SMALL'S NEW BILL NOT SECTIONAL
 J. Everts Haley, formerly field secretary of the Panhandle-Plains Historical society and now a research professor for the University of Texas, writes interestingly of the passage of the Small land validation bill just enacted. Haley worked for the bill.

The measure, although vital to West Texas, was not essentially sectional. Its opponents sought to make it look like a West Texas raid, but East Texas senators and representatives favored it almost as much as did our own legislators. For instance, W. E. Pope of Corpus Christi made a fiery and effective fight for it on the floor of the house.

The bill was West Texan in application but statewide in principles of right and justice. It clarified the policy of the state toward its contract with land buyers and landowners.

This, as other land fights, has shown how strong are the West Texas legislators and how this section is powerfully protected through its able representatives. For Senator Clint C. Small it was a continuation of his fight in behalf of hardpressed landowners. He got through a similar bill in his first term in the senate but the supreme court nullified parts of it. The new measure is believed to have bolstered the weak points of the initial effort.

Dewey Young of Wellington is another stalwart. The News has had frequent cause to correspond with him. Senator Small, Clyde Warwick, and Pink Parrish, and has found the man the alert and very well informed concerning their constituents' needs and problems. The West Texas legislative group was assisted by the presence of about 200 aroused landowners, who made their ideas known in impressive fashion.

West Texas is demanding justice and getting it.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, March 12. (NEA).—"Filibustering," explains Senator Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma, "is exactly comparable to the organization of labor. A laboring man's only chance for justice lies in organizing—in the senate, a man's only chance for justice is to use the senate rules, either to kill an objectionable thing or to get attention for matters of great importance which have been ignored."

"No filibuster ever puts through an unjust law. A filibuster cannot hurt the people, but it can protect them and can block majorities when they are inspired by selfish special interests."

Senator Thomas was the big filibuster of the 71st congress, holding the floor on the last day with what he says was the sole intention of attracting national interest to "the third largest industry in the country, which is wholly unregulated."

Thomas had been a leader in the fights, first for an oil tariff, second for an embargo on oil and third for an investigation of the industry. He was so sore at the failure of them all—due to what he considered the efforts of the huge oil corporations—that he chose the spectacular method of filibuster to get public attention.

The senator emphatically denies, however, that he was responsible for blocking legislation in those last three hours. Failure of the maternity and infancy measure, the immigration restriction bill and the copyright bill to become law has been widely attributed to the Thomas filibuster, but Thomas points out that all three had their enemies and that if he hadn't been filibustering in those three hours, someone else would have been filibustering.

"Not a single bill that had a chance was blocked," Thomas says. "Every bill a senator wanted to pass could have gone through as far as I was concerned, as did the $2,000,000 hospitalization bill and others."

Anyway, according to Thomas, the state of Oklahoma is behind him to a man. Oklahoma is such a big oil producing state that unless the oil industry prospers, Oklahoma doesn't prosper. The small companies which have been drilling have lately had no market for their oil; the contract price for crude is now about a dollar a barrel, but the open price has been about 40 cents, the senator says.

Every landowner in the state believes he is on top of an oil field and farmers, unable to get their land drilled and going broke from drought, low prices and loss of lease royalties, have been hollering along with other Oklahomans.

The state has an oil production tax of 3 per cent gross and the great slump in crude prices has cut income from oil down to about a third of what it was, which puts the tax right back on the people. The times enjoy good times when oil field and other laborers are employed, but unemployment has hit Oklahoma as it has other states. A big park in Oklahoma City is full of food tents, which are feeding 6000 persons a day.

The independent oil producers first put on a terrific campaign for an oil tariff; they knew the big oil companies, headed by the Standard group, were bringing in 100,000,000 barrels a year from abroad and with enormous domestic overproduction, felt that ought to be stopped.

The oil tariff drive failed and in the last weeks of congress there was a strong movement for an embargo on oil. It became obvious that this, too, was doomed to failure and Thomas and other friends of the independent producers then demanded a senatorial investigation of conditions in the industry, which was proposed in a resolution introduced by Nye of North Dakota. When that was blocked—easily, because of the parliamentary situation—Thomas decided to filibuster and tell the world all about what the big oil companies were doing to the independents.

