PAMPA — Officials from the Small Business Administration were expected today around 1 p.m. to begin the process of disbursing loans to people affected by the June 8 tornado.

The workshop will be open Mondays through Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Pampa Economic Development Corporation office, 301 N. Ballard. The length of the SBA officials' stay will be determined by the amount of work they do.

At the workshop, individuals and businesses may obtain a disaster loan application, receive help in completing their application or submit their completed application.

Individuals or businesses may get a loan application by calling the SBA toll-free number, 1-800-366-6303, or 817-267-4688 for the hearing impaired.

PEDC Executive Director Jack Ippel said this morning that several people had already called about the SBA officials, which will include two loan officers and one verifier.

Deadline for filing a physical loss disaster loan is Oct. 30.

GRANDVIEW-HOPKINS — Solomon N. Kepley began his duties as Grandview-Hopkins Independent School District superintendent Saturday after being named to that post Friday.

Kepley was most recently superintendent at Knox City-O'Brien Consolidated ISD. He also served as principal at Hartley and Clarendon.

"I anticipate continued academic improvement for the students attending the Grandview-Hopkins School District. I am honored to be in a position to serve the students, parents, staff, community and board of trustees of Grandview-Hopkins," Kepley said in a release.

Kepley and his wife Loretta have three children.

WHITE DEER — The board of directors of Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District No. 3 is to vote on the proposed tax rate at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The meeting will be held at 300 Omohundro, White Deer. The board proposes an increase from 0.85 cents to 1.4 cents per $100 valuation.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maybe Hollywood found a conscience and is concerned about cheap exploitation of the O.J. Simpson trial.

Maybe Laura Hart McKinny's script, Men Against Women, is simply not that good.

Whatever the reason, it seems that almost no one wants to touch the screenplay, based on hours of taped interviews with retired Los Angeles police Detective Mark Fuhrman.

NATO renews airstrikes at Serb targets

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Huge clouds of smoke rose from Serb-held suburbs of Sarajevo today as NATO warplanes struck quickly at rebel Serb targets around the Bosnian capital.

NATO unleashed the new airstrikes after Bosnian Serbs refused to bow to demands and move their big guns out of range of Sarajevo.

The Bosnian Serb military reported numerous explosions. The Serbs did not say what was attacked, but claimed that there was extensive damage and civilian casualties. There was no confirmation of the claims.

One U.N. source in Sarajevo, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the planes had targeted a large Bosnian Serb barracks in the southern suburb of Lukavica.

Hours later, U.N. officials in the northern town of Tuzla reported three explosions in the area of a Serb-held hillside communications tower, apparently from NATO attacks.

Western military sources said targets were similar to those attacked last week, when NATO went after ammunition dumps, anti-aircraft and radar sites, and command-and-control installations.

Sarajevans rushed out of their homes, looking skyward for the planes attacking their Serb foes. People ran along the streets for a better view. After an initial wave of airstrikes that began last Wednesday, many had begun to get discouraged about the possibility of continued NATO action.

Last week's attacks ended on Friday, when NATO and the United Nations declared a pause for Serbs to meet a series of demands. They included moving about 300 artillery pieces, tanks and other heavy weapons more than 12 1/2 miles outside of Sarajevo.

The rebel Serbs moved some weaponry, but fell far short of pulling all their heavy weapons out of range of the Bosnian capital. The deadline for the Serbs to comply expired at 11 p.m. Monday, and a tense standoff ensued until NATO struck after noon.

"We hope that this operation will make clear to the Bosnian Serbs the futility of further military activity," said a statement from NATO Secretary General Willy Claes.

At the Pentagon, Deputy Defense Secretary John White said today's air attacks were intended more to signal the Bosnian Serbs than to turn the tide of the war.

"We had a pause of four days to allow them time for compliance," White said. "They unfortunately have not done so yet. I would suggest that they ought to do so and that they ought to do so very promptly."

Warplanes zoomed over the western part of Sarajevo, and loud explosions followed in the city's Serb-held southwest suburbs. After the initial strike, more air activity and several more explosions were heard. Detonations also were heard from the Bosnian Serb stronghold of Pale, about nine miles southeast of Sarajevo.

The skies cleared of warplanes no more than an hour after the attack began.

U.N. spokesman Philip Arnold in Zagreb, Croatia, said earlier that the airstrikes would last "as long as necessary."

It was not immediately clear what targets had been attacked, or whether the planes had been successful.

France may halt series of nuclear tests

PAPEETE, Tahiti (AP) — France may cut short a planned series of seven or eight underground nuclear tests in the South Pacific that has prompted widespread protests, President Jacques Chirac said today.

Chirac refused to respond to a report that the first test could come this week. He said simply that the first test would take place "as soon as the technicians consider the time has come."

France says the tests are needed to update its nuclear arsenal and develop technology for test simulations.

"If we have the information we need to change over to simulation, before the eight tests, obviously, regardless of the opinions of whomever, I will stop the blasts. My objective is not to carry out eight tests," Chirac said in Paris in a television interview.

"In any case, we will stop the tests before the date I have indicated, which was May 31st," he said.

The French Polynesian leader, Gaston Flosse, said Monday that he expected a blast this week under either the Mururoa or Fangataufa atolls, 750 miles southeast of Papeete.

French warships warned the 14 protest vessels around Mururoa atoll to stay out of territorial waters and told them the passage between Mururoa and Fangataufa atolls was off-limits.

Texas Gov. George W. Bush, center, visits with some of the people at Chautauqua Monday morning in Central Park.

Gov. George Bush visits with crowd on stop at Labor Day's Chautauqua

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

If a man gains a year every time someone asks "May I have my picture taken with you?" or runs up to shake his hand, then Gov. George Bush will live forever.

Such was the governor's reception in Pampa Monday when he worked the Chautauqua crowd, following a reception at the Pampa Chamber of Commerce Building.

Pampa was the first of Bush's Labor Day stops which included trips to Boys Ranch and Amarillo to meet the people who voted for him in overwhelming numbers almost a year ago. On Nov. 8, 1994, Bush garnered 5,550 votes to incumbent governor Ann Richards' 2,752 in Gray County.

Bush told Chamber visitors, which included members of the city and county commissions and school board, the most extraordinary legislative session in the last 50 years had been completed.

"Everything we did had this underlying principle, all Texans are responsible for their actions," he said.

He cited changes in juvenile justice, tort reform and a rewrite of the education code as victories for Texas.

In Central Park he reiterated his campaign theme of limited government to the estimated 2,000 festival goers.

"I'm here to tell you government can work if it's limited to a few things," he said.

Bush praised Rep. Warren Chisum (R-Pampa), who accompanied him during his Pampa visit.

"He's about as rock solid as anybody you'll find in Austin. ... He's the best of what Texas brings to politics," the governor said.

"I think he really cares about this region of Texas that's easy to overlook because we're not a great metropolitan area," said Carol Fruge, who had her picture made with Bush. "He communicates a great understanding of the people here who love their state. I'm glad he took the time to come to our town."

"He's right, we have to restore a sense of personal responsibility for our actions as they relate to other people," she said.

"I like what he said about returning more stuff to the local government," said Dr. Bill Horne, a Bush supporter.

And the good news?
"I'm here to break the news I actually killed no killdees and one lone dove," the governor said, referring to a 1994 hunting trip in which he shot the non game bird.

Pampa native returns to sing at Chautauqua

By CHIP CHANDLER
Staff Writer

"This feels great. I love it up here," said the local celebrity, moments after stepping off the Chautauqua stage Monday morning.

Country singer Keith Riemer may not have a multi-million dollar contract with a big Nashville label, but to enthusiastic audiences at the Labor Day festivities that didn't matter.

Riemer is a Pampa native made good — a singer/songwriter with three releases under his belt and two more on the way. He also owns his very own publishing company and record label.

Not bad for someone who's only been seriously working on his music for the past five or six years, starting with writing a number of songs.

He's actually been playing all his life, but when he started writing he made a decision.

"I decided I needed to be playing for someone if I'm going to be the trouble of writing," he said.

His latest release, Prairie Magic, features almost all of his own work. It's also a family affair with songs written by a cousin and by his great-grandfather — a man who came to the Panhandle in 1888.

The song written by his great-grandfather was passed from father to son, Riemer said, for generations.

Another of his tunes is about that same great-grandfather, an accomplished musician in his own right.

"Please Bring Your Fiddle" features lyrics about the Panhandle pioneer, and the song's instrumental sections during the intro, break and end feature a Prussian waltz developed by Riemer's ancestor.

