SIZE OF OUR INDUSTRIES

Merle Thorpe, representing some facts before the Chamber of Commerce of New York state, made the assertion that: "American enterprises with our earnings, have developed thousands of discoveries and inventions and eighteen of them, for example in the last 50 years, have grown into great industries employing between nine and one-half million men and women—one-quarter of all those gainfully employed today, in eighteen industries that existed only as dreams in the minds of some enterprising men fifty years ago."

In an early issue, the Daily NEWS will publish the address from which this quotation was taken. It is one of the best explanations that we have had the pleasure of reading of why our standard of living has been high in the past and why we now have unemployment.

For Love of Polly

By RACHEL MACK

Copyright, 1938, NEA Service, Inc.

Yesterday, Having been called to the Dover coach next morning because she had a fever and a headache that prostrated her. After the realization that she was deserted by the man she loved and trusted, as for another woman, she went to her room and gave herself up to alternate moods of grief and anger which admitted neither reasoning nor forgiveness.

In the room where she had known happiness and hope, she paced the floor. She did not touch food and she had no desire to sleep. By morning her sensitive high-strung nature had suffered sufficiently to bring on physical illness, and she flung herself onto her bed, sick in body as well as mind.

For some days she kept her fever. Mrs. Toby came and ministered to her, and the porter's boy brought the mongrel dog to see her, and these things she acknowledged with gratitude. But there was no watchful waiting in her prostration for Jerry Whitfield. She was, as she lay there, trying to cure herself of all love for him, fighting to purge her heart of all need of him.

She told herself over and over, "I've known him such a little while. He can't matter to me like this! How could he?"

And yet he did. There would come moments when she would bury her head in her pillow to stifle the cries of "Jerry! Why did you.....Where are you?"

When this despair had spent itself like a disease, and when those questions "How could you.....Where are you?" could find no clew to feed upon, Polly could no longer recover. That is to say, she got up from bed, dressed, ate a meal down in the public dining room and inquired after the next coach to Dover. She did all this with a mechanical efficiency. Mrs. Toby's kind and sentimental heart was shocked and disappointed. She had thought it so fitting that the deserted young lady should languish in her room. But this quick and complete recovery!

"Could it have been just something she ate?" she inquired of Mr. Toby. "She's as brash and different as you please. I don't know you might say. And she's put on her prettiest dress!"

"Well," remarked Mr. Toby, "it may be just as well. It looks like young Whitfield's not coming back.....It beats 'all!"

Polly rode on top of the coach with Nuisance. She wondered why she had ever given the little gray terrier that name. He stayed close beside her and entertained her. She sensed his loyalty to her (so much stronger than human loyalty, she told herself), and his history. She could not have endured a life from a fellow being, but from Nuisance it seemed suitable and comforting.

Polly could not dwell continually on Jerry's perfidy. She had to plan now to get out of England. Her money would soon be gone; and for all she could not care for the old man, Oliver Dart, might be even now looking for her.....

"Thank God Jerry couldn't take my money!" she prayed devoutly on top of the coach. In that, at least, he had been honorable. He had given it back to her last night when they were together. Did he know at that moment that he was about to desert her? Or did he only fear he might be tempted to? It would hurt a little less to believe the latter.

She did not know how to find the smuggler who Jerry had contacted. She did not even know his name. She only knew he was "half Scotch and half French" and that he worked out of a "wretched fishing village between Dover and Deal."

"It's hard," she said to Nuisance. She meant it terribly difficult for a girl, alone, friendless and American to get across the Channel when England was conducting two wars. Yet that's what Jerry Whitfield had left her to do as best she could, without instructions.

She thought of the woman in the blue dress whose claim on Jerry had been so mysterious and urgent. "I hope he gets sick of her!" she said fiercely to Nuisance. "Sick!"

Nuisance only flicked his ear, but an elderly man sitting beside Polly exclaimed, "What say, Miss?.....You're sick? ...I'm not surprised, the way this coach lurches about. Can I offer you a piece of candied ginger to settle your stomach?"

"Why, yes, thank you." Polly replied and since he seemed well-intentioned man, rather fatherly, she entered into a conversation with him about England's war policies.

"I've just been wondering," she said, "if any ladies would be allowed to cross to France?"

"If they're French, Miss, they'd probably be permitted to go home, and good riddance. That is to say, if there's a way for them to get home. If they're English and loyal they'd not want to go to France. Now would they?"