SMALL'S NEW BILL NOT SECTIONAL

J. Everett Haley, formerly field secretary of the Panhandle-Plains Historical society and now a research professor for the University of Texas, writes interestingly of the passage of the Small land validation bill just enacted. Haley worked for the bill.

The measure, although vital to West Texas, was not essentially sectional. Its opponents sought to make it look like a West Texas raid, but East Texas senators and representatives favored it almost as much as did our own legislators. For instance, W. E. Pope of Corpus Christi made a fiery and effective fight for it on the floor of the house.

The bill was West Texan in application but statewide in principles of right and justice. It clarified the policy of the state toward its contract with land buyers and landowners.

This, as other land fights, has shown how strong are the West Texas legislators and how this section is powerfully protected through its able representatives. For Senator Clint C. Small it was a continuation of his fight in behalf of hardpressed landowners. He got through a similar bill in his first term in the senate but the supreme court nullified parts of it. The new measure is believed to have bolstered the weak points of the initial effort.

Dewey Young of Wellington is another stalwart. The News has had frequent cause to correspond with him, Senator Small, Clyde Warwick, and Pink Parrish, and has found the men the alert and very well informed concerning their constituents' needs and problems. The West Texas legislative group was assisted by the presence of about 200 aroused landowners, who made their views known in impressive fashion.

West Texas is demanding justice and getting it.

on oil. It became obvious that this, too, was doomed to failure and Thomas and other friends of the independent producers then demanded a senatorial investigation of conditions in the industry, which was proposed in a resolution introduced by Nye of North Dakota. When that was blocked—easily, because of the parliamentary situation—Thomas decided to filibuster and tell the world all about what the big oil companies were doing to the independents.

FORT WORTH, March 16.—Approximately 400 students from Texas Christian university will participate in the presentation of the operatic cantata, "The Sunset Trail," by Carries Wakefield Cadman, in the T. C. U. stadium on the evening of Saturday, May 9.

The University chorus will be part of the civic chorus that will sing, while 350 girls from the physical education department, under the direction of Mrs. Helen Murphy, will depict the action of the story in a pageant. Mr. Cadman himself will come to Fort Worth a week before the date for the performance, and will personally direct the final rehearsal and the public performance.

THREE DIE IN SHOOTING

MONTICELLO, Ind., March 16.—A sheriff's attempt to arrest two brothers for bank robbery resulted in death to all three from gunfire at the home of the suspects' mother north of here yesterday.

Ray Fisher, 40, sheriff of White county, was shot in the head and instantly killed by Scott Talbutt, 23, as he started to read a warrant of the Tippecanoe county circuit court.

Then, officers said, Talbutt shot to death his brother, William Talbutt, 34, and committed suicide.

DENTIST IS DROWNED

SAN ANTONIO, March 16.—(AP)—Dr. A. E. Norton, 68, San Antonio dentist, was drowned yesterday and Mrs. Norton and two sons were rescued by passing motorists and firemen after the Norton sedan was swept into a sudden torrent at a crossing of Olmos creek. A cloudburst in the Olmos basin was sending a wall of water down the creek when the Norton car attempted to cross. Marshall, 17, and Jim, 15, were rescued by Fred Harff Rees, 19, and Robert Clark Warren, 20.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS

A MARRIAGE (K)NOT

WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, March 12. (NEA).—"Filibustering," explains Senator Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma, "is exactly comparable to the organization of labor. A laboring man's only chance for justice lies in organizing—in the senate, a man's only chance for justice is to use the senate rules, either to kill an objectionable thing or to get attention for matters of great importance which have been ignored."

"No filibuster ever puts through an unjust law. A filibuster cannot hurt the people, but it can protect them and can block majorities when they are in-pired by selfish special interests."

Senator Thomas was the big filibuster of the 71st congress, holding the floor on the last day with what he says was the sole intention of attracting national interest to "the third largest industry in the country, which is wholly unregulated."

Thomas had been a leader in the fights, first for an oil tariff, second for an embargo on oil and third for an investigation of the industry. He was so sore at the failure of them all—due to what he considered the efforts of the huge oil corporations—that he chose the spectacular method of filibuster to get public attention.

