Tejano music queen. Craig's Record Factory in Corpus Christi, Selena's hometown, opened one minute after

Realtors voice protests against taxation of cars

By CHIP CHANDLER Staff Writer

Seven local Realtors gave their testimonies regarding the taxation of their personal vehicles in separate hearings this morning in a tense session for the Gray County Appraisal District Review Board

Bob Keagy (representing wife Marilyn "Mike" Keagy), Henry Gruben, Jim Davidson, Ray Duncan, Judi Edwards, Rebecca Baten and Sue Baker complained that they and other Realtors were unfairly being singled out for taxation on their cars.

The controversy began in the spring of 1994 when Chief Appraiser Pat Bagley notified real estate agents and brokers their personal vehicles were being added to the city and school tax rolls because they are being used in the production of income.

At today's meeting, the Realtors present said that they were not the only business people in town that used their personal vehicles for the production of income, and until all such vehicles are added to the tax rolls, they should not be taxed.

Bob Keagy argued that he knew of a number of other board disagreed, saying that driworkers in town - including ving in that manner should be home health service workers, makeup salespeople, people who run lawn care services and others - who were not taxed.

Keagy asked the board for a continuance until Bagley could find all others who should be taxed. He further asked that his wife's vehicle be taken off the tax rolls "until such time as it is taxed equally and uniformly."

Keagy said he felt that Realtors were being "singled

Bagley responded, saying that it was not done "intentionally" and that his office "identifies as many as we can" that should be on the tax rolls.

Keagy, referring to a list of business personal property accounts, said, "I wonder how many lawn mowers or [home health care employees] are listed. I dare say none. Those are people who go out every day [in their personal vehicle and they do not pay tax."

Keagy's request for a continuance was denied, but Bagley agreed to further study businesses in town to see if personal vehicles were being used for production of income.

Later in the session, Edwards asked Bagley, "Do you feel like Bagley said that his office had "made a diligent effort" and that he felt like the list reflected "all we're aware of.'

The other Realtors claimed that exemptions granted by the review board last year should apply to them as well.

The Appraisal Review Board, which routinely considers issues of property value, decided in September 1994 to ask the tax protesters at that time to sign an affidavit telling the appraisal district whether they earned money in real estate as independent contractors in 1993; whether the specific vehicle was driven more than three or four times in the production of income; and whether their employer requires them to use personal property in performance of work duties.

Testimony in a hearing is considered as valid as an affidavit.

Also considered for a possible removal from the tax rolls is whether or not the vehicle is solely driven to and from the

The Realtors argued that when they drive out to show a house, that is driving to the office. The considered driving for production of income.

Gruben said that he did not own the vehicle he was being taxed on and that the last real estate sale he made was in February 1993. The vehicle he said was still on the tax rolls was sold in August 1994. The board agreed to remove that vehicle from their rolls.

All of the other requests for removal from the tax rolls were denied by the board, who said they were just following the law.

Board member Jack Reeve admitted that he agreed with the statements of the Realtors, that "it needs to be fair and equal. I think these individuals [referring to others who use personal vehicles for production of income] should be on tax rolls. The problem is identifying

The sessions was expected to continue today with hearings not related to the real estate controversy.

The Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors will meet Wednesday night in executive session to discuss charges filed by Edwards and Mike Keagy against Bagley regarding the controversy.

Chicago casualties soar as heat wave continues number of heat wave victims is overwhelming the resources of the county morgue and city funeral homes.

The city's death toll stood at 179 today, with more than 100 bodies at the morgue and 350 in funeral homes still to be examined.

Cook County Medical Examiner Edmund Donoghue estimated 65 percent of the latest deaths would eventually be classified as heat-related, partly because heat needs only to be a contributing factor, not a direct cause of death, under the county's guidelines.

"The bodies just keep coming," Christopher Morris, a spokesman for the medical examiner, said late Monday. "The line of police wagons bringing them in is over a block long." The weeklong heat wave has been blamed for at least 413 deaths nationwide, including that of a 2-year-old girl in the heat caused 33 deaths and contributed to more than 40 others. Outside Chicago, the rest of Illinois had 35 deaths blamed on the heat.

The heat loosened its grip across the eastern half of the nation on Monday, with temperatures cooling to the 80s and 90s. Elsewhere, however, a new pocket of hot air pushed into the Northwest, giving parts of Oregon temperatures as high as 102 on Monday.

The heat wave peaked in Chicago on Thursday, when the high at Midway Airport reached a record 106. Chicago's high temperature on Monday was 87; forecasters predicted more seasonable temperatures would prevail before higher temperatures returned for the weekend.

