PAMPA — A Gray County deputy was injured early Sunday morning while breaking up a fight which erupted at the conclusion of the rodeo dance.

Wade Bentley was slugged in the mouth about 1:10 a.m. Sunday as he attempted to break up two fighting men.

Arrested and charged with aggravated assault on a peace officer, a third degree felony, was Marty McFall, 20, of Fritch. McFall was released on $3,000 bond, said Justice of the Peace Bob Muns.

Bentley received seven stitches to his mouth, said Chief Deputy Buck Williams. Bentley is not expected to miss work due to the injury, he said.

Five or six fights broke out near the end of the dance which followed the Top O' Texas Rodeo.

"It was spontaneous, just breaking out here, there and yonder," Williams said.

The fights appeared to be alcohol related, he said.

Also arrested at the dance were Donald Johnson, 44, 328 Miami, and Curtis Alex Brashears, 23, 501 Hazel, who were charged with public intoxication.

DALLAS (AP) — The head of the Texas Commission on Fire Protection is drawing controversy over hiring and promotion practices, a newspaper has reported.

Former agency administrator Robert Frost won a $186,000 verdict from an Austin jury after alleging that executive director Michael Hines eased him out of the agency because he was over age 50.

Administrator Helen Campbell won an undisclosed cash settlement in her lawsuit that alleged Hines was hired over her because of age and gender discrimination.

Hines declined comment on the cases. Speaking generally, Hines said his agency "has an outstanding record on hiring and promotion" and complies with all state and federal equal employment requirements.

However, a juror in the Frost case told The Dallas Morning News for a story in Sunday's editions that the jury found the agency's hiring and promotion practices under Hines questionable.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — With increased commerce expected because of the North American Free Trade Agreement, two South Texas universities are stepping up recruitment for international business students.

Texas A&M University at Corpus Christi has added international business classes and applied for a grant to establish an intensive, fast-paced program that would offer a certificate in international trade.

The 5,500-student university faces competition from The Texas Graduate School of International Management, which expects to have 50 students when it opens Sept. 1. Both institutions are trying to set up shop in the old Nueces County Courthouse.

"I'm putting pressure on (the A&M-Corpus Christi president) to do something more than repeat a few courses downtown. We are proposing much more than that," said Gerrit De Vos, the Dutch president of the new private school. A&M-Corpus Christi President Robert Furgason scoffed at the notion that his university is competing with an unknown school of 50 that is drawing students from abroad.

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — A figure in the Whitewater investigation says he was told that an $825,000 loan by an Arkansas savings and loan would be helpful to the institution's owner, who also was President Clinton's Whitewater business partner.

Dean Paul, a former lumber company operator, said a business associate, David Hale, told him the 1986 transaction would help "clean up" some financial problems involving James McDougal, the owner of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. The S&L was about to be audited by federal regulators at the time the institution made the loan. Paul says he signed for the loan at Hale's request.

At the time, McDougal also was a partner with President Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton in the Whitewater Development Co.

Paul said Hale assured him that Jim Guy Tucker, now Arkansas' governor, and Hale had business ventures, including a planned shopping center, that would enable the loan from Madison S&L to be paid back. Nearly $600,000 of the loan has never been repaid.

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Joseph Robert Miller spent 15 years in prison for strangling two prostitutes. Prosecutors say it wasn't enough: Months after he was paroled, he allegedly raped and killed three more.

Now prosecutors are trying to do what they couldn't in 1978 — put Miller on death row.

"He's a person bent on violence," said Peoria County State's Attorney Kevin Lyons.

"I believe he has a guilt mixup seen in lots of sadistic sex crimes," said Kenneth Gillis, who prosecuted Miller in 1978 and is now a Cook County circuit judge.

Officials say this year's Top O' Texas Rodeo proved to be one of the most successful ever

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Organizers of this year's Top O' Texas Rodeo, which concluded Saturday night in spectacular action, consider it one of the most successful rodeos organized in recent years.

Joe Bailey, president of the Top O' Texas Rodeo, Horse Shoe and Fair Association, said he considered this year's rodeo a total success.

"This was probably one of our better rodeos," he said. "The crowds were good every night, above average, and we had more participants than we ever had."

In addition, he said he thought the parade held Saturday morning throughout the downtown area was "super."

With this year's rodeo now past, Bailey said his organization will start planning festivities for next year beginning at their meeting in August.

Throughout the three days of rodeo competition, beginning Thursday night and continuing until Saturday, spectators were witness to intense competition and drama from man and beast alike.

Winners of the various competitions came from as far away as South Dakota but also from Texas and Oklahoma.

In the bareback bronc riding competition, Rob Hendrickson of Caputa, S.D., was the overall competition, scoring 77 in competition held on Friday.

Sonora-resident Houston Powers won the steer wrestling competition as he was able to tackle his bovine opponent in 4.7 seconds during Thursday's competition. Despite three other cowboys coming within a second of beating Powers on either Thursday or Friday, he was the only man able to score under five seconds.

The Double Mugging competition featured local cowboys competing in an event much like calf roping, except instead of one person, three people are used to knock down and restrain a steer.

Winning the competition with the only score under 20 seconds, the team of Shawn Whatley, Sammy J. Whatley and Johnny Carter soundly defeated the other teams entered in the competition as the next lowest score was more about eight seconds slower.

Robert Etbauer, a contestant in Saturday's rodeo competition and a two-time world champion, won the saddle bronc riding competition with an impressive score of 80 points.

Prior to his win, the saddle bronc riding competition was perhaps the closest contested event in this year's rodeo. Eight of the 14 contestants who competed and placed in the event received scores in the 70-point range. Etbauer was the only cowboy to score in the 80s.

In the calf roping competition of the rodeo, Jerry Jetton of Stephenville won the competition as chased, roped and tied his calf in 8.3 seconds on Thursday.

As of noon today, a winner in the barrel racing competition had not been named as results from Saturday's rodeo were unavailable.

Competition in the event was fierce, however, as more than a dozen cowgirls were within a second of the top score.

Finally, in the bull riding competition, perhaps the most spectacular of the rodeo events, Bobby Randolph of Gainesville won the competition with an impressive score of 80 points on Saturday.

Explosion destroys Jewish housing complex in Argentina; at least 16 die

By IAN KATZ
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — An explosion leveled a seven-story building housing two Jewish groups this morning, killing at least 16 people and injuring dozens.

An estimated 100 people worked in the building housing the Delegation of Argentine Israeli Associations, the country's principal Jewish community organization, and the Argentine Israelite Mutual Association, a charity group.

Police said at least 16 people were killed. A doctor working at the building told an Argentine news agency at least 20 people were dead. Rescue workers at the scene said they believed dozens more might be trapped in the rubble.

The cause of the 9:55 a.m. blast had not been determined, but President Carlos Menem said it was an attack planned "from abroad and helped by people here." He called the perpetrators "beasts, savages."

As part of an investigation, Menem ordered Argentina's borders closed.

In March 1992 a bomb destroyed the downtown Israeli Embassy, killing at least 28 people and injuring more than 220. Responsibility for that blast was never determined.

Israel blamed Muslim fundamentalists for the 1992 bombing, and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres indicated he believed today's explosion also was the work of Muslim extremists.

Nicolas Wohda, 56, who works in an office next door to the destroyed building, said he "felt a huge bomb, and then I don't know what."

Wohda, wearing a blood-soaked shirt, received several stitches for cuts on his face and scalp. He said a police car was parked in front of the building at the time of the blast. "If the police were in that car, they didn't make it out alive," Wohda said.

Dozens of frantic rescue workers and volunteers climbed atop the rubble, passing along oxygen tanks and masks while struggling to remove blocks of concrete. Many bystanders sobbed uncontrollably.

"We need more oxygen! Get us oxygen!" rescue workers screamed. Others, noting the strong smell of natural gas, urged bystanders not to light matches for fear of causing another explosion.

Shards of metal and glass lay on the street. Cars parked near the building were destroyed, and other buildings on the same block sustained heavy damage.

Alongside one burned-out car were at least two bodies, covered hastily with bedsheets and gym mats. One rescue worker warned people nearby, "Watch where you walk. Those are bodies." A few yards away lay a woman's black leather shoe.

The building, on Pasteur Street on the outskirts of downtown Buenos Aires, is in a traditionally Jewish neighborhood now populated by Koreans and other ethnic groups. A banner strung across the street advertises the Yiddish Mama Restaurant.

Israel, Jordan launch historic peace talks

ON THE JORDAN-ISRAEL BORDER (AP) — In a carpeted tent pitched symbolically astride their desert border, Israeli and Jordanian peace negotiators held a historic round of talks today and vowed to seek a lasting peace treaty.

The negotiations, broadcast live on television in Jordan and Israel, tackled key differences before a summit of Israeli and Jordanian leaders with President Clinton next week in Washington.

"It is our expectation that the satisfactory results of the negotiations and accepted agreements will culminate in a treaty of peace that delineates carefully our rights and duties under conditions of peace," said Ambassador Faiz Tarawneh, the head of Jordan's 11-member delegation.

Blessing the start of the meeting in Arabic and Hebrew, Israeli delegation head Elyakim Rubinstein said "this meeting takes place in a tent. The tent is tentative. But peace should be permanent."

Bucking horse

Roan Angel, one of the horses used in the saddle bronc riding competition of Saturday night's portion of the 48th Annual Top O' Texas Rodeo, demonstrated his reputation as a bucking horse. The horse, one of the animals provided by the Beutler & Gaylord Rodeo Co., caused a delay in action as rodeo official and cowboys tried to get him back into the proper position in the chute. # Democratic ag commissioner candidate says fed regulations threaten farmers

By JEFF CARRUTH Staff Writer

Federal regulations and international trade agreements are among the threats facing Texas farmers, according to the Democratic candidate for state agricultural commissioner, Marvin Gregory.

"There's a tremendous amount of things that happen to the farmer that come out of Washington," Gregory said during a Democratic cookout Saturday in Central Park.

The Sulphur Springs dairy farmer said agriculture has become too much of a partisan issue and provisions in the NAFTA and GATT trade agreements could drive producers out of business. The Texas ag commissioner should go to Washington and act as a spokesman to make sure farmers are treated fairly, he said.

For example, according to Gregory, GATT would lead to the elimination of Texas dairy farmers as imports increase and exports go down. The same would likely happen to sugar, cotton, peanut and tobacco farmers when the federal Section 22 subsidy program is scaled back under the agreement, he said. In a press release, Gregory said other nations have not reduced their subsidies in kind.

"When you eliminate (those) farmers, they are going to put cattle back on that land — they've got to produce something on it," Gregory said. When such farmers shift production to other crops, such as wheat, corn or sorghum, Gregory fears prices will be driven down, thus hurting more producers. "Any time you shift one policy, it has an effect on another one."

Exporting more may not take up the slack since other nations are growing more and improving efficiency, Gregory explained.

"You cannot produce for so long below the cost of production, and that's what's going on today," he said.

Gregory said he intends to be a strong advocate of processing more Texas-grown food in the state. He cited the need for small cheese plants in East Texas to use the milk of nearby dairy farmers.

"We've had a mentality that we're big and we're going to sell a certain type product. We have to change the mentality of the farmers themselves," he said.

Trying to keep rural communities and their economies viable with farm programs "doesn't mean we're going to take a lot of taxpayer dollars to do it," Gregory said.

Food labels that show the point of origin and where the product was processed will help consumers and farmers, Gregory said.

He called for states to have flexibility in applying federal regulations and for regulators to take into account geographic differences when writing new rules. He criticized guidelines for using ground water that are the same across the state even though the aquifer recharge system in the High Plains is not as sensitive as that in the Hill Country.

