ROUNDING THE BUCKET in the Girls Potato Race, Group V, in the closing performance of the Top O' Texas Kid Pony Show Wednesday is veteran rider Sissy Gideon of Skellytown and her horse Mr. Johnny Dial. Sissy missed the bucket with the ball and received no time for her run. First place in the contest was won by local rider Lorrie Enoch with a time of 16.65 seconds. Sissy went on to win the pole bending race.

Texas, NM considered for MX missile sites

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Pentagon officials say they would prefer not to bring MX missiles to the high plains of Texas and New Mexico, but the region is still being considered as a site for the nuclear weapons system.

"Our preference (for the site) is still Nevada-Utah," said Air Force Major Gen. Forrest McCartney. "But if there has to be a second site, this is it."

McCartney met Wednesday with about 250 citizens to explain details of the system and its implications for the Texas South Plains and eastern New Mexico.

A Senate bill approved last Thursday requires the Defense Department to place no more than half of the 4,600 launching pads for the 200 missiles in Nevada or Utah.

Under a recent proposal, about 45 of the planned missile bases would be installed at the Texas-New Mexico site covering about 1,575 square miles, or more than one million acres.

However, McCartney said he opposes splitting the bases because locating the whole system in one area is more cost-efficient.

"But if there is base-splitting, it will come to this," he said.

"Our preference at this time is still Nevada-Utah," he stressed, adding that locating the whole system in one area is more cost-efficient. "But, if there is split-basing, it will come to this," he said.

"Very few people know anything about the MX missile," said U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, D-Texas, who along with U.S. Rep. Harold Runnels, D-N.M., called the meeting.

The "informational" meeting came one day after Texas Gov. Bill Clements and New Mexico Gov. Bruce King met with Defense Department officials in Santa Fe, N.M. Both governors expressed support for the missile system, but opposed locating bases in Texas or New Mexico.

The area being considered by the Pentagon is ringed by Dalhart, Amarillo and Lubbock in Texas and Alamogordo, Roswell and Clovis in New Mexico.

McCartney said residents should be concerned about the possible locations of bases in the area, but he said the plan would not completely disrupt activity in the area.

Hance noted that previous reports stated that as many as 25,000 people would be displaced by construction of missile bases.

McCartney said, "It would certainly be considerably less than 25,000. Although impact studies on this area have not been completed, estimates indicate that 3,000 to 4,000 would be forced to move."

The Air Force currently is drafting an environmental impact statement on the area, to be completed later this month. Public hearings are scheduled for late summer and early fall.

The Air Force said it hopes to begin construction on the bases by 1982.

Dust settles on Kid Pony Show

As pro rodeo cowboys arrive in Pampa for the opening night of the Top O' Texas Rodeo, the dust settled on the final performance of the 1980 Kid Pony Show after three hours of action Wednesday night at Recreation Park arena.

Cowboys and cowgirls from age 12 through 15 competed in nine events for silver trophy buckles awarded to the first three places in each event. Representatives from across the Panhandle and Oklahoma proved crowd pleasers and those attending picked up on the intensity of the competition and cheered favorites on.

Show directors and chairman were commended on the conduct of the events this year as rodeo announcer Jerry Fulton stressed the hours of volunteer work performed by those in charge.

The Lefors Volunteer Fire Department EMT's were on the scene for each performance to render aid in the event of injury. The show closed this year with a minimum of injuries sustained in the arena by contestants.

An Oklahoma cowboy took the first place silver buckle out of state when he clocked a 11.26 run in the Boys Potato Race - Group V. Chad Kile turned in the winning run on his visit here from his home in Beaver. A local cowboy, James Smith ran the course in 19.78 seconds and Scott Howard of Mobeetie stayed in the running with a 19.98.

Ronald Maul was in charge of the event which was also entered by Randy Martin of Wheeler, Billy Billingsley of McLean, and Shawn Johnson of Pampa.

In the Girls Potato Race - Group V, a local rider, Lorrie Enoch, cashed in on first place with a 16.65 run. Second with a time of 19.29 seconds, was another Pampian Amy Greene. Monique Morgan, also of Pampa, ran for third with 29.08.

Maul also was chairman of this event. Other entrants included Lee Ann Gentry, Stinnett, Sissy Gideon, Skellytown; Lee Ann Smith, McLean, Lisa Maddox, Miami; Robyn Coleman, Pampa; Candi Carpenter, McLean; and Leslie Davis, Groom.

Andy Guthrie of Pampa scored an impressive 56 points to walk away with Group V Bull Riding. Outlasting a bull with a score of 55, James Smith earned a second-place buckle and Donnie Blackburn of Bako, Okla., was marked for 44 points and third place.

Neil Fulton was in charge of the event which featured 12 riders 12 and 13 years old.

No score was marked for Gary Dearstone, Miami; Kim Webb, Borger; Kelly Wright, Canadian; Buddy Webb, Canadian; Albert Reynold, Pampa; Billy Billingsley, McLean; David Turlington, Pampa.

Jimmy Creaky, Fritch and Candi Carpenter - Jim Hopkins was chairman of the Boys Barrel Race - Group V.

Winner of the event was another Oklahoma cowboy, Chad Kile of Beaver. Chad ran the pattern in 17.95 seconds. Donnie Blackburn of Bako won second with a 18.34 run and the lone Texan in the winners' circle was Billy Billingsley with 18.47.

Randy Martin of Wheeler, Darry Woodson, Bako, and Scott Howard of Mobeetie, were also entered.

Hopkins was also chairman of the Group V Girls Barrel Race, won by Robyn Coleman with a 17.78 second run. Lorrie Enoch of Pampa ran a 18.56 run for second and third place went to Alicia Currie, another Pampa cowgirl with a 18.99.

Running out of the money were Lee Ann Gentry, Monique Morgan, Sissy Gideon, Brandie Pairsh, Pampa; Lee Ann Smith, McLean; Lisa Maddox, Miami; Melissa Miller, Woodard, Okla.; Laura Horne, Pampa; Sabrina Parker, Pampa; Candi Carpenter, Leslie Davis and Amie Greene.

Girls Barrel Race Group VI, featuring 14 and 15-year old riders, was won by Denise Thompson of Pampa. Celeste Smith of Pampa was second and Dodie Wildcat, also of Pampa was third. Winning times in the event were 18.22 seconds; 18.24 seconds; and 18.69 seconds.

Others entered were Leisa Wilson of Harmon, Okla.; Linda White, Mobeetie; Kelli Brock, Pampa; Denise Thompson, Theresa Martin, Wheeler, Jackie McAndrew, Pampa; Susan Howard, Mobeetie; Sindy Leggett, Pampa; and Ginger Woodard, Pampa.

Robert Morris was chairman of the ribbon roping event for 12- and 13-year-old ropers.

The event was won by White Deer cowboy Todd Freeman with 9.9 seconds. Second place went to Bowie Howard of Farwell and Hayden Walters was third. Times for second and third were 12.18 seconds and 13.89 seconds.

Ropers not qualifying for trophy buckles were: Wendell Shultz of Pampa; Lee Lowrey of Pampa; Shawn Whatley, Dakota Pairsh; Roy Pat Rucker and Steve Jinks, all of Pampa; and J. Lee Fulton of Amarillo.

Daylin Hash handily won Boys Tie Down Roping - Group VI with a time of 23.56. Second place went to Lee Lowrey with 28.25 and third was won by Danny Johnson of Canadian with 34 seconds flat.

Ropers out of the running were Wendell Shultz, Todd Freeman; Shawn Whatley; Dakota Pairsh; Roy Pat Rucker; Bowie Howard and Hayden Walters.

Pole Pending, Girls - Group V was topped by Sissy

Gideon who rode Mr. Johnny Dial to a winning run of 27.02. Melissa Miller clocked 27.45 seconds for second and third was copped by Sabrina Parker with 27.90.

Out of the winnings were Lee Ann Gentry, Monique Morgan, Lee Ann Smith, Lisa Maddox, Robyn Coleman, Laura Horne, Lorrie Enoch, Alicia Curry and Amie Greene.

Donald Maul was chairman for the event.

Group VI, Poles, also under direction of Maul, was won by Celeste Smith with 22.97. Second and third were won by Dodie Wildcat and Ginger Woodard with 24.50 and 24.91.

Others running were Leisa Wilson of Harmon, Okla.; Denise Thompson, Theresa Martin, Jackie McAndrew, Sindy Leggett, and Susan Howard.

Robert Benyshek was chairman for the Girls Goat Tying Event won by Sindy Leggett with 20.74 seconds. Kelli Brock was flagged no-time when her goat got up.

Morris was in charge of the Breakaway Roping, Boys Group V. Billy Billingsley was timed a 5.82 seconds to win. Second went to Tracy Perkins of Wildorado.

No times were marked for James Smith, Donnie Blackburn, Randy Martin, Darry Woodson, Chad Kile and Shawn Johnson.

Lee Lowry won in the Boys Saddle Race, Group VI under direction of Bob Howard. Mike Clay of White Deer came in second and Dakota Pairsh won third.

Racers included Wendell Shultz, Davlin Hash and Bowie Howard.

The bulls won in Group VI, Bill Skaggs was chairman of the event which pitted 14- and 15-year-old bullriders for the trophies.

Lee Lowry won the event and Roy Pat Rucker was lacy on the coin toss to win second after a tie score ride with Billy Hollowell of Skellytown.

Disappointed bullriders included Weldon Black of Pampa; Timmy Rauscher, Keith Knight, Shawn Whatley James Woodruff, Sahne Bromlow, Hayden Walters and Kelly Bennett, all of Pampa. Other riders were Kevin Holman of Amarillo; Bob Webb of Borger; Rodney Smith of Waynoka, Okla.; Clint Goudy of Wildorado; Donnie Winegeart of Lefors; Danny Johnson of Canadian, Mike Clay of White Deer.

With the presentation of trophies and ribbons, the 1980 edition of the Pampa Kid Pony Show ended.

Rodeo fans will be on hand tonight to see the opening performance of the 34th Annual Top O' Texas Rodeo at 8 p.m. Championship Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association members have entered the three-day event.

Other activities will be a nightly dance following rodeo performances and a downtown parade Saturday.

Grand jury indicts woman in ax murder

MCKINNEY, Texas (AP) — A Collin County grand jury, after questioning law enforcement officers and others for several hours, has indicted a 30-year-old woman for the June 13 ax murder of a Wylie housewife.

Candace Montgomery, 30, was allowed to remain free on $100,000 bond. She is charged with murder in the death of Betty Gore, a mother of two and a former elementary teacher who attended the same church.

Neighbors found her mutilated body in the utility room of her home after her husband, Allan Gore, telephoned from Minnesota, where he had gone earlier in the day on business. He told them he had been unable to reach his wife. The couple's 1-year-old daughter was found crying but unharmed in a bedroom.

The suspect's husband, James Montgomery, expressed confidence after Wednesday's indictment that she will be acquitted.

Montgomery and Gore were among eight persons the grand jury subpoenaed.

Mrs. Montgomery told authorities the Gore's 5-year-old daughter had spent the night before the slaying with the Montgomerys' children, and Mrs. Montgomery had taken them to Vacation Bible School on the day of the slaying.

She said after taking the children to church, she made a brief trip to the Gore residence to get a bathing suit for the Gores' daughter and had a pleasant conversation with Mrs. Gore before returning to the church.

Authorities issued a warrant for her arrest on June 26, and she surrendered hours later. Her name had been linked with the investigation since reports that her fingerprints had been found on a blood-smeared refrigerator in the home.

"We were frightened the first couple of weeks," Montgomery said Wednesday. "But we're confident about the outcome. The community has been real good to us."

The case was bound over to State District Judge John McCraw, but no trial date was set.

The grand jury began hearing witnesses at 9:45 a.m. Wednesday. Grand jurors deliberated about 20 minutes before handing down the indictment in the afternoon.

Montgomery was before the grand jury for about five minutes after trying unsuccessfully to fight a subpoena for him to appear.

McCraw denied motions of defense attorneys to quash Montgomery's subpoena. He said Montgomery could rely on his 5th Amendment right to refuse to answer.

District attorney Tom O'Connell declined to discuss the proceedings, but Montgomery said he refused to answer most questions.

He said he responded only to questions about his age, place of work, and "those kinds of things."

Heat blamed for drastic increase in murders

By DEBORAH BRIDGES
Of The Pampa News

A total of five homicides have occurred in the quiet little town of Pampa since the first of 1980, police records show — four more than in 1979 when only one murder occurred.

With the murder rate three times over the yearly normal for the city — two within a two-week period, the News asked Chief J. J. Ryzman what is the cause.

"Tempers swell with the heat," he said. "These hot, hot weather conditions are contributing factors."

The murders occurring in Pampa, he said, are typically "acquaintance" murders. These are ones where the two parties know each other but are not actually friends, he explained. The only true "domestic" homicide, he said, was the death of Dennis Lee Smith.

"We've always had a high assault rate in Pampa," Ryzman said.

A survey conducted in 1979 by the criminal justice division of the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission indicated that per 100,000 population, Pampa has the highest rate in the Panhandle, he said.

The assault rate has risen this year, but not in proportion to the murders, the police chief said.

Through June of 1979, he said, the Pampa Police Department received reports of 87 assaults. The first six months of 1980, however, 91 assaults have been reported.

"Murders are extremely difficult to prevent," Ryzman said. "You'd have to put an officer in every home."

"Fortunately," he added, "most of our assaults don't turn into homicides."

The five persons charged in connection with the murders are in various stages of the criminal justice proceedings.

It started one frosty Sunday morning, Jan. 13, when police responded to the call of an "accidental shooting" at 12:10 a.m. and found the body of 31-year-old Dennis Lee Smith lying prone on the floor of his mobile home at 504 S. Finley.

The dead man had been shot twice with a handgun. His wife, Cathy Darlene, was at the scene, crying.

A month later, Feb. 12, Mrs. Smith, 29, was arrested at the couple's mobile home by Pampa Police detectives and charged with the murder of her husband.

She is now out on $15,000 bond, awaiting the trial which was moved on a change of venue to Lipscomb County. Trial has been set for Aug. 4, according to District Attorney Harold Comer.

Things were relatively quiet in the city until April 19. Police officers were called to Highland General Hospital where officials had reported a stabbing victim.

Arriving at the hospital, the patrolmen found Roy Dario Rosalez, 20, of 216 E. Tuke, dead of a single stab wound to the chest.

Autopsy reports later showed a knife had entered Rosalez's heart, and he had died of internal bleeding in the heart chambers.

Approximately two hours after the stabbing, police arrested Felipe Miranda, 27, of 811 Wall as he was watching television at the home of a friend.

He was charged with the murder of Rosalez.

On May 29, Miranda was found guilty and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment at the state penitentiary in Huntsville for the death of Rosalez.

The two had first met the day of the killing. Courtroom testimony indicated they had begun fighting over Miranda spitting on the floor of his brother-in-law's house.

On May 22, Nathan Bunton of 525 Elm died in an Amarillo hospital of complications connected with gunshot wounds he received during a shooting spree the night of May 17.

With the death of the 60-year-old man, Curtis Lee Wine, 30, of 413 Elm was charged with murder. At the time of the Bunton's death, Wine was in county jail on three counts of aggravated assault in connection with the shooting. One of those counts was amended to murder.

Two other men were hospitalized after being shot in the dispute at a restaurant in the 600 block of South Gray. They were identified by police as William Lee Hutchens, 50, of 1009 Huff Road and Silas Jernigan, 54, of 909 S. Somerville. The two have since recovered from their wounds.

Trial for Wine has been set for the week following the conclusion of the Cathy Smith trial, Comer said today. There has been no request for a pre-trial hearing on the case, he said.

A man found slumped in the passenger side of his vehicle the night of June 27 became the fourth homicide victim in the city.

Police identified the dead man as 29-year-old Frank David Owens of Box 179, Lefors. Upon first examination, there were no apparent wounds on the body.

The next Monday, June 30, Oscar Augustus Waters, 37, of the Coronado Trailer Park was arrested and charged with the murder.

The case is expected to go before the 223rd Grand Jury scheduled for July 15, Comer said.

Waters is free on $15,000 bond.

The latest homicide occurred Wednesday morning at 2:57 a.m. after a fight at 504 Yeager resulted in the death of 36-year-old Doy Victor Hutchison.

Hutchison was discovered lying in a pool of blood near his car, parked in front of the residence. Barely alive, the victim was rushed to Highland General Hospital by Metropolitan ambulance where he died at 6:32 a.m.

Dean Ray Henderson, 26, of 719 Brunow was arrested at the scene and charge with aggravated assault. The charges were later changed to murder after Hutchison died on the operating table.

Bond for Henderson was set at $25,000 by Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge at his arraignment Wednesday. He is presently in county jail facilities in lieu of bail.

FIFTH PAMPAN CHARGED WITH MURDER. Dean Ray Henderson, 26, of 719 Brunow, center, is being led by Detective Lynn A. Brown, left, and Sgt. Glen Carden, right, to his arraignment before Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge. Henderson was arrested Tuesday on charges of murder in connection with the death early Tuesday morning of 36-year-old Doy Victor Hutchison of 736 Sloan. Henderson is the fifth Pampian charged with murder in the past seven months, a 400 percent increase over last year. The accused is in Gray County Jail in lieu of $25,000 bail.

