NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

Any erroneous reflection upon the character, standing, or reputation of any individual, firm, concern, or corporation that may appear in the columns of the Pampa Daily News will be gladly corrected when called to the attention of the editor.

THE AMENDMENT providing for an increase in the number of Supreme Court judges from three to nine and the establishment of a five-member Court of Criminal Appeals, which was defeated at the last state election, has been recommended for another vote by the State Bar association.

Whether this amendment fell under the displeasure aroused over the tax amendment, or failed of itself, is hard to say. The bar as a whole gave the impression of favoring it.

The judiciary as now organized is over-worked to the extent of impending justice. But it is hard to obtain any kind of constitutional change. Voters are taught from youth up to respect, even revere, the constitution. The result is too much rigidity.

Good Will Salesman

Good Will, Inc., is a new Chicago business firm.

A former newspaper man has turned professional adviser to business men who want assistance in developing, maintaining, and enhancing good will.

The reader may think this another scheme to make a living at the expense of the other fellow. It should be remembered that good will is now considered a tangible asset.

The favor of the public must be counted, not merely to be obtained, but to be maintained. Good service is the basis of good will, but there are many—yes, thousands—of good businesses and good products which are not "going over" for lack of promotion.

Good will is imbedded in satisfaction, a word which means also measures of popularity, publicity, habit, appeal, and location. Who has not seen the popular fancy change from one article to another, from one amusement place to a different one?

People are very much like any other gregarious animal—prone to buy and patronize what pleases their neighbors. Handling this tendency on a big scale is a matter too large for the situation of a busy executive, hence the likely success of Good Will, Inc.

Some of the papers carried a story about a mighty army of western farmers going to Kansas City to the Republican convention. That would give K. C. quite a parking problem.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON — Captain Willim H. Slayton, who guides the destinies of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, does not agree with Police Chief Jacob Graul of Cleveland, O., that the return of the saloon would be preferable to present conditions under the prohibition law.

Although he did not outline his plans definitely, Captain Slayton indicated that he favored some sort of compromise between the absolute prohibition of the dry law enthusiasts and the out-and-out wetness of the extremely moist contingent.

"I don't believe that we have to return to the old saloon, but some method is certainly preferable to a continuance of the conditions we have now," he said in an interview. "Taking 1919 as the last wet year, arrests for drunkenness in the United States have been multiplied nearly three times.

"For a thousand years the civilized world has been trying to decrease the evils of the liquor traffic. Many methods have been tried, some with a little success, some with no success, and some working positive harm. No method has been a really great success, because human nature can't be reformed overnight by law. The reformation must be gradual and educative.

"For years before national prohibition Washington was dry by law. Under control of the federal government it had prohibition. And yet Major Hesse, the Washington chief of police, who is a dry, recently explained to the House appropriations committee that the police must have more money to cope with the increase in offenses against the law since the prohibition law was passed."

Captain Slayton then listed a set of figures he has compiled showing, he said, how arrests for violation of the dry law have increased in Washington. These indicated arrests for drunkenness had risen 168 per cent; for manufacture of liquor, 307 per cent; for transporting liquor, 4580 per cent; for possession of liquor, 13,323 per cent, and for driving while intoxicated, 1083 per cent.

"What we have in the District of Columbia," he continued, "is a fair sample of what is happening in the United States.

"Our association believes we should rid ourselves of prohibition. It represents the great public, which stands almost helpless between the extreme desires of the brewers and distillers who want unlimited sale of liquor, and the equally extreme insistence of the Anti-Saloon League, which insists that no one shall take a drink."

Markets

KANSAS CITY, June 2.—(A. S. Department of Agriculture) Moderate receipts of cattle, combined with firm prices at Eastern dressed beef markets, were strengthening factors to the live trade around the eleven market circuit this week. Fed steers and long yearlings recovered the losses suffered last week. Matured steers were generally 25 to 50 cents higher and light weight steers strong to 25 cents higher. Light yearlings ruled unevenly steady to 25 cents higher; slaughter cows were under pressure, packers discriminating against heavy descriptions as is customary at this time of the year. Cows have held at relatively high prices this year due to the scarcity of low priced killing steers. Choice long yearlings at Chicago this week reached $14.75 and $14.90 was paid for heavy steers. Total receipts for the week which included a holiday, were around 163,400, as compared with 172,211, last week, and 315,000 the corresponding period a year ago.

Closing values on hog round circuit were generally steady to 25 cents lower with spots of more or underweights. Chicago had a top bid day on 9.95 on choice 270-pound averages but quoted a nominal price of $10.00 on choice medium weights. The week's supply approximated 68,700, a shortage of 7,500 from last week and a year ago.

Considerable unevenness prevailed throughout the week on fat lambs, springs closing steady to 50 cents higher and mature lambs a little declined. Aged stock ruled unevenly steady to $1 lower, killing ewes showing the most decline. Spring lambs at Chicago scored $19.35 and fed clipped lambs at the same point early in the week brought $17.25. Total offerings were around 193,500, against 177,510 last week and 171,542 the same period a year ago.

Farmer Suspected as Third Member of Family Found

McAllister, Okla., June 2.—(AP)—Search for Eb Jackson, mountain farmer and suspected moonshiner, was intensified tonight following the finding today of the body of a third slain member of his family—his ten-year-old daughter, Abbie.

Bodies of his son, Orville, 16, and his girl wife, Myrtle Lee, 15, were found yesterday by V. H. Hix, prohibition agent, who went to the Jackson home in search of a still.

Villagers at Sardia, Latimer county told officers that Jackson was jealous of the attentions paid by his son to his wife.