Playing ball

Taking advantage of summer vacation from school, Sergio Augustin Mena, 4, was kicking around with a ball outside his house on Foster Street this morning with his siblings in between rain showers falling over Pampa today. One brief shower greeted many people on their way to work this morning, with a heavier shower falling shortly before noon.

Perryton schedules its Fun Day '95

PERRYTON - Shake off your new at the adjacent ball fields. summer blues and "nothing to do's" at Fun Day '95, planned for Saturday, July 22, at Leatherman Park in Perryton.

Sponsored by Serendipity Federated Women's Club, the day-long event features around 20 organizations hosting over 30 food and game booths from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. at the park.

Leatherman Park is located off Highway 15, on Jefferson Street, next to the Expo Center and county ball parks.

Most games are inexpensive to play, and children receive prizes if they win. Fun Day is designed for people to spend as much or as little money as they wish, and have a good, old fashioned "fun day" in the park, organizers say.

All types of entertainment will also be scheduled throughout the day, ranging from singers to dancers and cheerleaders. Emcee for the day will be Jerry Williams from KEYE Radio in Perryton.

A tent, courtesy of Boxwell Brothers, will be set up by the entertainment for people to rest in the shade.

In conjunction with the food, games and entertainment, Serendipity will also host a volleyball tournament at the park, and a "duck soup" baseball tour-

In a duck soup tourney, teams play innings according to the whim of the organizers. For example, one inning the teams may have to run the bases backwards, another time they may get four outs or run around home plate several times with their forehead on the bat before taking

Researchers say they've found James' grave

KEARNEY, Mo. (AP) -Researchers seeking the remains of the outlaw Jesse James said they found fragments of a skull bone today that convince them they are exhuming the right grave.

Casket handles found in the plot turned out to be solid silver, providing more evidence that the grave is that of James, or at least that of the man buried under James' name more than a century ago.

"There's nothing to discount it and everything to support it," said James E. Starrs, project leader.

Starrs, a professor of forensic science and law at George Washington University, said the bones are really his.

skull fragments appear to be in good enough condition to provide DNA samples that can be compared with DNA of James' living descendants.

The exhumation is aimed at settling numerous questions about James, chiefly whether the

Corrections

In Saturday's listing of the Top O' Texas Rodeo Parade winners, the second place winner in the Most Attractive Commercial Entry was incorrectly listed. The entry was actually by Coronado Healthcare Center.

All taxing entities must request a reappraisal of property in the county, not just Gray County, as incorrectly reported in a story Monday on the Gray County Appraisal District's Review Board hearing of filed protests. After appraisals are made, any request for a reappraisal of property after Jan. 1 must be approved by all taxing entities in the appraisal district - city, county and school districts, for example.

AÚSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush has named San Antonio businesswoman Judy Walsh to the three member Public Utility Commission, garnering a majority of appointees on the panel that regulates telephone and electric rates.

Ms. Walsh was appointed by the Republican governor Monday to succeed Sarah Goodfriend, who had been a holdover appointment of Democratic former Gov. Ann Richards.

Ms. Goodfriend lost her seat because the Senate failed to vote on confirming her nomination before the 1995 legislative session ended. A move to force a vote in February was blocked by Republicans.

"Judy Walsh has the experience, judgment and financial expertise to help lead the PUC during this time of great change," Bush said, citing the 1995 Legislature's "sweeping reforms to our electric and telecommunications laws to increase competition and customer service."

Ms. Walsh, who has a finance and tax consulting business, formerly was with the accounting firm of Deloitte & Touche. She became the first woman partner of the firm in 1974.

Bloodhound helps rule out suicide in death

FULSHEAR (AP) — When a Houston police lieutenant was found dead in a creek, it wasn't long before Columbo was summoned.

The crafty bloodhound's discovery of mysterious footprints kept Lt. Alan Mabry's May 4 death from being written off as a suicide.

The tracks on the banks of Jones Creek played a key role in convincing a jury panel that the cause of death was murder.

Jurors in a special inquest heard testimony that Columbo named after the bumbling but brilliant television detective who always solves his cases – took Mabry's scent and headed south, stopping about 1,100 feet downstream from his abandoned car.

Columbo didn't crack the case; there's still no suspect. But his path pointing out Mabry's trail did lead the jury to conclude that physical evidence nixed the suicide theory.