Federal belt tightening may also mean reducing the scope of other farm programs, such as the Crop Reserve Program and disaster insurance, he said. "I'm not satisfied with anything in the '95 farm bill at this point."

Consideration of the 1995 Farm Bill is underway as the federal farm appropriations program is revamped every five years. Gregory cites advance work on the legislation as one of his credentials.

Gregory said farmers need better dialogue with environmental groups and speedier decision making by regulators on planting restrictions so that producers will have more time to plan.

As for his opponent, incumbent Republican Rick Perry, Gregory said Perry has pushed a partisan agenda too much of the time. "He's not cooperating with the (Speaker of the House) Pete Laney and the other people he needs to cooperate with. And he's not protecting consumers on the mandated programs."

Gregory said that he cut ties with Republican lawmakers after not being satisfied with their responses to concerns he raised about farmers and rural communities.

Execution reprieve granted

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Excell White, who has served more time on death row than any condemned Texas prisoner, will remain there after a federal judge blocked his execution scheduled for early Tuesday.

In August, White, 56, will mark 20 years on death row for the 1974 machine-gun murder of a Collin County grocer, one of four men killed in a bloody two-day rampage.

White was convicted of killing Preston Broyles, 73, one of three men slain May 10, 1974 at the Hilltop Grocery near Princeton, seven miles southeast of McKinney. White was tried only for Broyles' murder.

Space spectacular as comet fragments smash into Jupiter

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

GREENBELT, Md. (AP) — One of the biggest of the 21 fragments of comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 smashed Jupiter early today, causing the most powerful planetary explosion ever observed and blinding some instruments watching from Earth.

The comet shard, called fragment G, hit the backside of Jupiter and immediately bloomed into a huge fireball that for a few moments was brighter than the whole planet, astronomers report.

"It was a big wallop," said Eugene Shoemaker, a U.S. Geological Survey scientist and co-discoverer of the comet. He estimated that the energy released by fragment G was equal to about 250 million megatons of TNT and created temperatures of more than 30,000 degrees.

"The energy released is beyond any of our experiences on Earth," said Lucy McFadden, a University of Maryland astronomer. "Ten thousand megatons is the total energy that we can create on Earth with bombs."

Infrared radiation, which is heat, was so great from the explosion that detectors at the Keck Observatory instruments were overwhelmed, or saturated.

More big explosions are expected as fragment H, nearly as big as G, hits later today.

Pictures from other telescopes, including the Hubble Space Telescope, show that the effects of earlier impacts have left black pockmarks in a band on the southern end of Jupiter. The marks are spreading out and some now are bigger than the diameter of Earth. Scientists said the spots seemed to be thinning and it was unknown how long these scars would last.

Shoemaker said that both G and H were about two miles in diameter.

Impacts on Saturday and Sunday came from fragments about a third as large, and astronomers reported seeing fireballs that erupted up to 600 miles above the Jupiter cloud tops. Plumes from the eruptions then spread out, leaving behind a black scar marking the impact point.

Telescopes on Earth and instruments on the Hubble Space Telescope captured views of heated gas rising rapidly and then spreading out in a black smear.

Though the impacts are behind Jupiter as viewed from Earth, they produce bubbles of hot gas that rise so high that they can be seen over the horizon.

"The fireball extends beyond the limb (visible horizon) of the planet," Heidi Hammel of the Space Telescope Science Institute said Sunday. She was speaking of a Hubble image taken of fragment A's explosion. "This is a massive thing."

After fragment C hit early Sunday, astronomers at the Keck Telescope in Hawaii took infrared photos. The views show two glowing ovals, each about the diameter of the Earth, left by fragments A and C.

Fragment B is thought to have been much smaller and less compact. No images were released of that impact. Fragment D views were to be released today.

The best is yet to come, said David Levy, an amateur astronomer and a co-discoverer of the comet.

"This is just the orchestra warming up," he said.

After G and H hit today, astronomers will look for more explosions from the impact on Tuesday of fragment K, and of fragment Q1 on Wednesday. Both are about two miles across. The 21st and last fragment, called W, is forecast to hit on Friday.

Names of the fragments don't neatly follow the alphabet. Some have disappeared, along with their letter designation. Q split apart, giving rise to two fragments with that letter.

Scientists estimated that fragment A released energy equivalent to 10 million megatons of TNT when it slammed Jupiter at more than 130,000 miles per hour. Since the energy release increases geometrically, the larger fragments could have an explosive force of 10 times more.

The explosive force of the comets comes from their size and their extreme velocity.

Shoemaker said temperatures from the collision can reach tens of thousands of degrees from the energy released by the high-speed collision.

Jupiter is almost all hydrogen gas, with only a relatively small central core. But as a high-speed comet fragment strikes, it creates powerful shock waves in the upper atmosphere and probably punches through a layer of ammonia clouds to a layer of dense hydrogen miles below. The shock waves create instant and extreme heat. The comet fragments are crushed.

Superheated bubbles of gas kick back upward, rising above Jupiter's clouds.

"That's what we call a fireball," said Levy.

Jupiter, which has more than 300 times the mass of Earth, is expected to be little affected by the comet. Jupiter is 480 million miles from Earth, too far for the comet to have any influence here. Such a comet bombardment directly on Earth would be devastating.

"If one of these were to hit North America, it would create a crater 12 miles in diameter," Shoemaker said. "If it hit here, it would take out Baltimore and Washington. It would knock out things hundreds of miles away."

It also would create vast clouds of pulverized debris that would clog the atmosphere and shroud the whole planet. Dinosaurs died after an similar impact 65 million years ago.

Houston firm touts hail buster device

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston firm believes it has something akin to a Patriot missile system to intercept and destroy hail before it damages crops.

Pro-Shield Inc. is touting its Anti-Hail Cannon as "100 percent effective" in protecting crops and even promises to buy back the $130,000 system plus 16.5 percent if it fails to prevent damage.

The first American installation of the Canadian-manufactured device is set for Monday at a Clovis, N.M., farm, where it will protect some 200 acres of onions.

"Hail is always a major problem for us," says Terry Lusk, who with his father and brother run Lusk Onion Inc. and are awaiting delivery of the machine. "We lost nearly all of our crop in a hailstorm in April and it was worth $500,000. So this really is not much of a gamble."

About 350 similar cannons have been used for up to 15 years around the world, protecting such things as French vineyards and Mexican apple orchards, says Robert McVicker, whose Houston-based Pro-Shield has the U.S. rights to the Anti-Hail Cannon.

"It's been a tough sell," McVicker acknowledges. "But when I sit down and start to explain, I notice people scoot up and get to the edge of their seats. They can see how it works."

The "cannon" resembles a 4-foot-long metal chimney coming from the roof of a 12-foot-by-14-foot quonset hut. Inside the metal hut, gas from a dozen acetylene tanks propels through the cannon low-frequency elliptical shock waves at the speed of sound into a cumulonimbus cloud — a thunderhead and potential hail producer. A solar-powered computer regulates the device.

A farmer or grower carrying a handheld radio can start the device by remote control when he sees a thunderstorm approaching. It also can be attached to a radar system that automatically will start it when a storm is detected.

Sound waves fired six seconds apart into the air for 30 minutes before it is directly overhead destroy the delicate microphysical balance and block the formation of hail, according to the company. In addition, the accumulation of shock waves and vibrations created by the cannon is supposed to accelerate the thawing of stones.

"I know it sounds kind of crazy," McVicker says, noting that hailstones that may survive fall like sleet or snowflakes, meaning they won't crush vegetation.

"I don't think it's theoretically possible," says Mike Biggerstaff, an assistant professor of meteorology at Texas A&M University. "I don't think it makes a lot of sense. It's just a very loud cannon that goes off. It's just not going to work. It's not going to do anything to the hailstones."

"But people who suffer hail damage want to do something."

New Mexico onion grower Lusk, whose family farms some 500 acres, is one of them.

"It's exciting," he says. "It's not as exciting as if it had been installed in April. It might have prevented our loss. Our hail season now is nearly over for this year. So it's going to be tough to see it work for a while. We may have to wait for another year."

Part of the Houston firm's sales pitch includes testimonials from satisfied customers in New Zealand, Switzerland and France.

The cannon being installed in New Mexico was made in Montreal at the System de Protection Anti Grele Ollivier Inc., headed by inventor Gerald Ollivier.

McVicker's company is planning to eventually make the cannons in Houston and sell or lease up to 50 of them within a year.

Project aims to heal crime-ridden childhoods

HOUSTON (AP) — A University of Houston project is trying to heal the wounds of crime-ridden childhoods while researching how violence traumatizes its youngest witnesses.

It's called the Juvenile Victim Project, part of the UH Victim's Resource Institute. It is where childhood terrors, more horrific than the average nightmare or adolescent fear, are wrestled.

"They think the world has let them down. They have done everything they were told to do, but then something bad happens. All that (trust) is destroyed. They think it doesn't matter whether you do good or bad or what is right," explains Dr. Gerald Harris, institute director.

Some of the saddest examples:

An 8-year-old girl says she wants to get to heaven as soon as possible, even if it means killing herself. Why? Two months ago, she saw her father fatally shot in the middle of the street by a teenage gang member. She thinks if she doesn't get to heaven quickly, before she grows up, her dad won't recognize her when they are reunited.

A 9-year-old girl nervously pulls out her eyebrows and loses weight because the family of a man convicted for raping the girl's older sister sends death threats to her family.

That family is using the 9-year-old as the courier of those messages.

And then there's the case of a 15-year-old girl who was talking with her boyfriend on the telephone when he was shot to death. Both the girl and her father raced to the boyfriend's house only to find him in a growing pool of blood.

The one-year-old program, funded by a $166,000 grant from the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, is the only public psychological service center in Houston for children ages 6 to 17 and their families.

A staff of eight doctoral students are therapists.

Institute officials say there is virtually no scientific research documenting the psychological impact on juvenile crime victims.

So the project works both to heal the children and collect information and document the impact of violent crime on juveniles.

After a traumatic experience, children can suffer from long periods of disbelief and bouts of unresponsiveness, hysteria, anxiety or depression, disrupted sleep and nightmares.

The project has provided therapy or community referrals for about 75 children and family members.

A victim usually goes through 15 to 20 one-hour sessions once a week before significant progress is made toward getting the child back on course for a normal life.

Often, though, parents can prove to be a barrier to progress.

In a case involving a girl who was raped, Harris said "the mother told her 'this is all your fault. If you hadn't been talking to those people, it wouldn't have happened.'"

About 25 to 30 percent of parents blame their children for being crime victims, Harris said. Others are more than cooperative.

In the 15-year-old's case, her grades initially dropped. She stopped going to school and developed problems at home.

"She just was not functioning," Harris said. "She had nightmares about (the crime scene)."

After 20 sessions, the girl has a new job and a new boyfriend.

Report: Simpson's defense will claim glove was planted by racist policeman

LOS ANGELES (AP) — O.J. Simpson's lawyers will try to trump one of the strongest cards in the prosecution's hand — a bloody glove discovered outside his mansion — by attacking the detective who found it, two magazines reported.

The defense will argue that Detective Mark Fuhrman was a racist officer with a history of psychological problems who planted the glove on Simpson's $5 million estate the morning after the killings, The New Yorker reported in its July 25 issue.

"This is a bad cop ... This is a racist cop," said one lawyer in the article by Jeffrey Toobin, which cites interviews with at least two "leading members of Simpson's defense team," who are not identified.