National weather

Memphis, Tenn., residents are collecting fans to help the elderly through a two-week heat wave that has claimed 15 lives in that city and 178 nationwide.

Shelby County authorities say they have collected 800 fans to loan to the elderly in Memphis, where seven more people died Wednesday, bringing the state death toll to 17. Temperatures have hit 101 degrees across Tennessee this week.

The National Weather Service forecast temperatures in the upper 90s and 100s today for the Gulf and southern Atlantic Coast states, the Tennessee Valley, the lower Mississippi Valley, much of the Plains, the southern Rockies and the inland Southwest.

A Kansas City, Kan., man died of heat-related causes Wednesday, bringing the state's two-week toll to seven. Wichita reported a high Wednesday of 110 degrees.

In Mississippi, a Harrison County man's death was blamed on heat exhaustion Wednesday and in Panola County, there had been four heat-related deaths.

Missouri's death toll jumped to six with the death of an unidentified man found on the street in St. Louis.

"It has to have an effect on people who have other medical problems," said Jim Simmerman, chief legal investigator for the St. Louis medical examiner. "It's like the guy shoveling snow in the winter. If you've got a bad heart and you're out fooling around in this weather, it's going to get you."

In Dallas and Wichita Falls, Texas, temperatures hit 106 degrees. It was the 15th straight record-breaking day in Dallas. The old record for the date was 105 degrees set in 1914. There have been 87 heat deaths in Texas.

Other state death tolls are Indiana, one; Arkansas, 29; Oklahoma, 17; Georgia, seven; Louisiana, four; and Alabama, one.

Two people were killed by tornadoes in Rushville, Ind., Wednesday and a 5-year-old girl was missing after being pulled from her home by the twister. The airport in Waterloo, Iowa, suffered $5 million damage from high winds. Tornadoes also touched down in Kansas and in Raleigh and Randolph counties in West Virginia.

The weather service forecast showers and thundershowers today over the upper Ohio Valley and across the southern Appalachians.

Thunderstorms stretched this morning from Indiana across Ohio and the Virginias, over southern Florida and from western Iowa through central South Dakota.

There were also showers and thundershowers scattered from western Kansas into central Colorado.

LIFESAVING COURSE OFFERED

The Red Cross will conduct an advanced lifesaving course from 6-8 p.m. July 21-Aug. 1 at the city pool. Registration for the course begins Monday, July 14, at the Red Cross office on Sloan Street. Instructors for the course will be Lillian Esson and Mary Skoog.

minor accidents

A 1964 Chevrolet pickup driven by Kenneth Addington, 19, of 113 S. Wynn was driving west in the 200 block of E. Browning when he was in collision with a 1978 Mercury driven by Diane Saied, 27, of 102 E. 27th traveling south in the 300 block of Ballard. Addington was cited for disregarding a stop sign.

Texas weather

By The Associated Press
 Texas remained under the firm grip of a massive ridge of high pressure today, meaning that there would be no break in the heat wave.

Forecasts called for clear to partly cloudy skies and continued hot temperatures. A few widely scattered thundershowers were forecast late today for the mountains of Southwest Texas and in extreme South Texas.

Highs were to be around or slightly above 100 statewide and were to range upward to about 107 in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and to as high as 110 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Dallas-Fort Worth recorded a 106 Wednesday, breaking the old record of 105 set in 1914. It was the 15th day of record breaking heat for the area.

Clear skies and unseasonably warm temperatures were reported early today over most of the state. Temperatures were mostly in the 70s and 80s. Extremes ranged from 67 at Marfa to 83 at Dallas-Fort Worth.

Texas forecast

North Texas - Fair and hot through Friday. Highs upper 90s east to 110 northwest. Lows low 80s northwest to mid 70s southeast.

South Texas - Partly cloudy and hot through Friday with widely scattered thundershowers mainly south. Highs 95 to 105. Lows 70s.

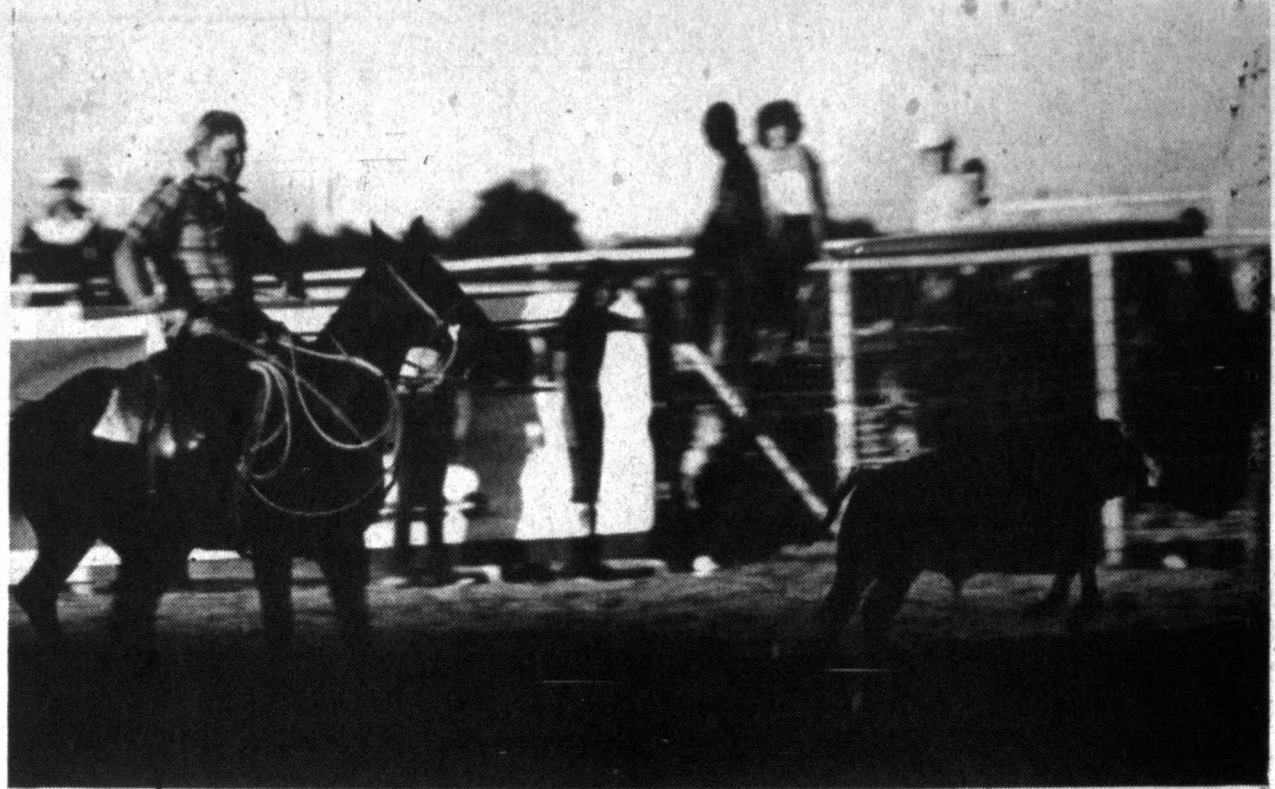

West Texas - Fair and hot through Friday, partly cloudy southwest. Isolated thundershowers southwest mountains. Highs upper 90s north to near 103 south and 110 Big Bend. Lows upper 60s north, mid 70s south.

Port Arthur to Port O'Connor - South winds 10 to 15 knots through Friday. Seas less than 3 feet. A few thundershowers.

Extended

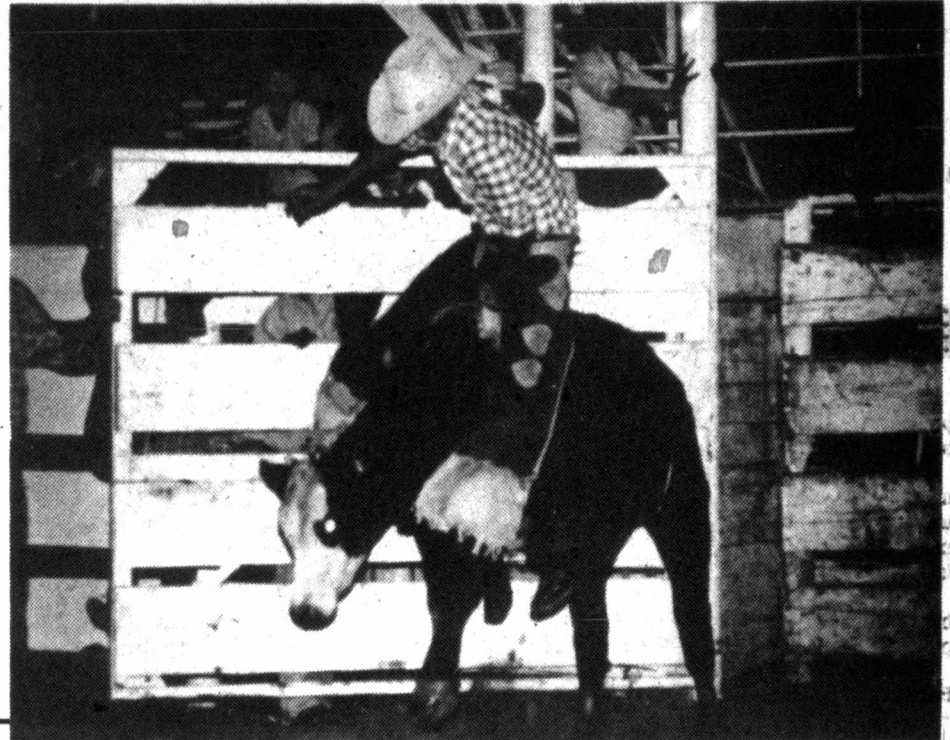

Saturday Through Monday
 North Texas: Fair and hot. Near 100 southeast and 103 to 109 central and west. Lowest temperatures ranging from mid 70s to around 80.

South Texas: Isolated mainly afternoon or evening showers and thundershowers near the coastal sections. Otherwise continued unseasonably hot and dry. Highs will range from near 90 along the immediate coast to around 105 near the Rio Grande in extreme South Texas 90s to near 100 rest of South Texas. Lows will range from the low 80s along the immediate coast to the 70s elsewhere.

NO TIME FOR HIS EFFORT

Trident missile would multiply striking power of British fleet

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Cabinet is nearing a politically explosive decision on a proposal to build a new fleet of nuclear submarines equipped with American-made Trident missiles.

Officials say the 10-year modernization program at a minimum cost of $12 billion is calculated to enhance Britain's existing nuclear striking power by six times. The country's deterrent now centers on four nuclear-powered submarines, each fitted with 16 U.S.-supplied Polaris missiles carrying British-made nuclear warheads.

U.S. Ambassador Kingman Brewster told The Associated Press in a recent interview the United States and Britain have "for years" been discussing the whole question of replacements for the Polaris carriers. But, he said, it was for the British government to choose the most effective option.

That choice already has been made by the Defense and Overseas Policy Committee of the Cabinet, according to the British sources, who asked anonymity. The choice for triple-headed Tridents has, however, to be endorsed formally by the whole Cabinet. An announcement is expected shortly before Parliament recesses in early August for the summer. Thus an inevitable storm of protest in the House of Commons is likely to be deflected.

The costly Trident option, following the Thatcher government's decision to station 160 U.S. Cruise missiles in Britain, seems certain to generate heated economic, political and strategic controversy. At a time of deepening economic recession Mrs. Thatcher's administration has drastically slashed public spending on schools, hospitals, social services and is planning even more cuts. To embark upon a major new rearmament program now will seem to contradict government efforts to save money.

Across the British political spectrum there has long been considerable skepticism over the true worth of a British deterrent which rests so heavily on American support. Lawmakers and some military leaders, including Field Marshal Lord Carver who once headed the Defense Staff, argue that it would be in Britain's best interests to abandon its nuclear role because it is not independent, and is unlikely to deter a would be attacker anyway.

Drought and heat decimate crops: loss tops $1 billion

Heat and drought are ruining wheat producer, Missouri and other Midwest states. The 1980 winter wheat crop, planted last winter, is now almost completely harvested and may be the second largest on record.

But farmers are worried that young grain feed crops, which will be harvested this fall, may suffer without rain and cooler temperatures. "Pastures are showing signs of drying up," said M.E. "Moe" Johnson, chief statistician for the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. "We also have early stages of deterioration in crops. But... if we get rain, it might not show any effects. If we don't get rain, it could start showing severe stress."

In many places, the devastation is well along. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates 28.1 million acres of North Dakota crop and pasture land have been damaged, with losses totaling more than half the state's normal agricultural income.

In eastern North Dakota, farmers are plowing their seared, stunted grain into the earth to save moisture. In the west, cattlemen are selling off their herds as their pastures wither, keeping only essential breeding stock.

Farm machinery sales are at a standstill, and other farm-related businesses are suffering. North Dakota's yield losses are projected at 77 percent for hay, 64 percent for small grains, and 42 percent for row crops, according to estimates by multi-agency USDA county emergency boards.

That will mean losses of $769 million in small grain crops, $101.7 million worth of row crops, and $301 million dollars' worth of pasture and hay.

And only half the financial damage from the farming disaster will be offset by state and federal emergency help, said David Strauss, director of the state Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

There are 40,000 farms and ranches in North Dakota, averaging 1,042 acres. In neighboring South Dakota, where rainfall has been 75 percent below normal for two months, farmers in 12 drought-stricken counties report an estimated $245 million damage.

"Even if we receive normal precipitation from here on out, it's not going to get any better," said Mike McNamara, who heads the state Drought Task Force. It's too late in the growing season for rain to save many drought-damaged crops, McNamara said.

Rodeo association head predicts successful show

ARCHIE MANESS

"It's the first night of the Rodeo and we're ready," said Archie Maness, president of the Top of Texas Rodeo Association, early today.

The arena has been dusted off, the clowns are in town and the rodeo action is about to begin. "Plans for every rodeo start about a year in advance, and we work on it all winter," Maness said. "In fact we have already started working on some things for the 1981 Top of Texas Rodeo."

"This year the 34th Top of Texas Rodeo has attracted five of the top 10 Professional Rodeo Bull Riders to test their skill in the ring, Maness said. "But the local highlight of the rodeo will be the double mugging roping contest."

Archie Maness feels content to sit in the directors chair during the rodeo. "I never enter any of the events, but I sure support them from the sidelines," Maness said.

The work of the rodeo is carried out through the efforts of people on the 10 to 15 committees it takes to get it all arranged. "They are dedicated people. If you needed four welding machines, they would be there, with adequate people to work them," Maness said. "Whatever we need, the people in the Rodeo Association can supply."

"We have the contestants, and the music, we only worry about the crowd now," Maness said.

When asked about his plans for the week after the rodeo, Maness said, "I think I'll take a nap."

Iowa, Indiana raked by tornadoes

By The Associated Press
At least two people were killed as tornadoes ripped through southeastern Indiana, and a windstorm with gusts of 105 mph wrecked an Iowa airport, causing $5 million in damage, say officials in the two states.
More than 20 people were injured when tornadoes struck Indiana late Wednesday. A 5-year-old girl was missing after she was pitched from her house during the twister.
Two women died as a twister flattened two dozen homes at the south edge of Rushville in southeastern Indiana, said Rush County Sheriff Marvin Hedrick. Another person was reported killed when a tornado hit a farmhouse and trailer near New Salem, but Hedrick said that report could not be confirmed.
"I heard this very unusual noise," said Virginia Corpe, whose house was damaged. "This crash went by me. I was fighting to stay on my feet."
The twisters also damaged a bulk gasoline plant, where a pump was ripped off a 500-gallon propane tank, and fertilizer was leaking at U.S.S. Agrichemical Co.
Hedrick said propane gas leaked into the street for a time but firemen shut off a valve. He said the smell of anhydrous ammonia at the fertilizer plant "is so bad it's dangerous. If you get too close, you won't see tomorrow."
Tom Grimes, administrator at Rush Memorial Hospital in Rushville, said 24 people were brought in with injuries suffered in the twister. He said 14 were treated and released, two with internal injuries were transferred to an Indianapolis hospital and the rest were admitted. Injuries ranged from minor cuts, bruises and shock to fractures.

In Iowa, as many as 75 airplanes and helicopters and a score of hangars were wrecked at the Waterloo airport.
The fierce winds ripped the roof from a large hangar containing 12 twin-engine or larger planes, wrecked 22 of 32 "T" hangars containing one aircraft each and destroyed seven National Guard helicopters. Five others were damaged.
Gov. Robert Ray said he planned to declare Black Hawk County a disaster area. State disaster services director Don Hinman reported that businesses in Waterloo and Cedar Falls suffered damages totaling $500,000 to $1 million.
Between 60 and 75 private aircraft were destroyed.
Airport mechanic Charles Lowjowsky escaped injury when the wind lifted the front end of an Ozark Airlines DC-9 about 10 feet off the ground. He was in the DC-9 when its windshield was felled by a chunk of metal from a nearby roof.
The winds also felled trees and power lines in Waterloo and nearby Cedar Falls. Five members of a Dunkerton family suffered minor injuries when the wind overturned their mobile home.
There also were scattered thunderstorms in northern Kansas and a tornado near Formoso, in the north-central part of the state.
A violent thunderstorm with tornado-like winds shattered windows at an Augusta, Ga., shopping mall, forcing the complex to close for the day.