Riemer even has a Pampa connection on his latest album — fiddler Thurston Selby, a student at the University of Texas-Arlington and the son of Pampa residents.

Riemer is a communications technician at Southwestern Bell Telephone in the Dallas area by day.

He also owns a record label — purchased jointly with two friends — and a publishing company to distribute his writings.

What could be his biggest break is coming soon, he says. Famed cowboy poet Red Steagall will use some cuts from Prairie Magic on his syndicated radio show.

Steagall is one of Riemer's favorites on the music scene today.

"[He] is right on up there. He's a real pro. I really admire what Red does," he said.

He's travelled around the world with his music — in January, he will return to a music festival in Cannes, France — but it's Chautauqua that was foremost on his mind Monday.

"I've been looking forward to this. I've bumped into several people I knew in high school, and seen a lot of parents of my classmates. It's great."

Former Pampa resident Keith Riemer performs Monday on the Central Park stage at Chautauqua.

Pampa Guardsmen off to training in California

The Pampa Army National Guard Unit will deploy Wednesday to the U.S. Army's National Training Center (NTC) in Fort Irwin, Calif., for three weeks of maneuver warfare training alongside the army's 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment.

During the rotation, the local company will oppose the U.S. Army's 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment in simulated mid-to-high intensity combat on the floor of the Mojave Desert.

The Pampa battalion was selected to represent the Texas Army National Guard at the Army's premier training facility "because of their high level of readiness and reputation as one of the guard's best mechanized infantry battalions," according to Major General Edgar Murphy, a long-time Lubbock resident and commanding general of the National Guard's only remaining armored division.

Murphy added that "this mission is possible only because of the support provided by our local employers and their families."

Training at the NTC is designed to prepare battalion task forces, brigades, divisions and corps for combat in an environment that permits individuals and units to sharpen their combat skills in the most realistic environment outside of actual combat.

Most Army officials credit the training conducted at the NTC as the "number one reason" for the army's success in Desert Storm.

The battalion will depart from the unit locations in Lubbock, Amarillo and Midland for Fort Irwin with all of its equipment and weapons Wednesday and return Sept. 26.

Family members and friends have been encouraged to attend the departure and arrival ceremonies of these citizen soldiers, says Major Bob Wenger, battalion commander of the 2nd Battalion, 142nd Infantry Regiment, also known as the "High Plains Infantry."

Plan proposed to help victims of 'cyberjackers'

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Clinton administration today proposed to help authors and publishers avoid becoming victims of "cyberjackers" on the information superhighway.

A presidential task force, in a report on "Intellectual Property and the National Information Infrastructure," said the nation's growing computer communications system won't flourish without safeguards against theft.

"Unless we provide legal protection for intellectual property, customers won't be able to reap the benefits of these new technologies," Commerce Secretary Ron Brown told a news conference. President Clinton established a task force in 1993 to look at how well copyright law is coping with advances in information technologies.

Brown, noting that half the American work force is employed in information-based jobs, said the administration plan to expand the information superhighway is ambitious. "We want it to develop into a system for international commerce with copyright protection," he said.

The report found existing copyright law to be "fundamentally adequate and effective," but recommended changes to bring it in line with current technology.

"Technology has altered the copyright balance - in some instances in favor of copyright owners, and in others in favor of users," said a summary accompanying the report. "The goal of the recommendations is to clarify existing law and adapt it where the balance has shifted."

Addressing a major concern of intellectual property holders, the report recommends classifying transmissions as copies and thus expressly including them under copyright law.

It also suggests an exemption for libraries and archives, allowing them to prepare a limited number of copies "for purposes of preservation."

"Without enforceable laws in place, intellectual property owners will be unwilling to put their works at risk in this rapidly expanding digital environment," said Bruce Lehman, the commissioner of patents and trademarks who led the group that developed the report.

Among other recommendations, the report: - Calls for prohibiting the manufacture or distribution of any device that would circumvent electronic tags that may be used to protect copyrights in cyberspace.

- Says the use of a copyright notice should not be mandatory on any published work.

- Supports legislation that would make it unlawful to infringe a copyright by distributing copies worth more than $5,000.

"Setting a monetary threshold and requiring willfulness ... ensures that merely casual or careless conduct resulting in distribution of only a few copies will not be subject to criminal prosecution," the report said.

Company submits new AIDS drug for FDA approval

WASHINGTON (AP) - Hoffmann-La Roche Inc. announced today that it is applying to the Food and Drug Administration to market a new class of AIDS drugs, and federal officials said that approval could come swiftly.

Hoffmann-La Roche, of Nutley, N.J., is asking for FDA approval of saquinavir, a compound that attacks the reproduction cycle of the AIDS virus in a way different from that of drugs now in use. Saquinavir acts on HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, by blocking an enzyme called proteinase, which has a key role in the final phases of the replication cycle of HIV. Four HIV drugs currently marketed work by blocking reverse transcriptase, a protein active earlier in the replication cycle.

Houstonians prepare for double area codes

HOUSTON (AP) — It's like trying to pour two gallons of water into a one-gallon jug.

The explosion of fax machines, wireless and data phone lines, along with general population growth, has nearly exhausted the possible 7.9 million numbers in the 713 area code region.

Therefore, beginning next March, Houston's new 281 area code will be fully implemented.

The result could be that neighbors have different area codes, or customers with 713 area codes who get a second phone line in their home will have a different area code for each line.

But because there will be two area codes in the same calling area, dialing a local number will mean using all 10 digits — the area code plus the phone number.

Because it has the largest territory in the 713 area, Southwestern Bell will administer the new area code and issue numbers for it.

Bell spokesman Chris Talley said the overlay system is more desirable than a geographic split because existing customers won't have to change their area codes. Everyone who already has a 713 number will get to keep it.

Residents pack classes for concealed gun licenses

PLANO (AP) — Plano was named an "All-American City" last year and it's one of the safest in Texas — the most common crime is thefts of golf clubs and lawn mowers from wide-open garages.

But, like many Americans, people here are afraid.

They see the carjackings and muggings on the evening news. They remember the massacre at Luby's Cafeteria in Killeen, the kidnap and murder of a little girl from a Plano park two years ago.

They want to carry guns in their pockets, purses and fanny packs. As of Jan. 1, a new state law will allow them to do so.

And so they gave up their golf games and left their children with housekeepers to spend Labor Day weekend in classrooms, qualifying for licenses to carry concealed handguns.

Hospital studies gene therapy as cancer weapon

AUSTIN (AP) — Gene therapy is being studied at a Central Texas hospital for possible use as a weapon against various forms of cancer.

Twenty-five patients with a variety of cancers that have not responded to conventional treatments with surgery, medication or radiation are participating in the experiment at Scott & White Hospital in Temple.

Debra Pinsoneault, who is battling melanoma, is one patient counting on the experimental treatment to help her fight against the deadly skin cancer.

Six injections transferring genes to her solid-cancer tumor to stimulate the attraction of cancer-killing cells seem to be working.

"It has gotten better," said Ms. Pinsoneault, 44, of Harker Heights, about 60 miles northwest of Austin. "The size of the tumor has gone down."

Hurricane threatens Thursday shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With Hurricane Luis looming in the Atlantic, NASA today prepared space shuttle Endeavour for a possible retreat from the launch pad as weather threatened to further delay this week's liftoff.

Even if the powerful hurricane avoids Florida's east coast, shuttle weather officer Ed Priselac said he expects only a 40 percent chance of favorable conditions for the scheduled 11:09 a.m. Thursday launch.

"It looks pretty dicey," Priselac said this morning. Shuttle test director Bill Dowdell said managers will decide Wednesday whether to return Endeavour to the hangar for protection against the hurricane's damaging wind. Endeavour had to be moved from the pad to the hangar in early August for protection against the much weaker Hurricane Erin.

This time, NASA would have to transport two shuttles into the hangar: Endeavour and Columbia, waiting on the other pad for a late September launch. NASA packed away loose equipment at both pads today and sent one of its shuttle transporters to Columbia's pad.

If Endeavour has to be moved, liftoff likely would be delayed as much as a week, Dowdell said.

Endeavour's science mission already has been on hold for more than a month because of repairs to the solid-fuel rocket boosters and a failed electrical generator. Liftoff initially was set for Aug. 5.