County Attorney W. E. Gotcher, one of the investigators, said he expected to issue a warrant for Jackson's arrest soon. The still for which Hix was looking was found today on Jackson's farm. Jackson already is under indictment for cattle larceny and was awaiting trial in district court here.

A simple funeral was accorded the three victims in the door yard of the little mountain home today.

Dave Pope returned Saturday morning from Mineral Wells where he has been taking medical treatment for the past three weeks.

When A Girl Loves

© 1928 by N.E.A. Service

by RUTH DEWEY GROVES

As she turned the key her ears were assailed by voices coming from a connecting room.

THIS HAS HAPPENED VIRGINIA BREWSTER, upon the sudden death of her father after losing his fortune, goes to live with a childhood friend, CLARA DEAN, and her father-in-law, NATHANIEL DEAN, who despises her and her father-in-law. CLARISSA becomes jealous of VIRGINIA and the latter decides to leave but DEAN opposes her departure and asks her to marry him. When she refuses, he threatens to expose the fact that her father had charged him out of $100,000. Recklessly, VIRGINIA promises to earn the money to pay him in one year or marry him if she fails. Then she slips out of his house, she wears a valuable ring for $125 and realises that she must find a cheap place to live at once.

CHAPTER XVII VIRGINIA knew in a flash of anguished comprehension that she could not tell Nathaniel of her bargain with Frederick Dean. She could not rob him of his peace of mind—destroy his power to create or go on with his work. In all likelihood $100,000 was as far beyond his reach as hers, and if he were told that lack of it would spell unutterable heartache for both of them he would be as unhappy and as desperate as she. And before morning Virginia knew to the fullest just how unhappy, how desperate her situation was. More surely than ever she realized that she must make her fight alone. She might fall beneath the juggernaut of defeat, but until her last hope was dead she would spare Nathaniel the embarrassing knowledge of what might come. She arose in the morning steeled with this resolve. And the fear of defeat helped her, too; it drove her on to battle against hopeless odds. By telephone she made an appointment with Mr. Gardiner at his office and when the time came she was there, waiting impatiently in the anti-room. He had suggested coming to her but she had wanted it this way. "You look too worn to have come out," he reproved her when she had sunk wearily into a deep leather chair by his desk. "I didn't want to see you at my hotel," Virginia explained. Then, after a pause of startled silence: "I've left Mr. Dean's house," she added simply. Mr. Gardiner emitted an exclamation of pained surprise. "But, my dear Miss Brewster..." he began in protest. Virginia broke in quickly. "Please don't try to advise me," she begged breathlessly. "Clara Dean and I had some trouble and I couldn't stay. I'm at the Ritz now but I'll have to find cheaper quarters. That's why I came to see you. Isn't there any money for me from my father's estate?" she asked almost prayerfully. Mr. Gardiner shook his regret fully. "Not yet," he told her. "There hasn't been time for a settlement. But I can arrange a personal loan for you," he offered, but not too warmly. "No, thank you. I will not borrow money until I know how I can pay it back," Virginia refused firmly. "I have two strings of pearls; I can raise money on them." Gardiner instantly became very grave. "I'm afraid you are going to be disappointed there, my dear," he sympathized. "Those pearls are behavior. She had turned and for a second or two she swayed as if about to fall. Mr. Gardiner reached forth to support her but she moved on through the open doorway and then, seeming rather strangely from sheer force of will, she steadied herself and turned to smile reassuringly at him. "I'll bring the pearls in soon," she called back from the outer door and then closed it quietly behind her. There was an aching pressure in her head and the floor of the elevator seemed to drop from under her feet and leave her suspended in air as she was carried swiftly to the street level. Other passengers looked at her queerly and she was aware of it but did not care. There was so little to care about except the menace that stood in the way of her marriage to Nathaniel. That alone absorbed her. Other thoughts only nagged disagreeably at a tired mind. Her only really valuable possessions, the pearls she loved, were not hers. Well, she had feared it might be like that. The shock of having her fears confirmed had passed. She felt dully that it did not matter; it would only hasten her search for work. After all, they wouldn't have helped much toward paying Dean his $100,000. It wouldn't have helped much to accept money from Mr. Gardiner, either. Perhaps there would be nothing at all for her from the estate. She did not want to be in debt; he was owing money on the strength of any hoped-for funds so uncertain as money from that source. Out on the street she leaned for a moment against a plate-glass window and tried to think what it was she had meant to do next. "Get the pearls? Yes, but there was something before that. It eluded her and she let it go. "I've got to find another place to live right away," she told herself. Up and down the street, cars of every description, except commercial, were seeking their tortuous way, and Virginia stood at the curb until a cruising taxi stopped at her signal. She did the driver to take her to the Ritz, but before she turned off Fifth Avenue she remembered what it was she wanted to do first of all. She must get her balance from the bank. It did not surprise her to learn that her account was overdrawn. She had expected that as, she had expected to lose her pearls, but there was no shock attached to this bit of news. Her emotions were chilled, insensitive. In the place where her heart had been there was a lump that pulsed to one thought. Niel... Niel... Well, she had enough money to take a room in a second-rate hotel. She hadn't kept her taxi waiting this time, so she walked. It was not far and she felt the exercise clearing her mind a little. On her way she bought a paper. From the Ritz she telephoned to several hotels that were advertised in the paper and made a memorandum of their rates. By the time she had finished packing she had decided upon the one she would go to. To Virginia, when she was being shown to a room there, it was a depressing revelation of the difference in hotels. To have come to this! When the bellboy was gone she promptly locked the door. As she turned the key her ears were assailed by voices coming from a connecting room. "What the hell! Gimme that money or I'll knock you silly!" (To Be Continued)
