contention that there would be no great influx of refugees, saying on ABC that in spite of the administration's efforts, "a lot still get through. And we don't need more waves and waves in Florida. We're sort of awash right now."

Berger said Gray, a former congressman from Pennsylvania and House majority whip, will be working with other nations in the hemisphere to pressure the Haiti dictatorship to leave — "to make it clear to them they're on a road that leads to a dead end. The only way to stop the suffering in Haiti is for them to step down."

Gray, who now heads the United Negro College Fund, said he shared Clinton's "determination to help end the suffering of the Haitian people at the hands of their military leaders."

Gray replaces Lawrence Pezzullo, who was forced from office last month because of differences over the administration's faltering Haiti policy. Pezzullo alienated exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and some in the State Department by calling for political reconciliation among the different factions in Haiti.

The policy moves came as the administration seeks to blunt criticism that it is too tough on refugees or too weak on the military leaders who overthrew Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected president, in a September 1991 coup.

The administration in recent days has also pushed the United Nations to impose tougher economic sanctions if the military leaders do not agree by May 21 to step down and restore Aristide to power.

Clinton said a six-week review made clear that his Haiti policy had to be changed.

He spoke of intensified killing and mutilation of civilians and said he was increasingly concerned that forced repatriation of all boat people "may endanger the safety of those who have valid fears of political persecution."

He added: "I don't believe the policy we have now is sustainable given the level of political violence" in Haiti.

FCC: Cable television rates are changing again

By JEANNINE AVERSA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cable rates are changing — again. For most subscribers, that's supposed to mean a decrease, but some will save more than others.

The Federal Communications Commission's new rates go into effect next week — the government's second attempt in less than a year to reduce what people pay to watch cable TV.

The new rules are designed to reduce cable rates an average of 7 percent. But not all of the nation's 11,000 cable systems have to reduce rates on Sunday, May 15. Some can wait until July 15 as long as they promise not to raise rates in the interim.

Because of other changes in the FCC's new rules, some cable bills may not drop the full 7 percent.

And some will go up. Though it's too early to know what will happen to an individual subscriber's bill, some trends are emerging.

— Subscribers in affluent areas will pay more because the new rates take into account the median income in the area a cable system serves.

For instance, for two systems identical in every respect except for income, a customer in an area with a median income of $50,000 would pay $26.26 a month, while a customer of a system where the median income is $15,000 would be charged $19.57 a month, said William Finneran, chairman of the New York State Commission on Cable Television.

— Rates for customers served by a company that owns multiple cable systems will be higher than customers of generally smaller, independently owned systems.

For example, a subscriber to a cable system owned by a big company would be charged $19.57 a month, while a subscriber to an independently owned system would pay $18.24 a month, with all other factors being equal, Finneran said.

— Systems that charge customers for each TV set hooked up to cable, for remote control rentals and for switching to different levels of service, can charge a higher rate for each of these options, cable executives said.

The FCC's latest rate cut comes on top of a 10 percent reduction implemented last September.

While many systems rolled back rates at that time, some didn't. So on May 15, those systems will have to adjust rates to reflect the sum of the two reductions.

That's what's happening in Coulee City, Wash., a town of about 1,000 people west of Spokane. A subscriber paying $33.10 a month for 21 channels, an additional outlet, a converter box and a remote control, will pay $26.27 — a 20 percent reduction, said David Kinley, whose Sun Country operates the system there.

Calls for spending cuts don't match office budgets

By MICHELLE MITTELSTADT Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Texas Republican Reps. Jack Fields, Lamar Smith and Larry Combest criticized President Clinton's spending cuts for not going far enough, they were busy posting double-digit increases in office spending.

Records of the Clerk of the House show that Combest increased his spending from 1992 to 1993 by 28 percent, while Fields and Smith posted 19 percent hikes.

The three blame redistricting and the resulting changes in their districts' geography and deny any inconsistency between their calls for federal spending cuts and their own spending habits. Combest and Smith aides also take issue with the House figures.

Members receive official allowances for payroll, mail and general expenses. The salary allowance is the same for all members, allowing them to staff their Washington and district offices with a maximum 18 full-time and four part-time workers. The mail and expense allowances vary by district, based on factors such as number of constituents, district size and its distance from Washington.

The 26 Texans in office prior to 1993 spent an average of $783,633 last year on everything from mass mailings and salaries to new computers, copiers, travel, cellular telephones and meals. That was up 4 percent from 1992's $752,712 average.

The four freshmen seated in January 1993 spent an average $708,542 last year.

Fields was tops in spending among the 30 Texans, with $922,871 last year, up 19 percent from the $772,572 spent a year earlier.

"My district jumped from being in one county to being a multi-county district," he says, a move that forced him to relocate his office to Humble and open new ones in Conroe and College Station.

The result, Fields says, was new staffing, rental expenses and equipment and furniture purchases. Fields also sent introductory mailings to new constituents because he said three-quarters of his district changed.

Fields says there's no conflict between his deficit-cutting views and his spending habits.

"I am for further reductions in spending ... but as I've tried to explain, last year was a very unusual year for the 8th Congressional District," he said.

After Fields, the biggest spenders were El Paso Democrat Ron Coleman, with $917,052; Dallas Democrat Martin Frost, with $911,697; and Smith, with $907,683.

The most thrifty Texan was Mission Democrat Kika de la Garza, who spent $600,618 last year. Freshman Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, was next with $635,476, followed by West Columbia Democrat Greg Laughlin, with $636,074, and Beaumont Democrat Jack Brooks, with $662,760.

The Texan whose spending dropped the most, Fort Worth Democrat Pete Geren, says he's making a concerted effort to pinch pennies. His spending dropped almost 16 percent, from $800,100 in 1992 to $678,686 last year.

"It's a stretch," Geren says. "It's caused employees to have to put in a lot of extra time and work extraordinarily hard."

Like Fields, aides for Combest and Smith blame redistricting.

But they also take issue with the official House figures, saying some expenses that should have been posted in 1992 weren't counted until 1993 — making the percentage changes larger than they should be.

House records show Smith of San Antonio spent $907,683 last year, up almost 19 percent from the $764,746 posted a year earlier. Smith's top aide, John Lampmann, says his figures show spending of $869,925 in 1993 and $804,149 for 1992, or an 8 percent increase.

Lampmann says Smith returned 18 percent of his allowance to the House in 1993. Leftover funds are returned to the U.S. Treasury.

"He did that while replacing an outdated computer system at a cost of about $50,000 and opened a new district office to serve 112,000 new constituents," Lampmann says.

Combest's press secretary, Keith Williams, similarly takes issue with the clerk's numbers, which show the Lubbock lawmaker spending $854,337 last year and $665,899 the year before.

$40 million Lotto

By The Associated Press

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot was worth $25 million.

The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 3, 4, 30, 36, 38 and 47.

There were 180 tickets sold with five of the six numbers, with each ticket worth $2,087. There were 10,078 tickets with four of six numbers, with each winning $134. And there were 218,407 tickets sold with three of six numbers, with each worth an automatic $3.

Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $40 million.

Southern Yemenis resist three-pronged attack on Aden

SAN'A, Yemen (AP) — Southern Yemeni troops blocked a three-pronged advance today by northern forces trying to storm the southern stronghold of Aden and seize oil fields to the east, a northern government source reported.

The account contradicted military communiques broadcast by state radio in San'a predicting that Aden would fall quickly.

The official in the northern-dominated national government, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said fighting in the south had "bogged down into a war of attrition that could become very bloody."

The civil war broke out last week after months of skirmishing in a political fight over the slow pace of integrating conservative North Yemen and socialist South Yemen, which united four years ago.

The southern command also denied the north's claims that victory was close at Aden and said in a communique its troops had recaptured Zinjibar, another key city on the Gulf of Aden 30 miles northeast of Aden.

Gunboats loyal to the south were reported pounding northern troops on the coast east of Aden. Northern and southern forces also were reported fighting fiercely to the north and northeast of the port city.

The source said claims by the northern command that its troops had reached the suburbs of Aden were exaggerated. He said the troops were about 25 miles away and no longer moving forward.

The southerners "have the tactical advantage of knowing the terrain, and more importantly, the inhabitants," he said, alluding to the powerful Bakel tribe that is loyal to southern leaders.

Texas voters choose mayors, police chiefs, school board members

By The Associated Press

A sledgehammer-wielding school board candidate was involved in a brawl preceding a San Antonio election over the weekend, while voters elsewhere elected local officials and considered taxes, bingo and city employee benefits.

In the South San Antonio School District, Ray Montez and Albert Ray Herrera were involved in a slugfest the night before the election. They'll both be in a June 4 runoff.

Montez and Herrera admitted to the fight Friday night that hospitalized Herrera's father and left Montez with nine stitches.

Montez says Herrera supporters started the fight and that one member of the Herrera camp pulled a gun. Herrera claims Montez started it by striking Herrera's father in the chest with a sledgehammer.

The incident occurred at a middle school where both candidates were erecting campaign signs.

Montez, the incumbent, finished first in the four-way race with 40 percent of the vote. Herrera was second with 29 percent.

San Antonio voters also overwhelmingly approved $109.7 million in bonds for streets, drainage, parks and public safety.

Each of four separate bond packages won with lopsided margins in the city's first bond election since 1989.

Also in Saturday night's elections, Austin residents voted to stop providing health benefits for same-sex partners of city employees and other cities voted on tax increases.