Conservation victories may hurt Reagan

DETROIT (AP) — Republican conservatives are rolling up solid victories in the GOP's pre-convention platform battles, but this muscle-flexing is raising concerns that their triumphs may eventually hurt Ronald Reagan in November.
Those fears are articulated publicly by the vanquished supporters of the Equal Rights Amendment and of abortion. But they are shared privately, so far, by other GOP strategists who believe Reagan is being painted into a politically damaging corner on the two emotionally charged issues.
As one moderate put it: "Reagan ought to write the platform or ignore it."
He has done neither. Reagan aides have been present at all platform committee sessions, but there is no sign they are writing the document the former California governor will run on when he leaves Detroit as the Republican presidential nominee.
"If we're asked, we tell the delegates what's acceptable to Governor Reagan," said one Reagan aide. "Under no circumstances do we say this is what he wants."
They are not quite that ingenuous; but the fact is that the Reagan forces are not dictating the party platform. They are acting as mediators, devoting considerable effort to avoiding floor fights when the 1980 convention opens Monday with gavel-to-gavel coverage on network television.
Ironically, the Reaganites act as though they fear floor fights by their traditional friends, the conservatives, rather than by the moderates who were late arrivals on the Reagan bandwagon. On ERA and abortion, the Reagan people went along with language tailored to satisfy the conservatives rather than the moderates.

Their presence at the platform committee sessions leaves the impression of a strong Reagan stamp on the platform, that will make it more difficult for the candidate to ignore or disavow portions of it later in the campaign.
No one doubts where Reagan stands on ERA. He's against it. He emphasizes his support for equal rights for women, but says he believes in statutory action rather than amending the Constitution.
But when it comes to a fight with brewing over ERA, Reagan's staff tried to come up with a compromise they hoped would satisfy both sides. They suggested language that would acknowledge the party's historic support of ERA without a statement continuing that commitment.
They made no one happy and then stood back when the conservatives demonstrated their muscle in the platform committee.
That prompted Mary Crisp, about to leave her job as co-chairman of the Republican Party, to make an emotional statement that the platform committee actions on ERA and abortion "could prevent our party from electing the next President of the United States."
Later, another prominent GOP supporter of ERA expressed similar views. Rep. Margaret Heckler of Massachusetts, a member of the platform committee, said, "Governor Reagan is going to have to speak out to women in a more direct way because this is simply not enough."

Bishops claim government discriminates

FORTALEZA, Brazil (AP) — Brazil's Roman Catholic bishops presented Pope John Paul II with a manifesto today accusing the military government of fostering racial and class discrimination.
The document was drawn up as the basis for discussions at a nationwide eucharistic conference at which the pope was speaking today. The conference was called to seek ways to help some 30 million Brazilian migrants constantly in search of better jobs and land.
The prelates' document is a catalog of ills in Latin America's biggest country and the world's largest Catholic nation. Among the problems it listed were:
—Heavy taxes on agricultural produce, instead of supports for farmers;
—Lack of good schools in rural areas;
—Racial and class discrimination; "the Negro is despised," it said;
—"Professionally organized prostitution" aimed specifically at recruiting; the statement said prostitution is "the only consciously organized service offered to migrants;"
—"Luxury, ostentation and national triumphalism" on the part of government officials; "a crime...when thousands of Brazilians are starving."
The bishops also urged "less sophisticated inaugurations of public works and fewer unnecessary expenses...a humbler policy, a policy closer to the people."
The document said the migrant problem was "the responsibility of the nation as a whole and of every Brazilian — particularly the well-to-do ones." It said the church should create more reception and guidance centers for migrants and help them against "exploitation" by large companies or land owners.

After addressing the conference, the pope was flying to the Amazon jungle city of Manaus, his last stop before leaving for home Friday, where leaders of Brazil's 180,000 Indians hoped to enlist his support against the government.
The Indian leaders charge that the government's National Indian Foundation has taken systematic steps to let business interests use Indian land to exploit mineral, forest and agricultural resources. In a letter delivered to the pope soon after his arrival in Brazil, the Indians said they were "suffering...at the unworthy hands of a government agency which says it supports the Indian but which in reality does nothing but steal Indian land."
The pope's visit to Fortaleza was marred at dawn Wednesday when at least three women were trampled to death and many other persons were injured in the crowd pushing into a soccer stadium where the pontiff was to celebrate Mass during the afternoon.
During the Mass the pope asked the crowd of 200,000 to pray for the souls of the victims and said, "I want to express my sorrow and condolences and direct a word of comfort to the victims."
During the pope's visit in way to Kinshasa, the capital of Zaire, 16 people were trampled to death trying to get into a stadium to see the pope.

Nevada senator emerges as top contender for Reagan's veep

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Paul Laxalt, Ronald Reagan's national campaign chairman, has been pushing any number of men as Reagan's running mate. He pitched strongly for George Bush, even for former President Gerald Ford. About the last guy he wanted on the ticket was Paul Laxalt.
Now, Laxalt has risen from sleeper to a principal contender — some say the favorite — just two weeks after caving in to Reagan's request that he make himself available.
Reagan reportedly has yet to make a final decision, and will not do so until he arrives in Detroit early next week for the GOP National Convention. But sources, who asked not to be named, say Laxalt has all along been the favorite of Reagan's wife, Nancy, and now is being pushed by some key members of Reagan's inner circle, including Edwin Meese, Michael Deaver and Lyn Nofziger.
However, Meese, who is Reagan's campaign staff director, says: "None of those of us in the selection process is pushing any particular candidate...All of the speculation you see in print is very unreliable because anybody who knows what's going on isn't talking, and anyone who's talking doesn't know what's going on."
Laxalt, who also headed Reagan's 1976 presidential campaign, is a personal friend of the candidate; their political philosophies are practically identical.
As the junior senator from Nevada, Laxalt would not provide geographical balance to a ticket headed by the former California governor, and his state holds few electoral votes. But Reagan has said that he considers this a worn-out old chestnut, and that what he wants most is a younger running mate who would pursue his policies should he become president.

Laxalt will be 58 on Aug. 2.
He is known to believe that the choice will be between him, Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana and George Bush.
One source declared that Laxalt is "very, very close. It could come down to his performance Sunday on 'Face the Nation,' or maybe even his nominating speech for the governor on Wednesday."
Paul Dominique Laxalt is the son of French Basque immigrants. His father ran a sheep camp in Nevada while his mother tended to a small restaurant and hotel in Carson City.
In 1974, he was elected to the Senate in the Watergate election year, when no other Republican managed to snatch a Senate seat previously held by a Democrat.
Laxalt has strong notions about reining in the federal government; he takes the conservative line on virtually every major social issue regarding federal expenditures.
A lawyer with degrees from the University of Denver, Laxalt was a district attorney for four years in Ormsby County, Nev., and never lost a case. When he took office as governor in 1967 he moved to tighten gambling control and allow corporate ownership.

GOP delegates better educated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nearly 2,000 delegates to next week's Republican National Convention are likely to be better educated and better paid than the average American. The vast majority are men and, essentially, they are the same type of folks who went to the party's convention four years ago.
This profile of the typical GOP delegate is drawn from an Associated Press survey of 1,810 of the 1,994 delegates.
This year's GOP convention is the first national political convention ever to be held in Detroit, where unions are strong and blacks make up a majority of the population. But there will be few union members or blacks among the convention delegates, the interviews with the delegates found.
Three out of five of the delegates hold some type of party office, but about the same percentage say this will be their first GOP national convention as a delegate.
The profile of the Republican convention delegates does not differ greatly from the profile of those who attended the 1976 convention in Kansas City. This year's delegates are a bit older and a bit better educated than their immediate predecessors.
Nearly two thirds of the delegates — 64 percent — have at least college degrees. Thirty-seven percent have done post-graduate work or hold post-graduate degrees. In contrast, fewer than 25 percent of Americans hold college degrees.
Twenty-three percent attended college, but did not graduate and 10 percent attended only high school. The remainder did not answer.

More than half of the delegates — 56 percent — said their household incomes were above $35,000 a year. Twenty-five percent had incomes between $15,000 and $35,000, and 6 percent made less than $15,000. The rest did not answer.
Labor Department figures from this spring showed the median household income in the United States was $20,540.
The survey found 536, or 29 percent, of the delegates were women, down a bit from the 31 percent who were women in 1976.
Nearly 95 percent of this year's delegates are white. About 3 percent — 48 delegates — said they are black and 26 said they are Hispanic. Six said they are Oriental and two said they are American Indians. Those percentages are about the same as in 1976.
On average, the delegates — who range from 19 to 83 years old — are just a trace older than those in 1976. This year, the median age is 48.7. In 1976, it was 47.9.

EPA tags hazardous waste sites

DALLAS (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency says Texas has the lion's share of the more than 1,155 potentially hazardous waste disposal sites located in a five-state region.
"We have a serious situation. More than 70 percent of the petrochemical companies in the nation are in our region," said Adlene Harrison, EPA regional administrator.
The sites range from municipal landfills to companies previously cited for violation of federal and state toxic waste regulations and were included in a massive one-year effort by the EPA's regional office in Dallas to identify potentially hazardous dumps.
Ms. Harrison said Tuesday the potentially hazardous locations identified by her agency included 468 in Texas, 173 in Louisiana, 163 in Arkansas, 179 in Oklahoma and 172 in New Mexico.
However, she said, the sites listed by the EPA do not necessarily contain hazardous or toxic chemicals, but indicated that each needed to be inspected.
The list was compiled after a congressional subcommittee, headed by Rep. Bob Eckhart, D-Houston, last year surveyed chemical companies on the locations of their dumps and the types of wastes disposed, Ms. Harrison said.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Covington Commandment.

To handle bureaucrats eliminate their jobs

Innovative companies often develop products that are so good the name of the company becomes synonymous with the product. When, for example, most people ask for a Coke, what they really want is cola. Or when many people ask for a Xerox, they are often looking for a copy machine.

This name identification is part of what motivates companies to be the first and best in developing new products. The Federal Trade Commission calls it unfair competition.

Two years ago, the FTC instituted a case against Formica, a company made famous for its plastic laminated countertops. The FTC claimed that use of the name Formica gave the firm an unfair edge over other manufacturers. The move was seen as a test for actions against other famous trademarks.

The case was social engineering at its worst. Not one of Formica's competitors had complained, yet FTC staffers took it upon themselves to intercede in the market. Not being part of the marketplace, they did not understand (or want to) that entrepreneurs respect the kind of public recognition the FTC was attacking. In fact, it is something most manufacturers strive for. The FTC says it creates "consumer confusion."

American Cyanamid, Inc., the conglomerate that now owns Formica, put up a good fight against the FTC intervention. The corporation lost the first round when the Supreme Court last year moved to block the case. The company then turned to Congress. Amid an avalanche of complaints about FTC abuse, Congress responded.

Congress recently passed legislation — known as the "Formica provision" — that prohibits the FTC from preventing companies from using trademarks that have become generic. Then, late last month, even before President Carter signed the bill into law, the FTC backed down.

The congressional action limiting the FTC's power was totally justified. But the question remains why Congress had to pass legislation to put a stop to the nonsense. This is yet another example of the federal bureaucracy assuming power never specifically granted by elected officials.

This has been so rampant in the last two decades that Congress and the public should know that abuse of power is a predictable outcome of the existence of so many bureaucratic boards, agencies and commissions.

The way to end this abuse is not to slap the bureaucrats on the hand. The way to end it is to eliminate their jobs by dismantling government bureaus.

DOE's protection damage consumer

A U.S. Army officer, surveying the bombed ruins of a South Vietnamese town, assured himself an ironic footnote to history when he remarked, "We had to destroy the town to save it." Something comparable to that perverse mindset obviously afflicts the regulators at the U.S. Department of Energy when it comes to "protecting" the consumer.

Consider the most recent development in the continuing duel between the regulators and the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio. Sohio first tangled with the feds when it tried to sell its gasoline this spring for at least 10 cents per gallon less than the company's closest competitors. The price break was made possible by Sohio's considerable holdings of Alaskan crude, which is cheaper than oil imported from OPEC countries.

Under pressure from Sohio's competitors, the Department of Energy ordered the company to raise the retail cost of its gasoline. DOE justified the action as necessary to prevent Sohio and its parent company, British Petroleum, from gaining too large a share of the retail gasoline market in Ohio and surrounding states.

But Sohio officials pointed out that the price hike would boost the company's profits beyond the limits fixed by the department as a concession to other oil companies lacking access to Alaskan crude. When the White House, concerned over a possible consumer backlash on the eve of the Ohio presidential primary June 3, protested as well, the department reversed itself.

Soon the regulators were hard at work devising a formula that would force an arbitrary increase in the cost of Alaskan oil to some companies, including Sohio, but not to others. So, Sohio announced a gasoline price hike of 11 cents per gallon.

The federal formula, assuming it is adopted, would become part of the department's "entitlements" system designed to equalize the cost of crude to all refiners. Ironically, the net effect of this tangle of controls and subsidies is to encourage the purchase of foreign oil and discourage domestic production.

All in favor of abolishing the Department of Energy, raise your hands.

By Robert Walters
WASHINGTON (NEA) - When President Carter signs into law the Energy Security Act of 1980, the federal government will have irrevocably embraced a new technology that poses a potentially grave threat to the health of thousands of workers.

The bill signing ceremony, tentatively scheduled for July 4, will be heavily promoted and highly publicized because it marks the nation's official commitment to the development and production of synthetic fuels as a major new source of energy.

The legislation, authorizing the expenditure of $20 billion in loans, guarantees and price supports during the next five years, establishes a synfuel production target of 500,000 barrels per day by 1987, the equivalent of 4 percent of domestic oil consumption.

Synfuel bad investment

The extraordinary financial cost is not the only price the country will pay for gambling on an unproven technology to reduce dependence on imported oil rather than investing in a broad portfolio of renewable and alternative energy sources.

Many of those dangers already have been widely publicized: The Rockies and North Plains could be transformed into the United States version of Germany's heavily industrialized Ruhr Valley. Synfuel production is likely to disfigure the region's land, drain its scarce water supply and place an intolerable strain on its limited social services.

But too little attention has been focused on the dangers of adverse health effects likely to be faced by the uncounted thousands of men and women expected to be employed in coal gasification or liquefaction and retorting oil shale.

When Congress was considering the legislation late last year, Ruch C. Clusen, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for environmental matters, offered typically opaque bureaucratic reassurances that a) there were no serious problems and b) they would soon be resolved.

While admitting that "we have identified carcinogenic (cancer-causing) substances in the products and the waste of all the synthetic fuels we have studied," Ms. Clusen said "government and industry are cooperating in the effort to define and ameliorate the risks associated with chronic exposure to carcinogenic materials prior to commercialization..."

But a confidential memo sent to Labor Secretary Ray Marshall only one month earlier was far more specific — and ominous — in warning about the "important health and environmental problems that may be anticipated" in synfuel production.

Written by Eula Bingham, the head of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the unpublished memo cited "specific information available which links oil shale processing with cancer, particularly cutaneous carcinoma" or skin cancer. Extraordinarily high levels have been documented among both Scottish and Estonian workers, Ms. Bingham warned.

In the coal gasification process, she said, "carbon monoxide poses a particularly dangerous hazard," while other chemicals with the potential to cause industrial fatalities include hydrogen cyanide, hydrogen sulfide, carbon disulfide and metal carbonyls.

Commercial coal and gasification never has been attempted in this country, but in similar industrial operations "the workers have exhibited higher than expected mortality from cancers of the lung, kidney, bladder, prostate and skin," Ms. Bingham noted.

In coal liquefaction, "the carcinogenicity of materials produced...already has been demonstrated" among a small group of American workers who experienced a skin cancer rate of 16 to 37 times greater than expected, she added.

Prior to the relatively recent display of governmental enthusiasm for synfuel production, an estimated 40,000 to 90,000 workers were expected to be employed in the coal gasification industry by the end of the current century, with about half as many people working on coal liquefaction.

But "if coal conversion is developed on the mammoth scale suggested," Ms. Bingham warned, "the occupational health problems associated with this technology will affect substantially larger numbers of workers."

A new awards show

by ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON — No one wants to say it out loud but all the award shows on television are getting to be a bore. Whether it's the Oscars or the Tonys, the format never seems to change. "May I have the envelope, please — the winner is..."

"Oh my goodness, oh my gracious, this the greatest moment of my life — I want to thank my producer Ron Christmas, my agent Eddie New Year, the cat, the cameramen, the sound mixer, my chauffeur, the woman who comes to clean my apartment twice a week, my mother, my father, my third husband, and his two children by a former marriage. Thomas Edison, the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Burger King, who always let me have it my way..."

The producers of these shows know they're up against the wall and they are searching desperately for a new format to hold the audience's interest. I believe I may have one for them.

Instead of announcing the winners at shows such as the Academy and Tony awards, they could announce the losers.

"This is how it would go.