NASA was within hours of trying to launch Endeavour last Thursday when one of three shuttle fuel cells overheated. Engineers initially suspected a stuck valve, but inspections of the removed unit have uncovered no problems, Dowdell said.

Dowdell said NASA will turn on the new fuel cell tonight to make sure the cooling system and other hookups to the unit are good.

Further complicating matters are rough seas due to the tropical weather. It's uncertain whether NASA would launch Endeavour if the shuttle's two solid rocket boosters could not be retrieved promptly from the Atlantic, Dowdell said.

The boosters peel away from the shuttle two minutes into flight and drop into the ocean. NASA wants Endeavour's boosters back as soon as possible to analyze the repairs made last month to the nozzles.

And right now, the most significant change in law that is affecting immigration is the Immigration Act of 1990, which basically made it much easier for the extended relatives of current residents to immigrate into the

Census: Nearly 1 in 10 Texans are immigrants

HOUSTON (AP) — Nearly one of every 10 people living in Texas in 1994 was born outside the United States, according to a new U.S. Census Bureau report.

The 9.9 percent of Texans who were foreign-born exceeds the 8.7 percent national average, the highest since World War II.

About 75 percent of those 1.8 million immigrant Texans had not yet become naturalized citizens, the report said.

The growth in the percentage of foreign-born Texans is accelerating. Since 1970, 1.5 million people born in other countries have poured into Texas, most from Mexico and El Salvador, most settling in the state's bigger metropolitan areas.

The census figures reflect changes in immigration law that began with the passage of the Immigration Act of 1965, which made it easier for immediate family members of recent immigrants to enter the country.

The Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, intended to staunch the flow of illegal immigrants, actually fueled the numbers of foreign-born Americans. In one fell swoop, it granted amnesty to about 400,000 previously illegal immigrants living in Texas since 1982.

U.S.," said state demographer Steve Murdock of Texas A&M University. "Not just children and spouses can enter more easily now, but fathers, mothers and other family members."

California was home to 7.7 million foreign-born residents in 1994 — more than a third of all immigrants to the United States and nearly a quarter of the state population.

Texas ranked fourth as home to 8 percent of the nation's immigrants. Since 1970, 1.5 million people were born in Mexico, and another 110,000 listed El Salvador as their place of birth.

Most were urban dwellers. Of the total 1.8 million foreign-born in Texas, nearly 1.7 million resided in metropolitan areas, 1.1 million of them in the inner cities.

Murdock noted that Texas was second to California in overall population growth from 1990 to 1994. If current growth trends continue, Census Bureau and state demographers expect the Anglo proportion of the Texas population to drop below 50 percent between 2005 and 2010.

Hispanics would be 41 percent of the Texas population by the year 2020. And by the end of 2030, only 36.7 percent of state residents would be Anglo, while 45.9 percent would be Hispanic, 9.5 percent would be black and 7.9 percent would be members of other ethnic groups, primarily Asian.

Mine found in river

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — For the third time in 10 days, park rangers have found a small, homemade mine or its remnants bobbing below the surface of the San Antonio River.

The latest device, found Sunday, was the first mine investigators found intact. It was capable of causing a minor explosion but seemed to be designed more to startle, rangers said.

"They'll cause a large bang and a lot of noise when they do go off," said park ranger Sgt. R.D. Guerrero.

Investigators said the mine's design and location raised questions about whether it was intended for one of the river barges.

TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Whitewater maneuvering

From the standpoint of public comprehension, the Whitewater affair, revolving around a failed land development scheme and Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, which failed in 1989 at a cost to taxpayers of $60 million, has the disadvantage of being complicated and murky. It involves shady yet pervasively charming characters, funds apparently transferred and manipulated in odd but possibly just legal ways, and a confusing overlay of interlocking businesses.

But the indictment of two of President and Mrs. Clinton's former business partners, Susan and James McDougal, along with Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker especially taken in conjunction with other participants already indicted and/or convicted - suggests strongly that something was rotten in the state of Arkansas when Mr. Clinton was the governor. The contention from the White House that the Clintons were merely passive investors who had no awareness of the funds being transferred around them in dizzying fashion - while it might yet turn out to be true - becomes less plausible with each new revelation.

The McDougals and Mr. Tucker have been charged by a federal grand jury in Little Rock with multiple counts of fraud, conspiracy and making false statements in relation to apparently fraudulent loans obtained from Madison Guaranty (owned by Mr. McDougal and used to finance Whitewater).

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Clinton were named in the indictments. But four of the counts against the McDougals have to do with a $300,000 loan made to Susan McDougal by the federally backed Capital Management Services, run by former judge David Hale. Mr. Hale, who has pleaded guilty to two felony counts and is cooperating with prosecutors, has said that then Governor Clinton pressured him to make that loan. Mr. Clinton has denied it.

The indictments tend to corroborate charges made by Resolution Trust Corp. investigator Jean Lewis before a House hearing recently that she had uncovered "an elaborate check-kiting scheme" at Madison Guaranty, involving the floating of worthless checks, many drawn on Madison, among the accounts of Whitewater and other businesses owned by Mr. McDougal, either solely or with a variety of partners.

Some of the charges on which the grand jury chose to issue indictments are the same ones Paula Casey, Mr. Clinton's newly appointed U.S. attorney in Little Rock (and a former law student of Mr. Clinton) decided not to prosecute, saying there was "insufficient information to sustain many of the allegations." That didn't happen 15 years ago. It happened less than two years ago.

David Hale has claimed that his Capital Management Services, a Small Business Administration backed outfit that was supposed to lend money to small or minority owned businesses, served as "a piggy bank" for a clique of Democratic insiders, including the Clintons, during the 1980s. How credible are his charges? Look at who has been convicted.

Mr. Hale himself, along with Eugene Fitzhugh and Charles Matthews, pleaded guilty to charges connected to trying to defraud the SBA. Robert Palmer has pleaded guilty to filing false appraisals on Whitewater, and a Whitewater real estate agent, Chris Wade, pleaded guilty to bankruptcy fraud and submitting false applications. Neal Ainley, former president of an Arkansas bank, pleaded guilty to failing to report two large transactions from Mr. Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial campaign.

Jim Guy Tucker, James McDougal, Susan McDougal, cable-TV developer William Mark, and John Haley (Mr. Tucker's lawyer) have all been indicted on charges related to Whitewater or to other financial shenanigans.

It would have taken a blind eye indeed to have been in contact - and in some cases in partnership - with these people without being aware of some of what was transpiring.

A media-merger double standard

Almost a year ago, entertainment industry kingpins Steven Spielberg, Jeffrey Katzenberg and David Geffen made national headlines by joining forces and launching the DreamWorks studio. There was more than business that brought these men together. All three share an activist enthusiasm for liberal politics, contributing vast sums of money to many candidates and causes on the left.

The most important executive-level showbusiness news since that announcement took place early last month, when Michael Ovitz resigned as head of the Creative Artists Agency to become president of Disney. In the New York Times' words, Ovitz has been "widely considered the most powerful man in Hollywood." Well, the most powerful man now has a superior, Disney CEO Michael Eisner, but no matter who's reporting to whom, Ovitz and Eisner are, like Spielberg, Katzenberg and Geffen, among the heaviest of Hollywood hitters. And, also like SKG, they are major financial supporters of Democratic candidates and causes.

In December 1993, Ovitz and CAA hosted a Los Angeles Democratic fundraiser that took in more than $2 million. In attendance were actors and actresses, including Warren Beatty, Sally Field and Dustin Hoffman; directors, such as Barry Levinson (Rain Man); producers, among them Brian Grazer (Ron Howard's movies); and executives, including Warren Littlefield, top man at NBC Entertainment, and Leslie Moonves, now the head of CBS Entertainment.

Introducing the guest of honor, President Bill Clinton, Ovitz mentioned some Clinton successes - successful from the liberal perspective, that is - such as family-leave legislation and the Brady gun control bill, and commented that Clinton should be given "the time he needs to build a consensus and to enact change."

At about the same time as the fundraiser, Ovitz was co-chairman of Los Angeles' effort to host the 1996 Democratic National Convention, which was eventually awarded to Chicago. The super agent has long been a benefactor of liberal Democrats. He has contributed to dozens of campaigns, including those of Sens. Barbara Boxer (Calif.), Chris Dodd (Conn.), Tom Harkin (Iowa), Ted Kennedy (Mass.), Bob Kerrey (Neb.) and George Mitchell (Me.); Reps. John Dingell (Mich.) and Patricia Schroeder (Colo.); and presidential candidates Joseph Biden, Michael Dukakis and Richard Gephardt. From 1987 through 1994, Ovitz donated to the campaign of only one national Republican candidate: moderate Sen. Rudy Boschwitz (Minn.).