In Austin, a large turnout revoked the city's "domestic partners" policy, which had been in effect about seven months. It was defeated 51,475, or 62 percent, to 31,082, or 38 percent.

Proposition 22 amended Austin's charter to limit benefits to the husbands, wives and other relatives of city employees. All unmarried partners are excluded starting today, city officials said.

Beaumont voters elected the city's first black mayor Saturday. David Moore, 39, barely avoided a runoff by winning 50.18 percent of the vote. Brian Alter finished second with 35.49 percent. Moore had been a city councilman for 10 years.

In other Saturday elections:

— A 22-year-old university student and a veteran educator went to a runoff for a Houston school district bond seat. Michael Reyes, the son of Councilman Ben Reyes, won 39 percent of the vote, and Maria Esther Campos had 22 percent. In 1989, Michael Reyes helped stage a walkout at Austin High School to protest the quality of education there.

— Austin Mayor Bruce Todd was forced into a June 4 runoff against Daryl Slusher, who covered City Hall for the weekly Austin Chronicle. John Johnson, who three years ago revealed he was formerly a gangster and served time in prison for murder, garnered just over 1 percent of the vote.

— Galveston Mayor Barbara Crews won a third term.

— Odessa Mayor Lorraine Perryman was elected to a third two-year term.

— Brownwood incumbent Police Chief Joe

Robbins advanced to a runoff against John Harper. Robbins got 49 percent of the vote and Harper got 41 percent. The first woman ever to seek the post didn't make the runoff.

— Snyder voted 947-714 to approve bingo games in Precinct 1, which covers most of Scurry County.

— In Plano, all three school board incumbents lost close races in an election marred by accusations that the challengers had a conservative Christian agenda. Don Mills, a self-described conservative Christian, beat board president Howard Shapiro by 512 votes. Gary Clark beat Rebecca Morris, who had previously served 12 years on the board. Tom Wilds defeated Judy Drotman.

— Haskell voters approved a half-cent sales tax increase for economic development. The proposition carried, 409-260. The proposal failed in the city's last three elections.

— Munday Mayor Richard Albus won reelection with a write-in campaign. He got 151 votes to 91 for Church of Christ minister Larry Fitzgerald, the only candidate who filed.

Austin voters decide to repeal benefits for 'domestic partners'

AUSTIN (AP) — The Austin City Council's controversial program to provide insurance benefits for the unmarried "domestic partners" of city employees ends today after an overwhelming vote to repeal the policy.

Voters also approved a proposition to limit the mayor and other City Council members to two terms, and they sent incumbent Mayor Bruce Todd into a runoff against former political reporter Daryl Slusher.

Final returns from Saturday's election showed 62 percent, or 45,638 votes, favoring repeal of the domestic partners program to 38 percent, or 28,129 votes, to preserve it.

"Most of Austin is fed up with irresponsible spending and morals," said the Rev. Charles Bullock, president of the pro-repeal Concerned Texans group.

"The city of Austin has no right to redefine marriage," he said. "The grass roots are bypassing their leaders and saying, 'We're going to vote and we're going to vote conservative.'"

The council approved the insurance program in September. Ninety-eight employees had signed up — 69 registering an opposite-sex partner and 29 enrolling a same-sex partner. The benefits would have cost the city about $130,000 this year.

Tim Welton, executive director of the Travis County Democratic Party and a member of the anti-repeal Mainstream Austin Coalition, said results of other races showed the city isn't dominated by the right. In the mayoral race, he said, progressive candidates Todd and Slusher collected about 75 percent of the vote.

"We are not in the throes of a conservative death grip," he said. "Our polling found that it was not an anti-gay bias, it was a bias against people living together in unmarried situations."

The repeal proposal, Proposition 22, was placed on Saturday's ballot by citizen petition. It amends the city charter to limit insurance benefits to a city employee's immediate family, spouse and the spouse's family. "Spouse" is defined as the husband or wife of a city worker.

In the mayor's race, Todd is seeking re-election to a second three-year term. Slusher had covered City Hall for about 10 years as politics editor of the weekly Austin Chronicle.

The two face a runoff as neither received more than half the vote. Todd had 45.76 percent, while Slusher garnered 31.73 percent.

The race again included John Johnson, who received national attention in the 1991 mayoral race after he revealed he was former gangster John Patrick Tully, a member of the New Jersey Campisi crime family who served time in prison for murder.

Johnson, who federal authorities placed in the witness protection program, is a hot dog and fajitas vendor. He got 1.2 percent of the vote Saturday. Other candidates included Ray Blanchette, who has been jailed several times for failure to remove junk from his yard; University of Texas student Brian Kline; and James Cooley, a former aide to a City Council member.

Although the term limits proposal passed, a measure to make all council terms expire in 1996 failed. City Council member Ronney Reynolds said the term-limit vote was a criticism of the council.

"There's a natural distrust of politicians, and people feel like with term limits there will be turnover without the incumbent having the advantage in every election," Reynolds said.

Mandela elected president

By TINA SUSMAN
Associated Press Writer

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela was elected the country's first black president today and emerged triumphantly from the former halls of white rule to declare: "Today we are entering a new era for our country."

In a day that completed the country's transition to democracy, the nation's first multiracial parliament took its seats in the stately headquarters of a bygone era and named Mandela to the presidency. He was unopposed.

"The South Africa we have struggled for, in which all our people ... regard themselves as citizens of one nation, is at hand," Mandela told tens of thousands of cheering supporters moments later from the balcony of nearby City Hall.

With the majestic Table Mountain in the background, Mandela raised his arms in triumph and delivered his first presidential address from the same balcony on which he spoke Feb. 11, 1990, the day he was released from 27 years in prison.

Many in the crowd had tears in their eyes as the sounds of "God Bless Africa," long considered the ANC's anthem, filled the air. Mandela, a tiny figure to most of the people far below, recounted the country's tortured history, from the landing of white settlers in 1652 through the violence of the 1980s and '90s.

"Perhaps it was history that ordained that it be here, at the Cape of Good Hope that we should lay the foundation stone of our new nation," he said. "It was here at this Cape, over three centuries ago, that there began the fateful convergence of the peoples of Africa, Europe and Asia on these shores."

Mandela's ANC won more than 62 percent of the vote in last month's national election, and he was the only nominee to succeed F.W. de Klerk, with whom he shared the 1993 Nobel Peace Prize for negotiating the end of apartheid. Mandela will be inaugurated Tuesday.

Actor George Peppard dies at age 65

By MAURA REYNOLDS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor George Peppard, who befriended Audrey Hepburn in Breakfast at Tiffany's and commanded Mr. T and his mates on The A-Team, has died of pneumonia. He was 65.

Peppard, who underwent lung cancer surgery two years ago, died Sunday night at the University of California, Los Angeles Medical Center, said his publicist, Cheryl Kagan. He had been hospitalized Thursday with breathing problems and quickly developed pneumonia, Kagan said.

After appearing in several television drama specials, Peppard began his film career in the late 1950s. He found early success with his role as a sympathetic young writer who befriends the flighty Holly Golightly, played by Hepburn, in 1961's Breakfast at Tiffany's.

In 1964's The Carpetbaggers, Peppard played a young playboy who inherits an aircraft business and becomes a megalomaniacal tycoon — a role he said typcast him for later tough-guy film roles.

"After the success of The Carpetbaggers, I haven't played a character with much warmth," Peppard said in a 1972 interview with The Associated Press.

He co-starred with Robert Mitchum in Home From the Hill

George Peppard

(1960) and with Gregory Peck in Pork Chop Hill (1959). He also appeared in How the West Was Won (1962) and Damnation Alley (1977). In all he appeared in more than 25 movies.

In the 1970s, Peppard turned to series television. He starred as a shrewd Polish detective in NBC's Banacek, which ran from 1972-74, and a neurosurgeon on Doctors' Hospital, an NBC medical drama, from 1975-76.

But he was perhaps best known to younger generations for his work on The A-Team, in which he played Hannibal Smith, a cigar-chomping former Army colonel who leads a team of renegade Vietnam veterans who help citizens in distress.

"The character is probably the best part I've had in my career," Peppard told the AP. "It was a good script and a good script is hard to find."

The A-Team, which ran from 1983-87 on NBC, marked his return to television after several years out of the limelight.

"I was cold. Cold as you can get," Peppard said of the years before the series.

Most recently, he co-starred on the March 3 episode of the TV series Mallock.

Peppard was born in Detroit and attended Purdue University before transferring to the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh.

He was married five times, including two failed marriages to Elizabeth Ashley, his co-star in The Carpetbaggers.

In 1992, doctors removed a cancerous tumor from Peppard's right lung and he had been in remission ever since, Kagan said.

He was a two-pack-a-day smoker for much of his life, but quit after the surgery.

Peppard is survived by his wife, Laura; a daughter, Julie; sons Brad and Christian; and three granddaughters.

Funeral arrangements were pending.

Trial begins for bankers in drug money laundering case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — How closely banks should examine suspicious deposits will be at issue today as two international bankers face trial on charges of laundering $30 million in alleged drug profits.

Antonio Giraldi and Maria Lourdes Reategui of American Express Bank International are accused of helping launder money for the reputed drug ring of Juan Garcia Abrego, one of Mexico's most notorious fugitives.

Giraldi is a senior relationship manager at the bank's Miami office; Ms. Reategui is a former relationship manager at the Los Angeles office. She now works for a Los Angeles real estate company.