"The nominees for the best actress are Lila Crane in 'Valium,' Sylvia Riff in 'Light My Beer,' and Dora Tremble in 'Roller Skate Hustler.' And the big loser is Lila Crane who starred in 'Valium.'

"I am delighted to accept this award because it gives me an opportunity to mention all the no-talent people who participated in the making of 'Valium.' I don't know where to begin when it comes to blaming people involved with this picture. There were so many of them I'm sure I'll forget someone's name.

"To my lecherous producer, Sam Tolstoy, who pursued this project for 13 years before he found a studio dumb enough to put up the money, I would just like to say it was a lousy script to start with, but you managed to mess it up even worse. To my director, Gary Ack, who doesn't know one end of the camera from the other, I advise you to go back into your father's slipcover business. To the cast, who sabotaged every scene I had, I will see all of you at a Screen Actors Guild hearing where I've preferred charges. And to my astute husband-manager, who persuaded me to play in this turkey, I want the house in Bel Air, custody of the dogs, and a complete accounting of all the money I've made in the past 10 years. If you have anything to say to me after tonight, you can tell it to Marvin Mitchelson, my lawyer."

They open in Venice

By Don Graff
Venice is like no other city in the world — or that the world has ever known.

Shimmering in its lagoon, it is an historical treasure house and an architectural jewel that, given the right conditions for viewing and mood of the viewer, can appear not only ethereal but unreal.

Which may or may not make it the appropriate setting for the latest economic summit meeting of the non-communist world's leading industrial powers.

The problems up for discussion are certainly real enough — continuing worldwide inflation, a spreading recession that as a cure could prove at least as bad as the disease and, as always in recent days, energy.

But the political disarray in which the seven supposed partners approach the conference and the pervasive preoccupation with domestic concerns to the detriment of the spirit of international team play make it unlikely that the issues can be dealt with solely on their economic merits.

This is the first such summit since the Iranian hostage crisis and the Soviet thrust into Afghanistan, two political issues that dominate relations between the United States and its West European allies for the worse. It immediately follows the attendance of the latter at the European Economic Community conference, likewise in Venice, that produced an unwanted policy declaration on the Mideast that went further toward underwriting the Palestinian position than any previous authoritative commitment from a Western source.

Unwanted, that is, by the Carter administration, which sees it as a futile distraction at best and at worst as impeding progress toward a settlement between Israel and Egypt and of the Palestinian problem under the Camp David accords.

Meanwhile, that same Carter administration has its own distraction in the U.S. presidential election that pre-empt its attention and energies. It is a situation with which the Japanese could certainly sympathize were they not so wrapped up in their own crucial parliamentary election. Without a prime minister and represented in Venice by three cabinet ministers, they may be more of the conference than with it this time around.

West Germany's Helmut Schmidt and France's Valery Giscard d'Estaing also have elections on the mind. The former, facing a national vote, this fall, is under attack from his own Socialist left wing, which would prefer a policy toward the East and particularly the Soviet Union more independent of Bonn's Western partners, particularly the United States. As for the French president, he is off and running early in a re-election bid that won't be decided until next year and in which a show of independence of the United States is likewise seen as an asset.

Plus, the customary personal entente cordiale between Giscard and Schmidt has been strained by the success of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in drastically reducing her country's contribution to the EEC budget, with the Germans having to take up most of the slack in the payment of agricultural subsidies primarily benefiting French farmers.

So it goes. All this may have no effect upon the orderly pursuit of common policies in the continuing campaign against inflation, limiting on oil imports, correcting trade imbalances and promoting monetary stability.

But don't over-bet on it. This is the sixth in the series of annual get-togethers that began on a studiously informal note back in 1975 at Giscard's suggestion. It departs from the practice of the last few years by convening in the cultural showplace of Venice rather than a political and economic power center such as Tokyo, Bonn or London.

Of course, there is more to Venice than the scenery. It has attracted world attention in recent years as a threatened city, slowly sinking into its lagoon.

It is to be hoped that at least in that respect it does not turn out to be a symbolically appropriate setting for the summit.

(NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

"Thank you, Lila, and now for the best actor of the year, the nominees are Rock Hammer, for 'Drowning,' Jeff Holster for 'Far Too Many Indians,' and Dan Lava for 'The One-Legged Place Kicker.' And the loser is Dan Lava."

"I'm proud to stand up here and accept this award, not because I believe that I am the only loser in this business. Everyone who was nominated is a loser. I saw Rock Hammer's performance in 'Drowning' and had to walk out of it. Jeff Holster's portrayal of a half-breed sheriff set the motion picture business back 20 years. They both deserve to be up here with me tonight. As for 'The One-Legged Place Kicker,' I have nothing to apologize for. I did it for the money, which in this business is the name of the game."

"Let's hear it for a great actor, Dan Lava. And now our final award for the best picture of the year, the nominees are 'Two Tickets to Picasso' produced by Sy Custer, 'The Incredible Tax Shelter,' producer Merrill Linch, and 'Ashes Over Portland,' producer Chauncey Campbell. May I have the envelope, please? The big loser is Merrill Linch.

"Accepting the award for Merrill Linch, who could not be with us tonight, is E.F. Houghton."

"Ladies and gentlemen, Merrill wanted to be here this evening in the worst way. But as you know he's doing one to 10 in the Allenwood Penitentiary for padding the books and writing bum checks to pay the cast. 'The Incredible Tax Shelter' was a labor of love as far as he was concerned, and although it brought in $60 million at the box office, it never made back its negative cost. Why a jury refused to believe this, is something Merrill will never understand.

"To the talented people associated with 'The Incredible Tax Shelter,' who were cheated out of their profits, Merrill has asked me to say you've been great sports, and as soon as his parole comes through he'd be proud to make another film with each and every one of you."

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Thursday, July 10, the 192nd day of 1980. There are 174 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: In 1850, Whig Vice President Millard Fillmore succeeded to the presidency after the death of Zachary Taylor.

On this date:
In 1509, the Protestant reformer, John Calvin, was born in France.

In 1890, Wyoming became the 44th state.

In 1971, a Senate report estimated that the Vietnam war had already cost almost $500 for every man, woman and child in America.

In 1973, the Bahamas became an independent nation, ending three centuries of British rule.

Ten years ago, Chinese communists freed the Roman Catholic bishop, James Walsh, after 12 years of solitary confinement.

Alien blames interpreter for testimony discrepancies

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — One of three Mexican aliens who say they were robbed and tortured in southeastern Arizona four years ago was to testify for the third day today after blaming an interpreter for some discrepancies in past statements.

Eleazar Ruelas Zavala, 28, of Hermosillo, Mexico, said under cross-examination Wednesday that the interpreter in a state-court trial in the case made mistakes and in some cases caused him confusion by not translating properly.

Zavala's testimony came in the U.S. District Court trial of Patrick and Thomas Hanigan, who are charged with robbery affecting interstate commerce.

That charge that was applied because the aliens were attacked just after they entered the United States illegally to seek work at a farm engaged in interstate commerce.

In one instance Wednesday involving discrepancies in Zavala's testimony, defense lawyer Alan K. Polley asked if the interpreter was the problem.

"Yes, you see it was because there were times when I did not understand the words, and she made errors in interpretation," Zavala said.

Polley asked if the witness could tell whether the interpreter was making errors in English or Spanish.

"In English, I could not understand at all. But in Spanish, there were times when she would say the wrong word or not say the word completely," Zavala said.

He was referring to Cochise County Superior Court interpreter Norma Jones, who handled the translating at a 1977 trial in the case. Laura Murphy, a U.S. District Court interpreter, is doing the translating for the current trial.

In another instance relating to the interpreter, Polley asked Zavala how one of his attackers was dressed. When Zavala said he was wearing a suit coat, Polley pointed out that in previous testimony, Zavala had not mentioned the coat.

"I said he also had on a coat, but the interpreter did not understand me well," Zavala responded.

Zavala had resumed the stand Wednesday without any word from U.S. District Judge Richard M. Bilby or the lawyers about Bilby's expressed concern that Zavala might not have been able to understand the proceedings.

A&M president to be relieved

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University board of directors will relieve school President Jarvis Miller of his post and offer him another position with the university, The Associated Press has learned.

The move to oust Miller, 51, apparently came during a closed session of the board's executive committee on Wednesday, said a university source who asked not to be identified.

Chancellor Clyde Wells announced about 2:30 p.m. that the committee was going into executive sessions to consider "personnel matters." The committee was still meeting in executive session at 7 p.m.

The official announcement, ending Miller's almost three-year-tenure as president, could come today following a regularly scheduled meeting of the full board of directors.

Board members were in College Station Wednesday for committee sessions that preceded today's full meeting of the board.

All calls to Miller's residence were switched to Malon Southerland, an assistant to the president.

Southerland declined to comment on the pending reassignment Wednesday night other than to say, "at the appropriate time we would have a statement."

University sources, who asked not to be identified, said they were surprised by the move to replace Miller and could offer no explanation for the move.

Miller was named to the post on July 29, 1977 and installed on Oct. 4, 1977, the 101st anniversary of the university. For five years prior to that, he was president of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Miller, the 18th president of the university, succeeded Jack K. Williams, who became chancellor.

He graduated from Texas A&M in 1950 with a bachelors degree in agricultural economics. He received his masters in 1951 and a doctorate from Purdue University in 1954.

Officials baffled by oil

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Coast Guard officials say they are puzzled by the appearance of sticky tar balls and oil on a South Padre Island beach.

A Brownsville Coast Guard official had reported Sunday that about 12 miles of beach on South Padre Island, located about 100 miles south of Corpus Christi near the Mexico border, was dotted with tar balls, oil pancakes and oily seaweed.

Lt. Wayne Robert of the Coast Guard Marine Safety Detachment at Brownsville said the beach had "light to moderate" coverage of oil.

Coast Guard flights Wednesday along the coast from Corpus Christi to Tampico, Mexico did not spot any oil in the Gulf, an official said.

Gerald Hinson said, "I can't really explain it." Hinson, head of a regional response team monitoring the massive Ixtoc I oil spill, said the source of the oil was uncertain and samples would be analyzed at the University of Texas Marine Science Institute at nearby Port Aransas.

Weather joke mill is sizzling

Everyone knows it's hot in Texas these days. But just how hot is it?

"I saw a mockingbird pulling a worm out of the ground and he was using a potholder," said Nacogdoches humorist Bob Murphey.

For almost three weeks, a searing heat wave has scorched the state with 100-degree plus temperatures, and officials estimate at least 87 persons statewide have died of heat-related causes.

But the hot, dry spell also has inspired would-be comedians to pull out their favorite puns and one-liners.

Bob Shaw, spokesman for the Dallas Police Department, said since June 23 he has received hundreds of calls from across the country and many foreign countries asking for the latest temperature.

Shaw said the calls have been coming so frequently he has polished up his best J.R. Ewing-style drawl and developed some typical Texas responses.

"It's so hot it's kind of like being bitten by a rattlesnake — if you stay still you'll be all right, but if you move around you're dead."

Cactus Pryor, a syndicated one-liner, thinks it's so hot around Austin that residents have been boiling the creek water to cool it off.

"You know about the Baptists and the Episcopalians and the Methodists out in West Texas?" Pryor asked. "It's so dry the Baptists have taken to sprinkling, the Methodists are using a wet rag and the Episcopalians are handing out rainchecks."

One old-timer noted the Texas Panhandle was dry, but said he remembers "one time it was so dry that it never did rain ... All the fellows who chewed tobacco had to carry water bags with them because they had to prime before the could spit."

One of the most popular one-liners to boil up in the current record-breaking hot spell is often quoted.

"It's so hot I saw a dog chasing a cat and they were both walking."

Acupuncture law struck down by judge

HOUSTON (AP) — Persons desiring treatment by acupuncture should have a choice in where they obtain the treatment, according to a federal judge.

U.S. District Judge Gabrielle K. McDonald Wednesday struck down a state law that allows only licensed physicians to perform acupuncture, saying the law was unconstitutional because it violated a patient's right to privacy.

"We're very pleased," said Mike Maness, attorney for 44 Houston area plaintiffs who filed the suit last August challenging the state law.

Miss Richardson completes flight training course

Kris Lea Richardson has completed the training course at Delta Air Lines' Training School at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport. She is now a Delta flight attendant assigned to the airline's New Orleans flight attendant base.

Miss Richardson, a 1977 graduate of Pampa High School, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Wayne Richardson of Pampa.

Dallas Shakespeare Festival opens season

The audience will see familiar faces from television, film and Broadway on stage during the Shakespeare Festival of Dallas' 1980 season. "The Merchant of Venice" and "The Taming of the Shrew" will be presented in repertory July 11-27 in the Fair Park bandshell.

Directing "The Taming of the Shrew" will be guest director Nagle Jackson. Jackson has recently completed his first season as artistic director of the McCarter Theatre in Princeton, N.J. There, he directed the East Coast premiere of "The Visions of Simone Marchand," Tom Stoppard's "Jumpers" and "1989 Pink Thunderbird." This winter he directed Celeste Holm in "Hay Fever" at the Royal Poinciana Playhouse in Palm Beach. He was artistic director of the Milwaukee Repertory Theater from 1971-1979, where he directed over 20 plays.

Ken Frankel, artistic director for the Festival, will direct "The Merchant of Venice." Prior to coming to Dallas for his fifth season with the Festival, Frankel directed at the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis. Frankel has directed "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Twelfth Night," "Macbeth" and "The Tempest" for Dallas audiences.

Eugene Troobnick will take to the stage as Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice." Troobnick appeared in the films "All That Jazz" and "Funny Lady" as well as television roles in "Kojak" and "Hawaii 5-0." Troobnick was founder of the Playwright's Theatre Club in Chicago where he was also an original member of The Second City. "The Odd Couple" and "Before You Go" are among his Broadway credits.

The Merchant, Antonio, is played by Steven Gilborn, who is also cast as Gremio in "The Taming of the Shrew." Gilborn, a New Yorker, has been seen on Broadway in several works including "Tartuffe" at Circle-in-the-Square and "Creeps." He portrayed Sir Toby Belch in "Twelfth Night" at Center Stage, Benedick in "Much Ado About Nothing" and Prospero in "The Tempest" with the Folger Theatre Group.

Steve Gilborn also appeared in the 40th anniversary production of "Awake and Sing" with Morris Carnovsky, which featured Richard Gere and was directed by Kenneth Frankel at the McCarter Theatre.

Bassanio is played by Ron Siebert, and his lady-love, Portia, is played by Dallasite Nicki Flacks. Siebert has appeared on television as Charles Francis Adams II in "The Adams Chronicles" and in the daytime dramas "Ryan's Hope" and "Love is a Many Splendored Thing." His Broadway appearances include "The Iceman Cometh," directed by Ted Mann. He has appeared in several regional works including "The Glass Menagerie" and "The Philadelphia Story" with the Pennsylvania State Company, "The Tempest" at Folger Theatre and "A Christmas Carol" for the Dallas Shakespeare Festival.

Flacks portrayed Kate in "The Taming of the Shrew" in the 1974 Shakespeare Festival of Dallas as well as roles in "Twelfth Night," "Richard II" and "Comedy of Errors" in Dallas Festivals. She has appeared in "One Life to Live" and in several episodes of the television hit "Dallas."

John Mansfield portrays the brave Petruchio who sets out to tame the sharp-tongued shrew, played by Leslie Geraci. Mansfield is a native Texan and an SMU graduate. He recently finished the season at the McCarter Theatre in Princeton, N.J., where he played Roy in James McClure's "Lone Star," Sandy in "Hay Fever" with Celeste Holm and Velere in "The Miser." He was recently seen at The Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts as George Yates in "Custer" and is familiar to soap opera fans as Adam Brewster from "One Life to Live."

Geraci has had much stage direction under Nagle Jackson in works such as "The Miser," "Jumpers" and "Hay Fever" at the McCarter Theatre. She played Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet" under Jackson with The Acting Company and Isabella in "Richard II" with the Milwaukee Repertory Theater. She studied at Loyola University in Chicago.

Kate's father, Baptista, is played by Dallas playwright Robert Ingham. His works have played at the O'Neill Theatre Center, Milwaukee Repertory Theater, Yale Drama and the Kennedy Center to name a few. He played the teacher in "Damien: Omen II" and appeared on ABC's "One Life to Live." His theater roles include Sir Andrew Aguecheek in "Twelfth Night" and Northumberland in "Richard II." Ingham's wife, Rosemary, is costume designer for "The Taming of the Shrew."

Jennifer Uhlenhake portrays Jessica in "The Merchant of Venice" and the Widow in "The Taming of the Shrew." She played Viola in "Twelfth Night" and Miss 1940 in "Forget-Me-Not-Lane" at Case-Western Reserve University in Cleveland where she received her BFA. She has received two nominations for best supporting actress from the Cleveland Critics Circle for her performance in "The Second Man" and as Laura in "The Glass Menagerie." She was most recently seen in "Lover's Leap" with Bill Daily at the country Dinner Playhouse.

Festival actor-returns include Julian Gamble, the Festival's artist in residence, and Michael Bennett, who recently scored a big hit in the New Arts Theatre production of "The Norman Conquests" trilogy.