An American girl wanted to cross to France?"

The man eyed her with sudden disfavor. Like all Englishmen, he hated to see French and Americans getting together. "If an American woman has the good fortune to be in England," he remarked pompously, "let her appreciate it. Let her thank Heaven she's escaped from a land of barbarians and rascals."

Polly turned her shoulder toward him and made no reply, for she was offended. But presently she was moved and turned and said frankly, "There are some American rascals, sir. I grant you. I've got one in mind now. But home's home, and I want to get there. So I ask you, sir, what would be the safest way for a lone girl to cross the English Channel?"

"I doubt," replied the man, "if there is any safe way to count on." He was John Bull personified, respectable, intelligent, honorable and self-satisfied; he loathed Americans collectively, so it surprised him to find that they could be individually intriguing.

"No, there's not a safe way for any pretty friendless girl to cross the Channel in war time. She might meet gallantry, and again she might not. If it was my daughter had to do it, I'd advise her to make herself into an old crone."

"Thank you, sir!" Polly said. "I don't know why I didn't think of that myself."

ALONG the flagstone pavement in Lyme, Conn., an elderly man with a seagull gait made his way home, assisted by two homemade walking sticks. He had been in Pell's store. His purchases were in his pockets, for he bought only such necessities as tea, sugar and coffee, and as little of these as possible.

People spoke to him in a friendly way, but absent-mindedly. He was only Trepid Chelsey, a retired skipper without a ship, afflicted with rheumatism and no longer useful to the community.

"Evenin', Mr. Chelsey....." "Howdy, Trepid....." Those who greeted him respected him for his worthy life and his good ancestry. But life moved rapidly even in Lyme, and Trepid Chelsey, who had once been a vigorous man named Intrepid, and had had a well-born London wife to be a credit to the village and a ship named the Proud Lyme to keep up the little port's reputation, now had none of these things, not even his health.

In the old shabby house with the tangled garbles there was only the crippled Dick who muffled over his books and would never carry on the family tradition of going to sea. There had been the girl Polly, who had done all the housework since the year her father had lost his ship and his wife. But she had gone to London now on the ship of old Tim Chelsey, down at New Haven.

They spoke of Polly's unfortunate trip to her father, for with the war going on, she must be having difficulties. Only Mrs. Fell, who was relentless in her quest for news, dared mention it today. "Trepid," she said, stopping not far from his own gate, "Polly's daughter had to do it, I'd advise her to make herself into an old crone."

"Likely," Trepid answered. His cane clattered as he moved toward home. He was angry with the woman for reminding him that his child might become an English girl and never return.

Dick, taller than his sister and having the beautiful remote face of a dreamer, closed his Latin books when his father came in and went to stir the soup on the stove. "I've made it by Polly's recipe," he said. But his face, too, clouded unhappily at the thought of Polly.

Havana harbor apparently by an exterior explosion which set off the ship's powder magazines. Two hundred sixty men were lost.

SINKING OF MAINE 40 YEARS AGO RECALLED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15. (AP)—Louis Johnson, assistant secretary of war, urged Americans yesterday to "remember the Maine" in their consideration of military preparedness.

Johnson spoke at commemorative exercises at Fort Myer and Arlington cemetery on the 40th anniversary of the sinking of the Maine—a forerunner of the Spanish-American war.

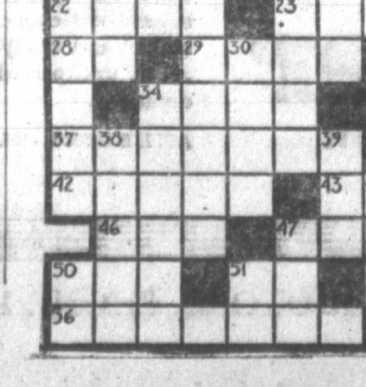

He recalled the "state of our unpreparedness 40 years ago" when the United States had a regular army of 25,000 men, no general staff, no accurate maps of the country, no system of defense, no six per cent of the artillery commanded for coast defense.

"Today," he said, "we are better prepared than ever before in our history to protect our country, and we must be, but mark you, not for offense, but for defense, not for aggression, but for protection; not to wage war, but to keep out of war."