Fiscal wellness seems impossible

A petulant last ditch effort by liberal Democrats in the Senate, stalling a bill that had some real spending cuts in it, raises the suspicion (yet again) that some liberals just hate to cut government spending any time, under any circumstances. That will hardly help their image in what seems to be a changing political envitonment.

Like so many creations of the political process, the spending rescissions bill that passed the House and was stalled in Senate was a little deformed and a little monstrous. But it was an important step toward fiscal discipline that had already won White House backing.

When House Republicans, earlier this spring, voted to trim $16.5 billion from the current (fiscal year 1995) federal budget, it was virtually the first time in modern memory that real spending cuts (as opposed to cuts in future projected spending increases) had been passed. While $16.5 billion in a $1.6 trillion federal budget wasn't much, the bill was an important symbol of seriousness.

Last month, President Clinton used the first veto of his presidency on the bill, saying he favored some spending cuts but had different priorities. House Republicans took him at his word and came back with a rescission bill that preserved some of the president's favorite hobby horses - his precious Americorps, some dubious training programs, and the like - and cut elsewhere. After the House passed it, the administration announced that President Clinton was prepared to sign it.

But Sens. Paul Wellstone of Minnesota and Carol Moseley-Braun of Illinois both Democrats and possibly the most leftist members of the Senate objected to some cuts from a low income home heating subsidy program and some cuts from job training programs. Considering the fact that literally dozens of assistance and training programs are in place and that the total budget is $1.6 trillion, these seemed trivial to most. But the two senators threatened to hold up passage by offering amendment after amendment, so Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole took the measure off the calendar.

The message seems to be that no program, however trivial, is anything other than sacrosanct, and no spending cut is not worthy of sustained opposition.

As they spent time at home during the Independence Day holiday recess, senate Democrats should have pondered whether that is really the image they wish to convey.

Are these women really happy?

There's a scene in The Handmaid's Tale that I will never forget. In Margaret Atwood's science fiction novel, the United States has been taken over by a puritanical government, which requires all women to cover their hair and wear long, nun like robes that conceal their sexuality. One day a Japanese tour group visits this new republic. The Japanese women wear Western style dress - kneelength skirts, high heels, lipstick, nail polish - and as they look curiously at the former Americans, they ask their interpreter if these medieval looking women are happy. "Yes," one of the women lies, "We are very happy."

I think of that scene when I see fundamentalist Islamic women on television. Shrouded in black, showing only the oval of flesh around their eyes, one would guess that these women had grown up wearing this cumbersome garb, that sack like cloaks and long black veils were all they had ever known. How else could they stand it?

But actually many Muslim women grew up in Western dress. In Iran, for example, fundamentalist clothing, called hijab, was outlawed in the 1930s. After the Islamic revolution in the late 1970s, the opposite law came into effect, and now women who flout the Islamic dress code can be sentenced to 80 lashes.

At a time when hate and xenophobia seem to be mounting, it is tempting to shrug off the human rights abuses of women in other nations. They are the products of different cultures, cultures we should not be so arrogant as to criticize. Besides, it's their fight, not ours. If they don't have a problem with it, why should we?

But of course, that's the question: Do they have problem, or are they really very happy?

Does the Muslim woman really embrace the Islamic laws that say her husband may legally beat her, or forbid her from leaving the house, or divorce her by saying "I divorce you" three times, which automatically dissolves all of her custodial ties to her children?

Does she agree with faws that forbid her from traveling without written permission from a male relative, or from checking into a hotel room by herself?

Does she mind that one in five Muslim girls lives in a community that sanctions the genital mutilation of girls or that girls as young as 9 can be married off to middle aged strangers?

To help unravel these mysteries, Geraldine Brooks, a former Middle East correspondent for the Wall Street Journal, started talking to Islamic women. She details her findings in a recently provides Western readers with a thoughtful and balanced look at the world of Islamic women. She reports, for example, that many non-Iranian Islamic women wear hijab voluntarily. They say the heavy garb makes them feel safer, and therefore freer. And for many women, hijab is a way to reject Western culture and embrace their own. "Why imitate everything Western? Why not try something of our own?" said Sahar, an Egyptian translator who converted to Muslim fundamentalism.

But Brooks also met many women who are trying to fight the oppressive laws of Islam. There are the Eritrean doctors who teach women to read the Koran so that they can see that it never advocates clitoridectomies. There are the Saudi Arabian professionals who drove down the streets of downtown Riyadh, protesting the country's ban on women drivers. There are the Palestinian feminists denouncing the age old practice of "honor killing" after a man restored his so called "honor" by murdering his pregnant, unwed teenage daughter. Unfortunately, in lands where women have few, if any, civil rights, such voices are easily squelched. The Saudi Arabian protesters, for example, were suspended from their jobs and had their passports confiscated. They now refuse all interviews with the press, since authorities have warned them that any contact with the foreign media would lead to rearrest.