Performances will begin at 8:15 each evening except Monday, with gates opening at 7 p.m. for early arrivals. Patrons are encouraged to bring picnic suppers but snacks, soft drinks and beer will be available. Free parking is available throughout the Fairgrounds.

The Shakespeare Festival of Dallas is funded by gifts and grants from the City of Dallas Parks and Recreation Department, the National Endowment for the Arts, the Texas Commission on the Arts and Humanities, The 500, Inc. and many local and national corporations as well as individual gifts and memberships.

For more information about the Shakespeare Festival, call (214) 748-6021 or write the Shakespeare Festival of Dallas, Inc., 1925 Elm, Dallas, Tx. 75201.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just received a copy of my family history. My aunt traced our family roots and had copies made to distribute to members of our family. Here is what I learned: My mother was married twice. (My brother and I were shocked. Now Mom feels guilty because she kept this from us.)

My cousin was adopted. (I never knew it. He doesn't know it himself, but now he's sure to find out.)

Another cousin was three months pregnant when she got married. (Grandma didn't know it. Now she does.)

A man whom we all loved and thought to be our uncle is just a man our aunt has been living with out of wedlock for 15 years.

At first I was excited about knowing more about my family background, but I sure didn't find anything to brag about.

Several family members asked this aunt who was doing all the searching to please not record all this stuff she dug up. Her reply was, "Facts are facts."

Well, how about a person's right to privacy?

KNOWS TOO MUCH

DEAR KNOWS: Facts are facts. Remember, a person is responsible only for his own actions, not what his cousin, mother, aunt or uncle has done.

Furthermore, when one starts to shake his family tree, anything is apt to fall out, including lemons, dingbats and an occasional son of a birch.

DEAR ABBY: I have often heard that the first romance is always the most thrilling, regardless of how many love affairs come later. Do you go along with that?

REMINISCING

DEAR REMINISCING: No. It just seems that way because at the time you had nothing to compare it with.

DEAR ABBY: I hope you can help. I have a 19-year-old son who has had since infancy a habit of "rocking." At night he rocks his body back and forth. He even does this in his sleep.

He wants desperately to break himself of this habit, as he wants to go into the service. If he does, this babyish habit will soon be discovered, and he will be the butt of many jokes and much ridicule.

He went to college for a short time, but before he went, I took him to a hypnotist. She gave him tapes to play before going to sleep, but that didn't help.

I also took him to a mental health clinic. He went only once and was told it was a mother-son related habit — an unconscious desire to return to the comfort of his baby days. But he continued to rock.

He's even tried fastening bells on his wrists to wake him when he starts to rock. That didn't help, either.

Have you, or any of your readers, ever heard of a problem like this? And if there is a solution, please hurry your response.

ROCKING PROBLEM

DEAR ROCKING: You were on the right track when you took your son to the mental health clinic. Unfortunately, he didn't stay with it long enough to overcome his problem. If he is ever to break the rocking habit, he'll need more psychotherapy. And if that doesn't work, there are worse things to live with.

THE PEOPLE'S PHARMACY

By Joe Graedon

Q I just got back from a disastrous vacation at the shore. Since I have very fair skin and burn easily I used a suntanning lotion my doctor recommended.

Instead of preventing a tan the sunscreen caused a horrible red rash all over my body. When I used an anesthetic spray to take away the pain the rash only got worse.

What went wrong? How can I keep this from happening again?

A From your description it sounds as if you are extremely allergic to the ingredients in your sunscreen. Although such reactions are relatively rare some people do develop a nasty rash after exposure to PABA (para-aminobenzoic acid), a chemical found in many sun blocking lotions.

Chances are good that you are also highly sensitive to benzocaine, an ingredient included in most local anesthetic sprays. Its chemical structure is very similar to that of PABA.

To avoid another disaster at the beach you would be wise to have a dermatologist test your skin for allergic sensitivity. That is the only way you will be able to determine which sunscreens will be safe.

You will also have to avoid anesthetic sprays and ointments such as Americaine, Burn Relief Spray, Medicine, Solarcaine, and Rexall First Aid Spray since all these products contain benzocaine.

Q I just read your column about not taking aspirin to prevent a hangover. I believe you made a serious mistake telling people to use an aspirin substitute.

I have a liver problem as a direct result of using large doses of acetaminophen (Tylenol, Datril, Bromo-Seltzer, etc.) and alcohol.

A Your point is well taken. Acetaminophen can cause problems for people who drink regularly. Even by itself this aspirin substitute can lead to severe liver damage when used in big doses for prolonged periods of time.

However, using moderate amounts of acetaminophen once in a while to head off an occasional hangover is probably less dangerous than using aspirin which could cause severe stomach bleeding.

Of course, the best solution would be to follow our original advice and cut back on the booze so there won't be a hangover problem in the first place.

Q I just got a prescription for estrogen hormones to treat hot flashes. My doctor told me to read the patient package insert which is supposed to come with this medicine.

When I picked up my prescription there was no package insert and the pharmacist wouldn't give me one when I asked. How do I get this information?

A Your pharmacist is violating the spirit as well as the letter of the law. Federal regulations require that he automatically provide a patient package insert with all estrogen prescriptions.

We suggest that you ask your pharmacist again. If he is still reluctant to provide it remind him that he has a legal obligation to do so and then report him to your doctor.

Q My pharmacist has told me that my prescription drug Dilantin (phenytoin sodium) is available in a generic form. Is the generic drug as reliable as my brand name seizure medication?

A According to the highly respected journal, Medical Letter, "FDA approved generic formulations of phenytoin sodium are probably more reliably absorbed than Dilantin capsules, and they cost less."

As long as your pharmacist is purchasing generic phenytoin from a reputable supplier you can rest assured that your medication will be reliable.

Multi-purpose bedrooms

By BARBARA MAYER
A P Newsfeatures

With homes getting smaller, it's no wonder home-furnishings observers are beginning to talk about the exodus to the bedroom.

It stands to reason that if a family has to accommodate itself to fewer and smaller rooms, a person's bedroom will soon become his castle.

At least, that's the way a group of designers and furniture makers saw it at a recent industry meeting.

"I see a definite shift away from the great room of the 1970s," said John Mascheroni, a furniture designer.

Furniture makers are already preparing the way for this use of the bedroom with the introduction of more multiple-function furniture for the bedroom. Modular storage pieces that stack on top of one another along the perimeter of the room, and headboards that incorporate lights and significant amounts of storage in attached nightstands are examples of this type of furniture.

However, the most important area of expansion in the type of furniture available for the bedroom may be seen in the development of a great variety of alternatives to the traditional innerspring mattress and box spring.

Flotation beds which are filled with water or gel, beds that fold up into a cabinet, and adjustable beds which go up and down by pressing a button are now likely to be on view at well-stocked bedding specialty stores and departments.

In addition, platform beds which dispense with the bulky box spring, convertible sofas which open into beds or fold down into beds and even low-to-the-floor mattresses inspired by Japanese futons are available.

Other types of beds which disguise their true function when necessary are daybeds, high risers and trundle beds. Daybeds can be made up as sofas by day and as beds at night. High risers, studio couches and trundle beds also can be made sofa-like with covers and accessory pillows.

Although the great variety of bedroom furnishings now makes it easy to furnish a bedroom as a multi-purpose room, there are a few disadvantages in making a bedroom look too much like a living room or study.

Researchers have found that the quality of sleep can be affected by physical surroundings. It is harder to fall asleep in a room cluttered with reminders of daytime activities, such as a sewing machine or a drafting table, according to Charlotte Potter, a spokeswoman for a mattress company.

To provide for dual activity without compromising the quality of the sleeping place, Ms. Potter suggests consumers select an overall color scheme that is fairly neutral and use vibrant colors and bright patterns as accents to brighten up a bedroom without overpowering it.

Separate work and sleep areas if possible. A bookcase is a practical way to provide a boundary. A folding, decorative screen can be used to screen off the busy work area from the quiet sleeping area, too.

Hide work tools in attractive storage containers, such as steamer trunks, storage cubes or wicker baskets.

Cut down on clutter by using the walls, the ceiling and unseen areas behind doors to hang baskets, plants, lighting fixtures and shelves.

Although it might seem that each individual's bedroom is a matter of personal taste alone, there are basic standards for judging the adequacy of a sleeping place.

In a good bedroom, there is provision for deadening annoying outside sounds and for screening possible intruding light from such sources as passing cars and street lamps. Ventilation is good, and adequate heat and cooling are achieved in whatever ways are suitable.

A bed must be large enough to accommodate the person or persons who sleep in it and it must be in good condition — neither too hard nor too soft.

Captain Dynamite blows himself up

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP)

— You could say Benny Koske's job is a real blast. Hundreds of times a year, he climbs into a wooden crate which is then blown up with enough dynamite to crack a 1-ton safe.

The 40-year-old Palm Bay, Fla., stuntman performs the trick hundreds of times a year at county fairs, shopping malls and racetracks.

"I blow myself up because that's the breed of person I am," Koske said after a recent show in Grand Rapids.

Koske works for two hours before each performance, strategically placing five sticks of dynamite in a wooden crate. The stage is then set for the former stunt-car driver.

He's never been seriously injured, but his body bears many scars from explosions that have bounced him around.

"It's a dangerous job, no doubt about that," said Koske, also known as "Boom Boom," "Captain Dynamite" or "The Human Bomb."

His first exposure to the life of a daredevil came early, as he traveled through the South with his father, a stunt-car driver. He followed in his father's footsteps nearly 20 years ago, but later switched to the dynamite act.

He says the tension begins to set in about an hour before each show, shortly before he squeezes into his fire-resistant, white leather suit.

When the time comes, Koske walks to his waiting box and straps on a crash helmet. He lies on his stomach and listens to the announcer's countdown.

At the end of the countdown, Koske flips a switch and the dynamite explodes. When the smoke clears and the rubble has hit the ground, "Boom Boom" is still lying on his stomach.

He gets up, waves to the crowd and listens to the ringing in his ears.

"This one felt good to me," he said. "Sometimes the blast knocks me right off the ground and tears the boots from my feet."

"I'm not sure why I do it. If I did, I'd give it up."

MENDING MATURE MARRIAGE

Sometimes your good-natured spouse wants you to forgive the wrongs that a one-time friend did to you both — and you find it hard to do.

Are you the kind of wife who rashes her resentments for days and weeks, hoping to lessen her fury but only refueling it with each new outburst?

Are you the kind of husband who gets mad on the golf course and comes home ranting about the other idiots in your foursome? Do you recount their insults and unkindnesses to your long-suffering wife at breakfast, lunch and dinner for days on end?

According to the authorities I consult, if this is true of you, you are risking marital hostility and would do well to switch rather than fight.

We older couples have been together so long that we know each other's natures better than we know our own. If a wife is a hanger-on in squabbles with friends or relatives, her husband knows he's in for a siege of hair-tearing haranguing every time she fusses with somebody.

I don't know any mate who enjoys prolonged peevishness. But I know several who leave home because they can't put up with it. One man says he always knows when anybody has made his wife mad — and he knows she'll be telling and telling him about it. So he makes excuses to stay away from home until she has calmed down. Sometimes he spends the days downtown and the nights at his sister's house. He thinks his wife should catch on — but she never does.

I was minded to write about this problem, partly for this man, partly for myself, and partly for a phone call I got the other day. I'll give you only the salient points:

IS THIS LOUISE? Well, I've got something that rankles me and my husband won't let me act mean about it when I've got a right to for his sake. He sells supplies in different towns. A while back he sold a big order to a friend (?) who asked him to give him a rebate of most of the profit. D. (my husband) said he couldn't do that because it wouldn't be fair to other customers.

The man got mad and started telling lies about D. He told people D was a cheat and a liar. He got two other men to give their business to other salesmen.

I hit the ceiling and wanted to tell that man what a stinker he was. But D said the thing was over and we should forget it. Whenever I bring it up, he shushes me. I've boiled and boiled but he won't get mad with me. Who is right? MAD FOR HIM.

DEAR M.F.H.: Much as I hate to say so, he is right. I share your point of view because I've had experiences similar to yours. But my husband is a forgiver and forgetter — and I have to admit he is right. Keep reading and I'll tell you why.

(1) When a person continues to harbor resentment, even if it is deserved, he only does harm to himself. He pours out his grievances to his spouse because that's the one closest to him. And the matter becomes a touchy subject that can lead to a quarrel between mates.

(2) In small towns — or even in cities — it is almost impossible to avoid meeting people you dislike. But if you force yourself to put your ill feeling from you, you can speak to them at gatherings whenever it is necessary; thus you don't upset yourself further and you avoid making a room full of people uncomfortable. Nobody wants to mix into other folks' fights — not even to hear about them.

You don't need to become bosom buddies with those who have wronged you. As a Christian, you are required to forgive them. For civility's sake you can greet them. Then put them back into the recesses of your forgetfulness.

(3) Continual harping on resentment against another person is likely to prey on your mate's mind too — and on his disposition and feeling for you. A forgiver does not enjoy listening to a chronic griper.

As my husband, Otis, says, "Why should I tear myself apart because somebody does me a disfavor? I've got to live with myself and I want to enjoy it." He does. And so do I.

U. of Pennsylvania gets grant

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A grant of $600,000 to enhance undergraduate education at the University of Pennsylvania has been announced by Robert L. Payton, president of the Exxon Education Foundation.

Payton said the new Exxon Academic Development Fund to be established by the grant "will implement incentives and support for both faculty and students who are engaged in reforming the undergraduate program" at Penn.

People Disks allow handicapped to use library facilities

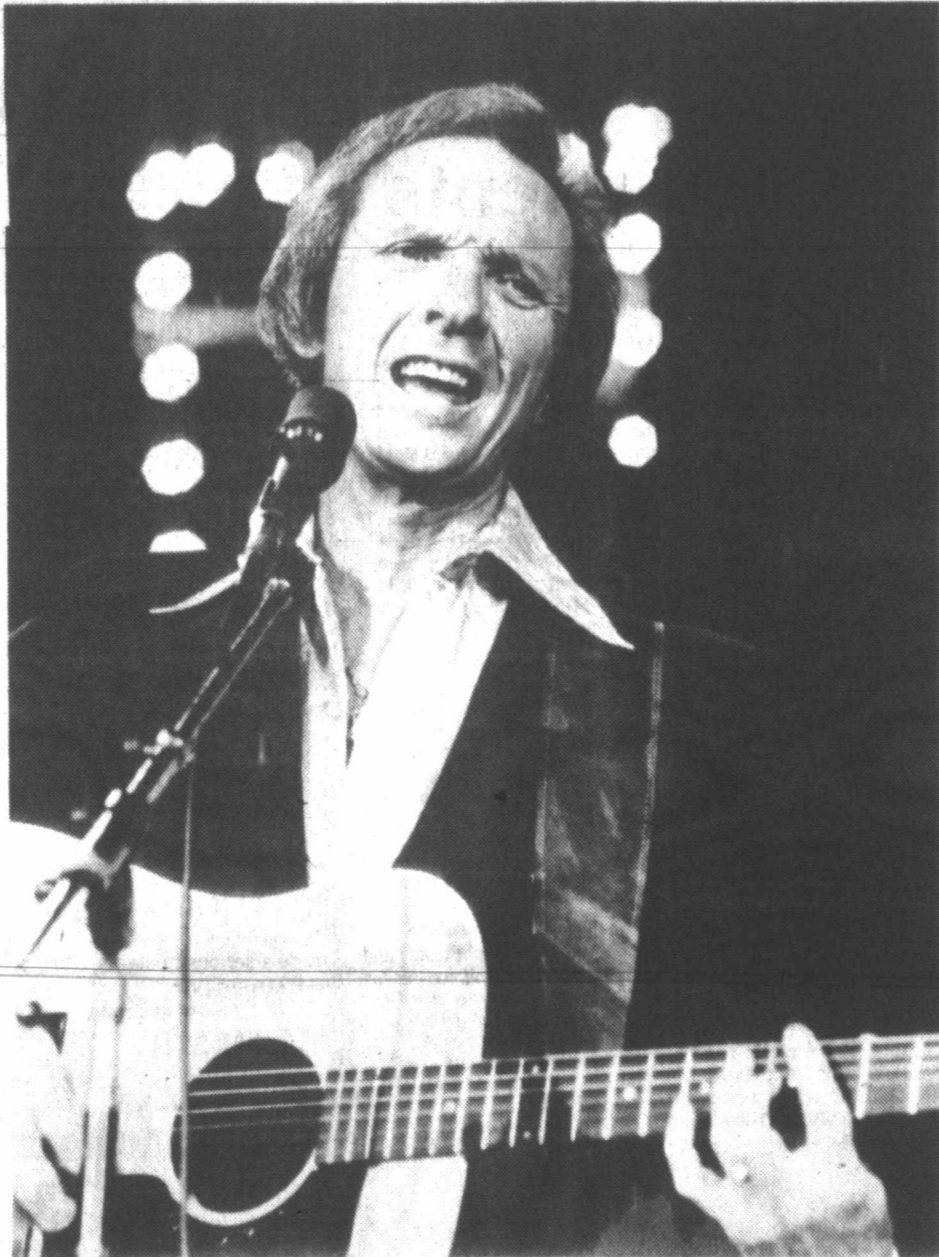

Texans who can't read ordinary books and magazines because of poor vision or some other physical handicap do read. In the past 12 months, the State Library has mailed them more than 600,000 books recorded on disks or tape, printed in large type, or embossed in braille.