Eisner follows in Ovitz's footsteps. For a long time, the Disney chief's favorite politician appeared to be Sen. Bill Bradley (D-N.J.). During the 1991-1992 election cycle, Eisner contributed to such liberal Democrats as Sens. Tom Daschle (S.D.), Pat Leahy (Vt.) and Barbara Mikulski (Md.). He was active during the last campaign as well - recipients of his financial largesse included Democratic Sens. Dianne Feinstein (Calif.), Kennedy, Kerrey, Joseph Lieberman (Conn.) and Charles Robb (Va.). Like Ovitz, Eisner has, on rare occasions, supported Republicans, like Sen. Richard Lugar (Ind.). (For the record, Eisner was instrumental in producing The Making of Me, a film, shown at Disney World's EPCOT Center, that implied that life begins at conception. Expecting complaints from pro choicers, "everybody cringed at first," said the director of the EPCOT pavilion, where Making was shown, but Eisner was "adamant" that the film would be exhibited.)

Why could the Ovitz/Eisner combo be even more of a liberal force than Spielberg, Katzenberg and Geffen? Because Ovitz and Eisner have at their disposal one huge asset SKG doesn't - a television network, namely ABC, which Disney acquired in its recent merger with Capital Cities/ABC.

Some in journalism profess to be troubled by this. Ken Auletta's New Yorker piece on the merger discussed the possibility that under the Disney regime, the alphabet network's news coverage will become fluffier and/or more ratings driven. Why is no one in the industry concerned about conflict of interest?

Last winter, after it was reported that media mogul Rupert Murdoch had met privately with Newt Gingrich, the media positively exploded with charges of unethical behavior (along with dark suggestions of bribery). The same holds true for another conservative, TCI Chairman John Malone, whose spokesmen constantly must ward off conflict-of-interest questions because he proposes to launch a new network.

If the propriety of having conservative activists like Murdoch and Malone involved in the news media is a legitimate issue to raise, why the double standard, the profound silence when activists like Ovitz and Eisner do it from the left? And, if it's appropriate for Ovitz and Eisner to oversee a news division, how can any reasonable person conclude the charges against Murdoch and Malone are anything but politically motivated? The moralists in the media can choose one argument or the other - but not both.

Good reporting vs. bad propaganda

Charley Reese

Perhaps the most damning thing said about journalism today is most often said by journalists - that having to tell the truth will have a "chilling effect" on journalism.

We're hearing this refrain again in the wake of ABC Television's settlement of the libel suit that Philip Morris and RJ Reynolds had filed. The settlement involved a public apology and the paying of the tobacco company's legal fees.

They sued after ABC ran an expose claiming that tobacco companies "spiked" their cigarettes with nicotine to hook their customers. That's not true. ABC was wrong. And ABC lawyers knew they couldn't defend it. And they shouldn't. ABC, in other words, did the right thing - admitted a mistake.

This has outraged the anti-tobacco ideologues who think it is preposterous to let facts stand in the way of good propaganda. That's true of all ideologues, reason enough for a rational person to despise them, regardless of their cause.

What tobacco companies do is experiment with different combinations of different kinds of tobacco to come up with a flavor smokers will like. As strange as it may sound to nonsmokers, smokers choose their cigarettes based on flavor. Neither advertising nor addiction has anything to do with it.

Furthermore the thrust of tobacco companies is to fight for market share, not recruit new smokers.

That's typical of most businesses, by the way.

Toothpaste manufacturers are not trying to persuade people to brush their teeth; they're trying to persuade people who already brush their teeth to use their particular brand. Software makers are not trying to persuade people to buy computers; they are trying to persuade computer owners to use their software. So it is with cigarettes.

But along with the outraged anti-tobacco nuts came the usual moans from the Washington-New York crowd of journalists that corporate America was betraying Clark Kent and that never again would fearless investigative reporting get done.

Imagine, an organization not wanting to defend a false report! How dare it not stand by its incompetent and careless employees.

Horse apples. In the first place, precious little investigative reporting, fearless or craven, gets done anyway. Most newspapers can't afford it or are not interested in it.

Television settles for quick, easy cheap shots like discovering, God bless Columbus, that some junk car dealers actually turn the odometers back or, heaven forbid, that some mechanics will sell a woman a muffler she doesn't need. Next thing you know these television whizzes will discover that politicians don't always tell the truth.

The pseudo expose - revealing some innocuous information lying around in public view or breathlessly reporting the well known and obvious - has been around a long time and, I suppose, was perfected by Drew Pearson and his son-in-law, Jack Anderson. It is now in full flower on television.

The fact of the matter is that the old William Randolph Hearst rule is still a good one: "Get it first, but first get it right." An accurate story would not have prompted a libel suit.

It seems to be fashionable in some circles to start out with a story and, if the facts don't fit the story, dump the facts and stick with the story. It was a "good story" if tobacco companies indeed spiked their products; unfortunately for zealots, the facts are that tobacco companies just blend ingredients to improve flavor, a common practice in the consumer products industry.

At least out here in the hinterlands most editors and reporters don't think having to be accurate has a chilling effect on journalism. People who turn cold when confronted with the truth are usually writers of propaganda.

It's ABC's reporters, not its lawyers, who have a credibility problem.

The feminist Valkyrie carry 'the torch'

William Murchison

The ideological line on broken hearted Shannon Faulkner is that, well, too bad she couldn't cut it at The Citadel Military Academy. But ... she tried, the cadets disgraced themselves by giving her such a hard time and celebrating so lustily when she withdrew because of physical and emotional incapacity, and, at all events, she has carried The Torch. Others will proceed down the trail she blazed. Onward, onward ...!

Well, no doubt, one has to say something for cheerfulness' sake in the midst of so bleak a situation. Feminism's candidate to unsex The Citadel has washed out of said institution; male egos are unwholesomely gratified. You can't let this sort of thing pass without comment. The feminists haven't. They've been lambasting The Citadel ever since.

One is hard pressed to deny Shannon any kind of sympathy. To have an emotional and physical collapse on every national news report and in all the papers can't be fun. I feel sorry for her.

But - alas! - she asked for it. That's the truly sad part. In the name of the high and holy (as she saw it) crusade for objective equality, the lady stepped in where she wasn't invited or wanted and, indeed, where she didn't even belong. She was the dupe of rip-roaring, red-hot feminism. She bought its myths and fables, its distortions and banalities. The price proved high.

Fable No. 1 is that a woman's place is anywhere you see a man, particularly if the man is viewed as having any kind of fun or deriving benefit. Take The Citadel. Here are all these men, living in sexual exclusivity. The essence of The Citadel experience (as at the Virginia Military Institute) is bonding and growth through discipline and shared hardship. It works, Citadel graduates affirm.

Well, we just can't have that! Shannon and the feminist Valkyrie announce.

Oh? Can't have it? Why? Because Shannon wants in on it. What the others have, she wants, too.

Now, wait. If Shannon Faulkner, a woman, gets into The Citadel on the same terms as male cadets, then the male cadets won't have what they have. They'll have something different. Is that fair?

Fair? Of course! Fair is what's good for Shannon! Never mind the others!

In this brutal - yes, and even insensitive - manner, our society is redefining morality and culture to be whatever the most strident voices can persuade a federal court to impose on not necessarily willing subjects.

So, here we are as usual - putting the guilt trip on the men. Those bad, bad boys at The Citadel: no gentlemen, they. Why, they didn't make poor Shannon welcome. They cheered when she left. Never mind that "poor Shannon" came barging into their venerable institution, proposing to turn its customs and arrangements inside out in order to suit herself. The aggressor gets no blame in this; it's kick the victims - preferably, in that strategic place made famous in the cinematic exploits of Thelma and Louise.

Yes, and blame the institution itself. Hiss, boo for its traditions - never mind how amply and well they have served the state of South Carolina and its citizens, male and female alike, because the molding of valiant gentlemen, a Citadel specialty for the outset, cannot be a disservice to the larger community.

Shannon and the feminist Valkyrie - again alas! - see life through a drinking straw. What someone else might want, or find useful, uplifting or even sacred, isn't of the least interest to them. You see, they have the Higher Vision. Only screwballs and primordial could object to their artistic rendering of the Public Good.