HULL DEMANDS TRUE REPORT ON SHELLERS WASHINGTON, Feb. 16 (AP)—Secretary Hull sent a telegram to Gov. James V. Alfred of Texas today asking him for a preliminary report on the arrest of 64 Mexicans together with many American strikers employed in producing and marketing oil.

COMMUNISTS BLAMED Chief of Police Owen D. Kilday insisted the trouble was not a strike but a disturbance agitated by Communists. He said the number of claimed strikers was only 500 to 600 while about 12,000 peon factory workers stayed on the job.

Paul Harrison Tells Why Hollywood Is Importing Glamor Gals--With An Accent

By PAUL HARRISON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 15—There is no mystery about the motive of moviemakers in hiring so many foreign stars, mostly feminine. All Hollywood knows that the answer is foreign profits. A good solution to the problem, at home and abroad, is a glamor-gal like Danielle Darrieux.

The foreign market has become increasingly important to the picture business, partly because the market itself has been curtailed by political censorship, partly because production costs of pictures has risen sharply.

The more expensive features, unless they're exceptional hits, scarcely will more than pay for themselves in the United States. The return from other countries represents the profit. Studios therefore are concerned with making pictures with stars who'll pack 'em in from Buenos Aires to Stockholm.

"Hi-Ho the Darrieux"

Greta Garbo causes no box office riots in America, and Marlene Dietrich's recent flickers have prompted thousands of families to stay at home and pop some corn and listen to the radio. Yet both actresses, however creaky their vehicles, draw bushels of francs, kopecs, marks and pengos into the tills of European theaters.

So the dream of every movie company is to find stars who are known and adored by foreign audiences, and who are capable and exotic and freshly appealing enough to captivate Americans.

And that's the reason why everybody at Universal Studio is going around blithely singing "Hi-Ho the Darrieux."

Envy and Delight

Danielle Darrieux is a star in any language. True, at this writing she has not appeared in anything from Hollywood except dozens of magazines and thousands of newspapers. Nevertheless she is receiving bushels of fan mail, and her face and architecture are the envy and delight respectively, of her feminine and male admirers.

She also is being seen on the screen. Miss Darrieux is the only importation whose recent foreign-made pictures are of sufficient merit to win American showings. One is "Club de Femmes," which is not being exhibited in all states because it is by no means an Elsie Dinsmore story.

The other is "Mayerling," in which Miss Darrieux co-starred with Charles Boyer. To anybody who doesn't understand French, it provides striking evidence of the effectiveness of fine, sensative acting, because the foreign dialogue is supplemented only by some remarkably inept subtitles in English.