Newsweek, in its July 25 issue, said the defense may try to paint Fuhrman as a "rogue cop who was trying to advance his own career."

The glove discovered on Simpson's property on June 13, the day after Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were stabbed to death outside her condo, matches a glove found at the crime scene. The gloves were among the strongest evidence presented by prosecutors at Simpson's preliminary hearing.

Fuhrman denied the allegations. "Of course it didn't happen," he told The New Yorker, declining to comment further.

Simpson has pleaded innocent to two counts of first-degree murder. He is jailed without bail awaiting arraignment.

Simpson's lead lawyer, Robert Shapiro, told The Associated Press Sunday night that he was not a source of the report, and he had not seen it. He refused to comment further.

On Thursday, sources close to the defense told The Associated Press that Simpson's lawyers were investigating Fuhrman, and might suggest in court that he planted the glove. They spoke on condition that the information not be published.

Calls placed to two residential listings for Mark Fuhrman in the Los Angeles area were not immediately returned Sunday night. Police declined to comment on the case.

One lawyer quoted in The New Yorker said the defense will claim that Simpson was framed; another said it hadn't been decided.

The lawyers claimed Fuhrman had two reasons to plant the evidence: he wanted to be in the spotlight, and he is racist. Simpson is black; Fuhrman and both victims are white.

"Here's a guy who's one of the cops coming on the scene early in the morning. They have the biggest case of their lives. But an hour later you're told you're not in charge of the case," the magazine quoted a lawyer as saying. "How's that going to make that guy feel?"

The magazine cited reports from psychiatrists who treated Fuhrman, who left the Marines in 1975. He later told Dr. Ronald R. Koegler that he stopped enjoying military service because "there were these Mexicans and niggers, volunteers, and they would tell me they weren't going to do something."

Newsweek and The New Yorker both cited a 1983 lawsuit that Fuhrman filed against the city, seeking permanent disability pay for job-related psychiatric problems. The city claimed he was out to cheat the department. Fuhrman lost the case.

Fuhrman and his psychiatrist contended that he had an "explosive personality."

Fuhrman told a doctor hired by the city that he was a danger to himself and others; the doctor's reports said Fuhrman admitted beating and abusing suspects.

"I have this urge to kill people that upset me," he told the doctor.

In general, Fuhrman's progress reports from the police department were favorable. A police spokesman said there is no public record of disciplinary proceedings against him.

UT involved in study on television violence

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas researchers are looking for a few good students who can watch hours of television without wilting.

Graduate and undergraduate students will be hired to watch 2,700 hours of television for an extensive study on television violence by the National Cable Television Association.

Results of the study will be presented to a monitoring council comprised of industry and public interest groups. The council will make the results public.

Ellen Wartella, dean of UT's College of Communications and a nationally known expert on the effects of television on children, heads the UT team, which includes journalism professors Wayne Danielson and Dominic Lasorsa, as well as Charles Whitney, a professor of journalism and radio-television-film.

She says her task will be difficult. "I hate watching violence. This is not going to be pleasant," she said.

"We want the research to be reliable and independent of industry influence," Ms. Wartella said.

Among the shows they will watch are America's Funniest Home Videos, Frontline and Rescue 911.

The project is one of many being conducted nationwide to see what can be done about making television programs less violent. Researchers plan to meet in Austin in September to develop a detailed code for cataloging both physical and verbal violence.

A public hearing on the issue of television violence is expected to be part of the conference.

Also taking part in the study is a group of researchers at the University of California-Santa Barbara. Their load includes analyzing weekly fictional shows, soap operas, movies, specials, children's shows and music videos.

A group at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill will examine educational materials such as public service announcements against violence. University of Wisconsin at Madison researchers will study ratings and advisories placed on violent programs.

The research is being coordinated by Mediascope, a nonprofit organization founded to promote constructive depictions of social issues in the media.

Another newt death jeopardizes shuttle experiment

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — And then there were two.

Scientists scrambled today to save the "astronewt" experiment aboard Columbia after the death of a second female adult newt in less than a week.

Astronaut Donald Thomas found the dead animal late Sunday while checking on two small water chambers holding three adult newts and scores of newborns and embryos.

Two of the 82 laboratory experiments aboard Columbia depend on the newts. One focuses on the creatures' inner-ear development in space, while the other concentrates on adult fertilization and embryo development.

Scientists handpicked four adult newts and 144 eggs to send into space aboard the shuttle. The adults were injected with hormones to induce them to lay eggs in orbit.

One adult died last week, apparently from stress. Its water tank — along with about 40 eggs it had laid and 48 eggs that had been sent into space — was unplugged and preserved in a freezer.

Today, researchers were trying to figure out how to remove the latest dead newt from its sealed tank. If it is left inside, it could contaminate some two dozen hatchlings and eggs, Japanese project scientist Shunji Nagaoka said.

"If we can remove her, we can save most of (the experiment)," Nagaoka said. "There won't be any impact. All people are now focusing on that point."

At least 48 newt eggs have been hatched in space, most of them over the weekend. The shuttle's Japanese Medaka fish population is also experiencing a baby boom. Most of the 340 eggs sent into space and six or seven of those laid in orbit have hatched.

The two-week mission is due to end Friday.

Really, scalpers are just good capitalists

Anyone attending a big-league sporting event or sold-out concert has probably witnessed these stealthy marketers, lurking just outside the entrance to the arena or stadium.

Meet the ticket scalper, an unappreciated practitioner of free-market economics and, in some states, a criminal.

With the NBA playoffs recently ended, the World Cup soccer tournament in full kick and singer Barbra Streisand on a concert tour, it's time to pay an overdue tribute to these sidewalk commodity brokers who make an honest profit by matching supply and demand.

Simply defined, scalping is selling tickets at a price above face value. This happens all the time when demand is high for seats at a concert or sporting event.

During Streisand's last concert tour, for example, scalpers were asking as much as $300 for tickets marked originally at $125. In New York City last month, scalpers were paid as much as $325 for tickets to an NBA finals game between the New York Knicks and Houston Rockets — a price far above the one marked on the tickets.

In some states, ticket scalping is a sinister act. In New York state, the attorney general has made a crusade out of enforcing the state's anti-scalping laws. Those laws make it illegal to sell a ticket for more than 10 percent above its face value. The state has even conducted stings and levied fines against scalpers.

These laws, like anti-scalping laws everywhere, are a foolish and unjust attempt to thwart a perfectly peaceful and legitimate form of commerce. Ticket scalpers are doing nothing more than what any other retailer does — giving people what they want at a price they are willing to pay.

Scalpers cut through the long lines and the hassles that confront most people who want in-demand tickets. They give people a choice (a ticket at a marked-up price) where they might not otherwise even have one (no ticket at a regulated price).

With anti-scalping laws in place, the government in effect holds the price of tickets below their natural market price, creating a shortage. That means tickets are effectively rationed and are distributed disproportionately to those with inside connections — celebrities, politicians and the like.

Scalpers, in contrast, are no respecters of status, fame or political power; everyone's equal as long as they can pony up the money, preferably in hard cash. It's not who you know that counts to the scalper, but how much money you're willing to pull out of your wallet.

Instead of harassing scalpers through the law, we should allow them their rightful seat in the arena of free enterprise. After all, they're not forcing anyone to buy their marked-up tickets, and anyone not able or willing to afford the higher prices don't have to buy them, just as with any other product or service.

Oh, the endlessness of Clinton

Those Americans who tend to tune in at news time, whether in the morning or late afternoon, are almost certain to come on to the face and voice of Bill Clinton. Worse, the voice of Bill Clinton. Worse, the words of Bill Clinton.

He is apparently incapable of letting a subject alone — any subject. He hectors American citizens on this point or the other, and congressmen and senators, and foreign governments and leaders, and Christian evangelists.

He does so, moreover, almost always from the position of the superior moralist. We must buy his universal health care bill or lose heavenly ratings. He will not sign a bill that does less than guarantee universal health care because that is the right thing to do, the honorable thing to do, the fraternal thing to do, which means that anyone who is opposed to socializing medicine is wrong, dishonorable, unfraternal.

You close your eyes and thing back wistfully on the Constitution and the elephantiasis that came out of the simple sentence, "He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

Surely it is mistaken to be so ubiquitous? Franklin Delano Roosevelt was the first president to take advantage fully of the technology made available by the radio. His device was the so-called fireside chat. From his study in the White House or at Hyde Park, he would have a little chat with the American people, about this problem or that. And of course he held press conferences. But the fireside chats were at the rate of four or five per year, the press conferences every two or four weeks. Granted, since there was no television, there was no risk of a cloying redundancy of presence. Walter Cronkite could go on television non-stop for 18 hours when our astronauts ran the danger of being stuck in space, and there was no resentment over his presence. But the newscaster reporting an event for several hours running, as at a political convention, is different from the moralist whip who is telling us what is being done, what needs to be done, and how you and we should think about it.

It is a theatrical-point and needs to be reflected on with some reference to shifting perspectives. If during the 1930s the general feelings was that there was satisfaction in the touch that the president kept with the voters, does one need to multiply by the number of hours we watch television, the exposure we need to the president? If we are watching television (as the average American does) for 37 hours every week, should we expect to multiply by 37 the number of times we see Clinton on television?

It would require more patience than free men can muster to devote an entire day to the screen in order to count the number of times Clinton appears before us a typical day, but any factual answer to the question doesn't dispose of the nervous point, which is: How many times per day is it your impression you are being addressed by the president? Maybe your wife nags you only four times on a typical day, but you may just find that the fourth nag has become incrementally unbearable and you start thinking in terms of the virago you married and how O.J. Simpson handled his problem.

It is a phenomenon some people in Great Britain are being outspoken about, the omnipresence — or seeming omnipresence — of Prime Minister John Major. Last September Peregrine Worsthorne of the Sunday Telegraph, a Conservative wise man with a large following, exploded on the subject:

"The ability of a really unpopular prime minister to upset people has increased immeasurably. As it happens, Mr. Major is the first British prime minister of either party whom I cannot bear to watch or listen to. ... There is a hunted expression on his face and such a sadly hollow smile. And the voice. Has any earlier prime minister in all history had quite his capacity to make the English language sound so toneless and dead?"

"Watching and listening to Mr. Major, which one must perforce do all the time, is a deeply demoralizing experience. One feels drained of all hope. ... The thought of the present lackluster figure on the box for another three years is just more than flesh and blood can bear."

Much that Worsthorne quarrels with in the matter of Major would not apply to Bill Clinton, though it is important to stress the subjective point. But surely everyone would profit if he were to cut his appearances in half, never mind what we think about what he says or how he says it. Why didn't David Gergen counsel him on the point?

Imagine the utter bliss of it if Clinton were to tell us that except in the case of a national emergency, he would have nothing more to say to us about anything until Labor Day. Oh joy, unmitigated joy.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, July 18, the 199th day of 1994. There are 166 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 18, 1969, a car driven by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., plunged off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island near Martha's Vineyard. His passenger, Mary Jo Kopechne, 28, died.

On this date:

In A.D. 64, the Great Fire of Rome began.

In 1536, the authority of the pope was declared void in England.

In 1792, American naval hero John Paul Jones died in Paris at age 45.

In 1872, Britain introduced the concept of voting by secret ballot.

In 1927, Ty Cobb hit safely for the 4,000th time in his career.

In 1932, the United States and Canada signed a treaty to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In 1936, the Spanish Civil War began when Gen. Francisco Franco led an uprising of army troops based in Spanish North Africa.

Hidden hazard on golf courses?