Would somebody mind interposing that wrestling something from another and giving it to a third party isn't Civic Advancement - that, verily, gentle reader, it could safely be construed as highway robbery? At The Citadel, the Valkyrie-bands have been repelled. For now. Let us allow their intended prey to savor an accidental triumph. There aren't many such triumphs, accidental or intended, in politically correct America.

Man used bomb threat to retrieve luggage

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A man whose luggage got on board a flight he missed claimed there was a bomb in his bags in hopes the plane would return to the airport.

It did, no bomb was found and he was arrested.

Ronald Ellis, 24, who was trying to get home to Philadelphia after a vacation in Florida, was jailed Monday on a charge of threatening to discharge a destructive device.

Ellis was angry at missing USAir Flight 804 when he reported the bomb, said Broward County sheriff's spokesman Jim Lejedal.

The plane, which had been in the air for 20 minutes, returned to a remote area of Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport. All 120 passengers and crew were escorted from the Boeing 737 jetliner and Ellis led police to his luggage.

"He decided to report that there was a bomb in his luggage figuring that the plane would have to come back to the airport," Lejedal said.

"He was right, but he is going to jail."

The flight to Philadelphia was delayed one hour and 40 minutes.

James Hoffa officially opens bid for Father's old post

DETROIT (AP) — The Teamsters union must wage a long, hard fight to renew its prominence and James P. Hoffa wants to be the one to lead the charge.

"For 54 years, I have benefited by being a Teamster, by being raised in a Teamster home," Hoffa said before the start of Detroit's Labor Day parade. "Now, after 26 years of paying dues of working with the Teamsters, of helping you, it's time for me to stand up and take an active role."

More than 20 years after his father disappeared, Hoffa on Monday announced his candidacy for the presidency of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, a seat once held by his father.

"I pledge to you that we will not retreat from the battle to free our union of corruption," Hoffa told the crowd of several thousand that interrupted with frequent chants of "Hoffa, Hoffa, Hoffa."

"Our union cannot achieve its rendezvous with destiny if corruption lurks within," he said.

Hoffa later appeared at a rally in support of the 7-week-old strike at The Detroit News and Detroit Free Press.

Hoffa's father, Jimmy Hoffa, disappeared 20 years ago after leaving a Detroit restaurant and has never been found.

The younger Hoffa, 54, a labor lawyer and executive assistant to the Michigan Teamsters Joint Council 43 president, wants to unseat Ron Carey as head of the 1.4 million-member International Brotherhood of Teamsters in 1996.

It is only the second time the Teamsters rank-and-file has selected a president. The first elected president was Carey, who ran in 1991 on a platform of reform. The union agreed to open elections as part of its 1989 settlement of a federal racketeering lawsuit.

Mexican rebels refuse to lay down arms

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Chiapas guerrillas disclosed on the eve of today's planned peace talks that they want to become an independent political force, but won't lay down arms while their demands go unmet.

The disclosures, reported Monday by the capital newspaper Reforma, come a week after more than 1 million Mexicans voted in a grassroots ballot, the majority favoring the emergence of the Zapatista fighters as a political group.

"More than 1 million Mexicans have taken part in a democratic exercise without precedent in Mexico," rebel commander Marcos was quoted as saying. "But the government regimen is blind and deaf" to that call.

Some 53.3 percent of those taking part in civil society's "National Consultation" said the rebels should enter politics and 48.2 percent suggested they ally with an existing political group.

But rebel commander Felipe Zedillo, quoted by Reforma, said the guerrillas oppose joining another organization. He added arms were a guarantee that the guerrillas would be taken seriously during peace negotiations.

On Saturday, President Ernesto Zedillo announced he wanted to include the rebels in a dialogue on government reform of the Mexican state and on drafting new laws governing indigenous rights. After Zedillo's proposals, many are hoping more will get done to end the 19-month-old uprising when government and rebel leaders resume talking.

But the rebels said they would have to consider the substance of those proposals as talks open today in San Andres Larrainzar, Chiapas.

Commander Moises, the top rebel negotiator, was quoted as saying he hoped the government would "exhibit flexibility" in Tuesday's round and understand the rebels had significant domestic and international backing.

Meanwhile, government negotiators said they were pushing for the rebels to incorporate into political life by laying down arms.

"Mexican society does not want an armed group. It wants them (the rebels) to participate in the political fabric of our society," chief government negotiator Marco Antonio Bernal told reporters.

Zedillo's apparent hope is that the Zapatistas will be more inclined to lay down their guns if they are given a larger role in Mexico's political future.

It is the president's latest attempt to peacefully end the uprising that began Jan. 1, 1994 when Indian peasants rose up in Chiapas, demanding basic rights and services. Ten days of fighting claimed at 145 lives before a cease-fire was declared Jan. 12, 1994.

Amarillo Arts, Crafts Festival set for Sept. 9-10

AMARILLO — The fourth annual Amarillo Fall Arts and Crafts Festival will be held Sept. 9 and 10 in the main exhibit hall at the Amarillo Civic Center.

More than 150 exhibitors from throughout the Southwest will fill the hall with original art and handcrafted items. Hours for the show are Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Mel Prather, organizer for the upcoming show, said he was pleased with both the variety and quality of items to be displayed at the festival.

"For one, we've been able to expand the number of participants in several categories. For example, we'll be offering more seasonal decorations, food gift items, framed prints and stained glass, handmade jackets and purses, punched tin and painted wood crafts," he said.

Other newcomers will offer country crafts, gold and silver wire jewelry, pewter and cloth angels, lamps, quilted wall hangings and quilts, Prather said.

"Also on hand for the first time will be those with dolls and accessories for dolls, soft book covers, floral designs, calligraphy, crochet items, pillow slips, bird toys, wood toys and trucks, pull houses and girls pinafore dresses."

Rounding out the list of items making their way into the show are yard ornaments, sunflower items, miniature paintings and wood crafts, wall plaques, scarecrows, gingerbread decorations, yard furniture and ceramics.

Also on hand will be those with potpourri pies, original ladies clothing, hot sauces, scented trivets, soft sculpture, barnwood frames and cabinets, kitchen furniture, dining room tables and cabinets, handthrown pottery, coin jewelry, vests, handmade luggage, puzzles/soup mixes and purses.

Austin grandmother FBI fugitive

AUSTIN (AP) — A 54-year-old Austin grandmother eludes federal authorities after 10 years as one of the FBI's most wanted fugitives.

At one time, many Austinites knew Betty Ann Duke. But before there was Betty Ann Duke — federal fugitive "considered armed and extremely dangerous" — there was Austin's Betty Ann: mother of two, substitute teacher and legislative researcher, leftist activist, committed warrior in the struggle for worldwide human rights.

She disappeared in 1985 while awaiting trial in Philadelphia on charges of harboring a fugitive from a $1.6 million Brinks truck heist and with possession of firearms and 200 pounds of explosives. Along with being wanted in a series of bombings in New York and Washington, D.C.

Gift on Mother's Day Is Cherished by Two Moms

DEAR ABBY: This past Mother's Day, my 21-year-old son, Kurt, came home at 10:30 in the evening and apologized for not having spent the day with me. Yet he gave me an infinitely precious gift.

Several months earlier, one of his closest buddies committed suicide. It was a tragic and confusing loss to all who knew him.

Since this would have been the young man's mother's first Mother's Day alone, some of those who had been closest to her son arranged to spend the day at her home doing yard work, helping her sort through his things, and just "being there" for her.

It made me realize that I have my thoughtful son every day, and in no way could I be hurt or upset because he had chosen to reach out in love and compassion to someone who desperately needed it. Two mothers were blessed with one priceless gift.

Perhaps others who know a parent who has lost a child will offer the same "gift" on future Mother's (or Father's) Days.

Father's Day. Too often, people avoid the bereaved because they don't know what to say to someone who is grieving. Read on for a letter that illustrates the problem:

DEAR ABBY: This is a rather small town, and yesterday I ran into an acquaintance on the main street. This man's son had committed suicide a couple of weeks ago.

The son was a young adult who had moved away from here about a year ago. He gave his parents a lot of grief, but that's beside the point.

How should a person handle a situation like this?
TONGUE-TIED IN NEBRASKA

DEAR ABBY: Help! What is a mother to do when her 17-year-old daughter thinks it's OK to come home at 4 a.m. from a date? Her father is no help at all. He wants to be her "buddy" and has never insisted that she adhere to her 12:30 a.m. curfew.