Federal prosecutors say Giraldi and Reategui acted in a conspiracy with Ricardo Aguirre Villagomez, identified in an indictment as a key money launderer for Abrego. During heavy transaction weeks, Aguirre sent wire transfers of $1 million or more almost daily to bank accounts or holding companies around the world.

Prosecutors will argue that Giraldi and Reategui helped Aguirre move the money from accounts in Switzerland to Aguirre-controlled holding companies in the Cayman Islands.

They then helped Aguirre reinvest the money in apparently legitimate businesses in the United States and Mexico, the indictment alleges.

Attorneys for Giraldi and Reategui say their clients had no reason to suspect that Aguirre's deposits were tainted.

The government says Aguirre — nicknamed Kenny Rogers for his resemblance to the country music singer — remains a fugitive. The defense, American Express and his family say he was killed in a traffic accident last year in Mexico.

The bank is a subsidiary of American Express Co.'s international bank, American Express Bank Ltd.

The bank is helping pay the defense bill for Reategui and Giraldi, said Simon Barker-Benfield, a bank spokesman in New York. "We've conducted our own investigation and found no evidence of wrongdoing," he said.

The bank has said in court papers that it used $29 million of Aguirre's money as collateral for $19 million in loans to companies that Aguirre controlled.

The Customs Service seized about $30 million in Aguirre assets. The government has filed to seize that money permanently under federal drug forfeiture laws. The bank wants the funds unfrozen to pay off the $19 million in Aguirre loans.

Although the forfeiture case is separate, attorneys believe it could be influenced by the outcome of the criminal case.

Abrego, wanted in both the United States and Mexico, is accused in a 1990 indictment in Dallas of smuggling tons of cocaine from northeastern Mexico into the United States through ties to Colombian drug lords.

Giraldi and Reategui are charged with one count of conspiracy to launder money, 10 counts of money laundering, two counts of bank fraud and four counts of misapplication of funds. Aguirre faces the same conspiracy, money laundering and bank fraud counts.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Can the lawyers bite the bullet?

Between now and May 24, Panhandle area lawyers will join baristers all across Texas in deciding whether they should police themselves or let someone else do it — that someone being either the Texas Legislature or the State Supreme Court.

Attorneys can either adopt proposed new advertising rules drawn up by the State Bar of Texas or they can bow their necks, declare they have a First Amendment right to advertise and either vote against the changes or not cast a ballot at all. Lawyers had a shot at policing themselves last year, but even though 85 percent favored proposed restrictions, the issue failed since only 45 percent of attorneys bothered to vote. To pass, a vote of at least 51 percent is required.

The Texas House approved ad restrictions on attorneys in its last session, but the State Senate delayed action, saying it preferred that attorneys adopt their own rules. Although the Texas Supreme Court could arbitrarily impose rules, most bar officers doubt the court would do so.

Lawyers are members of the private sector (although most of their practice is carried on in the public sector) and as such, they should have a right to advertise. And advertise they do. Admittedly some of these slickly-produced TV ads for personal injury lawyers are corny and likely misleading, but are they really detrimental? The Texas Public Policy Foundation apparently thinks they are, claiming such ads increase the number of "frivolous" lawsuits filed in Texas.

However, not everyone agrees. A group called CALM (Citizens Against Lawsuit Misinformation) argues that personal lawsuits make up less than three percent of all Texas civil cases and that such suits have increased in the past 10 years at about the same rate as the population has grown. In other words, they believe the spate of TV commercials by public injury attorneys in the past few years has had little significant impact.

What exactly are the attorneys voting on? The proposal on advertising would prohibit lawyers from "appealing to emotions or claiming professional superiority that cannot be substantiated." Good thing detergents, deodorants, toothpastes, headache pills, cold medications and a thousand and one other products don't have to go by these same guidelines. The goal of advertising is to try and convince someone it's to their advantage to choose one product over another — or one lawyer over another.

If the lawyers adopt these restrictions, they will be limited, more or less, to "institutional" messages about their qualifications and types of cases they handle. It will indeed take some imaginative ad agencies to come up with any catchy ads to lure clients if they obey these limitations, which more than likely are unconstitutional.

Attorneys then are faced with a rather unpleasant choice. Either they vote for rules they know are vague and tough, if not impossible, to enforce, or they take their chances that the Legislature won't adopt an even more onerous set of restrictions on advertising. No wonder less than half the attorneys bothered to vote on similar restrictions last year.

Berry's World

"Will you excuse us, Robert? I want to talk to your computer in private."

Foreign policy concertmaster

In the past fortnight I put the question to three major legislative figures: "Did you back Jackson-Vanik?" Yes, said former Rep. Les Aspin. Yes, said former Rep. Stephen Solarz. Yes, said former Sen. Howard Baker. And all three now say that they made a mistake.

The Jackson Amendment specified that no trade advantages (in the form of lowered tariffs) should be given to the Soviet Union unless Russian Jews who wished to emigrate were permitted to do so. It is the consensus that stiff-arming the Soviet Union via Jackson-Vanik didn't help Jews who wished to emigrate (the number permitted to leave in 1975, the year the Jackson Amendment was enacted into law, actually diminished over the preceding year). And now the whole business of exerting pressure for human rights through the instrument of tariffs is dead ahead.

On June 3, President Clinton is supposed to decide which of three directives to issue. The first is to continue to extend to China most-favored-nation privileges; the second, to reduce those privileges; the third, to eliminate them.

Clinton, as so often happens to him, is stewing in his own juice, because the sequence of events is approximately as follows. During the campaign against President Bush, Clinton railed against his opponent for doing less than should be done to promote human rights in China.

Accordingly, when he became president, Clinton felt a need to act out the difference between him and his predecessor on this subject, so that in the spring of 1993, he issued an executive order binding on — himself. Unless the Chinese significantly advanced the cause of human rights in China in the ensuing 12 months, most-favored-nation privileges would be withdrawn.

William F. Buckley Jr.

But he does not really want to withdraw them, and such as Howard Baker and Les Aspin and Steve Solarz and Jeane Kirkpatrick inveigh against withdrawing them. Their reasoning is that economic sanctions imposed in China at this moment would have adverse effects on China, and not incidentally on the United States.

Although the lines on the graph do not run exactly parallel, it is true that immense progress has been made in China in the field of human rights, during the same period in which immense progress has been made economically. Those who wish to do so are free to say that the one freedom (economic) leads to the second (political). Those who want to deny a strict causal relation may do so, but would have to acknowledge that there is progress in China, if not enough of it.

But the catalog of rights specified by Clinton as needing to be improved shows the Chinese very much in arrears. There are still plenty of political prisoners in China, still unaccounted-for missing dissidents, still a persecution of religious practices. If the president chooses to do so, he can, in the words of one analyst, "use his own arithmetic," and by assigning greater value to those liberties that the Chinese have indulged and less value to those con-tinuingly prohibited, pronounce the general situation improved, and declare that MFN lives.

The trouble with that technique is that it will earn the contempt of some people whose contempt Clinton does not solicit, primarily the labor unions. Labor union officials such as Jeffrey Fiedler are not likely accessories to a smoke-and-mirrors act, nor are such as Rep. Nancy Pelosi of San Francisco, or Asia Watch technicians like Mike Jendrzejczyk. They may be wrong on the question of whether it actually would help dissidents to tax Chinese exports via tariffs, but you will never convince them that Bill Clinton's arithmetic is clean, or conscientiously done.

Baker, who has served as both majority and minority leader in the Senate, and as White House chief of staff, says of himself that he is a "Congress-man." He believes the general criteria ought to be set by Congress for the conduct of foreign policy. But he believes also that the artisan of foreign policy has got to be the president, and that he should not therefore be bound by rules made generically, which simply may not be suitable particularly. It is one thing to say: We will not trade with any country that does not permit civil liberties; another to say that by refusing to trade, we are in fact advancing the cause of civil liberties.

It may be that we are on the right course with economic sanctions: Solarz, for instance, believes in hanging tough on Cuba. On the other hand, there are indeed differences between, say, China and North Korea, Libya, Iran and Iraq. This has nothing to do with whether China's rulers are more pleasant, a great deal to do with the question of tractability.

And the concertmaster on this point, Baker convincingly argues, is the president. Even when the president is Bill Clinton.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Monday, May 9, the 129th day of 1994. There are 236 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On May 9, 1754, the first American newspaper cartoon was published. The picture in Benjamin Franklin's Pennsylvania Gazette showed a snake cut into sections, each part representing an American colony. The caption read: "Join or die."

On this date:
In 1913, the 17th amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of Senators by popular vote rather than selection by state legislatures, was ratified.

In 1926, Americans Richard Byrd and Floyd Bennett became the first men to make an airplane flight over the North Pole.

In 1936, Italy annexed Ethiopia as Benito Mussolini celebrated in Rome.

In 1961, in a speech to the National Association of Broadcasters, Federal Communications Commission chairman Newton N. Minow condemned television programming as a "vast wasteland."

Flying our own planes still a joy

Once upon a time, you and I could fly solo! Almost nobody flies solo anymore.

You and I as schoolboys could kick the chocks out from under a J-3 taildragger, bleed the gas tank of condensation, flip the prop and idle up some oil pressure, and that was it.

We'd taxi out to the downwind end of the cow pasture and take off, and we were spacemen — leaving planet earth to play tag with the clouds and to make friends with the stars.

Today, most anywhere in the United States, you don't even taxi away from the hangar without radioed permission from the tower.

And from that instant on, the pilot is a puppet whose every move is controlled by invisible electronic strings as ground-bound Lilliputians pull him this way and that, prescribing his every maneuver.