As with any bureaucracy, the Environmental Protection Agency is sometimes durned if it does and durned if it doesn't.

Directives by the EPA may be at once too rigid for some industries and too lenient for some environmentalists.

If any generality is fair, the EPA is inclined to rely heavily on science to the exclusion of empirical evidence.

Example: In my discussions with golf course superintendents concerning pesticides that are killing birds and might be killing people, I receive reassurances that "we are carefully adhering to what the EPA decrees to be 'safe.'"

What the golf course people are counting on — in any litigation that might eventuate — is that they can base their defense on "adhering to EPA evaluations of their chemicals."

Perhaps that's not good enough.

The United States Golf Association (USGA) is researching "the effects of golf courses on people and wildlife."

In a recent mailing to its membership, the USGA promised to affirm its support of 21 separate environmental projects at a variety of universities, each of which is seeking to evaluate pesticides, fertilizers and turf disease.

Paul Harvey

The USGA has budgeted to these projects $3.2 million over three years.

"Results from many of the projects were presented to the USGA Turfgrass Committee in April. The findings are being reviewed and evaluated to determine what topics require additional research."

Already two publications have sought to update ongoing research: Landscape Restoration Handbook and Golf Course Management and Construction, Environmental Issues.

USGA members are promised a "fact file" to be created "over the next several months."

The USGA promises to address five major issues:

- Benefits of golf to the environment.
- Golf and water quality.
- Golf and water use.

Golf and human health.

Golf and wildlife ecology.

All this academic-sounding research is supposed to reassure golf course personnel that their association is on top of things, so — not to worry.

At the risk of sounding impatient, much of what professional golf associations are saying is reminding of what tobacco trade associations have been telling smokers for the last half of this century: "We are dutifully researching health hazards; meanwhile, don't pay any attention to the alarmists."

Golf course superintendents are good ol' boys — most of them farm-bred — who have sprayed chemicals all their lives for the fertilization and protection of crops.

How much is too much of any fungicide may or may not conform to the specific amount the EPA has deemed to be safe.

And it can be argued that if a golfer cleans a grass-stained golf ball with his tongue, he should know better.

And it can be argued that if crawling babies are allowed on turf grass, their parents should know better.

But someday — and it's only a few lawsuits away — you will hear public acclaim for golf courses which are "environmentally friendly."

Why all the hysterics over Oliver North?

A dispassionate observer could be forgiven for wondering what all the hysterics are about in the case of Ollie North.

North captured the Republican nomination for the Senate in Virginia, and stands an excellent chance of winning the seat in November. He is a staunch conservative, and won with the help of the much criticized "Christian right." But these facts hardly seem adequate to explain the downright furious opposition he has generated in various quarters.

The opposition of the liberals is easiest to understand. North was one of President Reagan's chief agents in arranging the secret sale of arms to Iran, for which, rightly or wrongly, Mr. Reagan was subsequently much criticized. And North and his boss, National Security Council Director John Poindexter, were also instrumental, though in this case without Mr. Reagan's knowledge, in trying to use part of the proceeds of that sale to provide aid to the Nicaraguan Contras, which the Reagan administration was backing against the pro-Communist Sandinista regime.

A record like that is certainly enough to put Ollie North on the liberals' "enemies list," and they are highly accomplished smear artists. Small wonder that they are feverishly peddling a picture of North as a chronic "liar" who perjured himself before Congress and got away with it only because his conviction was reversed on "technicalities."

Not one American in 10 knows the truth, which is that North never lied under oath and was never convicted of perjury. His only "sin" in that regard was to conceal White House policy initiatives (which the White House had no constitutional duty to disclose) in private briefings of congressional Democrats bent on mischief-making.

As for the vague allegations of money corruption, they are even phonier. The only money North has ever even been charged with accepting from an improper source was the $14,000 put up by Gen. Secord to pay for a security fence around North's home, at a time when this husband and father of two minor children was a logical target of Arab terrorists. And even that conviction was set aside on appeal.

Such smears, I repeat, are par for the course. Rather more unusual is the strenuous public opposition to North registered by various military and political figures, some closely identified with the Reagan administration, who can hardly be dismissed as smear artists.

As to these, I have a theory of my own. All through the first half of the 1980s Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North was a hot-shot operative of President Reagan's National Security Council (which in turn was the chief agent of Mr. Reagan's foreign policy), forever being sent hither and thither on secret missions for the president like some upscale James Bond.

It doesn't take a degree in psychology to imagine how others involved in the formation and execution of policy, not to mention higher ranking officers of the armed forces, must have regarded this young whipper-snapper. And that would also explain the animosity of his greatest enemy, Republican Senator John Warner of Virginia, who just happens to be the ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

But what, you may ask, about Mr. Reagan himself, who not long ago authorized a public statement that he was "getting pretty steamed" about certain statements by North? I think North let himself in for that when he wrote, in his memoirs Under Fire, that he found it "hard to believe that the president didn't know" about the plan to divert arms-sale proceeds to the Contras. But liberals can hardly endorse Mr. Reagan's criticism of North on that score, because they loudly share North's doubts.

Oliver North was a great public servant, and he would make a brilliant United States senator from Virginia.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Concerned Mom," whose 2-year-old son, "Ricky," liked to play with dolls. We, too, have a son who at that age requested a special Cabbage Patch doll for Christmas. He played with the doll for years, and now, at the age of 12, he still keeps that doll in his room.

Has it made him "funny"? Only if you consider a young man who never leaves for school, hangs up the phone, or goes to sleep without telling us he loves us "funny"; who never allows me to open a door, who always compliments his aunts and sister, who cringes when he hears other children talk back to their parents, who absolutely loves to baby-sit young children, who can carry on an intelligent conversation with adults, who plays baseball and basketball with a vengeance, and is not afraid to clean up the kitchen or show affection in front of his friends — "funny."

His sister, who is in college, says, "We all want to meet someone like Michael." So, relax, "Concerned," and let his nurturing tendencies bear fruit.

GINNY FROM OREGON

DEAR GINNY: The letters for "Concerned Mom" are still coming in. A few samples to further reassure the mother whose son preferred dolls to more masculine toys that she has nothing to worry about:

DEAR ABBY: When my son was 2 1/2, I gave him a doll. He slapped it under his arm as he rode his tricycle up and down in front of the house, where I could easily monitor him through the kitchen window.

One day I saw a rather disagreeable elderly neighbor woman bend over and say something to him, which caused him to run to our front door. When I opened it, he asked, "Mommy, am I a little boy or a little girl?" Of course, I told him that he was a little boy, and since (even at 2 1/2) he spoke very clearly, I told him what to say if this neighbor — or anyone else — questioned him about his doll.

This same neighbor asked my son why he had a doll. I saw her startled face when he looked up at her with his big blue eyes and said clearly, "I'm developing my paternal instincts!"

Incidentally, Abby, both my sons have become wonderful fathers. I might add, my daughter played with trucks as well as dolls.

Yours for better parents...
BETSY MOSS, PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Concerned Mom," I have two sons, Bret, who is 2 years old, and Nicolas, 8 months.

When I was pregnant with my second, I gave Bret a doll from my childhood. Every day, we bathed, fed and dressed the "baby," so that when Nicolas was born, Bret knew what to expect.

Everyone is amazed at how loving Bret is toward his little brother and how much he enjoys helping me with him. Bret also loves to help me cook and clean.

No one would think twice about a girl shooting baskets or playing with cars, but boys are still supposed to remain "boy-ish." If we give our sons the freedom to express their feelings when they are young, maybe they will feel freer to express their emotions when they become adults.

ROBIN GIDDINGS, ELKART, IND.

DEAR ROBIN: Your sons are fortunate to have a mother with your wisdom.

Wrinkles are now the latest fashion

By FRANCINE PARNES
For AP Special Features

Donna Karan crunched silk jacquard resort wear in a microwave. Issey Miyake created Pleats Please, a collection of micro-pleated polyester, and Han Feng, who started with pleated and crinkled scarves five years ago, has expanded into ready-to-wear.

Are all of these wrinkles an extension of deconstruction, the unkempt look top designers were determined to de-create a couple of seasons back? Or is the idea an attempt to appeal to a generation that doesn't give a hanger about a well-pressed wardrobe?

Valerie Steele, professor at New York's Fashion Institute of Technology, says it's not that complex. It's just a case of looking for something new.

"The tendency has always been to press clothing smooth," Steele says. "Any kind of surface flaw, as it were, has been frowned on. But no longer."

While designers have found beauty in imperfection, consumers have found a practical element, particularly for traveling. Just roll it up into a ball, throw it into the suitcase, unpack it and wear it.

"The wrinkle trend started with all the sheer fabrics and soft, fluid, gauzy dressing," says David Nutterfield, fashion director for I. Magnin in San Francisco. "It's a whole texture story in synthetics such as polyester and acetate that help hold onto the wrinkles." New York designer Mary McFadden some years ago staked her fashion business on little pleats. But Donna Karan's foray into pleats last winter was short-lived. She found the microwave oven impractical for finishing fabrics.

Because these permanent wrinkles and mini pleats don't cling, they're body-friendly and work on almost any silhouette, from long floral dresses to pull-on skirts, tank tops and pajama pants.

They work not only in synthetics but in washed silks and linens. For fall, there'll be wrinkled wool and nubby knits and, from Tokyo and Comme des Garçons, a disheveled velvet.

Nutterfield says Issey Miyake is currently I. Magnin's No. 1 source for pleats. Other sources are Giorgio Armani, Comme des Garçons and Romeo Gigli.

From Han Feng, tiny folds of polyester georgette give new personality to simple silhouettes such as tank tops, slip dresses, long slim skirts, miniskirts, bicycle shorts and sheer coats.

"It's great for summer because it's so easy to wear," says the New York designer by way of China. "It's all based on textural interest, and you don't need to have a perfect body. It's as easy as taking a pleated long skirt and adding a Gap T-shirt for day and a silk top for evening." Modern though they may look, pleats are anything but new.

Broomstick skirts, popular for square dancing in the 1940s, got their name from the way they were pleated. Made of lightweight cotton, often a calico print, they were washed, wrapped around a broomstick while still wet and tied tightly with string to create vertical wrinkles like tiny pleats.

The oldest extant piece of clothing is a pleated linen Egyptian shirt, which is several thousand years old, Steele says.

"People have always loved the way pleats are carefully and architecturally imposed on cloth," she says.

How women can make themselves look better

By LADIES' HOME JOURNAL
A Meredith Magazine

Women can improve the way they look — and probably the way they feel — by using the following suggestions by Ladies' Home Journal magazine:

— Revive a tired face. A rosy-pink cream-powder blush on cheek apples adds dewy freshness. Minimize eye makeup by using just beige-peach eye shadow and mascara. For an all over sunny, rested look, warm up your face with a self-tanner and top with bronzing powder.

— Boost your upper body. If you're weighty below the belt, draw the eyes up. Wear a long jacket with a crisp shoulderline, a short necklace or big button earrings.

— Depend on a bob. This classic one-length hairstyle flatters everyone and requires minimal maintenance and styling skills. Trim every six to eight weeks to keep ends neat; use a very large round brush to blow-dry smoothly.

— Dress thin. Tailored clothing gives the body a sleeker silhouette on "fat days." For extra pound-paring, stick to black and navy. Best bets: a matching long jacket and short, slim skirt; slouchy pantsuits; or wrap or sarong skirts.

— Make legs look longer and more sculpted by toning hose to shoes. Choose pumps and slings with elegantly tapered heels and toes. Black is best for slimming calves and ankles. If you want to lighten up for summer, opt for taupe or beige.

