THE WORK WEEK AND TARIFFS

Proposals to shorten the working week of industry must be considered along with the tariff.

Back of the whole question of shorter hours, higher wages and unemployment relief stands the question of markets.

Trade and industry can't expand without markets that will absorb the goods that are being made. Under present conditions, the market available to American producers is not capable of taking all that they have to sell.

The chief point of the NRA is that it is basically an effort to expand this market.

How is that to be done? By increasing consumer purchasing power. And how is that to be done? By spreading employment, through a shortening of the work week, which will make it necessary to hire more men.

Suppose, now, that we find it impossible to do this. Suppose that industry is unable to stand the strain of such a step. What is the alternative—aside, of course, from continuing the enormously expensive work relief program?

The alternative, obviously, would seem to be to expand the other market—the foreign one; to increase our exports, in other words.

This can be done in two ways. We can finance the purchase of our exports by making loans to our foreign customers, as we did prior to 1929. For a time this will work beautifully.

To be sure, in the end we shan't get our money back; and a nation which has had its fingers as thoroughly burned by foreign loans as this nation has isn't apt to welcome such a step very heartily.

The other way, of course, is to buy from the people who buy from us; to increase our imports as well as our exports—to lower our tariff, in plain English.

Do we want to do this? Perhaps not. But if we don't, we must realize the great importance of putting through our program for expanding the domestic market.

One market or the other must be broadened. The high tariff man would seem, logically, to be the strongest booster for the shorter working week.

Life of Gridiron Players in Great Britain Is Hard

BY GAYLE TALBOT, Associated Press Sports Writer.

LONDON (AP)—The baseball hero who balks at signing a contract for $6,000 per annum should be given a course of treatment, as a professional footballer in England. He would realize, once the effects had worn off, that he is doing pretty well for himself in a financial way.

Nobody knows how many professional footballers there are in this country. Thousands, anyway, and they work at it for eight months of the year. At least one match every week, maybe two. And the maximum salary they may receive is approximately $40 a week.

The ambitious footballer (it's really soccer, you understand) starts as the member of some amateur team of which there are about four to the acre. After several years, if his team is good, it may be admitted to one of the many professional leagues. Then, if his outfit continues to succeed, it might in time work its way up into the third division, which corresponds roughly to class A baseball. If it is a real hot shot of a team, it will wind up eventually in the "first division," the big league of soccer.

There's where the player lands in the big money. Providing he proves himself a super star, he can be sure of his $40 every Saturday. In addition, he will be shipped an extra $10 every time his team wins a game, $5 when it ties one.

It's not a part-time job, either. Every day any club isn't practicing, or spend the time travelling to the site of the next encounter. During the four-month off-season they remain on the payroll at a reduced salary, perhaps $20 a week. That, it is presumed, is by way of keeping their minds on the game, devising some subtle strategy for the next campaign.

THE GOVERNOR'S SHIRT

HELENA, Mont.—A former salesman who became CWA purchasing agent for Panola county, Texas, has written Gov. Frank H. Cooney a "testimonial." "It seems I can trace it all back to you, and thanks," said the letter from Edwin H. Boren. He was talking of his business success, which he said started after he sold the governor a shirt. He said the fact that he gained entrance to the executive mansion, and then sold a shirt to the governor attracted attention to him, and his rise was rapid.

Junior Duenkel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Duenkel, is doing nicely following a serious illness. Jack Mead of Miami transacted business here this morning.

Kokernot Ranch Brand Is Oldest In West Texas

FORT DAVIS, March 19 (AP)—L. Kokernot believes the brand of his "08" ranch, one of the few big ranches left in the Trans-Pecos country, is the oldest brand in that section of West Texas.

The Brand, he said, was registered at Indianola, on the coast, in 1838, and has been in continuous use since. His grandfather bought it from a man named Jones. Four generations of Kokernots have used the brand.

The first cattle brand registered in Jeff Davis county was by V. M. Ward July 2, 1887. It was a crooked "H" and is now used by W. W. McCutchen, who bought it and registered it in his name July 16, 1914.

The West Texas historical society has been collecting a brand display for its museum in Sul Ross college at Alpine.

A. G. Prude of Fort Davis recently turned over to Barry Scobee for the museum one of the famous old brands—the "Spectacle G" brand that was registered by George McGuire in 1887, the year Jeff Davis became a county.

Mr. Prude and other old-timers say there were earlier brands registered here, but they do not show in the Jeff Davis brand book because all the books were moved to the county seat at Mafa while this county was still a part of Presidio.

GOOD (?) NEWS FOR KIDDIES

GREEKS REPORT THAT INSULL IS AT MERCY OF KIDNAP GANG

NO MESSAGES ARE RECEIVED FROM VESSEL

POLICE DENY 'SNATCH' RUMOR; ATTORNEY IS SILENT

ATHENS, March 19. (AP)—A rumor that Samuel Insull is at the mercy of kidnapers who slipped aboard his little Greek freighter in Piraeus harbor aroused excitement in Athens today.

It was said that gangsters intended to kidnap the 74-year-old runaway from American justice and hold the former Chicagoan for ransom in Cretan caves or on islands nearby.