Obviously, some Muslim women accept their lot as second class citizens, just as many Western women did for centuries. But I can't help but think of the woman who cannot read, cannot write, cannot even leave her home. Is she really released book, Nine Parts of Desire (Anchor). Brooks very happy? And if she isn't, how would we ever

Fundamental rules of a free society

Pete King, Charlie Rangel and Charlie Schumer, all representatives from New York, are hot to trot to hold hearings on militias. Rep. King, a Republican, calls them "dangerous wackos."

Questions, gentlemen:

bers of a militia?

How many unarmed women have been shot by members of a militia? How many people have the militia sent to prison?

How many homes and businesses have been confiscated by the militia?

All of the above have been done, not by paramilitary federal agents. I personally do not know of any law, nor have I heard of any law, that these various militias have broken. Bear in mind that despite the deliberate and persistent spread of the charge that they are some how connected to the Oklahoma City bombing, these militias are not. There is no evidence whatsoever to support that claim. If they break a law, arrest them; otherwise, leave their own as a hostile act to be punished.

It used to be, and still ought to be, the fundamental rule of a free society that if someone is not actively depriving another of his life, property or rights, then leave that person the hell alone. Mind your own business.

But what the members of the militia do is no different, from a legal standpoint, from other men spending their weekends on the golf course or hunting for antiques with their wives. I choose not to do those things either.

Apparently, however, some American socialists and/or fascists, who falsely call themselves liberals, view all thinking that does not conform to

We should not be surprised. Wherever such people have gained total power, they have made thinking a crime punishable by death or imprisonment. And why subject it (opinion) to coercion? To produce uniformity. But is uniformity of opinion desirable? No more so than of face and stature."

These reptilian creatures slithering among us trying to convince us that thought or speech or belief should by made a crime deserve no sympathy, no quarter, not even civility. They are the slime out of which grows the disease of tyranny.

The only line in the sand traditional American government draws is to say to people, Don't injure others. Otherwise go your own way and pursue your own happiness unmolested. Think what you please.

Who appointed King, Rangel and Schumer to decide what thoughts and beliefs Americans may have? What are they proposing? To set up a House Committee on Unliberal Activities? Shall we have an attorney general's "List of Unliberal Organizations"? The only salute this trio of aspiring thought cops deserve is the one made with the

Sculpting a Cuban monument to liberty

My fellow scribe William Raspberry posed a question last April that has been pinging around my cranium ever since. "Why doesn't the United States get off Cuba's back?" he wrote. And then my widely respected colleague answered his query with two conjectures: "Cubans in Florida and sheer vengeance."

In other words, American politicians lack the courage to challenge the large and vocal Cuban-American community; and the United States generally hates the idea that Cuban strong man Fidel Castro has successfully thumbed his nose at us for

We seem possessed, Raspberry wrote, of an "institutional rage that Castro has withstood an international missile confrontation, the Bay of Pigs, any number of unsuccessful CIA plots against him and the demise of international communism - and still sits there as a rebuke to our

Is it true? My own observations:

1) Fidel Castro is a low down dictator and a liar to boot. From the birth of his revolution in 1953 untile he ousted Fulgencio Batista in 1959, he wooed fair minded people around the world with the promise that when he took power he would restore the 1940 constitution, which provided for free elections and universal suffrage. Instead, he erected a totalitarian state, sold his soul to the Soviet Union, murdered his enemies and impris-

2) Above all things, the United States stands for freedom and democracy. We fought major wars in Europe and Asia in defense of these principles. We invaded Grenada, Panama and Haiti in defense of them. Why should we not be seeking ways to establish them in Cuba, 90 miles off the Florida shore?

3) Bill Raspberry is right about the vengeance thing. A lot of ill feeling toward Fidel Castro, including much of my own, is stimulated by a desire for revenge. The difference is, I call it "justice," and I see nothing wrong with it.

It is a fact that Castro is but a flea in a world of mastiffs, but he is a brutal, persistent and treacherous flea, and I for one would still like to see him squashed before he goes to his final reward. We have tried everything through the years, from assassination to embargoes to invasion, and nothing has worked. With the nation now in the hands of Republicans, now would be the perfect time to try a little free enterprise.