— Cheer up with color. Wearing strong colors like vivid reds and pinks or muted shades of peach, apricot and ivory give skin clarity and glow — and enhance eye and hair color, too.

— Go for a younger look. Options: long, feathery bangs will frame your face and hide a lined forehead; choose short, natural nails.

Including one of those outdoor spinning heads

By JAMES SERVIN
For The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — While the A-D Gallery's summer show of work by Richard Tuttle show slowly evolves, a garage sale waiting to happen, there are other artsy-crafts to mull over at the gallery, including a series of hand-blown vases and other glassware designed by painter Jennifer Bartlett (priced around $300).

There's also a curious object in the making by Alex Katz. A painting of the artist's wife's head is propped up on a medium-high pole. It's the prototype for a much larger work that will be priced at $25,000.

"The final piece will have ball bearings in her head that will make it spin," says Sara Vanderlip, A-D's front desk person. "It's a windmill, it's an anemometer. It's a kind of strange piece."

"The head doesn't have a function," adds A-D assistant director Yvonne Force. "It's just an outdoor spinning head."

Gaining equality with men — as drug abusers

By COSMOPOLITAN
A Hearst Magazine

Women are catching up to men in a tragic way — in the use of marijuana, cocaine, crack and heroin.

The American Council for Drug Education reported that 43 percent of all drug abusers in the country are female. Carol Lawson wrote in an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan. The National Institute on Drug Abuse estimated that each month more than 4.5 million women use illicit substances.

"For years, the classic male-to-female ratio among illicit-substance abusers was 70 to 30," said Dr. Herbert Kleber, medical director of the Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University in New York. "But now, especially with crack, the numbers are close to 50-50."

Nancy K. Waite-O'Brien, clinical director of the Betty Ford Center, a drug- and alcohol-treatment facility in Rancho Mirage, Calif., said women abusers often run counter to stereotypes.

"Drugs are perceived as a man's problem," she said. "There's an attitude that only 'bad' women get hooked, that they must be poor or sexually available or weak and stupid. People don't understand that average women in the workforce, mothers and grandmothers — women who are trying to put together decent lives for themselves and their families — can also end up addicts."

Among women on college campuses, there is an increase in the use of hallucinogenic drugs such as LSD and Ecstasy.

"Young people are using these drugs, and they don't understand how harmful they can be," said Stacey Reynolds, acting executive director of the American Council for Drug Education. "Essentially, they make you flip out."

Among economically disadvantaged women, the sharp increase in the use of crack has spawned a generation of crack babies, born not only addicted but with illnesses and abnormalities caused by the mother's behavior. The National Institute on Drug Abuse estimated that at least 160,000 infants are prenatally exposed to cocaine each year.

"One of the big changes in the last decade is that we seldom see a woman addicted to only one drug," Waite-O'Brien said. Two-thirds of female cocaine addicts are also addicted to other drugs. The typical dual addict will do cocaine, then drink alcohol or take Valium.

Women on drugs face another danger — AIDS — which can be acquired by using contaminated needles.

The No. 1 drug of choice for women, by far, is alcohol. Following it are marijuana, cocaine, heroin, crack and hallucinogens.

"Women are using everything. There's no substance men use and women don't," said Paula Roth, a drug consultant and editor of "Alcohol and Drugs Are Women's Issues," who added that women are much more likely than men to abuse prescription drugs such as sleeping pills, diet pills and tranquilizers.

"Pills seem to be an easy answer for women," Roth said. "They're socialized into taking pills to solve a problem — whether it's weight, anxiety, nervousness, depression or insomnia."

When it comes to finding help, women are at a disadvantage because most treatment programs have been set up by and for men and fail to meet the special needs of women. The Betty Ford Center, whose population is 45 percent female, is one of the few drug-treatment centers with a program designed for women.

A recent study found that one year after treatment, 70 percent of the female "alumnae" were still clean and sober, compared to 50 percent of women treated in a traditional coed setting.

"Language Instinct" shows how the mind creates the human language

By ELIZABETH WEISE
Associated Press Writer

Is language a learned skill, like riding a bicycle, or something innately human, like the ability to make and use tools?

In "The Language Instinct: How the Mind Creates Language" (Morrow, $23), Steven Pinker offers an excellent overview of what is known about the nature of language — and makes an excellent case that language is, indeed, an instinct.

Ever since Noam Chomsky first argued in the 1950s that humans are born equipped with a "Universal Grammar" which gives us a blueprint for learning language, popular imagination has been caught by just how specific that innate grammar is, and why it should be so.

Pinker, a professor of linguistics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he is Chomsky's colleague, does an excellent job of using concrete and easily understood examples to explain how linguists and neurobiologists are mapping the "mentalese" that underlies human language.

However much we may love the special sound of our mother tongue and imagine it to be unique — witness the Japanese, who make almost a cult of the difficulty foreigners have learning their language — in truth, all human languages are built on basically the same model.

What is amazing to contemplate, and what Pinker muses on fascinatingly, is how, given the almost endless variations possible, human languages end up being so similar at root. Are babies born ready to learn language, or with the grooves already laid down? Recent research by neurobiologists seems to indicate that in fact specific areas of the brain are dedicated to specific linguistic processes — as specific as finding the noun phrase in a sentence.

Pinker has a fine knack for elucidating complex linguistic theory in such clean prose that it all seems transparent — a difficult feat when performing the graceful but complex aerial turn of Subject-Verb-Object to Subject-Object-Verb sentence that shows that Japanese and English sentences actually work the same way.

Using the kind of clear examples that make you read them out loud and then think, "That's fascinating," Pinker lays out the past 30 years of linguistic knowledge.

Along the way, he debunks some common myths about language. No, Eskimos don't have 50 words for "snow," and those chimps who were supposed to have learned American Sign Language never actually "got" the simple, basic structures of language that any 2-year-old human signer understands.

And in a wonderful aside of a chapter, Pinker destroys the basis for modern "language guardians" who claim they are protecting modern speech from a fall into barbarism by prescriptive grammar.

"The Language Instinct" is fascinating, entertaining reading. It's full of examples that surprise and statements about language that will have you listening more closely to the next 3-year-old you meet as he effortlessly conjures up the basis for human grammar out of thin air.

TENNIS

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Jim Courier beat Jacco Eltingh 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-1 to give the United States a 3-2 victory over the Netherlands in the Davis Cup quarterfinals Sunday.

Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands upset top-ranked Pete Sampras 2-6, 7-5, 7-6 (7-5), 7-5 after Eltingh and Paul Haarhuis beat Richey Reneberg and Jared Palmer 2-6, 7-6 (8-6), 6-3, 6-7 (7-2), 6-2 in Saturday's doubles.

The United States faces Sweden, which beat France 3-2, in the semifinals Sept. 23-25. Defending champion Germany will play Russia in the other semifinal. Germany beat Spain 3-2 and Russia edged the Czech Republic 3-2.

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Top-seeded Ivan Lendl beat third-seeded MaliVai Washington 7-5, 7-6 (7-5) on Sunday for his third straight victory in the U.S. Pro Championships.

HOCKEY

DES PERES, Mo. (AP) — Two days after leaving the Stanley Cup champion New York Rangers in a contract dispute, Mike Keenan joined the St. Louis Blues on Sunday as coach and general manager.

Exact terms were not released, but Blues chairman Mike Shanahan said it was comparable to the $4.9 million, five-year deal Keenan had with New York. Keenan replaces Bob Berry as coach and Ron Caron, who was due to retire after this season, as general manager. Caron will remain as an executive vice president.

Keenan claimed that the Rangers breached his contract by failing to pay him his playoff bonus within 30 days of the end of the post-season. The Rangers said Keenan was still an employee and that they would fight any attempt by another NHL team to sign him.

Brazil beats Italy in wild shootout

World Cup decided on penalty kicks

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — It was a test of nerves as much as talent, stamina as much as skill.

For the first time, soccer's championship came down to a shootout — after all, this is the Wild West — and Brazil beat Italy 3-2 in penalty shots after a scoreless tie Sunday to become the first four-time World Cup champion.

"Brazil is again No. 1," said coach Carlos Alberto Parreira, more relieved he had accomplished his mission than happy with the feat.

Pele led Brazil to titles in 1958, 1962 and 1970, and the nation hungered for another. Italy, another three-time winner, was the final and most difficult obstacle.

"We have done our utmost," Azzurri coach Arrigo Sacchi said. "We have to accept the result."

But few liked it. Imagine Game 7 of the World Series tied after 12 innings and the title decided by a home-run derby.

Imagine the NCAA championship tied after overtime and decided by five 1-on-1 contests.

For the first time ever, the World Cup final came down to what many say is a roll of the dice.

"Brazil is a very great team and I think they were luckier than us," Italy captain Franco Baresi said. "I think when you reach the finals and lose, it is horrible, whether on the field or in penalties."

Baresi was one of the Italians who failed with the world — well, at least 2 billion if the estimates are correct — watching.

Shooting first after 120 scoreless minutes, Baresi put the ball over the crossbar. It would have been a fine field goal.

He fell to the field in despair until consoled by Brazil goalkeeper Claudio Taffarel.

"I tried to change the direction of the shot at the very last moment and I missed," said the captain of both Italy and AC Milan, the European champion.

Italian goalkeeper Gianluca Pagliuca stopped Marcio Santos, Demetrio Albertini scored for Italy, Romario scored for Brazil and Alberigo Evani and Branco both connected.

Now came Daniele Massaro, a forward, a man expected to easily convert his kick. Taffarel, a veteran of four seasons in the Italian League, dove to his left and parried the ball away.

"A lot of luck is involved in a penalty kick," Taffarel said. "The goalkeeper normally tries to pass all the responsibility on to the kicker. Since I guessed right, it looked like an easy save."

Dunga, Brazil's captain, made his kick, giving Brazil a 3-2 lead as Roberto Baggio, the world's best player last year, approached the 12-yard mark.

Baggio limped through the game because of a sore right hamstring. He had carried the Azzurri through the knockout phase of the World Cup with five goals.

But like Baresi, he kicked a field goal. The Cup belonged to Brazil.

"I was there in body and spirit," Baggio said. "My concentration was good. I don't know why I shot the way I did."

Millions of Brazilians ran into the streets from the Amazon to the Atlantic in an instant Carnivale.

"I did it my way," Parreira said.

For months, Brazilians criticized him for allowing the team to attack constantly. Now he felt vindicated.

"We did it without changing and without making concessions," he said. "The technique of the world's finest soccer has to have tactics, too."

The Brazilians dedicated the victory to Ayrton Senna, the Brazilian race car driver who died in a crash earlier this year.

"It was a well-deserved title, because Brazil was the best team throughout the competition," Bebeto said.

"Every team that played against us changed its way of playing."

Both teams attacked Sunday, but Brazil did it much better, outshooting the Italians 22-8. Still, Italy came close, and it hurt.

"Baresi was crying, like a child, after the shootout," defender Luigi Apolloni said.

"I could not believe that a veteran player could be so upset. I was moved. And many of us broke into tears as the Brazilians celebrated."

It took 491 qualifying games to whittle 146 nations down to 24, and 51 more matches in the tournament to leave just two.

On Sunday, as the smog began lifting from the San Gabriel Valley, Brazil became the last survivor, 31 months after the tournament began.

"Those who didn't support us should reflect," said Mario Zagalo, who coached the team to the 1970 title and currently serves as Parreira's assistant.

"This shows Brazil did everything right."

Price rallies to win British Open

Zimbabwe star sinks monster putt to turn things around

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland (AP) — Nick Price, two strokes down in the British Open and lining up a monster putt for an eagle on the 17th hole, needed something dramatic to happen.