The senator emphatically denies, however, that he was responsible for blocking legislation in those last three hours. Failure of the maternity and infancy measure, the immigration restriction bill and the copyright bill to become law has been widely attributed to the Thomas filibuster, but Thomas points out that all three had their enemies and that if he hadn't been filibustering in those three hours, someone else would have been filibustering.

"Not a single bill that had a chance was blocked," Thomas says. "Every bill a senator wanted to pass could have gone through as far as I was concerned, as did the $5,000,000 hospitalization bill and others."

Anyway, according to Thomas, the state of Oklahoma is behind him to a man. Oklahoma is such a big oil producing state that unless the oil industry prospers, Oklahoma doesn't prosper. The small companies which have been drilling have lately had no market for their oil; the contract price for crude is now about a dollar a barrel, but the open price has been about 40 cents, the senator says.

Every landowner in the state believes he is on top of an oil field and farmers, unable to get their land drilled and going broke from drought, low prices and loss of lease royalties, have been hollering along with other Oklahomans.

The state has an oil production tax of 3 per cent gross and the great slump in crude prices has cut income from oil down to about a third of what it was, which puts the tax right back on the people. The times enjoy good times when oil field and other laborers are employed, but unemployment has hit Oklahoma as it has other states. A big park in Oklahoma City is full of food tents, which are feeding 6,000 persons a day.

The independent oil producers first put on a terrific campaign for an oil tariff; they knew the big oil companies, headed by the Standard group, were bringing in 100,000,000 barrels a year from abroad and with enormous domestic overproduction, felt that ought to be stopped.

The oil tariff drive failed and in the last weeks of congress there was a strong movement for an embargo his conviction that Dr. Netherton killed Annabelle Querling to share her wealth through marriage with a niece, Marjorie Blake. Marjorie and her sister, Evelyn, would force this inheritance through marriage, according to the evidence submitted by Vincent Blake, their brother, would share only in the event that his sister died intestate. Jimmie Hisswell, detective, learned that Netherton was engaged to Audrey Winford and had no motive for such a crime. While heading toward the Querling place at night, Jimmie is acquainted at scene Marjorie in the arms of Captain Strling. Unobserved, he joins the group in the house, where Evelyn and her fiancé, Lionel Duckworth, are singing in a room apart from this in which the others play bridge. The maid hands Jimmie a note which surprises him.

Chapter 22
POISONED EVIDENCE
Jimmie's first surprise when he read the note that the maid handed him was that it came from Audrey. Evidently it had been hurriedly written.

"Dear Mr. Hisswell: Can you come out to see me? I am in a bind in front of you. Do not mention my name or they will ask me in. Audrey Winford."

Since Janet had told him a man had brought the note, it was only for Jimmie to excuse himself without disclosing the writer's name. "She was dining at the club of the car, in the roadway some 20 yards from the drive entrance. He had been Constable Roscoe and had rough-looking stranger."

"Audrey was brief. 'You wanted to know whose car was on the links on the night Miss Querling was killed. It was Captain Strling's. Her husband's voice marked deep feeling."

"Where was he?" Jimmie asked. "In the garden."

"That was in keeping with Jimmie's own discovery. 'How do you know?' he asked quickly."

"She introduced Willie Freeman, a cousin who often went to the course to play to him for balls. She, knowing this, had inquired if he had been anything on the night of the tragedy. Convinced his story might clear an innocent person, he had told her the story he now related to Jimmie."

"That was home, Freeman said, he had stopped beside the but that's all. Jimmie telephoned green when I had someone gettin' over the house, Morrow Creek. Only one night's ad for Mr. Captain Strling, wrapped into a car, 'e did, still drive off immediately."

"He said he would stand back of the story and Audrey was on her feet with Roscoe to inform Richmond, hoping to let Jimmie know her own involvement. Jimmie said that he would go along with them, as he had information Richmond should know."

"I would go at once," said Audrey, eager to tell the truth she thought would clear Netherton. Then she hesitated as she had forgotten to let Jimmie know.

"I'll ask Green for some," said Roscoe, turning into the trade store.

"Do better go back and make some sense out of leaving," Jimmie decided. "That's all," he added, "leaving as a detective. Of course, you realize the suspicion of a man will arise from the fact that you were there."

"Audrey's heart eyes revealed the truth within as she told how at first she had wanted to go to Strling and disclose what she had found, then concluding that this would not be right and that she must tell Richmond. "I still think he is innocent of a mean or evil act, and that there must be an explanation," she added.