Why not convert the 42-square-mile U.S. Naval base at Guantanamo into a city dedicated to free market practices? Why not build a Singapore or a Hong Kong there? I have no doubt it would be a success - the entrepreneurial genius of the Cuban people would guarantee that - and it would drive Castro crazy.

I wish I could say this brilliant idea was my own, but I cannot. Cuban intellectuals have been tossing it around for a while, and a former mayor of Miami, attorney Xavier Suarez, has touted it on the pages of USA Today and other newspapers.

Let Cuban-Americans "build a city at Guantanamo," he wrote in September 1994. "Let the exile community in Miami, with its economic power and organizational skills, provide the bricks and mortar. Let the Cubans and Cuban-Americans prove that they can sculpt a monument to liberty under Castro's very nose.

It would take some "creativity on our part," Suarez told me, because Castro doesn't recognize our right to be at Guantanamo in the first place, and the treaty which established the base limits its use. But it could be done, he believes, and "the exile community would invest enough to build" it.

It is without question a romantic notion, but so was the idea of putting human beings on the moon. I want to see the Cuban people breathe free. I want to see Fidel Castro broken and humiliated. I want revenge. I say, go for it.

RICHARD SCHUH,

Etiquette Experts Offer Tips On Eating Asparagus Properly

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a question that's been bothering several members of our club: What is the proper way to eat asparagus?

I believe I remember reading in Emily Post's book of etiquette that it's proper to eat asparagus with your fingers, but never let the juice drip off your elbows.

Some members say that couldn't possibly be right.

Lalso recall that President Kennedy told Jackie that it was all right to eat asparagus that way, which she did.

Am I right or wrong? There is money riding on your answer. STEADY READER, FREDERICK, MD.

DEAR READER: You are right. I checked Emily Post's book of etiquette, and much to my surprise, she said it is proper to pick up asparagus with one's fingers.

Letitia Baldrige concurs. She says asparagus may be eaten in one of two ways, depending upon how long it's been cooked and how much is buried in the sauce: either with the fingers, or with a knife and fork.

Miss Manners also lists foods that may be eaten with the fin-— and asparagus is on the HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers have agreed to contract terms with their second round draft pick -South Carolina State's Anthony Cook — but general manager Floyd Reese's attention is on negotiations with No. 1 pick Steve McNair.

The Oilers appeared to be closing in on agreeing with McNair until the Carolina Panthers signed Kerry Collins over the weekend to a seven-year, $21.6 million con-

"It certainly had an effect on what we're trying to do," Reese said.

Players will report to the team's training site at San Antonio's Trinity University on Friday and begin preseason drills on Saturday.

By MARK BABINECK Associated Press Writer

IRVING (AP) — Talk of resurrecting the Dallas Cowboys' recent glory was already floating freely in the hot Texas air just a few hours into the unofficial first day of training camp.

"It truly doesn't feel like a season if you're not in the Super Bowl," said receiver Michael Irvin, participating Monday in the first day of the team's "Quarterback School."

It might be July, but talk about wresting the Lombardi Trophy away from the San Francisco 49ers was rampant as players spoke of recommitting themselves, physically and mentally, to a third world championship in four seasons.

"We've got the talent — all we've got to do is get it together," said linebacker Robert Jones. "We want it. All we have to do is go and get it."

The only aberration to an otherwise serious day of football occurred in the morning when a woman ran out onto the practice field and tried to approach quarterback Troy Aikman. Irving minds. police arrested the woman, whose name was not released, and charged her with trespass-play in the Super Bowl left a sour taste in our mouths.

"It's something that's on our minds. I think a lot of players worked very hard in the off-season to get their bodies in shape and get prepared to go through a long season."

Not taking part in the drills was the team's top draft pick, running back Sherman Williams. Coach Barry Switzer said that he's counting on Williams to be No. 2 on the depth chart behind Smith. But the holdout, due in part to the NFL's salary cap, puts all such plans on hold.

Smith, who has been a contract holdout himself, said he supports Williams.

"Sherman needs to do what's best for Sherman Williams," Smith said. "He needs to stay in top shape and he needs to stay in touch with someone down at training camp and talk about plays. I think that by being in some of the mini camps, he's had the opportunity to learn the basics.

During the midday break, the morning interruption also weighed on some of the players'

"It caught me by surprise," said Troy Aikman, who like his teammates was running a series of 110-yard sprints. "We all (players) run across different kinds of people. They might be running a series of 110-yard harmless, but you try to take it seriously.'