"I knew I had to make it," Price said. "I really couldn't believe it when it went in. I really couldn't. When it jumped in the right side, I almost jumped out of my skin."

"My heart rate must have been 250, and it didn't slow down until that last putt on 18."

The amiable man from Zimbabwe was at the peak of his golfing powers in engineering one of the most remarkable turn-arounds in the history of the game's oldest tournament.

A 50- to 60-foot eagle putt on the 17th green at Turnberry — and a tactical mistake by Jesper Parnevik of Sweden — proved to be the critical factors in what Price called "a fairy-tale finish" to the 123rd British Open Championship on Sunday.

"It tested my heart, my temperament and my character," Price said.

They were found to be sound beyond his own wildest imagining.

"When you reach down deep inside yourself, sometimes you surprise yourself," Price said. "I didn't know I had it in me to play down the stretch the way I did."

Neither did anyone else. But his 3-4 finish, birdie-eagle-par, gave him a closing 66 and made him a 1-shot winner over the stunned Parnevik.

The amazing eagle putt provided the knockout punch, capping a quick 3-shot swing in Price's favor.

The little tap-in for par on the last hole, completing a 12-under-par 268 total, brought tears to Price's eyes and wiped away the haunting memories of the two losses that came on a 6-year cycle.

In 1982 the youthful Price blew a 3-shot lead with six holes to go and lost to Tom Watson at Troon.

Six years later, in 1988 at Royal Lytham, he lost to Seve Ballesteros who, Price said,

"was the best player in the world and playing at his very best."

After another six years, however, it was Price hoisting the old silver claret jug.

It was his 15th worldwide victory going back to his 1992 PGA Championship. No one has won more in that span. And it was his fourth win of the year, including three on the American tour.

In this one, he got a little unwitting help from Parnevik, 29, now a rookie on the American tour.

He didn't look at the leader boards. And it led to a crucial, decisive tactical error.

"I thought I needed another birdie at the 18th," Parnevik said. "If I'd known the position, I think I would have gone for the middle of the green. The way it turned out, maybe I should have taken a glimpse."

Instead of going for the middle of the green, Parnevik attacked the pin, tucked to the left. He missed in deep rough and made a bogey.

That cut his lead to one over Price, who was playing the 17th at the time. Parnevik was in the scorers' tent adding up his 67 when the unmistakable roar went up from the gallery.

And he knew what it meant. A stunned, stricken expression crossed his face. He covered his eyes with his hand, then went back to the card.

Fuzzy Zoeller, the 42-year-old American who led going into the final round, could do no better than match par 70 and was third alone at 271.

Anders Forsbrand, another Swede, shot 64 and tied for fourth at 273 with Mark James of England and David Feherty of Northern Ireland.

James moved up with a 68 that included an eagle-birdie finish, and Feherty shot 70. American Brad Faxon, who entered the final round in a tie for the lead with Zoeller, did not make a birdie over the last 18 holes, shot 73 and was next at 274.

Tom Watson, who once got to within a single stroke of the lead in his quest for a record-matching sixth British Open title, was even more cruelly frustrated.

From a contending position, he took consecutive double bogeys on the eighth and ninth, dropped four shots back and wasn't a factor again.

He finished with a 74 and a 276 total. "I 3-putted 8 and 9 for double bogeys," he said after missing from inside 4 feet on each. "It was the 3-putts that killed me. It hurts, hurts inside. Very disappointing."

Those cruel short strokes

TURNBERRY, Scotland (AP) — One measure of just how cruel a game golf can be is that the shortest stroke too often becomes the most difficult one to make.

Smarts and guts and luck are all part of the mix necessary to win a major championship. But the finishing blows, the putts that seal them, clearly come too early to suit some careers and not late enough for others.

"I figure I've got six or seven years left of playing really well," just-crowned British Open champion Nick Price said Sunday.

"Guys are playing well into their 40's — Tom Watson is 44 — but realistically, once you get to 33, 34, it's the start of not playing your best golf. You start to lose your edge on the greens."

Though there are bound to be exceptions, Price, who arguably is still peaking at age 37, has it just about right. In fact, a changing of the guard may already be under way.

Spaniard Jose Maria Olazabal, 28, is the current holder of the Masters' green jacket. South African Ernie Els won the U.S. Open last month at the ridiculously tender age of 24. And if Price hadn't holed a twisting 50-foot eagle putt at Turnberry's 17th, and 29-year-old Jesper Parnevik had holed his 6-foot par putt at the 18th, the generational shift might have been even more pronounced. Even with the result, however, the picture becomes clearer as to who most likely will not win any more majors.

Smith suffers minor injury at Cowboys' camp

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Last season, Dallas running back Emmitt Smith led the Cowboys to an overtime victory over the New York Giants despite suffering a separated shoulder in the first half.

On Sunday, the Super Bowl and NFL most valuable player was taken down during a collision with unofficial team mascot "Crazy Ray" Jones.

Smith suffered a slight head injury when a small motor buggy he was riding slammed into Jones. The 63-year-old mascot was not seriously injured.

Cowboys spokesman Rich Dalrymple said Smith "banged his head real good" when the collision caused him to tumble from the cart. He lay motionless on the ground for several minutes before he was revived and taken to a hospital.

"He did walk to a car before he was taken to the hospital," Dalrymple said. "He was aware of his senses, and I don't think he ever lost consciousness. We think he's OK. He was just dinged."

Smith underwent a CAT scan at St. David Hospital Sunday, and results came back negative and Smith was released, said nursing supervisor Susan Curbello.

The accident occurred shortly after noon as players gathered for a bus at the Cowboys' training camp on the St. Edward's University campus. The bus was to take the players to a nearby football field for the team's annual Blue-Whitescrammage, Dalrymple said.

"I never saw the buggy coming, and the next thing I know, both me and Emmitt were on the ground. I was scared, but I don't think Emmitt was hurt very seriously," Jones said.

"I guess they're going to blame me for the whole darn thing."

Smith, who was wiping his eyes with his shirt when the crash occurred, said later that the episode took him surprise.

"I remember everything that happened, but it was a jolt because I didn't see it coming," he said. "I know we weren't going very fast and I'm just happy that everyone is OK. I don't see it having any effect on our camp and I'll be ready to get back on the field as soon as they say I'm allowed."

The buggies are small vehicles Cowboys players have been renting for $300 each for use as personal campus transportation. They carry the warning: "Rider can fall off and be killed."

"I talked to the team about these damn dangerous toys we've got over there," coach Barry Switzer said. "You're always concerned about things like this because guys act like ninth-graders sometimes. We had an accident today with Emmitt that scares the hell out of you."

Cowboys trainer Kevin O'Neill said all the tests performed on Smith came back with normal results.

"We'll monitor Emmitt for the next 24 hours and we expect him to be back on the field for practice on Tuesday," O'Neill said.

The Cowboys have Monday off to play in a golf outing.

Indians hold narrow edge over White Sox in Central Division

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

AL roundup

After a batty weekend of mysterious capers at Comiskey Park, only this much is certain: The Cleveland Indians still hold a narrow lead over the Chicago White Sox.

The White Sox salvaged a split of an intriguing four-game series, beating Cleveland 5-2 Sunday to pull within two percentage points of the first-place Indians in the AL Central.

The teams play four more games next weekend in Cleveland, the last time they're scheduled to meet in the regular season. But before then, there are plenty of questions to be answered:

— Was Albert Belle's bat corked?
— Who broke into the umpires' locker room and switched Belle's bat?

— Was the bat that showed up Sunday the same one that was confiscated Friday night?

— "It won't be pushed under the carpet," White Sox general manager Ron Schueler said. "It's serious to break into a locked room. Someone broke into a locked room and there was damage done."

In other games, New York trounced Seattle 14-4, Baltimore beat California 10-5, Boston defeated Oakland 4-3, Milwaukee downed Minnesota 5-3, Toronto beat Texas 3-1 and Kansas City topped Detroit 4-1.

Belle's bat was taken by umpires Friday night after White Sox manager Gene Lamont questioned whether it was corked. Later in the evening, someone climbed through an opening above the office of Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove, worked 40 feet through a crawl space and dropped into the umpires' room.

Belle's bat was taken and a newer, shiny model was put in its place.

The umpires weren't fooled, and on Sunday they had another bat in their hands, presumably Belle's original bat. No one was explaining the latest switch.

The bat will be sent to New York to be X-rayed.

Cleveland general manager John Hart did not say who was behind the break-in, although he seemed to have little doubt.

"Obviously, it was someone internally with the Indians," he said.

Belle went 1-for-4 as three White Sox pitchers shut down the Indians. Jason Bere (10-2) struck out seven in 5 2-3 innings, Dennis Cook gave up one hit in 2 1-3 innings and Roberto Hernandez closed for his 10th save.

Frank Thomas hit his 33rd home run and Joey Cora hit his fourth career homer for the White Sox.

"I got a quote for you," losing pitcher Jack Morris (8-6) said. "I think Joey Cora went into the umpires' room. ... I supplied all the energy on that one."

At one point, Hargrove had plate umpire Tim McClelland check a ball being used by Cook. After an inspection, the ball was kept in play.

"If he says I'm trying to cheat, then he's got to do whatever he can," Cook said. "Maybe they thought I said something bad about Albert."

Yankees 14, Mariners 4

Jim Leyritz homered twice and drove in five runs, Danny Tartabull hit a grand slam and New York completed its first-ever four-game sweep of Seattle.

Wade Boggs went 4-for-4 and Bernie Williams had three hits for the Yankees, who scored 46 runs in the series.

Leyritz hit a pair of two-run shots, giving him 15 homers, and had a bases-loaded walk. Tartabull's 16th homer capped a six-run seventh inning that made it 9-2.

Reggie Jefferson and Tino Martinez homered for Seattle.

Scott Kamieniecki (6-5) is 5-1 lifetime against the Mariners. John Cummings (1-4) was the loser.

Orioles 10, Angels 5

Rafael Palmeiro and Dwight Smith both homered and drove in three runs as Baltimore won at California.

Palmeiro connected for a three-run shot in the first inning. It was his 18th homer and third in four games.

Smith hit a two-run homer in the third off Russ Springer (2-2) and an RBI single in the sixth. Jeff Tackett drove in two runs with a triple and single.

Chili Davis hit his 18th homer and drove in three runs for the Angels. The Orioles had 15 hits, backing Jamie Moyer (4-6).

Red Sox 4, Athletics 3

Tom Brunansky hit a foul sacrifice fly in the ninth inning, giving Boston the victory at Oakland.

Otis Nixon drew a leadoff walk in the ninth and stole second. Mark Acre (4-1) also walked Tim Lincecum, and John Valentin sacrificed.

After an intentional walk loaded the bases, Brunansky hit a deep foul that left fielder Rickey Henderson caught, enabling Nixon to score easily.

Steve Farr (2-1) won for the first time since being traded by Cleveland on July 1. Ken Ryan pitched the ninth for his ninth save.

Brewers 5, Twins 3

Matt Mieske hit a three-homer in the first inning, sending Milwaukee over host Minnesota.

Rick Wrona also connected for the Brewers, his first home run in the majors since Oct. 1, 1989.

Bob Scanlan (2-5) gave up six hits in eight innings, and Mike Fetters finished for his 12th save.

Carlos Pulido (3-6) gave up Mieske's ninth homer.

Blue Jays 3, Rangers 1

Dave Stewart, struggling with a 9.42 ERA in his previous three starts, shut down Texas on four hits for seven innings at Texas.