With a wide range of titles from which to choose, these Texans are taking part in a technological revolution that has occurred since the State Library bought and began circulating a few embossed books to the blind in the early 1920's. Today's disks look like ordinary phonograph records, but they play at speeds as slow as eight and one-third revolutions per minute. Cassette tapes play at 15-16 inch per second. Machines on which to play the disks and tapes are furnished.

The titles from which readers can select range from recent best-sellers, through older fiction and non-fiction to the classics. "Readers want the same books that other library users want," says Dohald K. Bailey, director of the Division for the Blind and Physically Handicapped.

Most of the books in the collection come from the Library of Congress, which operates the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. The State Library receives an allocation of books based on the number of active readers. In addition, the volunteer recording program at the State Library is producing titles that the Library of Congress has not recorded — particularly titles about Texas and the Southwest. As an increasing number of regional libraries produce titles of interest to their readers and make master cassettes available for reproduction, the number and range of titles are growing rapidly.

"The State Library's program began because State Librarian Elizabeth West felt that blind Texans needed library service just as sighted ones did," says Dr. Dorman H. Winfrey, director of the State Library. "At that time, the State Library circulated books of all kinds to Texans who did not have local library service. To Miss West, the blind Texans were simply Texans who lacked local library service."

Tillis slated for Six Flags

Country music superstar Mel Tillis has been set for two concert appearances July 12 at Six Flags Over Texas.

Tillis comes to the Arlington theme park with still another recording riding at the top of the country music charts. His latest hit is titled "Your Body Is An Outlaw."

Tillis, whose stuttering has become a comical trademark, has written more than a thousand songs during his career. 550 of them have been recorded, including monster hits like "Ruby (Don't Take Your Love To Town)," which sold a million records for Kenny Rogers & The First Edition.

In recent years Tillis' career has expanded to include numerous television acting and talk show appearances, including an episode of "The Dukes of Hazzard" which was written especially for him.

Tillis' Six Flags concerts are set for 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. in the Music Mill Theater. There will be no extra charge for the shows.

M-M-MEL TILLIS is scheduled for two concerts at Six Flags Over Texas July 12. His appearances are set for 8 and 10 p.m. in the park's Music Mill Theater.

World Bank approves loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The World Bank has approved three loans to Brazil totaling $302 million.

A $58 million loan will help finance a program against water and air pollution in the Sao Paulo region. This is the first concerted program in Latin America to control industrial pollution in a major metropolitan area.

A second loan of $130 million goes to a water supply and sewage project in the southern states of Parana, Santa Catarina and Rio Grande do Sul.

Another loan of $114 million will support the expansion of electricity services in the state of Rio Grande do Sul.

In 1931 federal legislation created the National Library for the Blind at the Library of Congress, which designated the Texas State Library as the regional library for Texas. The program remained small until the mid 1960's when service was extended to include not only the blind but also persons with physical handicaps that prevent their holding a book or turning its pages.

Rapid growth during the past 15 years has resulted from a number of factors. With more people eligible after the physically handicapped were added to the list of those served, there has been more incentive to produce more titles. Improved technology has made it possible to cut the cost of each volume produced. Greater opportunities for younger handicapped persons have encouraged them to improve their educations and to read more. Increased life spans have resulted in a larger population of older persons with either poor vision or physical handicaps. The recorded books and magazines make it possible for them to continue to read.

The service today represents a complex partnership. Library of Congress arranges for the recording of most materials. The Postal Service provides delivery to and from the homes of readers at no charge. The State Library maintains the collection of materials and circulates them to readers.

Texans who want more information can call the Texas State Library at 1-800-252-9605 or write Box 12917 Capitol Station, Austin, Tex. 78711.

Lime tea cake

LIME TEA CAKE
After cooling, let stand overnight in a tightly closed plastic bag for easiest slicing.

1 1/2 cups fork-stirred unbleached all-purpose flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons butter, room temperature
1 cup sugar
Grated rind of 2 large limes (1 1/2 tablespoons)
2 large eggs
2-3rds cup milk
2-3rds cup chopped (medium fine) walnuts

On wax paper stir together flour, baking powder and salt. In a medium bowl thoroughly beat together the butter, sugar and lime rind. Beat in eggs, one at a time, until blended. Stir in flour mixture in 3 additions, alternately with milk, just until dry ingredients are moistened. Stir in nuts. Turn into an 8 1/2 by 4 1/2 by 2 1/2-inch loaf pan whose bottom has been lined with wax paper and the paper greased. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 50 minutes. Loosen edges and turn out on a wire rack; turn right side up; cool completely. Every body deserves a good night's sleep!

The waterbed heater consists of a thin rubber pad which rests underneath the mattress and thermostatic control that can be placed on either side of the bed. (There is also a liner located between the heater and mattress, so that no water can reach the heater.) Once the thermostat is set, the heater works like a central heating system of a house. There is never any need to turn the heater off and on. Of course, the thermostat can be adjusted, as the weather changes, to provide you with a nice snug bed in the winter and a cool comfortable bed in the summer.

At Shallow Waterbeds we use heaters manufactured by Liberty Vinyl. Every one is tested, at the factory, by being completely submerged in water, so you'll never have to worry about the safety of the product. They are U.L. approved and carry a 5 year guarantee.

So drop on by and take a test rest on one of our many models of climate controlled water beds. You'll be glad you did.

LAYAWAY FINANCING

4-H awards given

By DEANA FINCK

The 1980 4-H Fashion Revue, "Fashions by 4-H," took place Tuesday in the First Christian Church in Pampa. Foster Whaley, Texas State Representative, and Deana Finck, Gray County Extension Agent, presented the awards.

Winners included Bobbie Skaggs, Senior Division; Lee Ann Tate, Junior II Division (ages 12-14) and also winner of the sewing machine donated by Sanders Sewing Center; Sissy Giddeon, Junior II Alternate; Sarah Miller, Junior I Division (ages 9-11); Michelle Houston, Junior I Alternate.

Winners of the Best Model Division were Robyn Rohde, Junior I, Sena Brainard, Junior II and Bobbie Skaggs, Senior Division. The rookie of 1980 was Jona Wilson and the bravest was Kevin Collingsworth.

Other participants in the fashion revue were Angela Cochran, Jennifer Cochran, Tanya Cummings, Tina Cummings, Diana Hallum, Renee Houston, Stacie McDonald, Sherri McDonald, Glenda McLearn, Angela Phillips and Amy Sprinkle, all Junior I Division. In Junior II Division were Shelly Cochran, Heather Sprinkle and Renee Sprinkle.

An accessory table was added to the revue this year. Participating were Penny Miller (dress), Stacie McDonald (travel case), Sherri McDonald (travel case), Brandy Hughes (skirt), Lee Ann Tate (shirt) and La Gayla Larkin (dress).

Leaders helping with the clothing project were Amy Brainard, Penny Miller, Lilita Brainard, Vonnie Phillips, Betty Cochran, Linda Radcliff, Pat Cochran, Bobbie Skaggs, Roselle Collingsworth, Emma Jean Tate, G.C. Davis, Annette Hook, Fern Woods, Virginia Horton, Rhonda Woods, Dorothy Miller, Zeldia Wilson, Katie McDonald and Elaine Houston.

Modeling instruction was led by Sue Fatheree and Helen Hogan. Teresa Woods was mistress of ceremonies with Renee Sprinkle leading the pledge of allegiance and Sena Brainard the 4-H motto and pledge. The welcome was given by Foster Whaley, followed by a response by Sissy Giddeon. Commentators for the event were Bobbie Skaggs, Amy Brainard, Lee Ann Tate, Sarah Miller, Michelle Houston and Shelly Cochran.

The winners of each division will participate in district contest in Amarillo July 22.

Deaf teacher wins acclaim

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The awards have been piling up for Lucinda Lowell Hebbeler, a 29-year-old teacher whose most recent honor was being named 1980 alumna of the year by Pace University here.

Among others: she was selected as New York State Teacher of the Year for 1980; was recognized for outstanding contributions to the field of education by the New York State legislature; was one of four finalists for National Teacher of the Year; received the Pace University School of Education Alumni Distinguished Service Award; and was honored for service in the field of education by the New York League for the Hard of Hearing.

Mrs. Hebbeler, who has been profoundly deaf since birth but went through regular schools with hearing children, teaches the hearing-impaired in the Board of Cooperative Educational Services program at a Nassau county school on Long Island.

"Naturally, I'm pleased and proud, personally and professionally, to have received so many honors," Mrs. Hebbeler says. "But the greatest reward has been the positive effect it has had on my students and their parents. It gives them lots of hope to reach for realistic goals."

The 13- to 15-year-olds she teaches see her as a role model, she points out. "They want to know about my problems when I was their age. It gives them a feeling of not being alone, knowing that I've been there." Those who have tele-typewriter equipment feel free to call her at home at night.

Mrs. Hebbeler, who is a firm believer in mainstreaming rather than in special schools, says she is grateful her parents sent her to regular schools.

"It prepared me for the daily demands of a hearing world and broadened my language and communications skills," she said. "It was not always easy. I received a great deal of help at home to fill in the gaps, copied notes from classmates and had up-front seating so I could lip-read."

She gives credit to the "patience and understanding of a handful of marvelous teachers" who treated her as a normal child who happened to have a hearing problem and to her parents, who saw to it that she led a normal life, were not overprotective and "talked, talked, talked to me."

"We had the guidance of the New York League for the Hard of Hearing," explains her mother, Ann Lowell, of their decision on mainstreaming, which she points out was not a popular concept as it is now.

"The oral method was employed with her from the beginning, since we knew one day she would enter the hearing world and she might as well learn to function in it."

"She attended private schools in which she was the only deaf child, but she had help from the League in special Saturday classes. She had no interpreter or any of the aids that fortunately young people have today. The language training was difficult — you don't pick up incidental language, and everything has to be taught specifically in speech-reading."

"I was never exposed to sign language until I became a teacher of the deaf," notes Mrs. Hebbeler, who is able to make herself understood when she speaks.

"Because of my own oral training I was adamant in my belief that oralism was for everyone, but I came to realize that for some children sign language or total communication is a proper alternative. I still feel that most hearing-impaired children should have oral opportunity, especially in the very early years."

In her classes, Mrs. Hebbeler uses special techniques of sketching, films and acting out to help students comprehend certain definitions and concepts that can't be simply stated in words only.

Mrs. Hebbeler and her husband, Peter, who is hearing-impaired but not deaf, are expecting their first child but she intends to continue teaching.

In addition to a bachelor's degree from Pace, she has a master's degree in education from Hunter College and plans to take additional courses in linguistics and learning disabilities. She is working on a book about her experiences as a student and a teacher.

Barbara Witt is inspired by the ancients

A GEMSTONE and lace tapestry necklace designed and made by Barbara Witt, was inspired by its jade butterfly from the Ching dynasty.

In the eight years she's been weaving and knotting antiques — the outgrowth of teaching and working with "fiber arts" — she's sold more than 600 necklaces. "I do 50 or so a year and all I have left now ate seems inexhaustible. All she needs to begin is that one special piece.

"I'll be intrigued with a pendant or a group of beads, which I get predominantly from collectors around the country because I like to buy things that have been authenticated," she says. "From there, I make drawings and pin things out and change as I go along."

"I weave only with nylon thread which I dye to match the artifact I'm dealing with. I started out using silk and linen, which are good to dye, but they absorb oils from the skin and rot. And they discolor."

"And color is crucial since, she says, 'I design the tapestry to complement the color of the main artifact, so I deal in all shades of jade, gold, bone and ivory, lapis lazuli, rubies, emeralds and sapphires.'"

Those colors end up in one of three basic necklace shapes: collars, which circle the neck and inch towards the shoulders; bibs, which drop down in front in wide plaques; and traditional, V-neck, opera lengths.

They vary in weight — "An enormous piece of jade is heavy" — but the necklaces are comfortable, she says, because the nylon is light; and because she engineers them to nestle.

So the wearer is at ease and the antiquity being worn is at home among homely surroundings. For example, "I was given six cone-shaped gold pieces from the pre-Columbian Tairona culture," she says, "and I designed a collar ($6,500) around them in gold, bright green and blue on a pink background. I wanted to include a classic symbol of the people of that era and, since they worked with masks, I put a mask design in the tapestry. Wherever possible, I will also coordinate beads that belonged to the same culture. In this case, I use chrysoprase, which is bright green, and Colombian emeralds. It's true that the Indians at that time did not really make beads out of emeralds," she adds, "but emeralds do exist there."

For a jade butterfly from the Ch'ien Lung Period of the Ch'ing dynasty in China, she wove a V-shaped necklace on moss green and magenta nylon, with nine star rubies from India, orange zircons and 14k gold beads. "I did that one primarily to make a rich and exciting color arrangement," she says.

But the necklace she conjured up for a "wedjet," the protective eye symbol of Egypt, is rampant with symbolism.

"I combined the sand-colored wedjet (made of faience, a cross between a ceramic and glass), in a bib with brown and aqua mummy beads, and Ptolemaic glass beads. Mummy beads are so called because the ancient Egyptians knotted them together in a fishnet pattern to form a shawl that was then laid across the chest of the deceased."

The rectangular tapestry beneath the wedjet "contains a pattern called Ureus, which signifies the sun, encased by two cobras," she says, "and that pattern is repeated on smaller scale on each side of the necklace, where I also placed melon-shaped Ptolemaic beads. The melon form has always been a symbol of fertility."

The whole story sells for $3,500, and it's concise, pertinent and premeditated. As it should be. "I'm really drawn to primitive art because I think what I once read about it is really true," she says. "There's nothing unnecessary or accidental in it."

Florida seeks to preserve traditions

By SUSAN POSTLEWAITE
Associated Press Writer
TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Swamp cabbage and alligator tail — luncheon fare to Florida crackers — are part of the special folklore and tradition of Florida the state wants to preserve.

About 20 states have folklore preservation programs, but the Florida Folklife Program with a dozen professionals on its staff is probably the nation's biggest, according to Deputy Secretary of State Randall Kelley.

With a $250,000-a-year program, the state is trying to preserve certain "words in our language, food that we eat, traditions that we practice" that set Floridians apart from others, said Kelley.

Dawson is still wild

DAWSON, Yukon (AP) — The prospectors and dance-hall floozies are long departed, but it's still boom or bust for the remaining residents of this historic Klondike gold-rush town.

"Local politics are still wild and woolly."

Last year, two different town councils collapsed after failing to raise a quorum. Each time, the territorial government appointed an administrator to run the town in conjunction with a five-member advisory committee of townspeople.

That arrangement will continue at least until another election is held.

It is Dawson's rich past that has jeopardized its future political independence. Each summer the lure of the past draws 50,000 tourists who provide paychecks for most of the 700 permanent residents but also require big-city services from a small-town tax base.

City Manager Andre Carrel noted that at the height of the gold rush in 1898, Dawson had an estimated 30,000 residents. The town's old boundaries include nearly 10 miles of roads to be maintained, although some streets may have only one occupied house on them.

Local residents apparently recognize there's little their elected officials can do. There are seldom enough candidates

Take crackers, for example. While a couple of legends explain that longtime Floridians are called crackers, no one knows whether the name came from old ranchers who cracked their whips or the folks who lived in tiny cracker-box houses.

In crafts, what sets Florida apart is its pine-needle baskets, palmetto-leaf hats, white-oak baskets and fish nets, says Peggy Bulger, a professional folklorist. The maritime heritage is very strong because of the state's 1,100-mile coastline.

There are plenty of delicacies traditional to Florida besides swamp cabbage and alligator tail. "If you have catfish, you can't have catfish without your hushpuppies," she says.

Then there's cooter — land to fill the seats on the Town Council. Most eldermen are elected by acclamation.

Rob McWilliam, the current administrator, sees the political instability as a symptom of split identity — crowded boomtown during the summer and sleepy, snowbound hamlet in winter.

His predecessor, Joe Oliver, agreed.

"The evolution of Dawson into a summer town reliant upon tourism and placer mining is continuing, with parallel erosion of the community's year-round tax base," Oliver said.

McWilliam's mandate as administrator called for an analysis of the problem. His preliminary study suggests creation of a Klondike trust area encompassing the town and surrounding areas.

Responsibility would be divided between the local council and trust administrators to ensure that the area's historical lure for tourists is protected and developed.

Supported by federal and territorial money, the trust would handle services the town couldn't afford by itself.

Carrel, hired as city manager in late 1976, fired once and now back on the job, says the proposal has been well-received.

turtle; hopping John — a concoction of black-eyed peas and rice; hog hash; and southern grits with cane syrup.

Ms. Bulger said new ethnic influences were changing the traditional heritage of the state. One of the biggest ethnic groups in the Panhandle is now the displaced Vietnamese who have brought new kinds of music with them. Miami has "Little Havana" and the Seminole and Muskogee Indian influences are spread around the state.