One cannot deny that in a crowded sky, air traffic must be regulated, regimented, restricted and restrained ...

I dare say, were it not for the FAA, free-flight fun-flying might by now be altogether prohibited.

I know of a few fragments of sky which are yet unfenced.

Paul Harvey

One of them is over West Virginia's New River Gorge.

The area is just enough removed from the high-traffic sky lanes so that Five Dollar Frank Thomas can take you for a ride this afternoon ...

In his vintage Cessna for $5 ... $2.50 for children ... Frank will show you the Appalachians from tree-top high.

He knows what he's doing. Frank's been flying these mountains for most of his 70-some years.

Along the way, Frank will share his mountain philosophy about God, country and government.

And every landmark in the magnificent wonderland below.

Five-dollar Frank will show you the sunrise if you like — or the sunset.

Frank is married only to the blue sky and the green hills, and he is ever eager to introduce you to them. Beware, you might find the experience irresistible.

Five-dollar Frank has taught a thousand students to fly out of his little hand-carved airstrip at Fayette ...

I'll tell you what reminded me of Frank. It was 4:00 this morning that I heard about a one-lung Cessna inbound from Cape Girardeau, Mo., with three people aboard ...

Carburetor iced up approaching Chicago ...

And when the air traffic control experts on the ground with all their sophisticated electronics could not get this guy out of trouble — he got himself out.

And in the pre-dawn dark with just a sliver of moon, he somehow found a snow-covered fairway at the Dunne National Golf Course south of Chicago and he slid in ... and all aboard walked away from it.

They don't let us fly our own planes all that much anymore, but it's still handy to know how.

Nixon: Judge him by standards of power

Politicians can be divided, broadly, into two categories: the moralists, who believe that politics is about principles, and the Machiavellians, who believe it is about power. Richard Nixon was a Machiavellian.

It wasn't that he was unaware of the attraction that principles have for many people. On the contrary, he took it into account very carefully — much as an engineer takes into account the laws of thermodynamics. But for him the bottom line was power. Once, reviewing excerpts from one of his books on foreign policy that had appeared in a magazine, I did a little counting. The magic word "freedom" appeared just four times in those excerpts; the word "power," 28.

Long before he became comfortable on the world stage, hobnobbing with DeGaulle and Mao Tse-tung, Nixon's "real world" was the world where, he believed, powerful men made the really big decisions — in paneled board rooms atop Manhattan skyscrapers, or the men's locker rooms of certain select golf clubs. As he remarked to a friend, walking up Manhattan's Park Avenue not long after he had been defeated for the governorship of California and moved to New York to practice law, "This is where it's at — not back there with those peasants."

Not surprisingly, then, his political style was always a little mechanical. As presidents go, he never had a large personal following. His strategy was always to convince just over half of the voters that he was ever so slightly preferable to the man he was running against. It didn't always work, but when it did it was as good as a landslide. And now and then, with Democratic help (as in 1972), he even won by a landslide.

It would really be interesting to know what he really thought, in retrospect, about the Watergate scandal that destroyed his presidency. Realistic as always, he would no doubt assert that his actions were "stupid." (Like Talleyrand, Nixon regarded a blunder as far worse than a crime.)

But while it was undeniably foolish to tape his own private conversations, and later on to try to protect his aides by small but undeniable obstructions of justice (not, you can be sure, the first ever committed in the Oval Office), it is possible to understand how he allowed himself to be edged, almost imperceptibly, ever closer to the abyss.

It may even be that, as with so many driven men, there was at the core of his upwardly mobile being an impulse to self-destruction. If so, it still had to compete with the powerful drive that motivated his partially successful rehabilitation in the 20 years that the Lord gave him after he stepped down from the presidency.

In historical terms, Nixon's greatest achievement was undoubtedly his dramatic reversal of America's longstanding policy toward Communist China — a stroke that inconvenienced our chief enemy, the Soviet Union, in the ongoing Cold War, but that as time passes seems less significant and even, somehow, less shrewd. Here as elsewhere, Richard Nixon was poorly served by his inability to empathize with, rather than merely note and try to cope with, the imperatives of freedom.

For the next few decades, the dominant liberal historians will of course continue to consign him to the trash heap of "bad presidents," along with Harding and Reagan. Then, however, as time lends objectivity to the analyses of new generations of historians, Nixon's sins in the Watergate affair will come to be viewed far more indulgently, and more attention will be paid to the problems of a president who had to cope with hostile media and a Congress wholly controlled by his opponents.

Those were, at least, problems of power — the arena in which Richard Nixon lived; and by whose grim rules he would wish to be judged.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You would have served "Mrs. N.M. in Maryland" and millions of boaters well if you had suggested she advise "Fred" to take a safe boating course offered by the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary or Power Squadrons in their area.

We are well into the boating season, and many boaters are at risk of losing their boats, or lives — and their guests are at risk of serious injury or loss of life — because of the lack of safe boating habits.

Members of the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary are dedicated to serving the boating public through public education programs for a nominal materials charge.

Please note the toll-free phone number on the back of the enclosed "Federal Requirements" booklet ((800) 368-5647), where people can get safety information and attend a boating safety class in their area.

Once again, Abby, you could do a tremendous service for the boating public if you would print this. You may use my name.

DAVID A. DAY, SEMINOLE, FLA.

DEAR DAVID: Thank you for an excellent suggestion. I received a number of letters concerning water safety. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter from "Mrs. N.M. in Maryland" concerning the boater who "brushed off" the life jacket question from his guest: Any guest invited aboard a vessel should be given a pre-departure orientation concerning the location and use of all safety equipment, life jackets, fire extinguishers, marine radio, etc.

The guest should also be given a basic orientation as to the operation of the vessel. What if the skipper becomes injured or otherwise incapacitated? Any person on board asking to use a life jacket ("personal flotation device", or PFD, in boating terminology) should be allowed to do so without question.

I would recommend to "Fred" that he enroll in boating safety course taught by the local Coast Guard Auxiliary, U.S. Power Squadron or other qualified boating group. With his attitude alone, Fred sounds like a menace on the water.

GARY STEWARD, PLEASANTON, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your response to "Mrs. N.M. in Maryland" concerning their day aboard a friend's boat. There are certain rules and regulations that apply to boating — the ocean doesn't care if you are in a 20-footer or the Queen Elizabeth II. I've done ocean sailing for more than 30 years, and whenever friends sailed with me, I always pointed out the location of life vests, fire extinguishers and first aid kits. The ship-to-shore radio was monitored, and guests were given instructions on how to use the "mike."

Results: Thirty years of safe, family-fun sailing. Unfortunately, the free boating courses offered by the Coast Guard are not mandatory for owning and operating a boat.

JOHN OLSSON, SANTA ANA, CALIF.

DEAR JOHN OLSSON: Everyone who operates a boat should be required to take a course and be "licensed," as automobile drivers are. All passengers should know how to operate a boat should the driver become incapacitated.

DEAR ABBY: To "Mrs. N.M. in Maryland" — we had all better believe life jackets save lives, or I wouldn't be here writing this.

It happened in Venezuela last August. There were 13 of us tourists who took a boat ride, a boat which resembled a canoe, long and narrow with an outboard motor. We sat two abreast. At one point, I thought the operator was going too fast and, before we knew it, the canoe capsized in the middle of the Carrao River, which was approximately one-half-mile wide. I could swim, but with my heart problem (I had a heart attack in Hong Kong in 1985), I soon became tired, probably from panicking, and can't remember when I was rescued.

When I regained consciousness, I was lying on the floor of the boat. Everyone else thought I was dead when they saw me floating on my back unconscious. Abby, the life jacket saved my life.

Kicky legwear: Anklets, knee-highs, over-the-knee socks

By FRANCINE PARNES
For AP Special Features

Getting women into pantyhose three decades ago was a shoe-in. Rising hemlines inspired them to shelve their cumbersome stockings plus garters and slip into tights.

But this spring, as skirt lengths once again soar, the newest hosiery hardly has you covered.

Schoolgirlish socks are fashion's kickiest legwear, and even the longest styles only reach mid-thigh.

The result is a show of legs, thanks to skimpy skirts plus short, sweet anklets, knee-highs and racy over-the-knee-socks.

Fortunately, there are also plenty of wearable alternatives that are more covered-up than kinky. Pretty and pastel, today's sheer pantyhose merely whispers of pale hues, and are perfectly matched to a soft-colored miniskirt or dress.

"As skirts have gotten shorter, there is a new focus on the bare leg," says Kathryn Cordes, public relations director for Hanes hosiery in New York. "We've developed a family of delicate, sheer powdery washed pantyhose, and they key into the lightweight fabrics of ready-to-wear."

Hanes Silk Reflections come in barely there neutrals such as sand, stone, mushroom and pink champagne. The nylon-spandex pantyhose runs about $4.95 to $7.50.

Tights in soft patterns, such as gauzes and nets, offer plenty of textural interest. CK Calvin Klein's opaque tights get a leg up with antique lace, soft lattice and pointelle. They come in muted shades with poetic names like coral sand, seashell, sea gull and dove.

At Hue, "Our answer to sheers is lace, pebble stitch, cotton floral and lightweight opaque," says Lisa Ferraro, public relations spokesperson in New York. "They're much more neutral legwear colors, which are right with all the airy spring clothes such as bare slip dresses."

In nylon-Lycra or cotton-Lycra, about $12.50, Hue tights come in a soft palette of ivory, sage and straw.