Stewart (6-8) struck out eight and didn't yield a walk, helping the Blue Jays to their first victory ever against Rangers starter Kenny Rogers (10-5).

Domingo Cedeño, Darnell Coles and Pat Borders had RBI hits for Toronto. Texas' Juan Gonzalez became the first player to homer into the left field upper deck at The Ballpark.

Royals 4, Tigers 1

At Kansas City, Greg Gagne had a two-run double and David Cone (13-4) allowed six hits with nine strikeouts in eight innings before Jeff Montgomery earned his 17th save.

Detroit starter Greg Gohr (2-2) lasted just 2 1-3 innings.

Valenzuela picks up first major league victory since last October

By TOM WITHERS
Associated Press Writer

NL roundup

Fernando was back in the win column, and it wasn't a Brazilian soccer star.

Fernando Valenzuela, considered washed up after last season, shut out his former team for eight innings Sunday, and the Philadelphia Phillies withstood a remarkable rally by the Los Angeles Dodgers for a 9-7 victory.

Valenzuela (1-2), signed out of the Mexican League on June 24, picked up his first win in the majors since last Oct. 1 with Baltimore.

The left-hander blanked the Dodgers on four hits for eight innings. He retired 21 of 22 batters until Mitch Webster broke up the shutout bid with a leadoff homer in the ninth.

"I tried to come in on the hands with it, but it came out over the plate," Valenzuela said of the pitch that cost him the shutout.

The homer triggered a seven-run inning for the Dodgers against Valenzuela and three relievers. Los Angeles had two runners on base when Carlos Hernandez, who homered earlier in the inning, grounded out to end the game.

"I guess that ballgame was the reason behind having only 27 outs in a game of baseball," Phillies manager Jim Fregosi said.

The comeback reminded Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda of a 1990 game in which the Phillies scored eight runs in the ninth against the Dodgers, erasing an eight-run deficit. Philadelphia won 12-11 in the 10th inning.

"I was thinking about that game a couple of years ago when they got eight to beat us," Lasorda said. "It's amazing. We don't get any runs for eight innings and then turn around and get seven, with the winning run at the dish."

The rally nearly overshadowed the performance by Valenzuela, who got his 150th career win. He gave up three hits in the first two innings, then retired 21 of the next 22 before Webster's homer.

Despite the loss, Lasorda was happy for Valenzuela, who won 141 games with Los Angeles from 1980-90.

"It just goes to show you how left-handers do in this league," he said. "We have trouble with left-handers, no matter who they are. He made it look easy."

Jim Eisenreich went 3-for-3 with two doubles and Mariano Duncan and John Kruk homered for Philadelphia.

Elsewhere in the National League, it was San Francisco 6, Montreal 4; Houston 9, Pittsburgh 0; Atlanta 2, Florida 1; San Diego 10, New York 1; Colorado 10, St. Louis 6; and Cincinnati 3, Chicago 2 in 10 innings.

Giants 6, Expos 4

At Montreal, rookie William VanLandingham no-hit the Expos for 7 1-3 innings, and Matt Williams homered as San Francisco won its eighth straight.

VanLandingham (5-1) lost his no-hit bid in the eighth when Lenny Webster doubled with one out.

Williams hit his NL-leading 34th homer, a two-run shot, in the first off Jeff Fassero (7-6).

Barry Bonds went 3-for-5 and Darryl Strawberry had two hits and drove in a run for the Giants, who are 8-0 since Strawberry joined the club on July 7.

The Expos closed to 6-4 in the ninth before Rod Beck got Lou

Frazier to ground out with runners at first and second for his 20th save.

Astros 9, Pirates 0

At Pittsburgh, Steve Finley's grand slam highlighted an eight-run second inning and reliever Shane Reynolds pitched seven scoreless innings after Doug Drabek was injured.

Houston couldn't win Friday despite a seven-run first inning, but there was no Pirates comeback this time as Drabek and Reynolds (7-4) combined on a five-hit shutout.

Drabek pitched two scoreless innings before being hit by Paul Wagner's fastball just above the right elbow while squaring to bunt in the third. X-rays were not required and Drabek was to be examined today in Houston.

Hitting Drabek seemed to rattle Wagner (5-8), who didn't retire another batter. He walked Craig Biggio to load the bases before Finley hit his first career grand slam.

Braves 2, Marlins 1

At Atlanta, Greg Maddux won his 12th game with his league-leading seventh complete game, and rookie Jose Oliva drove in two runs for the third consecutive game.

Maddux (12-5), who lost three of his previous four decisions, gave up nine hits and didn't walk a batter. He struck out seven.

Bret Barberie got three hits for Florida.

Oliva, hitting .444 (11-25) since his recall from the minors on June 30 to fill in for injured third baseman Terry Pendleton, doubled in two runs in the fourth off Rich Scheid (0-1).

Padres 10, Mets 1

At New York, Eddie Williams hit two home runs to lead a 19-hit attack and Phil Plantier drove in three runs for San Diego.

Williams went 3-for-4 and drove in four runs and Plantier scored three times for the Padres, who scored four runs in the first inning off Pete Smith (4-9) and three in the fifth after two were out.

Joey Hamilton (6-4) gave up four hits in eight innings.

Tony Gwynn went 3-for-4 to raise his NL-leading average to .391.

Rockies 10, Cardinals 6

At Denver, Dante Bichette hit a grand slam and drove in a club-record six runs to take over the NL RBI lead as Colorado hammered St. Louis for the fourth straight game.

Marvin Freeman (8-2) allowed the Cardinals five hits in seven innings, helping the Rockies draw within two games of NL West-leading Los Angeles.

Colorado drew 61,972 to establish another major-league attendance record. The four-game total of 259,113 eclipsed its own record for a four-game series of 251,521 set against St. Louis on July 22-25, 1993.

Bichette, whose 89 RBIs lead the NL, hit his 23rd homer in the third off Rick Sutcliffe (5-4).

Reds 3, Cubs 2, 10 innings

At Cincinnati, Reggie Sanders hit a bases-loaded single in the 10th inning as the Reds improved to 9-2 in extra-inning games this season.

Jacob Brumfield singled to open the 10th off Jose Bautista (3-4), and Barry Larkin sacrificed. After two walks, Sanders lined his single off the wall in left.

Johnny Ruffin (5-0) pitched the 10th for the win.

Chicago's Kevin Foster struck out a career-high 10 in 5 2-3 innings, but didn't get a win because the Cubs' offense struggled and the defense let him down.

Pampa's Palmer breaks record in Masters discus

DALLAS — Pampa's Wendell Palmer broke the world record in the discus at the Texas State Masters Track and Field Championships in Dallas last weekend.

Palmer, competing in the 60-64 age division, threw the discus 178 feet, 8 inches, breaking the old record set by Dan Aldridge at 174-0 in 1980.

Palmer also won the shot put in the same age group with a throw of 45-10.

"I felt like I could have done better in the shot, but we had to throw uphill. I'm still pleased with the throw," Palmer said.

A throw-a-thon and possibly a weight pentathlon will be held July 30 in Pampa.

Information will be published in the Pampa News once more details are available.

Mays dead at 54

LEWISVILLE, Texas (AP) — Jerry Mays, a defensive leader of the Kansas City Chiefs Super Bowl IV championship team, has died following a long battle with cancer. He was 54.

Mays died Sunday night at his home near Lake Lewisville.

Mays was an all-state line-man at Dallas Sunset High School in 1956 and earned all-Southwest Conference honors at Southern Methodist University before joining the Dallas Texans of the American Football League in 1961.

Mays played defensive end when the Texans won the AFL championship in a 20-17 double-overtime game with the Houston Oilers.

More killed in Rwandan refugee stampede, shelling; rebels name president

By PAUL ALEXANDER
Associated Press Writer

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — Rebel forces in Rwanda declared victory today as hundreds of thousands of Hutu refugees threatened to overwhelm a second area of neighboring Zaire.

The Tutsi-dominated rebels said they had swept away the last Hutu government resistance, and that a cease-fire was in place. The rebel leader said he hoped the end of the fighting would halt the desperate human flight out of Rwanda.

It was eerily quiet today in Goma, where up to 1 million terrified Hutus had fled advancing rebels in the previous five days. An estimated 170 people died Sunday in cross-border mortar fire and in two massive stampedes across the frontier. Today, the shelling had stopped and the gunfire had tapered off.

Hutus, fearing revenge from the rebels, began crossing into Goma on Wednesday — at least 300,000 coming across on Sunday alone.

From Geneva, the Red Cross said fears of a rebel advance into southwestern Rwanda touched off a new exodus Sunday into Bukavu, 60 miles south of Goma.

Red Cross spokesman Tony Burgener said tens of thousands had arrived by this morning and the number was rapidly approaching 100,000.

"There is a potential of another couple of hundred thousand people that might come in there as well," he said. With that many refugees, the situation in Bukavu would become "very dangerous," he said.

In Goma, Burgener said, there were first signs of dysentery, and an epidemic probably would be unavoidable.

The refugees in Goma and Bukavu fled for fear that Tutsi-led rebels would try to avenge the slaughter of an estimated 200,000 to 500,000 people — most of them Tutsis — by Hutu militias. Thus far, there has been little evidence of widespread rebel reprisals against Hutus.

In the Rwandan capital, Kigali, the rebels declared victory against the Hutu government, but said another fight was brewing with French troops protecting an area of southeastern Rwanda where Hutu government leaders were hiding.

"We have captured all of Rwanda up to the French protection zone and a cease-fire is effectively in place," rebel commander Gen. Paul Kagame said.

He said he hoped the victory would halt the flight of Hutus into Zaire.

"There is no need for anyone to flee Rwanda," Kagame said. "We guarantee all Rwandans stability and security."

He said his men were under orders not to harm civilians, but gave no assurances to French forces.

The rebels want the French to arrest the leaders of the Hutu government. The French say their troops have a U.N. mandate to carry out a humanitarian mission, and arresting government leaders is not part of that mandate.

The rebels also announced today that Pasteur Bizimungu, a Hutu, would serve a five-year term as president.

Today, Zairian soldiers kept people away from the border crossing at Goma. Soldiers went through thousands of guns confiscated from Rwandan soldiers who joined what Panos Moutzias of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees called "the exodus of a nation."

With little food and water, relief workers were unable to cope with the flood of refugees at Goma.

Ten flights carrying supplies managed to arrive Sunday before the shipments were halted by shelling near the airport, the French Foreign Ministry said. The ministry quoted U.N. commander Romeo Dallaire as saying the shells were probably fired by the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front.

Spokeswoman Brenda Barton said the U.N. World Food Program would need 62,000 tons of food monthly. At the height of the operation to feed Somalia, only 14,000 tons were going in.

"Goma is out of control," Moutzias said. "We feel defeated and exhausted."

The violence in Rwanda began April 6 when President Juvenal Habyarimana, a Hutu, died in a mysterious plane crash. Within hours, Hutu militias began systematically killing anyone perceived to oppose the government.

The rebels then relaunched a war against the Hutu government that had been halted by a peace accord in August.

Up to 3 million Rwandans — about 40 percent of the prewar population — are refugees, some within their own country, others outside.

Before last week's mass flight, more than half a million fled earlier into the country's other neighbors: Tanzania, Burundi and Uganda. With the number in Zaire reaching 1 million, one in every five Rwandans has fled the country.

Former mail price opponents change sides as Postal Service prepares to hike prices

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the post office seeks a rate increase it usually goes toe to toe with some of its biggest customers for months of sparring. But this time around, the two sides are entering the ring hand in hand.

