When the official Court Calendar from Buckingham palace announced that Mr. and Mrs. Simpson were among the guests at a private dinner party given by the King, the British news magazine Cavalcade published a column about Mrs. Simpson and her friendship with the bachelor King-Emperor of the British Empire.

A few weeks later Mrs. Simpson's name again appeared in the Court Circular as a dinner guest at the palace.

Legend has it that the Prince soon began to dance more with the chap-erone than with Lady Furness, and ultmately the titled Englishwoman dropped out while the slender, bluef American girl from Maryland was whirling more and more frequently in the Prince's arms while dipping and gliding in Edward's favorite tango or spinning through the intracacies of the carioca.

Mrs. Simpson retained the royal interest, already whethed by her dancing provess, through her ac-knowledged brilliance in both re-partee and intelligent conversation. Always before, however, she had remained in the background, until the Court Circular, announcing the King's first formal non-diplomatic dinner party since his accession end-ed the list of guests with the words Mr. and Mrs. Ernest