Meanwhile, for the quickest, easiest update, slide on a pair of socks.

Women's sock sales have shot up 216 percent in the past 10 years, says Frank Oswald, marketing consultant for du Pont in New York, which manufactures fiber for hosiery. "No question about it, that's a huge jump. As American dress has gone casual, socks have been the beneficiary of that trend."

At Hot Sox, "the biggest change in spring legwear is coming from socks of any length," says Goodman. "If you have white and black socks in your wardrobe of several different heights, you'll be ready to improvise any outfit and you're right on the trend."

Youthful and playful, the new styles recall socks from an age when we could measure our years in single digits. That's why they're best friends with sturdy oxfords, demure Mary Janes and back-to-school saddle shoes. On young models and club ingenues, bobby socks or sports socks with flip-flops can look schoolgirlish yet sexy, nice yet naughty.

"Ankle socks are the most important item we're offering," says Ferraro of Hue. "You can wear them in a number of ways, so we anticipate they will be very strong sellers."

While junior customers are adding penny loafers and a babydoll dress, traditionalists might reach for flat sandals, a crisp white shirt, fitted blazer and a skirt of any length, says Ferraro. Or long, sheer vintage-inspired skirts with textured ankle socks.

"Once people began wearing socks with Birkenstocks," Ferraro explains, "the trend was launched. Whereas it used to be a definite fashion no-no, now any sandal looks more forward with a sock."

Hue offers lightweight cotton-Lycra anklets in herringbone, ribbed styles, lace and pinstripes, from $5 to $7 at Macy's, Bloomingdale's, Nordstrom and Lord & Taylor. They come in 10 colors, but white seems just right for summer.

"It's the most important color, the most versatile," says Ferraro. "They're not baggy socks, not too athletic-looking or chunky. Especially in white, the mood is schoolgirlish and cute."

For the more enterprising, over-the-knee opaque socks, typically in black, offer a sexy glimpse of thigh. Available from DKNY, CK Calvin Klein, Hot Sox and Hanes Her Way, they look best with a short, flared skirt.

"Our opaque thigh-highs are selling out wherever they're sold," says Goodman of Hot Sox.

"They're made for a younger, fashion-forward college consumer or early career consumer who can wear short skirts, for someone whose legs are firm and flawless.

"They can even slouch a bit, so you don't have to keep pulling them up and pulling them up. They're definitely not meant to stay up perfectly. They're more of a sportswear item, simply an extension of a knee sock."

Benefit barrel race set to help CP victim

Family needs funds to help with purchase of van lift, other needs

A benefit barrel race to help Danielle Joiner, a little local girl with cerebral palsy obtain a van lift is scheduled for May 28 at 2 p. m. at the Pampa Rodeo Arena.

"She's the prettiest little girl you ever saw," said Christy Oxley, a friend of the family's who is also helping out.

With a supportive family and friends behind her, the idea to hold a benefit barrel race to raise money needed for a van lift belonged to one of Danielle's aunts who wishes not to be named.

Not only will the money be used to buy a van lift but a bath chair as well. It will also be used to help with the travel expenses which will incur when her parents take her to the Shriners' Hospital in Dallas.

Even though the van lift and bath chair would help Danielle and her family a great deal, their insurance won't cover the lift or the chair because the insurance company deems them as unnecessary items. Nor is the family eligible for government assistance because Danielle's parents make over the qualifying amount.

The van lift would help Danielle's parents get her in and out of the vehicle much easier.

The bath chair is needed, her aunt says, because, "she usually gets sick from ear infections" when she is bathed in the tub.

Even though they are raising money to help purchase these items, her aunt said any additional equipment, whether new or used, that people would like to donate would be very much appreciated.

In addition, her aunt is selling raffle tickets raise money.

For those interested in helping Danielle or for more information on the barrel race benefit, call 665-7150.

The event is open to youth 12 and under, juniors 13 to 18; as well as adults. All the food will be donated and all money made from the concessions will be donated to Danielle.

The Hamburger Station and Chaney's Cafe will also be helping out with cash prizes.

A benefit barrel race will be held Saturday, May 28 to help six-year-old cerebral palsy patient Danielle Joiner. Funds are needed to help with a variety of expenses.

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — John Daly made a 5-foot birdie putt on No. 18 for a one-stroke victory over Nolan Henke and Brian Henninger in the BellSouth Classic on Sunday.

Daly, the 1991 PGA winner who returned to the PGA Tour in March after a three-month suspension and a stay in a treatment center for alcoholism, had an even-par 72 for a 14-under 274 total on the Atlanta Country Club course. He earned $216,000 for his first victory since the 1992 B.C. Open.

Henke shot a 69 and Henninger had a 71.

PLYMOUTH, England (AP) — Seve Ballesteros shot a 2-under-par 70 for a three-stroke victory over Nick Faldo in the Benson and Hedges Open on Sunday. The Spaniard, who earned $163,000 for his first victory since the 1992 Balearic Open, had a 9-under 281 total on the St. Mellion course. Faldo also had a 70.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Dale Douglass and Charles Coady shot an 8-under-par 64 for a one-stroke victory in the Legends of Golf better-ball tournament Sunday. Douglass and Coady, who split $200,000, had a 28-under 188 total on the Barton Creek course. Chi Chi Rodriguez-Jim Dent and Bob Murphy-Jim Colbert closed with 63s to tie for second.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Laura Davies shot a 4-under-par 68 for a one-stroke victory over Meg Mallon in the Sara Lee Classic on Sunday. Davies, who earned $78,750 for her second victory of the year, had a 13-under 203 total on the Hermitage course. Mallon shot a 69.

BOXING

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Julio Cesar Chavez regained his WBC super welterweight title after he was forced to quit because of a head butt with three seconds left in the eighth round of Saturday night's fight against Frankie Randall.

A point taken away from Randall for the head butt was the deciding factor as Chavez won by one point on one scorecard and three on another. A third judge had Randall ahead by a point. Chavez avenged the only loss in his 92-fight career, taking back the title Randall won in a split decision Jan. 29.

Gerald McClellan stopped Julian Jackson in the first round to retain the WBC middleweight championship. In unanimous decisions, Terry Norris regained the WBC super welterweight title from Simon Brown, James Leija took Azumah Nelson's WBC super featherweight title and Ricardo Lopez defended his WBC strawweight title against Kermin Guardia.

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Thailand's Pichet Sibangprachan defended his IBF flyweight title Sunday with a split decision over Mexico's Jose Zepeda.

Robitaille and Joe Sakic gave Canada a 2-0 advantage in the shootout, but Jari Kurri and Mikko Makela countered for Finland to force a sixth round. Canada's Rob Brind'Amour tied the game with 4:43 left in the third period after Esa Keskinen opened the scoring early in the period.

Hawks soar past Heat; Knicks, Suns triumph

By The Associated Press

A 2-1 series lead wasn't enough for Miami. Eighteen and 15-point leads weren't enough for Houston and Chicago. Sunday was Comeback Day in the NBA playoffs.

The Atlanta Hawks, down 2-1 to the Heat despite being the No. 1 seed in the Eastern Conference, avoided the upset bug that stung top-seeded Seattle in the West, beating Miami 102-91 Sunday to advance to the next round against Indiana.

Mookie Blaylock had 13 points, 18 assists, eight rebounds and four steals for the Hawks. With a loss, they would have joined the SuperSonics as the only No. 1 seeds ever to lose in the first round.

"He had a sensational game," teammate Kevin Willis said of Blaylock. "Defense, assists, he did it all. He was incredible."

The comebacks by Phoenix and New York in the openers of their conference semifinals were just as unlikely, with the Suns winning 91-87 at Houston and New York edging the Bulls 90-86.

Blaylock capped a late first-half surge that gave the Hawks a 54-44 lead with a desperation 3-pointer with 2.4 seconds left, hitting from just over the half-court line.

"We just wanted to go out and play our game," Blaylock said. "We went out a couple of times and played their game and the result was a win for them."

Willis had 24 points and 12 rebounds for the Hawks, who begin a best-of-7 series with Indiana on Tuesday. Denver, which pulled the upset of Seattle on Saturday, opens at Utah on the same night.

Knicks 90, Bulls 86

New York trailed 67-52 with 3:15 left in the third quarter, then outscored Chicago 38-19 the rest of the way.

Anthony Mason made two big plays in the final minute — a breakaway layup with 48 seconds left that gave the Knicks their first lead since the first quarter and an offensive rebound with 8.2 seconds left.

Mason took a long pass from John Starks ahead of the Chicago defense and scored, giving the Knicks an 88-86 lead. After a miss by the Bulls, New York's Greg Anthony grazed the rim on a shot just as the 24-second clock expired, and Mason rebounded, setting up two clinching free throws by Starks.

"The only way we weren't going to get the ball is if the refs thought the ball didn't hit the rim," Mason said. "They thought the play was over, but I kept going."

The Bulls, who have eliminated the Knicks from the playoffs three straight years en route to the NBA title, were led by Scottie Pippen with 24 points, although he missed 10 of 13 shots in the second half.

"I think the Knicks realize that we're going to be a much tougher opponent than everyone anticipated," Pippen said. "But even if they win four games from us, they'll know they've been in a tough series."

Suns 91, Rockets 87

Kevin Johnson had nine points through three quarters, then scored 11 in the fourth as Phoenix won the opener of a Western Conference semifinal.

Houston's 39-21 first-half lead was cut to 45-37 by halftime. The Suns used a 15-4 run at the start of the third quarter to get back in the game and a 13-0 fourth-quarter surge to take the lead for good.