I have spoken to my pastor and other mothers, and they all agree with me. But Dad doesn't! Are there other mothers out there with my problem?

SLEEPLESS AND HOPELESS IN CONN. DEAR SLEEPLESS AND HOPELESS: You have a bigger problem with your husband than you do with your daughter. As long as he chooses to side with your daughter, curfew enforcement will be impossible. His failure to back you up in enforcing the rules of the house may be symptomatic of other problems in your marriage.

If he continues to undermine you instead of presenting a united front, there's little you can do to regain control of your daughter. Some marriage counseling sessions may be in order.

What teens need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with peers and parents is in "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. DUMAS — Pampa placed third in the Dumas Junior Varsity Volleyball Tournament last weekend.

Pampa opened with a win over Fritch, 15-0, 15-2, then lost to Dumas, 11-15, 6-15. Pampa came back to beat Randall, 15-3, 16-14.

April Lopez and Tiffany McCullough were the outstanding servers for Pampa in the tournament while Katy Cavalier spiked the ball well. Pampa's record is now 7-2.

FOOTBALL

HOWARD, Wis. (AP) — A single-engine plane that had made several trips over Lambeau Field towing a banner during the Green Bay-St. Louis game crashed just after take-off for another run, killing the pilot, the only one aboard.

MIAMI (AP) — Dan Marino's profitable investment in a company owned by Miami Dolphins owner Wayne Huizenga did not violate NFL salary cap rules, the league management council ruled.

Marino purchased more than $390,000 worth of stock in Republic Waste Industries, a company Huizenga bought in May.

GOLF

CRANS-SUR-SIERRE, Switzerland (AP) — Sweden's Mathias Groenberg earned his first PGA tournament victory by shooting 3-under-par 69 in the final round of the $1.07 million European Masters.

Groenberg, 25, finished with a four-round total of 18-under 270, two shots better than England's Barry Lane (64) and Italy's Costantino Rocca (66).

Defending champion Eduardo Romero of Argentina (71) tied with Sweden's Joakim Haeggman at 273.

BASKETBALL

MIAMI (AP) — Pat Riley was introduced as the Miami Heat's new president and coach Saturday.

Riley, who has the highest winning percentage in NBA history (.717), is the fourth Heat coach in eight years. He replaces interim coach Alvin Gentry, who took over when Kevin Loughery was fired.

The five-year contract is estimated at $15 million. The deal also gives Riley an undisclosed ownership stake in the team and full control over basketball-related decisions.

Riley holds league-best marks for playoff appearances (212) and victories (137) and is third among active coaches in overall victories with 756, behind Atlanta's Lenny Wilkens (968) and Don Nelson (817).

The signing came less than 24 hours after the Heat gave $1 million and a first-round draft pick to the Knicks as compensation for pursuing Riley.

BASEBALL

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Robin Ventura of the Chicago White Sox became the eighth player in major league history to hit two grand slams in a game, connecting in the fourth and fifth innings against the Texas Rangers on Monday.

Ventura broke the game open with a fourth-inning grand slam off reliever Dennis Cook, the sixth in his career to establish a franchise record, giving the White Sox a 8-2 lead.

Ventura added his second of the night and 25th homer of the season in the fifth off reliever Danny Darwin, pushing Chicago's advantage to 13-3.

Frank Robinson was the last major leaguer to hit two grand slams in a game on June 26, 1970, for the Baltimore Orioles.

Ventura has also tied a club record with eight RBIs, last accomplished by Jim Spencer in 1977.

Cowboys dominate Giants in all areas

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — If the first week of the season is any indicator, make the Dallas Cowboys the favorites to win a third Super Bowl in four years.

Unlike the San Francisco 49ers, who struggled to beat New Orleans on Sunday, the Cowboys came out in midseason form on Monday night and humiliated the New York Giants 35-0 in a game even more lopsided than the score.

Emmitt Smith scored on a 60-yard run on his first carry of the season and added three 1-yard runs while gaining 163 yards on 21 carries.

Troy Aikman threw for 228 yards, hitting Michael Irvin and Jay Novacek a combined 12 times for 200 yards and a touchdown, while Dallas' defense didn't allow New York closer than its 15.

"It was total domination in all areas, special teams, offense, defense," Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said. "When the Dallas Cowboys can run the football like we ran it tonight, it is very difficult to beat us. It's going to be really fun to look at the film and the offensive line and see how they gashed up."

The segment of film Switzer won't like seeing is late in the second quarter when cornerback Kevin Smith went down with what appeared to be a season-ending Achilles injury.

"I want to tell Jerry, 'Hey, it's serious now,'" Switzer said in a serious tone. "Get Deion (Sanders). We need Deion now."

While the Cowboys look to fill a cornerback slot, the Giants are definitely heading back to the drawing board after their worst regular-season loss since a 44-7 setback at San Diego in 1980. It was their first shutout at home since 1976 and their first shutout in an opener since 1934.

"If you use this as a measuring stick, we have a long way to go," said Giants coach Dan Reeves, who had hoped his team would challenge the three-time defending NFC East champion Cowboys this season. It took the Cowboys only one series to show their superiority, going 75 yards in three plays. The last 60 came on a burst by Smith off the right side of the line that caught the Giants in a blitz. One step beyond the line and he was gone.

And so were the Giants, for that matter.

"I think the first touchdown kind of hurt us, but you just say, 'OK, it's 7-0. Let's throw it out the window and let's go play football,'" Giants veteran safety Vencie Glenn said. "But we never got back on track. I can't never say we were on track, but we just never bounced back and they dictated the whole game, no ifs, ands or buts. They dictated every phase of the game."

Dallas pushed its lead to 21-0 with scoring drives of 65 and 59 yards in the second quarter. Aikman, who was 15-of-20, hit Irvin (7 catches for 109 yards) on a 7-yard scoring pass and Smith scored the first of the three short TDs.

Smith has 75 for his career, breaking the team mark of 72 set by Tony Dorsett.

New York's best scoring chance came late in the quarter, but a 42-yard field goal attempt by Brad Daluiso was partially blocked by Tony Tolbert.

After Phil Simms No. 11 jersey was retired at halftime by the Giants, Dallas came back on the field and finished off New York with a seven play, 80-yard drive.

"The shutout was great," Cowboys middle linebacker Robert Jones said. "I think that sends out a message to the rest of the teams that the Cowboys are not joking around this year. We had it taken away from us last year and we're going to fight for it this year."

Dallas held a 459-211 edge in yardage, averaging 8.2 yards per play to 3.8 for New York. The Cowboys also limited New York's usually good running game to 65 yards, but it should be noted the Giants' offensive line was banged up most of the preseason.

"They just came out and executed and didn't make any mistakes," Giants linebacker Michael Brooks said. "We made a lot of mistakes and everybody is to blame."

Amarillo's Kelting claims second consecutive Top O' Texas title

By L.D. STRATE

PAMPA — Kyle Kelting held off Ryan Palmer's final-round onslaught Monday to win the Hart Warren Top O' Texas Tournament for the second straight year.

The two Amarillo golfers finished with four-round totals of 283 and 286, respectively, at the Pampa Country Club course.

Kelting, who had 17 consecutive pars in the final 18, never trailed in the tournament. Palmer was able to trim Kelting's 7-stroke lead after three rounds to 3 with a scorching 5-under par 66 in the last round.

Kelting became the first golfer to win the Top O' Texas back-to-back since Richard Ellis' string of five straight titles from 1979-83. He never dropped below first in the 72-hole tournament.

"I drove the ball real well the entire tournament," Kelting said. "I would have liked to have made more putts, but I was able to win and you can't ask for more than that."

Kelting topped off his triumph with a birdie on No. 18. Palmer, who had two bogeys on the front nine of the final round, starting coming on strong with consecutive birdies on No. 10 and 11. Palmer, who is attending North Texas University on a golf scholarship, birdied No. 16 before capping his round by rolling in a 20-foot putt for an eagle on No. 18.

Steve Rogers of Amarillo and Everett Dobson of Edmond, Okla. tied for third at 287.

Pampa players Barry Terrell and Cory Stone finished in a three-way tie for eighth place with Amarillo's James Bischof at 292.

Hurley, Bach double up in Washington

COLORADO SPRINGS — Team ropers Bobby Hurley of Ceres, Calif., and Allen Bach of Toltec, Ariz., aren't sick. But they did see double this weekend. Double buckles, that is.