For the past 25 years, Florida folklorists are epitomized by the Florida Folk Festival held once a year in White Springs during the Memorial Day holiday. Now Kelley wants to extend that annual affair into a statewide effort.

"Our long-term effort is to have not just one folk festival — maybe have two a year and take them all around the state," he said.

With four federal arts grants, the folklorists are instituting a folk arts experimental program in a Tampa school, making a record, putting together a basket-weaving exhibit, and filming Florida craftsmen at work.

A folk-arts panel also has been established as a forum for experts on music, dance, literature, storytelling, quilting and other forms which spring from Florida's history.

Officers dispute charges by chief

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Chances of finding another law enforcement job are very slim for three Crockett policemen fired for what their police chief termed "insubordination," a union representative has testified.

Bill Horton, a representative of the Combined Law Enforcement Associations of Texas, testified Wednesday during a hearing on the former officer's federal court lawsuit.

Allegations of insubordination on permanent records "would just about rule out the officers' chances of getting another job with a police department," Horton told U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

"And no department will hire an officer who was fired for insubordination," he said.

Officers David Lamb, W.C. Clary and James Saduske filed their suit June 24, contending they were fired because they were members of the police union. They are asking to be reinstated with full back pay and compensatory damages, said their attorney, Joe Crews.

Horton testified he organized a Crockett association with the union and helped the men draw up several proposals which were presented to the city council.

He said the proposals included "just things such as the officers' bill of rights, 40-hour work weeks, overtime pay and paid vacations."

Irvin and the city officials contend that the men violated the "chain of command" by approaching the city council without the chief's permission.

"As far as I know Crockett doesn't have a chain of command," Horton said.

Crews said that City Councilman Tom Robertson, during testimony Wednesday, praised the three men as the "best officers in the department."

The lawyer said that the councilman said he felt the men had "only the best interest of the department in mind" when they approached the city council with their complaints.

Crews also said Robertson, in his testimony Wednesday, contended that Irvin's job as chief had been in jeopardy four to five months before the officers were fired, because of various citizen complaints.

Irvin was again called before the council two months before the officers were fired and told to "get better control of his department," Robertson said.

"We contend that the men were fired for three reasons," Crews said Wednesday night.

"They were members of the police union, they were witnesses for Carol Clary in an sex discrimination complaint she filed against the chief, and they had discussion with the city council about police matters," Crews said. "Their First Amendment rights were violated."

The three officers were fired two days after officials from Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Dallas held a fact-finding hearing on Mrs. Clary's complaint.

Officer David Lamb testified that his only complaints dealt mainly with safety conditions on the force.

Jury hears dead man's testimony

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Federal court jurors have listened to testimony from a dead man in a $3.3 million suit.

The testimony was in the form of a deposition from Lee Chagra, an El Paso lawyer shot to death in his elaborate office here about 18 months ago.

Alois Crepensik claims in his suit against Chagra's estate that Chagra and a friend, David McFadden, defrauded him of patent rights for what he claims are "super-locks."

Crepensik said the three men formed a corporation. He said he agreed to design and manufacture the locks and the men were to provide financing. He is asking for $3 million in damages.

He also seeks $300,000 damages, claiming the men assaulted and falsely imprisoned him during a meeting in Chagra's office in 1976.

Chagra's death complicated the case since a "dead man's statute" prohibited Crepensik from testifying against him.

A federal judge, however, ruled Wednesday that testimony against Chagra could be heard since his testimony in the deposition produced his side of the dispute.

Jack Luscombe, a lawyer defending Chagra's estate, spent an hour objecting to allowing the deposition to be read.

The judge allowed Tony Aguilar, a lawyer representing Crepensik, to read the question portion of the deposition. Another lawyer, Bluford Sanders, read Chagra's answers.

Aguilar began, asking "Would you state your name for the record, please?"

Sanders replied, "Lee Chagra."

At wit's end

By Erma Bombeck

I was gathering up old newspapers this week when I came across a paper dated April 29.

On the front page, Walter Cronkite was being considered by John Anderson as a running mate. In sports, the NFL opened their 1980 draft. In domestic news, Ford lost $164 million in its first quarter. In the comics, Charlie Brown was explaining to Snoopy the rules of tennis. In TV, ABC was interviewing for a new "Angel." In the ads, Wig City was running a huge ad for the "mother who is active." In general news, Trisha Resy of Fort Romeau, France, stopped sneezing after 204 days, and a small headline proclaimed, "TODAY IS THE LAST DAY, RELIGIOUS GROUP CLAIMS."

The story went on to explain that a group from Montana and followers from several other states were in shelters awaiting the destruction of the world by a nuclear war. They had been preparing for doomsday for months and before going underground had met for "a lot of good food, a few speeches and a little entertainment at a local restaurant."

I know what happened to Walter, Snoopy, and the Ford Motor Company, but what happened to the group in the fallout shelters waiting for the end of the world?

Are they still sitting in the bunker getting a little tense with all that togetherness?

"I can't stand it anymore, Dwight. I've got to know what's going on up there. I'm going out and get a paper."

"You and your calculations! I told you the world would never end on the same day Appliance City is having an EOM clearance."

"You know the trouble with our marriage, Claude? The only time you take me out to dinner anymore is when the world is coming to an end."

"I do trust you, Lionel, and I love you, but I still say we could have told my mother where we were going."

"Okay, so I forgot to pack your tripod. It isn't the end of the world, you know. I don't know why I said that."

I must admit I sat there for a while wondering what I would do if the story had been on the front page with a Washington dateline with quotes from the president. Would I have grabbed my "Chorus Line" album? My pots of Erase and lip gloss? The picture of me in high school when I weighed 113 pounds? Would I have stopped the paper? Left the garage light on and locked the doors? Canceled my hair appointment? Had the kids clean their rooms?

April 29...what was I doing on April 29? It was a Tuesday...day after garbage day...two days after my son's birthday. Tuesday...maybe I made a note on my calendar. Wouldn't you know it? I cleaned the oven!

EASTERN PANHANDLE'S thirdbaseman (31) had more than his share of action around the hot corner during the District 13-15 Tournament last night. In the left photo, a wild throw goes over his head, allowing Pampa's Deven Cross to score while in the right photo he has to handle a low throw from the outfield to keep Pampa's Dennis Dougherty from scoring. Pampa defeated Eastern Panhandle, 29-7, Wednesday night in the loser's bracket. Pampa meets High Plains at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Optimist Park. (Staff Photos by L.D. Strate)

Pampa stays alive!, 29-7

Pampa unleashed a 16-hit attack to defeat Eastern Panhandle, 29-7, in the District 13-15 Tournament Wednesday night at Optimist Park.

Pampa meets High Plains at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the loser's bracket.

Winning pitcher was Brad Knutson, who also hit for the circuit. Knutson had a single, double, triple, and homerun that drove in six runs. His inside-the-park homer on a liner to left field accounted for three runs.

Danny Guerra had two triples and a single while Coyle Winborn had three base hits. Others with hits were Ricky Baird, a double; Randy Skaggs, a triple and Dennis Dougherty, a single and triple; David Owens and Lane Howard, one single each.

Knutson held Eastern Panhandle in check before tiring in the late innings. Knutson held the visitors scoreless and hitless for the first two innings before surrendering three runs in the third frame. By that time, however, Pampa had built up a 12-3 lead.

Knutson yielded four hits while striking out four and walking five to receive credit for the victory. Randy Newman, who went the final two innings, allowed two hits while striking out three and not walking a batter.

In only other game last night, Deaf Smith County overpowered Randall County, 20-4, in the winner's bracket.

Wilkins breaks own record

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Mac Wilkins is now a two-time Olympic gold medalist — at least as far as he's concerned.

"These are my Olympics," Wilkins said Wednesday after shattering his own American record and capturing the discus event at the Helsinki World Games track and field competition.

Wilkins, the gold medalist in 1976 at Montreal, stunned the crowd with his toss of 232 feet, 10 1/2 inches, bettering his standard of 232-6 set in 1976. It was the longest toss in the world this year and just six inches short of the world record set by East Germany's Wolfgang Schmidt in 1978.

"The result is really not a surprise to me," Wilkins said. "I'm in better condition than ever in my life."

Wilkins, who will not be going to the Moscow Olympics because of the U.S. boycott to protest Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, also broke the stadium record — 223-1 by Norway's Knut Hjeltnes.

And he might have added the world record if it wasn't for the wind.

"In a place where winds could have been more favorable, the toss would have been one or two meters longer, said Wilkins.

The American discus giants said he would like to have the world record back since this will be his last year in active competition.

"I know it is within reach."

Wilkins tosses were 232-10 1/2, 220-7 1/4, 230-3 1/4, 213-8 1/2, 224-1 1/4. Cuba's Luis Delis finished second at 217-2 1/4.

No charges yet in Phillies drug investigation

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Phillies President Ruly Carpenter has brushed aside published reports linking members of the National League baseball team to the illegal supplying of amphetamines.

"We're in a pennant race and the No. 1 priority in our minds is tomorrow (Thursday) night's game with the Chicago Cubs," Carpenter said during a press conference Wednesday.

The club, its officials and players would have no further comment at the request of the Bureau of Drug Control and the Phillies' attorneys, Carpenter said.

"No one has been charged with anything, no one has been accused, no one has broken any laws. It's all speculative," Carpenter added.

Such Phillies stars as Mike Schmidt and Larry Bowa have been linked in newspaper accounts with the investigation into alleged illegal prescriptions for stimulants by a Reading, Pa. physician. But a prosecutor said Wednesday that there is no proof yet that any laws have been broken.

"At this point, we have no evidence that would indicate that anyone has broken the law," said Berks County District Attorney George Yatron, who would prosecute any alleged crimes uncovered by the Pennsylvania Bureau of Drug Control. He cautioned that the investigation has not been completed.

"As far as news reports of Schmidt and Bowa, the information we have on those two individuals shows no connection at all, even innocently," the district attorney said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

"We hope by the end of the month perhaps to be in a position to make some official comments," Yatron said when asked when the investigation would be concluded.

In a copyright story Wednesday, The Reading Times quoted an unidentified pharmacist as saying a "runner" filled approximately seven prescriptions for Phillies players over a two-year period, the last about 10 months ago. All were signed by Dr. Patrick Mazza, the Reading Phillies' team physician, the pharmacist said.

Mazza denied prescribing amphetamines for Phillies players. "I don't recall that. I totally deny that," Mazza said.

"It's not good medical practice to prescribe drugs without a physical examination and I've never done it," Mazza told The Courier-Post of Cherry Hill, N.J. "I'm not afraid to open my records."

Besides Bowa, Schmidt, Pete Rose and slugger Greg Luzinski, four other unnamed Phillies and several unnamed members of the Phillies' Reading farm team were cited in a copyright story about the investigation in The Trenton (N.J.) Times Tuesday. Neither Bowa nor Luzinski could be reached for comment.

Al Michaels proves sports announcing isn't all talk

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

In the bombastic world of sports broadcasting, Al Michaels is a breath of fresh air. He knows when to shut up.

The beauty of television is the picture which tells a visual story mere words cannot touch. The beast of television is the announcer who thinks he can improve on what the eye can see.

Michaels certainly understands the TV medium. His call of the United States Olympic hockey team's historic 4-3 victory over the Soviet Union at Lake Placid last February should be required viewing for any would-be sports broadcaster.

With the puck near center ice and America's upset secure, Michaels was able to leave the play-by-play and count down the final three seconds by asking his now-famous question: "Do you believe in miracles?" "Yes!"

For the next 65 seconds, as the ABC cameras captured ecstasy on ice, Michaels had the confidence to say absolutely nothing.

"We just witnessed a classic event. There was nothing I could say at that moment that would appeal to everybody. Even Shakespeare couldn't have come up with the words," Michaels said in a recent interview. "Every viewer had his own thoughts. There were a million things I could have said. But the best thing to say was nothing."

Maybe Shakespeare would have been speechless, but not Howard Cosell, who does not know the difference between having nothing to say and saying nothing. Cosell probably would have felt compelled to be superfluous. He was not the man for that moment; Al Michaels was.

Like Russ Hodges, whose screeching "the Giants win the pennant, the Giants win the pennant" has been fused forever with Bobby Thomson's famous home run that beat the Dodgers for the 1951 pennant, Michaels will be linked with the 1980 Olympic hockey feat. And so will the line: "Do you believe in miracles?...Yes!"

"I was working the game with such intense concentration that I really didn't have time to compose anything," Michaels said. "With 30 seconds left, it hit me that the U.S. was probably going to win and that I'd better not say anything stupid. I don't know how that line popped into my head, but fortunately it just came. I'm happy with it. I think it'll wear well."

The 35-year-old Michaels sees the irony in that he is now known as a hockey broadcaster, when before the Winter Olympics he had done just one other ice hockey game — the 1972 game at Sapporo in which the United States beat Czechoslovakia 5-1 for the Olympic silver medal.

His first and constant love is really baseball. Michaels does baseball, and he does it better than anyone else. Watching Tuesday night's All-Star Game on ABC just reinforced that opinion. Michaels has a pleasant, smooth delivery. His baseball knowledge and savvy is enormous, and the information is provided to enlighten the viewer not impress him.

"In retrospect the hockey game was my biggest thrill," he said. "I can't see anything ever surpassing it. I feel very fortunate to have done a classic event that people will always remember."

And for his coverage of that event, Michaels will also be remembered and appreciated — for what he said...and for what he didn't say.

Coe, Ovett playing cat and mouse game

LONDON (AP) — With opening of the Moscow Olympics only nine days away, Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett, the world's two top middle distance runners, still are playing a cat-and-mouse game that has all Britain in a tizzy.

This sports-minded nation, which can count its previous gold medals on the fingers of one hand, is wildly excited about the prospect of a double victory in the 800 and 1,500 meters yet is concerned that these hopes may be dashed by a silly feud between the two world record-holding countrymen.

"I don't think they've spoken dozen words to each other since they have been racing," says Peter Coe, engineer father of Sebastian and the man who has choreographed his son's championship training under unorthodox scientific procedures.

"They have different personalities and lifestyles. There is no reason for them to be very friendly. Besides, they always seem to be racing in different places."

That's true. That's one of the reasons for concern that the personal rivalry may in the end damage Britain's national effort. While Sebastian and Steve are looking over each's shoulder at the other, some outsider might just sweep past them both.

That would be the worst sort of tragedy. But it's happened in the past and it could happen again.

Efforts to get at the root of this animosity has proven an exercise in futility.

A call to Ovett's home in Brighton, 50 miles south of London, brought Steve's mother, Kay, to the phone.

"No, Steve isn't here," she said. "He is in London. He will be back this weekend but I am not sure he will talk. He is not much of a talker."

Coe, a personable, outgoing economics major at Longborough University in Yorkshire, has been the more celebrated of the two track stars because of his distinction in becoming the first man ever to hold world records for three middle distance events at the same time.

Beginning this Olympic year, he was the world's fastest in the 800 meters (1:42.4), 1,500 meters (3:32.1) and mile (3:49.0).

"This galled the dickens out of Steve," a close friend of Ovett's said. "He felt he was overlooked by the establishment and he set out to prove it. Always an enigmatic, brooding sort of fellow, he let all this resentment burn inside of him."

He turned his back on the press. Even his closest friends couldn't get close to him. His mom took all his telephone calls and shut off all communication.

"Ovett, a marvelous talent, became a virtual recluse and nonentity to everyone except Britons and dyed-in-the-wool track buffs."

Ovett called attention to himself when on June 28 he ran the fastest 1,500 meters of the year in 3:53.3. Coe didn't run.

Three days later the two were in the same meet in Oslo, Norway, but managed — as customary — to stay 100 yards apart. First, Coe bettered the six-year-old world record in the 1,000 meters in 2 minutes, 13.4 seconds.

Fifty-five minutes later Ovett took the track and smashed Coe's mark in the 1,500 meters in 3:48.8.

Spectators were astounded to note that Coe didn't walk over and offer his congratulations.

"Sebastian apologized later, saying he was warming up at the time," Coe's father explained.

At the formal dinner that evening, Ovett was seated at the head table. When Coe arrived late, Ovett got up and left.

The only time the two have met in a race — the 800 in the European Championships in Prague in 1978 — East German's Olaf Beyer ran right past them both.

An athletics coach, a friend of Ovett, was asked who he thought would win when Coe and Ovett meet in the 800 and 1,500 in Moscow.

"Neither," he said bluntly. "I pick the Russian, Vladimir Malozemlin, to whip them both."

Bowl officials announce plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Officials of the annual Bluebonnet Bowl football game played in the Astrodome have announced a plan that would provide a $400,000 payoff for each team competing in the 1980 event.

The Bluebonnet Bowl's payoff of $190,000 each to Purdue and Tennessee following their performances in the 1979 game ranked 13th among other bowls.

Lan Bentsen, one of 14 new bowl directors, outlined a plan he said would make the Bluebonnet Bowl the fifth most lucrative post-season bowl game behind the Cotton, Rose, Orange and Sugar bowls.

Bentsen said by October, the Bluebonnet Bowl expects to have gathered about $1.1 million and can would provide at least $850,000 for the competing teams.

"We're increasing our ticket price to $15, which is in line with what other bowls charge," he said. "We're selling sponsorships, at $700 and $1,000, to companies. We have only 10,000 seats left and by Oct. 15 we'll be sold out."