"Mr. Jimmie turned toward the house. Constable Roscoe came running toward them, his usual ruddy face almost devoid of color.

"Green," he gasped, "he's there! He's dead! He killed Miss Querling. He's in the confession!"

"Jimmie recovered from his first shock, turned quickly toward the garage, followed by Audrey. As they hastened, Roscoe explained that he had called for Green but had not had reply, and had seen some closed door. Still getting no reply, he had opened the door and made the tragic discovery.

The big doors to the garage were closed as the little party approached and entered the open double door leading to the stairs and Green's rooms. At the door of the room Jimmie's quick eye saw the chauffeur's body sprawled half on and half off a chair, his arms thrown on the table on which his head and shoulders rested. He was wearing his uniform breeches and a gray flannel shirt. On the table was an ordinary beer bottle and a glass three parts empty, a sheet of paper, a notebook, an ink bottle and a pen.

On the mantel piece there stood several beer bottles and in a corner were four empty bottles. The uniform coat was thrown over another chair in the sparsely furnished room.

At first, as Roscoe had said, Green appeared dead, but a sudden convulsion movement brought Jimmie and the others to his side. He was in a kind of stupor, beads of perspiration stood on his forehead, and it seemed as though consciousness might return. The constable pointed silently to the sheet of paper lying on the study table. The message was brief, the writing was clear:

I killed Miss Querling. Something came over me and I did it and now I am sorry. There is suspicion everywhere and I cannot stand it so I am taking the best way out.

That night I thought all of a sudden I would ask the mistress to let me stay on and I went to her in the Dutch garden and then I knew she would refuse and come home over me and I felt all mad with her and instead of speaking I pushed the image and it fell on her and I went away to Ben and asked for my hammer. That is all.

Edward Green.

Good bye, Janet. Forgive me.

"We must get a doctor at once," Jimmie said as he left for the house with Audrey, Roscoe remaining with Green. The little party in the card-room had been waiting for Jimmie, who told them briefly what had happened and phoned Richmond. Meanwhile, Audrey, explaining in more detail, did not divulge why she had first called, since she felt that Ted Green's confession had made that unnecessary.

After Netherton had promised to come, Jimmie telephoned Richmond, who said he would await the doctor's report, ordering Roscoe meanwhile to remain by Green's side. With Roscoe's help, Jimmie placed the body on the bed. Another convulsion movement indicated life, though the stupor continued.

Leaving Green's bed room, Jimmie returned to the other room and re-read the confession, written on a sheet of paper similar to that in the chauffeur's daily mileage book, which his employer required him to keep. The record was entered up by the week last day, even to the note for that afternoon—"Mr. Vincent Rockhurst and round 82 miles." Near the end of the book he found the place from which the sheet had been torn.

To most of those in the card room, now discussing the startling occurrence, the confession came as a relief. Vincent recalled that on the drive he had taken that afternoon Green had seemed his usual self, and none seemed to have hard things to say concerning the chauffeur's death. Evelyn notwithstanding his uncertain temper. "One good thing," Vincent commented, "it will help old Morgan to get a move on. No one can suggest Green had anything to do with the will."

Dr. Netherton found Jimmie and Roscoe waiting beside Green when he arrived. The stupor continued, with occasional convulsion spasms. Jimmie had a suggestion.

"Do you want a nurse?" Audrey Winford is in the house."

Netherton shot a quick glance at him. "Not at present," he said tersely.

He looked at the small quantity of beer left in the glass. In color it was normal. He put a spot on his tongue and spat it out again.

NEW YORK, March 16. (AP) — A new radio microphone is to be introduced when the second act of the premier of opera, "Wozzeck" is broadcast from the stage of the Metropolitan opera house in Philadelphia Thursday night.

It is the parabolic reflector microphone which picks up sound waves in reverse of the action of the searchlight. It looks somewhat like an inverted copper kettle. Sound waves are gathered in by the "kettle" and reflected to the "mouth piece."

"Very bitter," he said. "Poison, of course, something uncommon. I cannot say what, I think we had better get him to the hospital." "Will you speak to Richmond?" Jimmie asked. "He is waiting to know."