Hurley and Bach won the team roping at two rodeos, including a lucrative $2,308 victory at the $85,690 Horse Heaven Round-up Rodeo in Kennewick, Wash. They roped two steers in 120 seconds to take the Kennewick average, besting Wes and Cameron Moore by two-tenths of a second.

"It was a good rodeo," said Hurley, who won the world team roping title in 1993. "The steers were pretty even that first day at slack, and they had a steer for everybody. We made some pretty good runs there."

The team's best run took place in the second round, when they caught their steer in 5.9 seconds. The time was three-tenths of a second faster than Mike Fuller and Terry Selland, and earned Hurley and Bach a first-place, $898 check for the round. It also pushed the tandem to the lead in the average.

Hurley and Bach placed in the first round as well, splitting third-place money with Mark Simon and Bobby Harris. Both teams caught their steer in 6.1 seconds.

Hurley and Bach earned another $1,120 by winning the Kitsap County Fair and Rodeo in Bremerton, Wash.

If Hurley's and Bach's winning run continues much longer, some professional team ropers might get a little edgy. They know what the end result could be.

The duo made rodeo history in 1993 when they won the last five rounds of the NFR, snatching each of their last four steers in less than five seconds. Despite finishing seventh in the NFR average (the pair missed a steer in the third round of competition, which dropped them out of contention), Hurley and Bach each earned $41,261 at the rodeo, and Hurley won the 1993 world championship. Bach, who won world titles himself in 1979 and 1990, finished $5,935 behind his partner.

"We have more of a friendship than a partnership," Hurley said. "We get along together well. And we know each other well enough to know we were going to make a run sometime."

The weekend wins helped boost Hurley to seventh in the Crown Royal world team roping heading standings, with $34,342. With $34,254 in his season coffers, Bach also moved up in the heading standings. He's now in eighth place.

Neither of them have "locked up" a berth at the NFR in Las Vegas, the PRCA's world championship event where only the top 15 cowboys in seven rodeo events are allowed to compete. But Hurley feels good about his chances.

"If we go into the Finals and have a good Finals, that's what we want to do," Hurley said. "If a championship comes with it, it's probably one of the best bonuses you can have."

Other winners at the Horse Heaven Round-up Rodeo in Kennewick, Wash., were Clint Corey (Kennewick, Wash.), bareback riding; 81 points on Flying Five Rodeo Co.'s horse Wacky, $2,186; Rod Hay (Wildwood, Alberta), saddle bronc riding, 85 points on Flying Five Rodeo Co.'s horse Northern Exposure, $2,267; Bryan Barker (Nampa, Idaho), bull riding, 86 points on Flying Five Rodeo Co.'s bull Murphy's Law, $2,736; Tony Currin (Heppner, Ore.), calf roping, 19.0 seconds in two rounds, $1,997; Mike Smith (Jerome, Idaho), steer wrestling, 9.7 seconds in two rounds, $2,872; and Charlotte Schmidt (Cut Bank, Mont.), barrel racing, 17.39 seconds, $1,909.

Rules come under close scrutiny as Ripkin closes in on record

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — Considering that Cal Ripken has never broken a bone in his life, chances are he'll make it through the next two nights without any problems.

Even so, what if... Mike Mussina throws the first pitch of Wednesday night's game, California's Tony Phillips lifts a foul pop behind third base and Ripken trips over the special row of box seats the Baltimore Orioles have built for the big event, fracturing his right foot.

Does he still get credit for his 1,313rd straight game and break Lou Gehrig's record?

"Somebody in baseball would have to make a ruling," said Seymour Siwoff of the Elias Sports Bureau, which compiles the official major league statistics.

"It would probably go to the Playing Rules Committee," he said. "The acting commissioner of baseball also would have authority to rule on this."

Here's the rub: Baseball rule 10.24 (c) says a consecutive-game streak can be extended only if a player completes a time at bat or spends a half-inning in the field.

That means because Baltimore is the home team, Ripken has to be on the field for all three outs in the Angels' first inning. As in, a broken ankle, a bruised hand or even a bee sting could end the 13-year string by the Orioles shortstop.

"Well, it's far-fetched that something like that would happen," said Siwoff, a member of a subcommittee that oversees such things. "But if it did, my personal feeling is that the streak would continue."

The rules provide one exception — if a player is ejected before he can meet the requirements, his streak remains intact. Twice during Ripken's streak he has been ejected in the first inning for arguing called strikes, by Tim Welke on Sept. 25, 1987, and by Drew Cobbe on Aug. 7, 1989.

Siwoff, however, said that rule 10.24 (c) is merely a guideline for governing streaks.

"Actually, those rules can change," he said.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig plans to attend Wednesday night, and could rule that Ripken's appearance counts.

Selig may be sitting in the two rows of special boxes built for the game; it's the first time the American League has allowed seats to be added on the field for a regular-season game.

"My decision is a clear reflection on the importance of the event," AL president Gene Budig said.

Siwoff was a member of a committee that met in Colorado Springs, Colo., in 1957 to decide the qualifications for things such as consecutive-game hitting and playing streaks. Among the rules still in place: a pinch-running appearance alone does not extend a playing string.

"We didn't want any chicanery," he said. "We wanted to eliminate a device for an injured player doing something merely to extend a streak. Otherwise, a team could announce a player as a pinch-runner, then pinch run for him."

Coincidentally, Ripken made his major league debut as a pinch-runner on Aug. 10, 1981, the season before his record streak began. He replaced Ken Singleton in the bottom of the 12th inning at Memorial Stadium and scored the winning run against Kansas City on John Lowenstein's single.

Officially, that was his first game in the big leagues. But, according to the rule regarding pinch-runners, his consecutive-game streak — at that point — still stood at zero.

Winalota Cash captures All American Futurity

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — From tragedy to triumph. For jockey Billy Peterson, the trip took a year and 21 seconds.

Peterson, who a year ago lay sprawled in the dirt after his horse, Doo Dominate broke both front legs during the running of the All American Futurity, returned in million-dollar style Monday, winning the 440-yard Grade I sprint aboard Winalota Cash.

The bay 2-year-old gelding ran so flawlessly that Peterson never needed the whip to ride Winalota Cash into quarter horse racing history.

"Shake The Bank beat us out of the gate, but I'd say 50 yards out we were on the lead. From then on, I didn't see another horse," Peterson said.

Peterson, who turns 23 on Thursday and will graduate with a business degree from the University of Texas-El Paso in December, said the memories of last year's disastrous ride didn't surface until after the race.

"When I crossed the finish line, it was like waking up from a dream," he said. "It (last year's race) never entered my mind until after I was pulling this horse up. I kept saying, 'Thank you God. Thank you for giving me another chance.'"

Doo Dominate was humanely destroyed and Peterson walked away unhurt. But it took him months to get over the psychological scars left by the spill in which he narrowly avoided being run over by the injured horse.

Agassi moves into U.S. Open quarterfinals

NEW YORK (AP) — When Andre Agassi has played his best, he will have the confidence that I can win it because I did last year." He just started dictating and had me on my heels a lot and I... just wasn't able to stop the bleeding.

A year ago, Agassi came into the U.S. Open unranked and known more for his flash and hype than his game. This year, he entered the year's final Grand Slam tournament as defending champion and seeded No. 1.

"I have been pretty focused for a year now," Agassi said after defeating Palmer 7-5, 6-3, 6-2 to move into the quarterfinals at the National Tennis Center. "I am not only coming in playing real well, but I win because I have the confidence that I can win it because I did last year."

Monday's victory also makes Agassi the only male player to reach the quarterfinals in all four Grand Slam tournaments this year. He will face rejuvenated Petr Korda, who eliminated Vince Spadea 6-2, 7-5, 6-4 in a battle of unseeded players.

In other men's fourth-round matches Monday, fourth-seeded Boris Becker defeated No. 13 Marc Rosset 7-6 (7-4), 6-3, 6-3 and Patrick McEnroe ousted Daniel Vacek of the Czech Republic 7-6 (10-8), 6-3, 6-4.

The winners will vie in the quarters. In women's singles, No. 2 Monica Seles defeated No. 11 Anke Huber 6-1, 6-4; No. 4 Conchita Martinez stopped Zina Garrison Jackson 7-6 (7-5), 7-5; No. 5 Jana Novotna downed Katarina Studenikova 6-4, 6-3; and, in a mild upset, No. 16 Brenda Schultz-McCarthy defeated No. 7 Kimiko Date 7-5, 3-6, 6-2.