"I don't think they blew it," said Charles Barkley, who scored 21 points for the Suns. "They were going at a hellacious pace in the first half. We started making some shots and we were very lucky to be down only eight points at halftime."

Hakeem Olajuwon had 36 points and 16 rebounds for Houston.

The game featured a barrage of 3-pointers, with Phoenix (9-for-23) breaking the NBA playoff record of 20 attempts. The Rockets and Suns also combined for most 3-point attempts (42), breaking the playoff mark of 34 set by Houston and the Los Angeles Lakers in 1991.

The Rockets, who had the homecourt advantage throughout the playoffs following Seattle's loss, now have lost it in this series.

"It was a chess game and they've already got the queen," Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "It's bad if your guys don't play chess."

Stars fall in Vancouver

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Vancouver Canucks are one victory away from the Western Conference finals.

Sergio Momesso scored at 11:01 of overtime Sunday to give the Canucks a 2-1 victory over the Dallas Stars and a 3-1 lead in the series.

"This is real nice because we're in the second round and we're looking to go further," he said in the noisy dressing room. "As long as we win, it doesn't matter who scores."

Momesso beat Dallas netminder Andy Moog with a high shot after a blast by Jyrki Lumme was blocked by the Dallas defense.

The Canucks can advance to the conference final by winning Game 5 of the best-of-7 set Tuesday at the Pacific Coliseum.

Vancouver has won four consecutive overtimes in the 1994 playoffs. The record is 10 by Montreal when the Canadiens won the Stanley Cup last spring.

Momesso has been all smiles since returning home last Thursday to be with wife Noella, son Stephane and baby Natalia. The grin grew even wider after Game 4.

"The puck was laying there after the shot," he said. "I just turned around and shot it towards the net."

"It caught the top-hand corner. It's a great feeling because we didn't want Dallas to take this victory from us."

Teammates mobbed Momesso after the goal while fans roared their approval of a player they often jeer. The Montreal-born Momesso has been the target of unhappy fans, perhaps because of his lumbering skating style and penchant for unnecessary penalties.

He praised Vancouver goalie Kirk McLean, who faced 38 shots and seven in overtime, saying "he won that game for us. It's a great relief because Dallas was getting a lot of chances."

Trevor Linden scored for the Canucks in the first period — he leads all playoff shooters with eight goals — and Brent Gilchrist notched the tying goal for Dallas in the second.

Dallas outshot the Canucks 38-34 (7-4 in overtime) as the Stars attempted to win two straight after losing twice in Texas.

"We have them in a stranglehold now and have to squeeze," said McLean. "Maybe Calgary let us off the hook (in the last series)."

Vancouver won three straight overtime games in the last series against Calgary after the Flames led 3-1.

"We're not going to roll over," said Dallas defenseman Craig Ludwig. "We have a lot of guys who have been in this position before."

"We're very similar teams. We'd like to get the lead for a change."

Winfield dinger downs Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — After more than 20 years of major-league baseball, Dave Winfield doesn't worry about pressure situations.

Winfield hit a sixth-inning home run Sunday, breaking open a 2-2 tie and leading the Minnesota Twins past the Texas Rangers, 5-2.

"There was nothing unusual about the situation. Man on base, tight game and we needed a run," said Winfield, who turns 43 this year.

"I crushed the ball but the center fielder went back like he had a chance on it," Winfield said. "It felt good. It was my first homer ever here."

Winfield's 456th career home run came on a high fastball from Kevin Brown (2-5) and scored Alex Cole, who led off the sixth with a single. The 407-footer was Winfield's third of the season.

Winfield, 18th on the major leagues' all-time home run list, hit his fifth home run against Brown and improved to 12-for-31 lifetime against him.

"He's a future Hall of Famer, that's for sure," Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said. "With the game on the line, a money player like that will beat you if you let him."

Scott Erickson, who had a no-hitter at Milwaukee on April 27, picked up the victory. He improved to 3-4 after pitching his second complete game victory with a seven-hitter.

Erickson struck out six and walked two to help the Twins to their fifth victory in their last seven games.

"I was just trying to get ahead of the batters," Erickson said. "I felt strong. The defense did a good job and got a couple of double plays (two) I didn't think the guys were going to turn."

Matt Walbeck gave the Twins a 5-2 lead with his second homer of the year in the seventh.

Brown took the loss, allowing nine hits over eight innings with three strikeouts and a walk.

"There were good points and bad points," Brown said. "On a couple of pitches, the location wasn't where I wanted it. Today they took advantage of my mistakes."

Johnson wooed by eight teams

By DENNE FREEMAN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — How much is Jimmy Johnson in demand? The ex-coach of the Dallas Cowboys says he has received offers to coach almost one-third of the teams in the NFL.

"I had two offers for this year and I've had six offers for next year," he said Sunday night. "I definitely want to coach next year, but I intend to honor my broadcast commitments for this season."

He will appear on HBO and the Fox network as an NFL commentator.

ment with owner Jerry Jones, spoke at the opening of a sandwich shop in which he is part-owner.

Numerous club officials, players and coaches showed up for the bash, including quarterback Troy Aikman and defensive tackle Russell Maryland. Jones didn't attend.

Johnson said he plans to travel to Dallas during the season to do a Monday radio and television program from the city where he won two Super Bowl championships.

"I guess you're going to be seeing a lot of me this fall," he said.

Johnson said he believed his replacement, Barry Switzer, will do fine in his first year of NFL coaching.

"He'll be all right as long as he doesn't make any suggestions," he said. "This is a pretty good football machine here, and if he just lets the machine run he'll be all right. This team is still very capable of winning big football games."

Johnson said he knows the exact moment he will miss being the Cowboys' coach.

"It's going to come when the Cowboys win a real big game," he said. "I'll miss being there. Because when you win big games I know how much work you've had to put into it to win that game. I'll miss being there when that happens — and it will happen."

Rockne player O'Boyle dies

WHEELING, Ill. (AP) — Harry O'Boyle, who played on Knute Rockne's 1924 national championship team at Notre Dame and later for two NFL teams, has died.

O'Boyle, who went on to become a lawyer and an executive for General Motors Corp., died of cancer Thursday at a nursing home in Wheeling. He was 89.

As a sophomore in 1924, O'Boyle played in the backfield with the famous "Four Horsemen," Jim Crowley, Elmer Layden, Don Miller and Harry Stuhldreher. The team went 10-0, including a 27-10 victory over Stanford in the Rose Bowl, to capture the school's first national title.

"He was what was known as a triple threat, being a good kicker, passer and runner," Rockne once said of the 5-foot-9, 166-pound running back. "His chief characteristics were determination and fight, counterbalanced with smartness, intellect and head work."

History made despite crazy numbers

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — When this baseball game was over, it was tough to tell the losers from the winners — even though the final score was 19-0.

The Colorado Silver Bullets proved Sunday that success doesn't always come on the field. They became the first all-female team in history to take on a professional men's team.

The outcome was never in doubt, as the Northern League All-Stars — whose roster included former major league stars Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd and Leon Durham — pounded out 21 hits against four Colorado pitchers.

Meanwhile, the Silver Bullets managed only two singles and committed six errors. But when it was over, no one seemed to pay too much attention to the statistics.

Many of the 8,179 fans who came to watch the Mother's Day matinee realized they were watching history being made. For some young fans, it was a watershed event.

"I think it gives young girls like me a chance to have role models," said 11-year-old Rachel Hedrick, who stayed to the end with her sister, Kristen, 15, and their father, David.

Pam Schaffrath, 22, started in center field and before the game was an inning old, she had already made a great running catch on a long fly ball to deep left-center.

"During the Star Spangled Banner I looked around and I couldn't believe what I was doing," she said.

The game itself was not a pretty sight, given the Silver Bullets' six errors — four by shortstop Shae Sloan.

Meanwhile, the All-Stars rapped out three home runs and eight doubles.

"I'm disappointed but not with the loss," said Silver Bullets manager Phil Niekro. "I am disappointed with the way we didn't catch the ball or throw the ball like we can today."

"We really had no place playing a team like that," he said. "But you've got to try. We can only go up from here."

Despite getting crushed by the All-Stars, the Colorado players were all smiles as they signed autographs and chatted with fans around their dugout after the blowout. "This isn't a setback," said Silver Bullets pitcher Lisa Martinez, who was roughed up for seven unearned runs in 2 2-3 innings.

"It's better to start off poorly and get better, rather than to start off spectacularly and go down from there."

Boyd, a former Boston Red Sox hurler who started for the All-Stars, put it in perspective.

"This was special. I'm just glad I could be a part of it. It was beautiful."

The opening pitch was thrown out by Jean Eastman, 69, who played in the All-American Women's Baseball League in the 1940s. The league was made famous by the hit movie "A League of Their Own."

"I told the girls to just enjoy it," she said. "This is fantastic. This is the highlight of their life that they will remember 50 years from today."

The Silver Bullets will play a 50-game schedule this year as an affiliate of the Northern League, which is based in Burnsville, Minn.

They next face the Red Mountain Bandits, a semipro team, in Tempe, Ariz., on May 13.

Five inducted into hoop Hall of Fame

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Louisville coach Denny Crum didn't think twice when asked what Hall of Famer he wanted as an escort when he goes into the Basketball Hall of Fame.

He picked John Wooden. "When you play for someone and then coach under him and take the things that you learned from him and have success, you want him to be part of it," Crum said.