Pink Roses for Breakfast

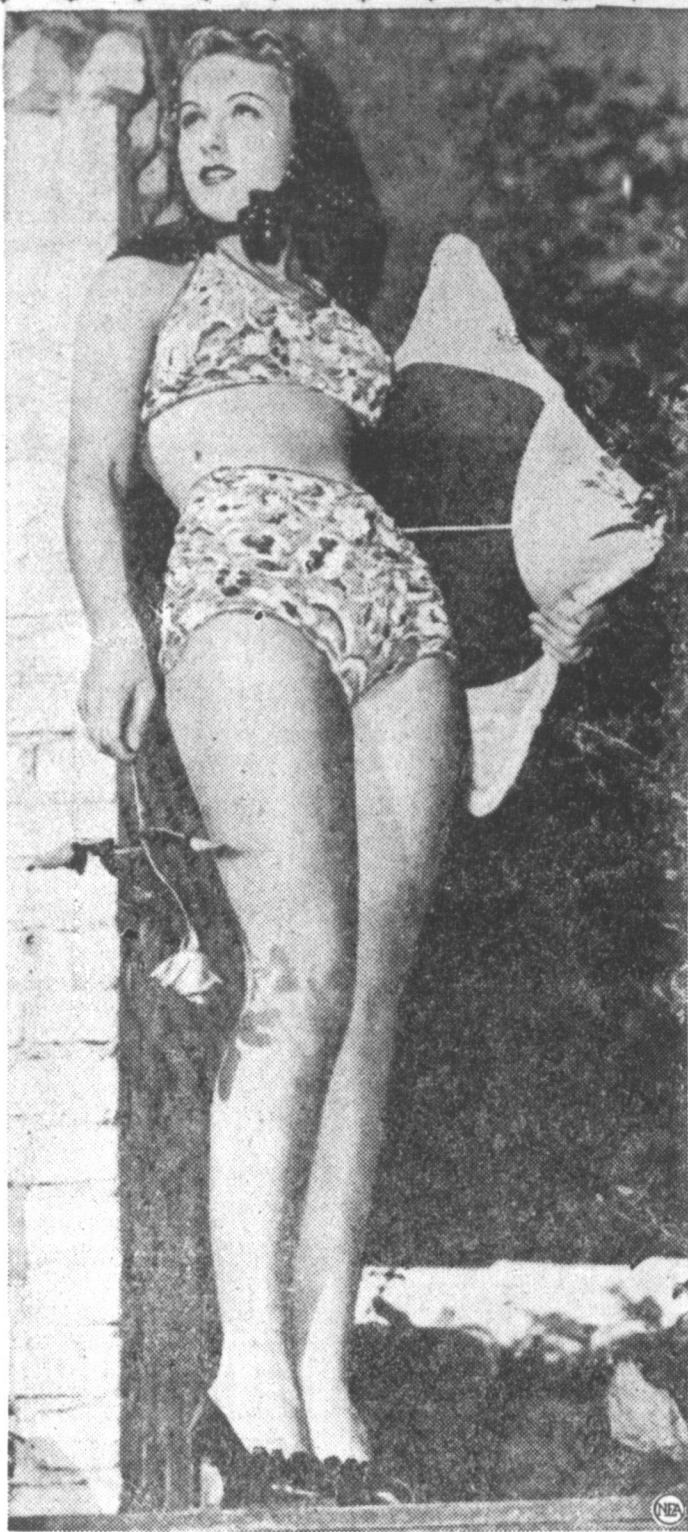

To interview Miss Darrieux, a correspondent ar-tic-u-lates as distinctly as possible and usually ends up by posing his questions through a personable interpreter-secretary named Mary Lee Martin. Far from being an ordeal, this scheme works out very pleasantly. I had a lot of laughs.

One laugh came from a mention of temperament. Upon her arrival in New York, the actress was asked by a reporter if she were temperamental. She countered indignantly by asking whether that was any of his business. Trouble was that "temperamental," by French connotation, means "sensualous."

Crossing the continent, Miss Darrieux managed to keep adequately, though oddly, fed by stabbing blindly at items on the dining car menus. Sometimes she'd get broccoli and oatmeal for dinner, or she might find herself facing a baked Alaska for breakfast.

She didn't worry, though, until after she'd spent a night at a hotel in Hollywood. In the morning she grabbed coffee and rolls. A long conversation with somebody downstairs resulted in the delivery of two dozen pink roses. Not a calorie in a carload.

Although she doesn't understand

Danielle Darrieux is a star in any language and the shapely French girl has answered Universal's prayer for a star who is capable, exotic and freshly appealing.

fable author who has written some of her plays and pictures. Miss Darrieux's first American picture may or may not be titled, "The Rage of Paris." Universal has revamped the story three times. Can't find a sufficiently prominent leading man for its new High Priestess of Umph.

NAVAL PLANS NOW KEPT IN 'SECRET FILES'

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16 (AP)—The United States navy, abandoning a 13-year policy, transferred to its "secret" file all information on how work is progressing on warship construction.

Officially, the navy referred to the order merely as "in the interest of public welfare."

Speculation dealt with two possible reasons. That the navy wanted to give no foreign power any more information than necessary, and that there may have been some construction delays which officials think could best be overcome in privacy.

Yesterday's construction report withheld percentage figures and announcement of any delays. A month ago the report had indicated construction of 15 destroyers and two aircraft carriers would be delayed.

The navy currently is building 63 warships and two auxiliaries. A comparison of reports indicated five, including the light cruiser Brooklyn, were completed during the last month.

President Roosevelt contributed to the discussion of naval strength yesterday, commenting at his press conference that expert opinion advises possession of a navy able to protect both Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Mr. Roosevelt said experts contended there always was a possibility that the navy might be called on to defend both coasts at the same time.

He did not say he advocated construction of such a fleet, which would go far beyond any pending recommendation.

Dickenson Rites Conducted Sunday

HIGGINS, Feb. 16—Funeral services for Mrs. Myra Dickenson, 63, wife of former Lipscomb county Judge C. A. Dickenson of Booker were held Sunday afternoon at View Point community church. Interment was in Logan cemetery.