Commenting on this latest and wildest of all the sensational stories which accompanied Insull's most recent escape on the sluggish vessel Malotis, police denied that any kidnapers could have boarded the ship while it was in the Athens port.

Nevertheless, the gangster story was widely "played" in the Greek press.

Aside from this, there seemed no foundation for the rumor other than the Piraeus harbor master's announcement that he had received no messages from the ship in which Insull is bound for some unknown asylum since 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

The Associated Press attempted to check the reports, but received no reply to wireless queries sent direct to Insull aboard the Malotis.

Until she passed out of Greek territorial waters, the vessel chartered by Insull was ordered to communicate regularly with the port of Piraeus. Early today, officials announced the Malotis had reported she was clearing these waters and would no longer be heard from.

No newspapermen are known to have boarded the Malotis at Piraeus, but nevertheless two Greek newspapers printed what they claimed was an exclusive interview with Insull.

"If I return to America they would kill me. It is the well-known mania with which the American government has pursued me. I have many friends in America and also many enemies," Insull was quoted as saying.

It was believed he was bound for Abyssinia and that he would find refuge there from the indictments returned against him in Cook county, Illinois, when his public utilities empire crumbled about his own and hundreds of thousands of stockholders' heads.

An Athens lawyer who has represented Insull denied that Abyssinia was the goal, but he would not suggest any alternative. His reticence was attributed to fears that a kidnap plot was being laid to snatch Insull from his slow-moving ship on the high seas.

MAJOR COMPANIES IN BIG CAMPAIGN FOR NEW PRODUCTION

BY G. A. PHILLIPS, Associated Press Financial Writer.

NEW YORK, March 19. (AP)—An intensive campaign to enlarge their holdings of productive oil lands and begin "wildcat" drilling operations on a big scale has recently been undertaken by the major producing companies.

This search for more oil where already there appears to be plenty, is explained by persons closely connected with the industry as a necessity arising out of the fact that no new oil pools have been discovered in the last few years and to the expected increase in consumption of all types of oil as a result of the improvement in general business conditions.

The scale on which some of the larger companies have been buying up producing properties is indicated by the number of deals recently put through or pending, of which the sale of Slick-Urschel properties in the Oklahoma City field to the Carter Oil company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, is an outstanding example.

Magnolia Petroleum corporation, subsidiary of the Socony-Vacuum corporation, is reported to be dickering for large properties in East Texas, and the recently released report of the Humble Oil and Refining company, shows expenditures of $10,000,000 on new oil lands in 1933.

In addition to expenditures for known oil lands involving many millions of dollars, the petroleum companies are expected to turn loose several millions more in their search for new oil pools by drilling "wildcat" wells in areas which show signs of oil deposits.

In preparation for that campaign it is said that more geophysical exploratory work has been done by oil engineers in the last few months than at any time in previous history. The scope of that work has been almost as wide as the continent itself, extending from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico and from eastern oil fields to California.

A further motive for acquiring oil lands already known to contain deposits is believed to be found in the desire of the well-organized companies to dry up those wells that produce illegally under the oil code.

This oil finds its way to the market in various ways and serves to disrupt well-planned programs of the oil code authority, and frequently upsets price schedules.

Substantially all of the larger oil companies have converted deficits into balances within the last year and some of them have resumed dividend payments to stockholders after a lapse of several years.

When Water's Low, So Is Venice

If you think the canals of Venice are scenes of romantic beauty, enhanced by soft gliding gondolas and silver-voiced gondoliers, this picture may be something of a shock, as the drought was to the Venetians. Due to unusually low tides, some canals have gone almost dry, leaving many boats grounded and complicating transportation.

Wildcat Will Be Drilled 16 Miles East of Memphis

MEMPHIS, March 19. (AP)—A major oil company is ready to drill a test well on the Smith ranch, 16 miles east of Memphis on a block of leases comprising about 25,000 acres.

A steel derrick, 130 feet high, and a new rotary rig have been set up. Those in charge of the work said the well would be drilled to a depth

TALKS TO PARENTS

THE WALL-FLOWER

By Brooke Peters Church.

"Did you enjoy the party, Sally?" "NO" was the answer, and the child flung herself down on the bed and cried as if her heart would break.

Mrs. Smith was distressed and puzzled. Sally was 14 and was beginning to be asked to informal dances here and there. Every time there was the same scene when she came home, and another when she started out for the next dance. She danced well, was attractive and well dressed but for some reason which her mother could not fathom she was not popular.

The age of no chaperons has put at a disadvantage the girl who is shy and will not put herself forward or use cheap means to attract partners. An older person, sensing the situation, would have seen to it that Sally had partners, and have helped the child to overcome her diffidence.

Girls will not do this for each other. Each girl is out for herself, naturally enough, and the young hostess quite as much as her guests. The obligation to see that everyone is dancing or at least talking to someone is not put upon the shoulders of the young people, and too often the elders have retired so as not to spoil the fun or because they do not wish to be bored.

The results are what one might expect. The quiet girls, no matter how great their charm or worth, are shoved into the background by the noisier and more daring, and the boys are kept dancing attendance on the struts who lure them on.

It is useless to ask children to be experienced in social usages. Unless the parents teach them the obligations of society they will, of course, take the easiest and most natural means to have a good time.