Before Netherton could reply there was another movement from the figure on the bed. Green's eyes opened and his lips moved as if to speak.

"Wear cotton clothes and hose and be in style!" That, in substance, was the advice given Gray county club-women by Mrs. Dora Russell Barnes, state clothing specialist of the extension division of Texas A. & M., at the wardrobe school held at McLean last week.

At the wardrobe school, Mrs. Barnes gave a wardrobe demonstration. This consisted of three trunks which contained undergarments, footwear, dresses, aprons, hats, coats and accessories. The basis of the demonstration was a winter coat to be worn three years. Cost of the trunks was $100, $75, and $50, respectively. Gingham dresses with a great deal of style which cost $73 each were compared with commercial dresses of the same price.

Doubled Guard Watches Prison

JOLIET, Ill., March 16. (AP)—With a redoubled guard watchfully patrolling the walls of the Illinois state penitentiary today, officials began the slow restoration of the routine which was broken here Saturday by the short-lived uprising in which one convict was killed and three others wounded.

Warden Henry C. Hill and his aides supervised the reorganization with the greatest possible caution. Hill was fearful, he said, that the 1,100 prisoners, kept to their cells on short rations since the outbreak, by the short-lived uprising in which one convict was killed and three others wounded.

State legislators, appointed originally to investigate the death of convict Joseph Coakley in the "solitary" of the prison, interviewed officials and one unidentified prisoner, and returned to Springfield yesterday.

Chairman Roger F. Little of Campaign had called for another meeting tomorrow in Springfield, where plans will be laid for a thorough investigation.

STERLING

(Continued from page 1) be required, thus putting on the commission a heavy burden in the administration of these various duties and rendering it practically impossible for the commission to give present situation the attention which is so urgently needed.

AUSTIN, March 16. (AP)—The legislature today faced squarely the oil conservation controversy involving the east Texas field. Gov. Ross S. Sterling yesterday announced he would send a message to the legislature urging enactment of a law protecting the state's conservation commission, taking oil and gas matters from the jurisdiction of the railroad commission.

Raps Commission The controversy so far has been between the railroad commission and the governor, who criticized the commission for failure to protect the new field in east Texas also was hit by President Hoover last week when he said efforts to restrict imports of oil would serve no economic good as long as the east Texas field was allowed to run wild.

The commission has announced it will hold a statewide proration hearing March 23 at which time the east Texas field may be prorated. This has aroused the ire of Carl Estes, Tyler editor, who has bitterly opposed proration of the field until its limits have been determined.

While the oil question was held in the spotlight today, other matters of importance faced the legislature.

Speeds Marginal Bill Representative Lassiter said he would try to call up the marginal well bill, exempting the small wells from proration, out of its regular order today in an effort to get it passed through the house and senate before the proration hearing. It was estimated proration would be increased under the bill between 50,000 and 60,000 barrels.

Wednesday the highly controversial highway bond issue amendment is set for action in the senate. It will be called up by Senator Woodul of Houston, floor leader in the upper house. Proponents claim they have enough votes pledged in the senate to pass the resolution which would permit the voters to ballot on the proposal to issue $300,000,000 in bonds to repay counties for funds expended in state highway construction and to accelerate highway construction.

Nearly Enough Votes Representative Hubbard of New Boston, chief engineer for the bond issue in the house, claimed he had almost enough votes to insure its adoption in the lower body.

Representative Metcalfe, chairman of the house re-districting committee, said his committee would vote out the congressional re-districting bill today or tomorrow with only a few minor changes.

Proposed regulation of public utilities also will face its front this week with a conference set for tomorrow between proponents and opponents of the bill by Representative Petch of Fredericksburg, in an effort to compromise on certain provisions of the bill. Petch's proposal would establish a state commission to which rates set by the cities could be appealed. The commission would be a fact-finding body.

TYLER, March 16. (AP)—A meeting for discussion of proration of East Texas oil fields set for tomorrow night has been postponed until Saturday night, Carl L. Estes, secretary of the East Texas Land, Royalty and Producers association, announced today.

WASHINGTON, March 16. (AP)—Clyde Murray, chairman of the oil states advisory committee, in a telegram to Secretary Wilbur, today appealed to the Federal Oil Conservation board for a full hearing of the oil world's problems around March 30.