There will still be challengers when the independent Postal Rate Commission considers higher mail charges, expected to take effect early next year.

But, for the first time, many of the most powerful commercial mailing groups are lined up on the side of the U.S. Postal Service.

At stake is a series of proposed rate increases averaging 10.3 percent, including a three-cent rise in first-class stamp prices, to 32 cents.

That rate was suggested early in the year by a coalition of major mailers. These groups said that if the post office adopted it as its formal proposal, and imposed it equally on just about everyone, they wouldn't fight the plan.

The Postal Rate Commission must pass on proposed rate increases.

Traditionally, the 10-month review involves extensive legal sparring as various groups try to get lower rates for one class of mail or another and shift costs to other mailers.

Normally about 75 businesses and organizations join in the battles over postal rate increases. This time, 60 have shown interest, with more than half backing the post office, said Arthur Sackler of the Mailer's Council.

Things can go much more smoothly when "you have many fewer parties that are making their case against this agreement and defend their own little corner of the world," said Sackler, whose group represents large business mailers.

The process costs the post office and the groups involved as much as $100 million, much of which could be saved by if all sides could agree on a rate increase that affected everyone the same.

On March 8, the post office accepted the idea suggested by the major mailers and sent a 10.3 percent rate proposal to the commission.

Now the Postal Service has reached a "stipulation and agreement" with 33 major mailers, who are backing it before the commission.

Among the 33 are Time-Warner, the Advertising Mail Marketing Association, Parcel Shippers Association, Association of American Publishers, L.L. Bean, Direct Marketing Association, Magazine Publishers of America and The Recording Industry Association of America.

Sackler said the deal is being supported by people who "are usually trying to knife each other in the back," in postal rate cases.

"The level of support for our general rate proposal in this case is unprecedented," said William J. Henderson, chief marketing officer at the Postal Service.

Both postal officials and Sackler said they expect additional groups to join the agreement.

There is another side, of course.

The recently formed Coalition to Make Our First-Class Mail First Class says it doesn't have the money to become a formal opponent of the rate increase. But spokesman Scott Macdonald says the group is asking its members to write the Rate Commission urging that the post office be forced to justify its proposal.

And many businesses and groups planning to make presentations before the rate commission haven't taken the post office's side.

While formal positions are still being prepared, rate case participants who haven't backed the Postal Service include the Alliance of Nonprofit Mailers, American Bankers Association, Classroom Publishers Association, Council of Public Utility Mailers, Newspaper Association of America and United Parcel Service.

Only once before, in 1975, did the post office try to drum up support from major mailers. And that effort didn't start until the legal battle had already been under way for months.

If the new rates are approved the three-cent increase will cost the average household between 60 cents and 75 cents more a month, postal officials say.

But it means nearly $3 billion in added revenue for an operation that lost $1.7 billion last year and is struggling to hold the red ink to $1.3 billion in 1994.

Indeed, concern has been expressed in Congress that the post office isn't asking for a big enough increase, meaning that rates might have to go up again in a year or so.

The proposal calls for a rate increase of about 10.3 percent for first- and second-class regular rate mail, 10.2 percent for third class and 13.2 percent for fourth class.

First class is cards and letters, second is magazines and other periodicals, third class is advertising and fourth class is parcels.

The current 29-cent rate was imposed Feb. 3, 1991.

Bosnian, Serb assemblies to decide on implementation of new peace plan

By MISHA SAVIC
Associated Press Writer

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The Bosnian Serb leader paid a visit today to the president of Serbia, who is pressing Bosnian Serbs to accept an international peace plan they despise.

The Bosnian Serb assembly was to vote on the plan today. Deputies said the meeting in the Serbian capital, Belgrade, between Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic and the president of Serbia, Slobodan Milosevic, delayed the vote.

On Sunday, Bosnian Serb leaders recommended rejecting the plan and Karadzic warned his people to brace for a flareup of the 27-month-old war.

International mediators gave the Serbs and a Muslim-Croat federation until Tuesday to decide on the plan or risk international action.

The Bosnian parliament, despite misgivings, was expected today to approve the proposal devised by the United States, Russia, France, Britain and Germany.

In Pale, the Bosnian Serbs' self-styled capital outside Sarajevo, the Serb assembly began its vote after Karadzic returned from Belgrade. NATO jets streaked overhead.

Before the vote, the mood in Pale was militantly against the plan, which requires Serbs to give up 13 important towns and shrinks their holdings from 70 percent of Bosnia to 49 percent.

"We want more than we hold now," said Dragan Milanovic, 52, of Petrovac in Serb-held western Bosnia, an area that would remain in Serb hands. "We cannot live like this. ... The Muslims would hold too much under the plan."

Nikola Kisin, another deputy from Serb-held Donji Vakuf in central Bosnia, said he toured the front-line in his region to test public opinion. "Our soldiers told me not to risk my life by voting yes," he said.

Milosevic, however, is pressing his former protege, Karadzic, into accepting the plan because he wants the United Nations to lift 2-year-old U.N. sanctions imposed against Yugoslavia for inciting the war. The economy of Serbia, the dominant republic in Yugoslavia, is exhausted by sanctions and the cost of aiding rebel Serbs in Bosnia and Croatia.

In Sarajevo, the Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, told the Bosnian parliament that the plan should be accepted not because it is good or will end the war but because it would give the Muslim-led government troops a better chance to "end the war successfully."

Izetbegovic was clearly alluding to the possibility that the international community would exempt the Bosnian government from an arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia if the Bosnian Serbs reject the plan. The plan gives the Muslim-Croat federation 51 percent of Bosnia.

"We shouldn't reject the plan because we think the other side is going to reject it," Izetbegovic told parliament. "Why should we help the other side with a negative answer, and give them a chance to continue the war and blame us for it?"

The international community has clearly signaled its impatience with Bosnia's warring parties. But the Serbs may try to play for time, hoping the fragile international consensus that emerged behind the latest plan breaks apart over controversial steps such as lifting the arms embargo.

Arming the government side would almost certainly cause U.N. peacekeepers to pull out of Bosnia.

In Brussels, Belgium, European foreign ministers made a last-minute appeal to the Bosnian Serbs to accept the peace plan, but acknowledged chances were slim.

"I am not particularly optimistic," Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd of Britain said.

Bosnia's Serbs went to war after majority Muslims and Croats voted to secede from Yugoslavia. Some 200,000 people are dead or missing.

The Serbs want to unite their territories with Serb-held parts of Croatia and Serbia proper to form a "Greater Serbia."

Christopher: It's time for Haiti dictators to go

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher said today he hopes international sanctions will drive Haiti's military dictators from power but that it still might take a U.S. invasion. Either way, he said, "it's time for their illegal government to go."

"Clearly nobody thinks the use of force is the most attractive option, but it may come to that," Christopher said from Jerusalem, where he is attempting to break an impasse in Israeli-Syrian peace negotiations.

Christopher, interviewed on NBC, stressed that "the president has not made that decision" on whether to invade the island.

Asked what he would tell Haitians hoping for a U.S. invasion, Christopher said: "You should say to them that we're maximizing our pressure on the illegal government with enhanced sanctions."

"It's time for their illegal government to go. We ought to bend all of our efforts in that direction. The United States is hoping that this pressure will be effective. At the same time, the president has deliberately kept the use-of-force option on the table."

The United States has vital interests in Haiti and cannot allow the situation there to continue, White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said Sunday on NBC's Meet the Press.

"You've got a country that is in turmoil, that's a neighbor ... and I don't think we can simply sit back and allow that kind of turmoil to continue," he said, referring to the flood of refugees and the "brutal military dictatorship just a few miles from our shore."

"We cannot simply sit back and allow the status quo to eat us up alive."

Asked if the United States would assist a rebellion within the Haitian military to overthrow its leaders, Panetta said, "we don't want to anticipate what could or could not happen in Haiti."

Defense Secretary William Perry, in Romania, told reporters Sunday that Clinton "truly has not decided, determined that there would be an invasion."

Asked whether the United States was drawing closer to such a decision, Perry said the administration was "proceeding farther along in the sanctions program" and that the president intends to "give it some time to see if it works."

But critics at both ends of the political spectrum said the administration is moving too quickly toward military action to oust the military leaders who took power in a 1991 coup.

"I think it's going to happen. I think they're right on the edge," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said on CBS' Face the Nation.

Dole said it was wrong to risk American and Haitian lives to restore democracy to that country. The United States shouldn't "run around invading countries because of democratic principles. If there's American interests threatened or American lives threatened that's another thing, but that hasn't happened," he said.

Rep. Kweisi Mfume, D-Md., the head of the 38-member Congressional Black Caucus, agreed with Dole that the administration's Haiti policy has increased the possibility of military intervention.

The president, he said on NBC, "ought to begin today by being consistent. That's been the biggest part of the problem." He said "the options are quickly running out. And, unfortunately, we're getting closer and closer to military action."

Some members of the 38-member black caucus advocate military intervention to restore President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Mfume, however, said there is no consensus and the final call must be the president's. "He has to make that decision."

Administration officials in recent days have repeatedly said that an invasion is not imminent. But the Pentagon has also stationed 2,800 Marines and 4,700 sailors in 16 ships off Haiti, and preparations are reportedly being made for a quick strike against the military regime if ordered.

A Time-CNN poll of 600 people released Sunday found that 75 percent of Americans oppose unilateral U.S. military action in Haiti, although one-half said they would support sending U.S. troops to Haiti as part of an international force.

Food author predicts trend toward five meals a day

By DARLENE SUPERVILLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Instead of three squares, the American daily diet of the future may consist of a five-snack routine — "daystart," "pulsebreak," "humpunch," "holdmeal" and "evesnack," a Chicago food writer suggests.

"Whether you call it grazing, mouth-surfing or refueling, it's evolving as a result of our dual-income, fast-paced lifestyles," Christopher Wolf says in an article in the current issue of The Futurist magazine.

"In the future, this grazing phenomenon will be formalized into a recognized pattern of five meals a day."

Wolf and others attribute the trend in part to the premium people put on leisure time and hassle-free lives and the food industry's success in making it easy to eat at any time.

More women working outside the home means fewer of them making meals from scratch; hence, the popularity of single-serve portions, drive-through lanes at restaurants, take-out food and microwave dinners.

"With two working parents and kids having all kinds of activities and people with different time schedules in the morning ... people eat when they can," said Lawrence Stifler of Health Management Resources in Boston.

Vending machines and sidewalk food carts also contribute.

"Easy accessibility is at the bottom of this," said Graham Molitor, vice president of the World Future Society and former food company employee. He said grazing originated with cavemen, who picked at food all day because they couldn't get enough edibles in one sitting.

Surveys by the Agriculture Department and the Food and Drug Administration have confirmed that young adults are eating more often during the day, said John Vanderveen, director of the Office of Plant and Dairy Foods and Beverages at the FDA's Center For Food Safety and Applied Nutrition.

"Part of it is probably due to the fact that the typical pattern of the family eating together is not being enforced anymore," he said. "The whole family does not sit down and eat meals together as they have in the past."

"Children are doing more snacking and these practices tend to move into adulthood, and we now see young adults doing that," Vanderveen added.

Others say a modified form of the family dinner still exists, though everyone won't necessarily be eating the same thing.

"The traditional family dinner is changing, but it is very, very important," said Jeff Nedelman, a spokesman for the Grocery Manufacturers of America, which represents about 140 food makers.

Wolf says there's evidence that eating smaller, more frequent meals may actually be healthy, boosting energy levels because the body gets a constant supply of nutrients and has less food from each meal to digest.