"He was born to coach," said Wooden, the only person enshrined as a player and a coach who made his first trip back to the Hall of Fame in nearly 20 years to honor Crum.

Also inducted Sunday were coaches Chuck Daly of the New Jersey Nets and Italian great Cesare Rubini, and players Carol Blazejowski, the most prolific scorer in the history of the women's game, and Buddy Jeanette, a standout backcourt player in the 1930s and 1940s.

Crum was Wooden's graduate assistant and freshman coach after his playing days. After seven years of high school and junior college coaching, he returned as Wooden's top assistant and recruiter in 1967 and stayed until moving to Louisville in 1971.

In 23 years at Louisville, Crum's teams have won more than 73 percent of their games and NCAA championships in 1980 and 1986.

More than two dozen of Crum's former players, and he has sent 22 on to the pros, chartered a plane to attend the enshrinement ceremonies.

Daly's induction was bitter-sweet, coming on the heels of the Nets' elimination from the NBA playoffs by the New York Knicks on Friday.

The man with the knack of taking faltering teams and turning them into contenders began coaching in 1955 at Punxsutawney, Pa., High School.

He guided Penn to four Ivy League titles in the 1970s and in 1983 took over the Detroit Pistons, who had never had consecutive winning seasons, and led them to NBA championships in 1989 and 1990. Perhaps his easiest assignment was coaching the pro-laden United States to the 1992 Olympic title at Barcelona.

Blazejowski, 37, is the youngest person and fourth woman to be enshrined. In four years at Montclair, N.J., State, she scored 3,199 points, averaging 31.7 a game.

"The Blaze," who learned the game playing against guys on the playgrounds, never had any Hall of Fame dreams.

In the 1970s, "there were two things you couldn't do as a female — make it to the NBA and the Hall of Fame," said Blazejowski, now a director of consumer products for the NBA.

"This is the tops," said Jeanette, 76, who played on nine championship teams in four cities — Detroit, Sheboygan, Fort Wayne and Baltimore — during a 10-year pro career beginning in 1938.

He was most valuable player in the old National Basketball League three times and once in the American Basketball League and later coached at Georgetown before returning to Baltimore as coach and general manager of the Bullets. He retired in 1967.

Rookie hurler "slurves" to aceddom

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Rangers rookie Rick Helling brings a lot more to the mound than a decent fastball and a wicked slider he calls "a sharp slurve."

Although 23 and a veteran of only six major-league starts, Helling already has shown a mix of confidence, poise and savvy expected from much more experienced pitchers while remaining humble.

That's the stuff aces are made of, and so far it's a label Helling seems ready to claim on the pitching-weak Rangers. He's 3-0 with a 3.26 ERA and is waiting to get a feel for his slurve.

"I don't even like to think where we'd be without him," Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said after Helling threw a complete game shutout Friday in a 7-0 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

"That was definitely an odd occurrence for me," said Helling, who got four groundball double plays and struck out only two. "I'm mostly a fly ball, strikeout pitcher."

Yet, he proved he's really a pitcher, not just a thrower like many players his age.

"Ever since high school, I've had a pretty good idea how to pitch hitters," Helling said.

"There's a lot of guys who have better stuff than me down in the minor leagues. The difference is, I know how to use all my pitches effectively."

Helling is willing to throw his fastball, curve, slider or changeup at any time in the count. He's also the type who wants the ball in big-game situations.

"Pressure is really nothing new to me," said Helling, a member of the 1991 U.S. Pan Am Games team and the 1992 U.S. Olympic team. "I've always been a money player in whatever sport it was."

The Rangers made Helling the 22nd overall pick in the 1992 amateur draft after he pitched a year at Stanford. After facing gold medal winner Cuba twice in the Olympics, he made three impressive starts at Class A Charlotte.

He began last season as Class AA Tulsa and after striking out 188 in 177 innings, he made two solid starts at Class AAA Oklahoma City.

Helling went to spring training this season hoping to become Texas' third, fourth or fifth starter, but expected those jobs to go to veterans Roger Pavlik, Bruce Hurst and Jack Armstrong.

Helling didn't help his case with several admittedly "so-so" outings and he almost was sent to the minor-league camp when he had his breakthrough performance against the Houston Astros.

"That was the first time all spring I really had my slider," Helling said. "I threw some 2-0, 3-0, 3-1 sliders for strikes. That really showed (pitching coach Claude Osteen) and Kevin that I know what I'm doing out there."

Helling made the club, although he technically began the season on the minor-league roster. He was up for his first spot in the rotation and has become the only constant on an unpredictable staff.

"As of right now, things just really seem to be working out in my favor," said Helling, who next pitches Wednesday against California.

"As long as I keep pitching well, I'll be here for a little while."

Litke: Where's Secretariat when you need him?

By JIM LITKE
AP Sports Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Barely 12 hours after the Kentucky Derby had unmasked Holy Bull as yet one more Triple Crown pretender, rival trainer D. Wayne Lukas peered out from under the bill of baseball cap pulled low, laughed ruefully and said they don't make thoroughbreds like they used to. If only he were kidding.

No game, save tennis perhaps, needs a superstar as badly as horse racing. But after a wet track and a flat-footed start conspired to trip up the heavily favored gray in Saturday's most recent run for the roses, it was clear the wait would not end with this crop of 3-year-olds.

Go For Gin, a modest bay colt with the talent to match, stole the front-running trip that was supposed to have been Holy Bull's and the headlines that went along with it. The 2-1 favorite, Bull finished a nearly forgotten 12th.

"How long has it been since a horse came along that made a splash, a real splash?" repeated Lukas, who won his only Derby five years ago with the filly Winning Colors and sent Tabasco Cat out to a disappointing sixth-place finish on this go-round.

"Secretariat," he said without waiting for an answer. "1973."

"He was so big, so good at drawing attention to himself . . . at firing up the public's imagination that he was on the cover of Time. Who knows when — or if — our sport will see something like that again."

A few moments later, not far from Lukas' barn, a few partisans tried to come up with an answer on this fast-warming Sunday morning.

"Forget Time magazine," one of them said finally. "When was the last time a Kentucky Derby horse even made the cover of Sports Illustrated? I won't swear to it, but I think it was Gato Del Sol in 1982."

By now, even casual followers of the racket know it has been 15 years since the favorite — Spectacular Bid in 1979 — won the Derby. And one year longer than that since Affirmed beat Alydar in the Derby and twice more in the ensuing six weeks to wrap up one of the best-ever rivalries in American sport by laying claim to the Triple Crown.

During that stretch, a few colts have raised the sport's pulse heading into the Derby, and a few others have produced heart-pounding wins late in the afternoon on the first Saturday in May. But they have lacked either the drawing power or the staying power necessary to build on a following that Lukas said was already so committed "that they'd come out even if we start racing camels."

The biggest bust of the last decade was probably the French invader Arazi, who won the Breeder's Cup Juvenile in November, 1991, with a closing move worthy of Secretariat himself and then became a recluse until shortly before his arrival at Churchill Downs the following spring. The hubbub, however, was matched only by the eventual letdown as Arazi finished eighth that year to Lil E. Tee.

The closest any thoroughbred came by the measure of accomplishment was the smallish, dark Sunday Silence, who won both the Derby and the Preakness by outdueling a rangier, much more handsome chestnut named Easy Goer. But when the Charlie Whittingham-trained entry melted over the Belmont's classic 1 1/2-mile distance in mid-June of that year so did the focus on thoroughbred racing.

Out by the barns Sunday, Holy Bull's trainer, Jimmy Roll, continued to insist that the attention lavished on his horse coming up to the race was legitimate.

"I was very disappointed, no doubt about it," Roll said. "But it's not like he broke good, made the lead and ran out of gas. If he did that, you'd say that he wasn't good enough. That's not the case. . . . I'm just sorry that people didn't get to see the real Holy Bull."

So is just about everybody else, perhaps even the people who finished ahead of him Saturday and are likely to finish behind him in the May 21 Preakness.

The people who really care about the industry know that bedrock of horse racing — gamblers — are increasingly being mined by everybody from state governments to boiler-room operators with 800 numbers.

And they also understand that unless that base widens to include casual spectators — the three-times a year crowd that a Triple Crown pursuit builds — the sport has nowhere to go but down.

"The funny thing how we're reacting," Lukas said. "A while ago, we used the prep races to bring horses up to the Derby. But now, some of the preps have become so big and so rich that people point their horses at those races and think damn the consequences."

"Another thing is that we're breeding fewer and fewer horses for the classic distances. I don't know where we start to reverse those trends."

A few moments later, Go For Gin's trainer, Nick Zito, proposed one measure. "The horses that get Triple Crowns come along once in a lifetime," he said. "Maybe we all ought to start praying right now."

Millionaire businessman claims victory in Panama presidential race

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press Writer

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A millionaire businessman was assured victory as Panama's new president today in the first election since the U.S. invasion five years ago.

Ernesto Perez Balladares, who managed the campaign of Gen. Manuel Noriega's hand-picked candidate during the ill-fated and violent 1989 elections, distanced himself from the former strongman during his campaign and said he opposed a return to militarism.

"Now we begin to construct together, regardless of our different political groups, the future of the nation," Perez Balladares said after declaring victory late Sunday. With almost two-thirds of the vote counted, Perez Balladares, known as "Toro" or Bull for his burly build, was leading with more than 33 percent, the independent Electoral Tribunal said.

Salsa singer-actor Ruben Blades, in third place with 18 percent of the vote, said he would not concede defeat until the final numbers were in. But he admitted things did not look good for his 2-year-old Papa Egoro, or "Mother Earth" party.