PEARCE ASKS PAMPANS FOR AID TO SCOUTS

A plea for support to the Adobe Walls Scout Council financial campaign which opens March 7 in Pampa, was sounded by the Rev. W. M. Pearce, pastor of the Methodist church, in an address to the membership of the Junior Chamber of Commerce at the weekly luncheon meeting in Schneider hotel Tuesday.

The Pampa goal has been set at $4,000. The fund drive will be under the chairmanship of R. G. Hughes.

"The highest investment we can make," said the Rev. Mr. Pearce, "is in the youth of our community. It is an investment that brings in the largest returns."

"President Roosevelt has repeatedly urged group direction of young people. The Boy Scout organization is a splendid sample of group direction of youth. It is a movement that has saved many a boy from a criminal career."

"The men who have the greatest faith in men are those who put the most into the lives of his fellowmen that is calculated to bring out the good that is in them."

The speaker asserted that Pampa's quota of Boy Scouts should total around 400 and that there are only about half that number enrolled now.

"Towns like Pampa," he said, "must provide Scouting facilities for not only its own boys, but for the boys who do not live within the city proper. That is why it is so essential that this coming drive be made a success. These other towns and communities naturally look to Pampa for leadership, and that is a fact we should all keep in mind."

"Contributing to the cause of scouting gives us an opportunity to safeguard our present investment in youth by looking into the future. This is a planning age, but despite all our planning, there still are millions of unemployed persons in the country today."

There are, the Rev. Mr. Pearce stated, 300,000 boys and girls of "teen" age in the country today who are homeless.

The speaker was introduced by J. M. Collins, past president of the Board of City Development. The day's program was in charge of Mr. Hughes, who introduced M. A. Graham, first vice president of the Adobe Walls Area Scout Council.

Mr. Graham talked briefly on the purposes of the financial drive, and urged the whole-hearted support of every citizen in making the campaign a successful one.

He died while visiting at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bessie Halbrook after a brief illness. Mrs. Dickenson, whose father, M. L. Dally, was the first treasurer of Ochiltree county, was a resident of this section for many years.

Six Schools Enter Hutchinson Meet

STINNETT, Feb. 16.—Coach J. Frank Young states that much interest is being shown in the county meet which will be held in Berger March 5. Three divisions from Stinnett will enter namely grammar school, junior and senior track teams. Track work is progressing nicely. Other schools of Hutchinson county who will enter are, Sanford, Pampas, Spring Creek, Pringle, and Berger.

Bamboo will thrive any place in the United States where cotton will grow.

Heads above the crowd

A True Story

FOLKS, HERE'S A HEADY SPANIEL... a friend indeed... just as the "51 Watchdogs of Quality" are indeed friends to OLD QUAKER. This cool-headed dog merits the "Mark of Merit" for inching his way out over treacherous river ice, that threatened to crack under his feet at every step, and pulling a dog twice his weight to shore and safety.

We like to tell about these heads-up dog heroes because OLD QUAKER is heads-above-the-crowd whiskey. "51 Watchdogs of Quality" guard it from grain to glass... 51 rigid checks and double-checks that make OLD QUAKER, in our opinion, the mildest, smoothest, 90-proof straight whiskey on the market. Nod your head for OLD QUAKER today!

very readily, the actress already speaks English with some fluency and considerable clarity. She also reads. During the Wright trial, she always got the morning paper when she awoke at 9 and translated the sensational story for her husband. "It was terrible," she said. "I liked it."

Wants To Play Drums

In fact, the actress seems to like everything American, from slang to swing music. Visiting Harlem en route to Hollywood, she was thrilled by the Lindy Hop and now she wants to learn the Big Apple. She's full of exuberance and rhythm; hums and clicks her tongue in jazz time when she's not talking; wishes she could play the drums and saxophones.

Other new enthusiasms are chewing gum, ice cream sodas and American cars. Also American radio. "So much better here as in France, where all is advertising," she said.

Two things frighten her—the possibilities of war and earth-quake. Somebody told her that if you were in an automobile during an earthquake, you wouldn't feel anything, so she keeps one of her cars always standing in the driveway beside the house.

War would be worse, because it would claim her husband, Henri

Decoin, who was a flying ace in the last one. Decoin is a handsome, af-