Murray, who advised Wilbur that the oil states advisory committee would meet in Washington, March 30, declared that members of the group wanted the hearing to develop plans for stabilizing the industry.

Oklahoma Talks TULSA, Okla., March 16. (AP)—B. Reeser, president of the American Petroleum Institute and a leader of the oil conservation movement, said today he had told R. R. Penn, chairman of the Texas oil proration committee, that "unless East Texas

William C. McCraw, district attorney, and E. K. Mead, newspaper man, who flew to Kansas City Saturday in an effort to get Coder and Hurst, who appeared at Communist headquarters there that day, making known their whereabouts for the first time since the alleged flogging, also appeared before the grand jury.

McCraw indicated arrangements were being made to provide the two organizers with railroad transportation in hope of getting them before the grand jury as soon as possible, probably tomorrow.

The men refused an invitation of McCraw to accompany him back to Dallas in an airplane. Gov. Ross S. Sterling had telegraphed guarantee of safety to the men if they would return to Texas, offering to give them bodyguard of Texas rangers at the state line.

McCraw said he did not believe the men had been flogged although he said he felt there was little doubt they had been kidnapped.

"They had no bruises and anybody knows that marks left by a wet rope could not have disappeared in nine days," McCraw said. "However, we are going to the bottom of this and find out everything it is possible to learn. Members of the police department have been accused of the kidnaping and if we can learn who they are they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

KIDNAPING

(Continued from page 1) came in, announced he wanted to buy a car and asked Shropshire's help. Shropshire said he didn't know the man, but he did know Jordan was in the automobile business and so he called him.

When Jordan arrived, he said he and the "customer" got in the car and rode about the city, then back to the cafe. Shropshire got out, he declared, after the stranger remarked he wanted to ride back "up the hill." That was the last Shropshire saw of the two, he said.

Shropshire today sought release on bond or a habeas corpus writ.

FORT WORTH, March 16. (AP)—Two men were held in jail today, one here and another at Seymour, charged with the robbery of J. B. Jordan, head of an automobile exchange here, who reported he was kidnaped, robbed and threatened with death Saturday.

Ralph Richardson, 30, identified by Jordan as his robber and abductor, was held in jail at Seymour, charged with the robbery in complaints filed in Wise and Tarrant counties. L. R. Shropshire, 23, of Fort Worth, said by Jordan to have been the man who introduced him to the man who robbed him, was charged here with the robbery. He was held in jail here.

Jordan told officers he received a telephone call Saturday directing him to go to a cafe where a prospective purchaser of an automobile awaited. At the cafe, Jordan said the customer suggested they drive to a ranch in Wise county so he could obtain money for the purchase. Near Decatur, in Wise county, he said the man ordered him to get in the automobile, robbed him of a ring valued at $1,700 and a watch, then drove to another pasture in Baylor county, about 100 miles distant. After warning Jordan he would be killed if he revealed what had happened, the robber disappeared.

tion of a Dallas county grand jury was turned again today to an inquiry into the reported kidnaping and flogging March 5 of C. J. Coder and Lewis Hurst, communist organizers.

George Clifton Edwards, Dallas attorney who represented them, was expected to appear before the grand jury today to relate his version of the affair. He claimed he also was abducted from the Dallas city hall steps March 6 by an armed band who kidnaped Hurst and Coder, but he was released after being warned not to "represent communists" again.

Governor Sterling said last night he had telegraphed assurance the two communists would be adequately protected.

District Attorney William McCraw, accompanied by E. K. Mead, Dallas newspaper man, returned late yesterday from Kansas City to interview Hurst and Coder in an effort to persuade them to return to Dallas, should they agree to return and testify before the grand jury.

The men refused an invitation of McCraw to accompany him back to Dallas in an airplane. Gov. Ross S. Sterling had telegraphed guarantee of safety to the men if they would return to Texas, offering to give them bodyguard of Texas rangers at the state line.

McCraw said he did not believe the men had been flogged although he said he felt there was little doubt they had been kidnapped.

"They had no bruises and anybody knows that marks left by a wet rope could not have disappeared in nine days," McCraw said. "However, we are going to the bottom of this and find out everything it is possible to learn. Members of the police department have been accused of the kidnaping and if we can learn who they are they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."