"Whoever wins the election can be sure we will accept the decision of the people," he said. "We are not an opposition group, but a party of proposals."

There was no immediate reaction from the apparent No. 2 finisher, Mireya Moscoso, widow of the late Arnulfo Arias de la Madrid, a popular president elected three times and thrown out every time by coups. The ruling Arnulfista Party's candidate had 28 percent of the vote.

Final results were expected today. Under Panamanian law, an absolute majority is not required for victory: Whoever gets the most votes wins.

Voter turnout was estimated at more than 70 percent. Thousands lined up patiently under cloudy skies at scores of voting stations around the capital.

The tribunal said no violence was reported and balloting went quickly and smoothly. Former President Carter was among some 1,200 international and Panamanian observers on hand. He had been among those who denounced the previous election in 1989 as fraudulent.

Two people were arrested for election law violations. It was the first time Panamanians had voted for a president since the 1989 contest, which Noriega annulled when it became obvious that his candidate, Carlos Duque, would lose.

Seven months later, the U.S. invaded Panama, captured Noriega and took him to the United States for prosecution on drug trafficking charges. Noriega is serving a 40-year sentence in a federal prison in Miami.

Perez Balladares directed Duque's campaign. The apparent winner, Guillermo Endara, and his two vice presidential candidates were beaten up on Election Day by street thugs directed by Noriega.

Endara was later sworn into office on a U.S. military base during the invasion. He did not run for re-election because Panamanian law limits presidents to one five-year term.

During his campaign, Perez Balladares emphasized his relationship with Gen. Omar Torrijos, the late populist dictator who remains a hero among the poor for his far-reaching social programs. Torrijos was killed in an air crash in 1981.

Perez Balladares, 47, is a wealthy businessman who served in the ministries of treasury and economic policies and planning under Torrijos.

Some 1.4 million of Panama's 2.5 million citizens were registered to vote in Sunday's election. In addition to electing a president, they were choosing two vice presidents, 71 representatives, 67 mayors, 511 magistrates and 24 local council members.

Ruben Dario Carles, a former government comptroller who has called for renegotiation of the Panama Canal treaties to allow the U.S. military to keep its bases in Panama after the end of the century, was in fourth place with 16.7 percent of the vote.

The other three candidates garnered less than 2 percent each.

Desk and Derrick members prepare for activities in coming year

Pampa Desk and Derrick Club members have recuperated from their hosting of the Region V Association of Desk and Derrick Clubs meeting three weeks ago in Pampa, but that does not mean their activities are over.

Elaine McDowell, office manager of W-O Operating Co., is serving as a Region V director. At the Region V meeting, she presided over all the business sessions at the three-day meeting held April 22-24, including hosting a breakfast meeting to honor all presidents in attendance.

"It was a busy time for all of us [the Pampa D&D members]," McDowell said. "By the time it was over, we were all exhausted and spent the next week recuperating."

"The next week" included the Pampa club's regular monthly meeting with State Rep. Warren Chisum as speaker. Those monthly meetings will continue throughout the year as various members prepare for other upcoming ADDC meetings.

On July 30, there will be the 1994 Town Hall session in Roswell, N.M. In September, first place winners in contest categories announced at the Region V meeting will compete with the winners from the seven other ADDC regions for the Aimee Awards at the International ADDC convention in Evansville, Ind. In December, there will be an officers-elect meeting. Then, next May, the Region V meeting will be held in Farmington, N.M.

Diane Lumley, who served as 1993 president of Pampa Desk and Derrick, tied for first place in the President's Letter category at the Region V meeting. Her letter will compete at the International ADDC meeting. Lumley is employed with W-O Operating.

McDowell, who lives in Miami, is one of three Pampa club members who participated in various leading positions at the Region V meeting. In addition to presiding over the business sessions, she participated in an open forum conducted by association officers.

"Desk and Derrick is important to me for the education I receive about our industry as well as the professionalism that is portrayed from the club level to the association level," she said.

Doris Odom, a former Pampa resident employed with Glo-Valve Service and Testing in Elk City, Okla., is serving as second vice president of ADDC. At the Region V meeting, she introduced awards luncheon speaker Lynne Grose of Calgary, Alberta, Canada, who is the ADDC president.

Murrel Dean Jones of Borger served as general arrangements chairman for the Region V meeting and helped welcome the more than 120 members who attended from West Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma. Jones is retired as executive secretary from Blade Oil Co. and now works in the family business, F&M Enterprises, Inc.

The Pampa D&D Club consists of 34 members from Pampa, Borger, Miami, Perryton and Elk City, Okla.

McDowell graduated from Paducah High School and attended Texas Tech University and West Texas State University at Canyon.

At the Pampa club level, she has been immediate past president, 1991; president, 1990; and chairman of the officers elect meeting, 1991. In addition, she has served on committees for special projects, welcoming committee, Desk and Derrick Journal advertising, communications training, bulletin, Sunshine, photography, scrapbook, field trips and presidential advisor.

At the association level, McDowell served as co-chairman for the 1989 convention public relations and was member of the Convention Distribution Committee. In 1991 she was the Region V representative to the Long Range Planning Committee, and in 1993 she was the Region V representative to the Contest Committee.

A native of Oklahoma, Odom attended Oklahoma University Extension Service and Draughton's School of Business. In 1968 she and her husband Lynn formed Glo-Valve. In 1991, the company headquarters was moved back to Elk City, where she serves as office administrator and is responsible for all accounting functions of the company.

A member of the Pampa club since 1979, she has served as club president and has become active at the ADDC level. In 1983, she was Region V representative on the Public Relations Committee and the Desk and Derrick Journal in 1985 and 1987.

In 1986, Odom was Region V director. Other ADDC positions have included serving as corresponding secretary, 1987; D&D Journal Study Committee chairman, 1988; association convention general arrangements chairman, 1989; and association treasurer, 1993.

Jones has been employed in the petroleum industry since 1954. She graduated from high school in Lubbock and is a graduate of the Hutchinson County Business School. She has been a Desk and Derrick member for more than 30 years, in both the Borger and Pampa clubs.

At the local club level, she has served as president of the Borger D&D (the first member to serve three terms in that position), vice president, secretary and treasurer. She has chaired all committees, served as club bulletin editor three times, chaired the Industry Appreciation Banquet three times and installed officers for several clubs in Region V.

At the regional and association level, Jones was Region V director in 1974 and was ADDC first vice president in 1978. Rocky Mountain National Park symbol of pollution problems

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — Ill winds are blowing through Rocky Mountain National Park.

More than two dozen times last year, Denver's polluted air flowed 60 miles northwest and seeped into this crown jewel of the national park system, a pristine wilderness that is home to 14,000-foot peaks and bugling elk. Once the air quality became dangerous enough to set off alarms at park headquarters.

Now visitors to many parks nationwide are being warned of potential health hazards from air pollution, and scientists say the flora and fauna that make the parks treasures are in danger.

"People think when they go to a national park they are leaving the pollution behind, but they may not be," said John Christiano, chief of the Denver-based air quality division of the National Park Service.

The list of parks affected by pollution such as acid rain and ozone reads like a "Who's Who": California's Sequoia National Park; Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona; Mount Rainier National Park in Washington; the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee; and Big Bend National Park in Texas, among others.

Parks officials are discussing the best ways to warn people with health problems when pollution reaches dangerous levels, so they can restrict their hiking, climbing, biking and exercise — the very activities that draw people to the mountains.

"We may have times when we have to post bad-air warnings and warn people not to come up," said Homer Rouse, superintendent of Rocky Mountain National Park, which attracts about 3 million visitors per year.

Several other parks already post regular air quality warnings, Christiano said, including Shenandoah National Park near Washington, D.C. — which gets 2 million visitors per year — and Acadia National Park in Maine.

At Rocky Mountain National Park, ozone levels exceeded 80 parts per billion more than 120 times during the past six years. On July 2, 1993, it hit 127 ppb.

At 80 parts per billion ozone can cause headaches, chest pains, weakness and labored breathing, but warnings are not posted until it goes over 120.

"If it affects human beings, imagine what it does to plants and animals," said Ellen Porter of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

At other parks, pollution is making fish hatch fewer eggs, NPS ecologist Kathy Tonnessen said. And the insects fish eat are being driven away by acid rain as it sweeps through park streams, she said.

Bruce Nash, an NPS biologist in Denver, said last week that the green and yellow leaves on healthy plants are turning strange colors in some parks, and some of the plants shed their leaves in midsummer instead of fall.

Man arrested in beating death of child

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A San Antonio man was arrested Sunday on capital murder charges in the beating death of his fiancée's 11-year-old sister, police said.

Jonathan Armstrong, 20, was held without bond Sunday in the San Antonio jail.

Armstrong is accused of using a baseball bat to beat to death Sarah Anne Whitmore, said Sgt. Joe MacKay of the San Antonio Police Department's homicide division.

Armstrong, the fiance of 19-year-old Patricia Whitmore, Sarah Whitmore's sister, lived with the two and their parents at the Whitmore's house.

MacKay said that sometime after 4 a.m. Sunday, Armstrong lured Sarah Whitmore out of the house and over to the home of his friend.

"We believe he attempted to sexually assault her and that she attempted to resist, at which point he took the bat and hit her over the head repeatedly until she died," MacKay said.

Police arrested Armstrong without incident later Sunday morning.

An autopsy is pending with the Bexar County Medical Examiner's Office.