"Last year I went into the Open with not a lot of matches, and this year I'm going in playing a lot over the summer and winning a lot," Agassi said. "So there are two different levels there, you know."

"I have a lot more belief in my game now... I am definitely playing better, but doing what you got to do to win is the key. However well you play, as long as it's a little better than the guy you are playing, that is the most important thing."

Dangerous hurricane closes in on Caribbean

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The most threatening hurricane in a half-century roared into the Caribbean, killing a French tourist and bending palm trees double even before it hit land.

Frightened tourists and islanders crowded airports and overwhelmed air charter companies in attempts to get out of the danger zone. But several eastern airports closed Monday evening.

In Guadeloupe, waves as high as nine feet swept a 29-year-old French tourist from a jetty where he was trying to photograph the sea. He drowned while the edge of the hurricane still was more than 100 miles away.

With gusts up to 160 miles, and a 60-mile-wide eye that is bigger than any of the islands it is approaching, Hurricane Luis threatens even more devastation than Hurricane Hugo in 1989.

The shriek of drills and bangs of hammers rung out from commercial and suburban areas of Puerto Rico as people drilled wooden shutters into metal window frames and merchants tried to protect shop windows with metal sheets.

In San Juan, supermarket shelves emptied as people stocked up on provisions, especially water, candles and flashlights, remembering three weeks of no electricity and no water after Hugo hit.

Jewish settler killed, American wife wounded

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Jewish man was stabbed to death and his pregnant American wife was seriously wounded in a West Bank attack today. The army blamed Palestinian militants opposed to Mideast peacemaking, but police said the couple may have been killed in a bungled burglary.

The attack occurred on the edge of the settlement, which unlike most does not have a fence. Police said the man heard a noise and walked outside to investigate, then was stabbed to death. When his wife followed him outside, she too was attacked.

She was identified as Mara Fry, 28, a new immigrant from Chicago.

Mrs. Fry was in stable condition at Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital after undergoing surgery for multiple stab wounds in the right side and arm, said hospital spokeswoman Kineret Tal. Mrs. Fry is three months pregnant, and Tal said it did not appear the fetus was harmed.

Texas cattle producers oppose return of wolves

FORT WORTH — Texas cattle producers strongly oppose the reintroduction of the Mexican wolf or any other wolf subspecies into the Southwestern United States, according to the 118-year-old Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.

TSCRA represents approximately 15,000 cattle producers who own or control approximately two million head of cattle on millions of acres of land primarily in Texas and Oklahoma.

John Mark McLaughlin, association second vice president and a rancher from San Angelo, submitted written testimony rejecting the federal Fish and Wildlife Service's draft environmental impact statement which recommends the reintroduction or natural colonization of wolves in far West Texas.

"Generations of ranchers have used their muscle, sweat and ingenuity to create a livestock industry in the West to provide food and fiber for the world and a living for their families," McLaughlin said. "Now, our own federal government wants to release predators on these herds of domestic livestock giving value to the land. We can only ask 'Why?'"

McLaughlin said lobo wolves do not recognize artificial boundaries of its historic range and are capable of traveling hundreds of miles.

"The Secretary of Interior wants to spend $7.2 million to release lobo wolves, where they are not needed nor wanted, and yet cuts the funds available to support the Fort Davis National Historic Site, which needs less than one-tenth of this amount for its worthwhile program. Why?" asked McLaughlin.

TSCRA plans to file extensive comments with the agency before its Oct. 31, 1995, deadline.

Survey finds charity execs' salaries tend to grow larger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Working for a non-profit organization is not necessarily unprofitable for the chief executive.

A survey of 184 organizations by The Chronicle of Philanthropy found that 154 of them paid at least one top official more than $100,000 a year and 83 of those compensated at least one top official with more than $200,000.

Of the 167 groups that reported information last year and this year, 120 increased chief executive salaries, according to the survey in the Sept. 7 issue of the biweekly newspaper. Thirty-four reduced compensation and 13 made no changes.

Some of the highest-paid executives are Harold M. Williams, president of the J. Paul Getty Trust, at $610,001; William G. Bowen, president of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, at $455,389; and the U.S. Olympic Committee's Harvey W. Schiller, the executive director, at $429,331.

Dean Wilkerson, executive director of Irving, Texas based Mothers Against Drunk Driving, ranked 18th with a salary of $112,858, the newspaper said.

Among the lowest paid executives, those typically accepting modest or no salaries for their work, are Robert C. Macauley, chief executive of the AmeriCares Foundation, and Ferdinand Mahfood, president of Food for the Poor. Neither takes a salary.

Agriculture briefs

The Texas Animal Health Commission has approved eight Mexican states for export.

The TAHC in August approved the Mexican states of Chihuahua, Coahuila, Durango, Nuevo Leon, San Luis Potosi, Sonora, Tamaulipas and Zacatecas to export cattle to Texas.

These states have met the Phase I requirements of the Mexican TB Eradication Program designed by U.S. and Mexican animal health officials to avoid exportation of TB-infected animals to the U.S. The program requires extensive testing and surveillance of Mexican herds and educational programs for Mexican producers.

Mexican States not meeting these Phase I requirements will not be allowed to export steers or spayed heifers to Texas after Sept. 1, 1995.

One of the nation's largest beef packers denies that there was anything wrong with their marketing arrangement involving some Kansas cattle feeders.

IBP filed its response at the end of August to a USDA complaint that the packer gave undue preference to a small group of Kansas feedyards.

In its response, IBP stated there is nothing inappropriate about the company's marketing arrangement with the Beef Marketing Group. According to IBP's response, the company has the right to make the first bid on a live weight basis for Beef Marketing Group's cattle. The arrangement also included the right to make a separate bid on each pen of cattle rather than having to make a single bid on the entire show list.

"We remain confident the complaint by USDA will be thrown out," said Bruce Bass, IBP vice president-procurement.

The Texas Animal Health Commission approved the voluntary use of "designated" pens in non-quarantined Texas feedyards, officials said.

Effective Oct. 15, the new designation will allow feedyards to receive brucellosis-exposed cattle to be fed for slaughter without requiring quarantine status for the entire feedyard.

Designated pen restrictions include: "S" brands on all cattle, separation from other pens by at least 12 feet with double fences, prohibition of pasturing or grazing and maintenance of detailed records for Commission inspection.

Because of federal regulations, TAHC will no longer allow quarantined feedyards when Texas achieves class-free brucellosis status.

The executive vice president of the Texas Beef Council will retire this fall.

Anne Anderson, executive vice president of the organization, has announced her retirement effective Oct. 1.

Terry Stokes, who has served as TBC vice president of finance and operations, has been named interim executive vice president.

U.S. beef exports to Japan hit a record market share this year, according to the U.S. Meat Export Federation.

The U.S. share of the Japanese beef import market climbed to 46 percent in the April-June period, up from 42 percent in 1994, matching Australia for the first time in history. Australia's share of the beef import market dropped from 53 percent in 1994 to 46 percent for the April-June period this year.

From January through June of this year, U.S. beef exports to Japan were up 12 percent over the first six months of 1994, hitting 150,338 metric tons, while beef variety meats were up 28 percent at 61,879 metric tons.

There's a big difference between the top and bottom cattle in today's herds, according to Texas Agricultural Extension specialists.

Using data from the 1994-95 Ranch to Rail program, Dr. John McNeill with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service said the top 10 percent of the cattle performed better, with a 3.55 average daily gain, compared with 2.62 for the bottom 10 percent.

The top 10 percent were also more profitable, with a total cost of gain of $45.84, compared with $60.68 for the bottom 10 percent, and an average net return per head of $165.74 for the top calves, compared with a loss per head of $34.45 for the bottom calves.

Man has court date for allegedly waving one finger

DALLAS (AP) — A man who says he was simply waving at a road grader operator in Hillsboro has been fingered for using an obscene gesture.

Steve Clendening says he was passing a road grader on a country road when he waved at the driver, Melvin Hestand.

Hestand says Clendening waved all right, but used only his index finger to do so. Hestand was so upset that he's filed a disorderly conduct complaint against Clendening with the Hill County Sheriff's Department.

The sheriff's officer who charged Clendening says he was just doing his job.

"I'd have to search through my records to find a case like this," said Lt. William C. Kelly, who's been in law enforcement for 18 years. "But if you violate the law, you violate the law."

Clendening now faces a Sept. 14 trial on the misdemeanor charge, which carries a possible $500 fine.

"I couldn't believe it," said Clendening, a Hill County farmer, of the May incident.