Vince Buckley, president of the Greater Houston Bowl Association, said the Bluebonnet's NO. 8 position in payoff money was not acceptable.

"Our goal is to put the Bluebonnet right behind the majors and that's a big jump in one year, but we can do it, all it takes is money," Buckley said.

Simpson looks for bonus payoff

MILWAUKEE (AP) — There's a $100,000 bonus waiting for second-year pro golfer Scott Simpson.

All he has to do is chalk up his second consecutive Professional Golfers Association tournament — and, coincidentally, the second of his career — in the $200,000, four-day Greater Milwaukee Open that gets underway today at the 7,010-yard Tuckaway Country Club course in suburban Franklin.

Sponsors of the GMO, in an attempt to keep big name pros from skipping their tournament and traveling to England early for the prestigious British Open next week, offered an additional $100,000 to any golfer who won the Western Open at Oak Brook, Ill., and went on to take the GMO crown.

Simpson, a former two-time NCAA golf champion from the University of Southern California, said after winning the Western Sunday that he had planned to compete at Milwaukee anyway.

"I was probably one of the first to sign" for the GMO, said Simpson, 24, whose $54,000 earnings in the Western boosted his total for the year to $102,213.

The winner's share of the GMO purse is $36,000. In Simpson's case, there's also that possibility of a $100,000 bonus as a result of the plan worked out by tournament officials and insured by Lloyd's of London.

"Sure, I'll be trying for the $100,000," Simpson said after his victory at the Western, "but I'm so thrilled if I don't get it. It's a nice bonus, but I can't worry about it."

GMO officials, meanwhile, were predicting one of the better fields in the 13-year history of the tournament, especially after Hale Irwin, former two-time U.S. Open champion, and four other golfers decided to enter just before the deadline of 8 p.m. Sunday.

Doubles tourney starts Saturday

Entry deadline for the Pampa Men's and Women's Doubles Tournament is 5 p.m. Friday.

Entry fee is three dollars for adults and two dollars for students.

Interested persons may call 665-8413 or 665-1480 for more details.

The tournament is sponsored by the Pampa Tennis Association.

Stone's pitching feat overshadows lost cause

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Those who note triumphs in losing causes will remember the performance of Steve Stone in baseball's 51st All-Star contest.

For Stone, Baltimore's 32-year-old recycled righty, merely being a starting All-Star pitcher was no minor triumph. But what he did in the opening three innings Tuesday set a standard that the rest of the game, a rather routine match, couldn't live up to.

On a scant 24 pitches, Stone went through a fierce National League lineup that you wouldn't wish on Carl Hubbell: Reggie Smith, Dave Parker, Steve Garvey, Dave Kingman, Johnny Bench.

The meat of the lineup averaged .293 and 13 homers. But Stone was immovable.

Oh, the Nationals went on to win the game, of course, 4-2, their ninth consecutive victory, their 17th of the last 18. And Ken Griffey of Cincinnati was named Most Valuable Player, having started things for the Nationals with a solo home run in the fifth and a single later on.

To the five-man panel of writers and league publicists, Griffey's two-hit, one-RBI performance seemed the game's most valuable.

Perhaps. But Stone, Stone was an All-Star.

Too nervous to make his curveball work, Stone showed the Nationals' big guns a fastball that fairly danced by them, a fastball that was good for three strikeouts in three innings.

Stone was perfect for those three, the first time an American League pitcher has held the Nationals hitless through three since Denny McLain did it in 1966. Were this not an exhibition requiring the appearance of the largest possible portion of each roster, Stone might have ended the Americans' drought.

As it was, he exited after the third with a shout and a gesture of triumph, and left it to his successors to lose.

In the Americans' lockerroom, the compact (5-foot-9, 175-pound) Stone, strikingly articulate and personable, relished his moment.

"I couldn't have asked for a better three innings or for better results," he said.

Cauthen enjoying stay in merry ole' England

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Sports Writer

NEWMARKET, England (AP) — You wouldn't know the blacksmith's kid from Walton, Ky.

He's all spit and polish now, poised, even suave. He wears cashmere jackets from Simpson's Piccadilly, shirts from Harvie and Hudson and boots from Lillywhite's. When he talks — and he talks more freely now than he used to — he sounds downright Oxfordian.

Next thing you know, he'll be strolling down Regent Street in a topper and long-tailed coat, carrying an umbrella. "I love it here," says Steve Cauthen the erstwhile boy wonder of American thoroughbred racing who decided to go continental. "The people are very friendly and nice. I enjoy the life and I am getting a lot of valuable experience."

Young Cauthen had just ridden a 2-year-old filly named Chemin to a third-place finish in a 6-furlong sprint at Newmarket, the picturesque old track 62 miles east of London.

"My filly would have liked a longer distance," he said in the unsaddling enclosure after he and his fellow jockeys, including the legendary Lester Piggott and Epsom Derby winner Willie Carson, had formally weighed in.

Cauthen astounded American thoroughbred racing when, as a teen-age apprentice, he led all jockeys in money winnings in 1977 with $6.1 million. He embellished his celebrity status by riding the great Affirmed to the Triple Crown — victories in the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes — in 1978.

He even had his biography published before he was 20.

Young Cauthen is only 20 now, and it seems he has lived a lifetime already.

After his historic year in 1978, he chose winter racing in California and went through the agonizing experience of losing 110 races in a row. There were rumors that he was given inferior mounts in a move by Western rivals to take "that Eastern kid down a notch or two."

It succeeded only to a degree. Cauthen decided to transfer his talents overseas.

Not so long ago he won the 1,000th race of his career aboard, coincidentally, a horse named Thousand Hold. Since then, he has added 100 or so victories.

"Racing is tougher over here. You race clockwise and counter clockwise. You race uphill and downhill, and in all kinds of conditions. A horse going uphill is inclined to slip going down. You have to learn to keep him in hold," Steve said.

"If you can win in England and France, you can win anywhere."

Steve's European manager, Jimmy Lindley, a former jockey, says the Kentucky youngster, whose father was a blacksmith and whose mother trained horses, has matured remarkably in Europe, gaining the respect of his fellow jockeys and racing buffs alike.

"But I think his heart still is in America," adds Lindley.

Steve plans periodic trips back home — such as a date in Saratoga the first week in August — and admits that some day, refusing to say when, he hopes to return for good.

Dodgers ready for pennant try

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The angry murmurs that sifted through Dodger Stadium at this time in 1979 have turned to cheers again because the Los Angeles Dodgers are back in form.

Last year at the All-Star break, the Dodgers, two-time defending National League champions, had a 36-57 record and were 17½ games back of Houston in the West Division. There was much talk among team followers about what was wrong with the team and speculation about who would best replace Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda.

But things have changed dramatically in a year. The Dodgers are 46-34 and in a virtual tie for first place with Houston, and Lasorda is a popular man in tinseltown once again.

The Dodgers, apparently building momentum after a rather slow start this season, begin the second half of the 1980 campaign against the Astros at Dodger Stadium tonight in the opener of a two-game series.

"Most of our problems last year were because of injuries," said Lasorda, reflecting on one of his longest seasons in a lengthy career in professional baseball. "There's no way to control that and although I felt bad about the way things went, I know there wasn't much I could do about it."

"People forget that we came back to play well after the All-Star break but we just couldn't make up that much ground. Although we've had some injuries this year, we've gotten some great play from unexpected places, like Reuss."

Pitcher Jerry Reuss, with a 9-2 record and a 1.96 earned run average and the season's only no-hitter, has been one of the very bright spots for Los Angeles as the Dodgers returned to contention. Outfielder Reggie Smith, hampered by injuries in 1979, has also performed superbly, leading the league with a .328 batting average.

Among the other surprising contributors in 1980 has been rookie center fielder Rudy Law, a poised youngster who's hitting .286 and seems to have a knack for making good things happen. Old reliables Steve Garvey, Dusty Baker, Bill Russell and Ron Cey have also been turning in their usual solid performances.

"We knew even last year we were capable of winning it all," said Garvey. "It's just been a matter of everything coming together for us. It didn't last season, but it has this time."

"I feel good about our first half," said Smith, "not only the fact we're tied for first, but also with the way we've played. We've been a battling, aggressive club. I hope we can keep it up and I see no reason why we can't."

While Lasorda and the rest of the Dodgers would probably prefer running away with the division title, second baseman Davey Lopes wants a tighter race.

U.S. Women's Open tees off today

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Nancy Lopez-Melton says this year's U.S. Women's Open Golf Championship, $140,000 event which began today, may take a longball hitter with a flare for cutting corners to win the Open. Lopez-Melton agrees — to a point.

"I think it's a good golf course for the long hitters ... if they can be patient and not want to pull a driver out of their bags every time," she said. "But it's not always the straight shot off the tee that's going to be the one that works for you out here. You've got to be able to fade the ball, draw it off a little."

"The player who can play here is the player who can hit her iron shots. It's the type of golf course where you want position, not distance."

"I think it may come down to the putting," the 23-year-old golfing professional said Wednesday.

Host pro Joe Taggart said several weeks ago it would take a longball hitter with a flare for cutting corners to win the Open. Lopez-Melton agrees — to a point.

"I think it's a good golf course for the long hitters ... if they can be patient and not want to pull a driver out of their bags every time," she said. "But it's not always the straight shot off the tee that's going to be the one that works for you out here. You've got to be able to fade the ball, draw it off a little."

"The player who can play here is the player who can hit her iron shots. It's the type of golf course where you want position, not distance."

For a time this year, Lopez-Melton felt she wasn't achieving. Known for the rhythm of her golf swing and her ability to drive the ball into the next county, she somehow altered her stroke in such a way that it sent her score soaring instead of the ball.

During an LPGA tour event May 16-18 at Clifton, N.J., she carded a very unLopez-like round of 83.

"Because there's so much pressure in the Open, you've got to have a good mental game coming in, and not worry about anything else. If I would have played the Open two months ago, I would have had a big problem," she said. "I feel like my confidence is going strong. I've got my swing back and I'm feeling good."

Killanin remembers gloomy prophecy

MOSCOW (AP) — Lord Killanin, about to preside over the most troubled Olympic Games of all, looked back wistfully to 1972, when he took over from Avery Brundage as president of the International Olympic committee (IOC).

"Mr. Brundage made a gloomy prophecy to me," the 66-year-old Irish peer said.

"He said to me: 'Michael, I wish you luck. But there will not be an Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976. We have seen the last Olympic Games in Munich.'"

Killanin, who had just arrived in Moscow, gave a wry smile.

"I saw the Games of Montreal through," he said at a news conference. "And I hope to live until July 19, to see the opening ceremony of another Olympic Games in Moscow."

Killanin, who has piloted the Olympic movement through growing troubles during his eight years in office, steps down when the flame goes out on the Moscow Games.

He made no direct reference in his remarks at Moscow's new airport to the boycott of the Olympics led by the United States, following the Soviet military action in Afghanistan.

But Killanin made a cynical reference to bureaucracy in both the Soviet Union and the United States.

"The IOC has been sandwiched between two major powers," he said. "I have discovered the one thing the two major powers have in common is bureaucracy."

Ignaty Novikov, a deputy prime minister of the Soviet Union and Chairman of the Moscow Olympic Organizing Committee, sat expressionless beside Killanin as the IOC leader spoke.

If any move is to be made to discipline the U.S. Committee, and possibly move the Games from Los Angeles, it must be made at next week's meeting.

Rupert, of Camden, was suspended for a "flagrantly unsatisfactory ride" on Foxie Pleasure during a perfecta race July 3. The race resulted in an unusually low payoff despite a 4-1 shot finishing first and a 13-1 shot finishing second.

Anderson was suspended Tuesday because, officials said, he "didn't make the effort he should have" in the same race.

Boy blinded in incubator awarded court judgment

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today upheld a $1,173,334 judgment for a 10-year-old boy whose family said he was blinded shortly after birth because of too much oxygen in his incubator.

Without writing a new opinion, the court left standing a Waco court of civil appeals ruling for Russell Alan Spears of Pasadena. The Waco court held Air Shields Inc., maker of the C-86 Isolette in which Russell had been placed when born prematurely in 1970, must pay for the boy's blindness.

A Houston jury also found Southmore Hospital and Clinic of Pasadena was partly to blame, but the appeals court said Southmore's share of the judgment must be paid by Air Shields. Air Shields accounts for about 60 percent of the nationwide market for incubators.

Russell Spears was born a month prematurely and weighed two pounds three ounces when placed in the incubator. Oxygen was administered continuously through the incubator in a concentration of 32 percent to 40 percent.

As a result of the high concentration of oxygen for a long period of time, the court said, Russell developed retrolental fibroplasia (RLF), which blinded him permanently. The jury and the appeals court found that Air Shields knew at the time that oxygen concentrations of 30 percent to 40 percent could cause RLF if maintained long enough but failed to warn purchasers of the Isolette of this.

"Every manufacturer has a duty to warn of dangers in the use of its product," the court said.

Air Shields complained of the admission into evidence of a 15-minute motion picture of Russell at ages 2 and 6 moving about his home and yard.

"The pictures are factual and bore directly on questions concerning his life as a blind person, and in no way could be calculated to improperly influence the jury," the appeals court said.

Russell's parents also appealed because the jury's original award of $1,060,000 was reduced, based on a finding that Dr. Lionel Rothenberg, with whom the boy's parents settled out of court, was partly to blame.

They said Air Shields had failed to prove Rothenberg had been negligent in his post-natal care, but the Supreme Court also rejected their appeal.

Taxpayer group denounces chain letter campaign plot

DALLAS (AP) — The leader of disgruntled taxpayers' group in Dallas has angrily denounced a "chain reaction" letter campaign and disassociated his organization with the mailer.

Brad Bishop, operations chairman for the Tax Equality Association Party's efforts to force a tax referendum in Dallas, denied his group is allied in any way with an organization calling itself the League of Independent Voters and headed by freelance write Donald Ault.

Ault's group mailed 2,000 letters to Dallas area residents seeking donations and support from taxpayers. The letters solicit a $25 membership in the league and promise $10 to $12.50 for each additional participant that signs a tax relief petition and pays the $25 fee.

Each participant also is asked to obtain 100 letters and preaddressed labels and mail them, at his own expense, seeking the new members in exchange for the $10 to $12.50 payments.

Ault said his league "doesn't want to set up a referendum" but that the organization planned to turn over signatures collected to Bishop's Tax Equality Association Party.

"We don't want to set up a referendum, but I've talked to Brad (Bishop) several times and we'll turn over the names to them," Ault said.

However, Bishop irately denied having anything to do with the chain letter-like mailings that began last weekend.

"It looks as though they (the league) have made themselves a middle man when a middle man is not needed. If they're saying that, they never checked it through us," said Bishop.

"All of our workers volunteer their time and in no way would I have given any kind of indication that they could use our name for a plan that involved paying money for signatures. We won't have our name used to legitimize anything that group is doing," he said.

COOLING OFF DURING A HOT KID PONY SHOW PERFORMANCE, Heidi Phetteplace, 5, watches for more arena action while mother Neil Beth and older brother, Enoch, take advantage of a lull during the Kid Pony Show. Hot temperatures have not kept spectators away from the kids' rodeo the past three days, and officials are expecting tonight's opening performance of the Top O' Texas Rodeo to be a prelude to a successful season here. Performances are set for 8 p.m. tonight, Friday and Saturday.

Officials wary of nuclear Texas waste site proposal

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A legislative committee chairman says lawmakers will balk at creating a low-level radioactive waste disposal site in Texas next year unless its need is proven by an independent study.

Rep. Bill Caraway of Houston appeared Wednesday before the Standing Advisory Committee on Nuclear Energy of the Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council (TENRAC).

The House Select Committee on Urban Issues, which Caraway heads, has received considerable testimony about nuclear waste disposal.

Caraway said an organization with no ties either to the state or to private industry, such as Rice Center in Houston, should study issues surrounding the disposal issue before the 1981 Legislature convenes.

Key questions, he said, include whether a waste disposal site is needed at all and whether out-of-state nuclear trash should be accepted.

Out-of-state waste material "is going to be a very volatile political issue. ... I don't think Texans are going to accept that," Caraway said.

He said only an independent study in which the public has confidence can put to rest the kind of issues that will arise in the Legislature.

"We are going to have to have these points clarified or I don't see any legislation passing," he said.

Dr. Robert Bernstein, chief of the State Health Department, said Texas might not be in a radioactive waste disposal crisis yet, but there already is a danger some lab workers might be flushing nuclear garbage down the drain.

Bernstein was appointed chairman of a subcommittee that will draft a legislative proposal on low-level nuclear waste disposal for TENRAC.

"We clearly don't use the word, 'crisis,' but let's say we are heading that way," he said, adding that medical research and treatment are suffering because of a shortage of disposal sites.

He said he feared "you are going to have people in these smaller labs dumping stuff down the drain, and we may have some of that now."

Bernstein said he was convinced the 1981 Legislature must deal with the issue by establishing a state-owned storage site for low-level waste, possibly operated by a special authority such as the Gulf Coast Waste Disposal Authority.

David Lacker of Bernstein's staff said only three disposal sites now operate nationwide.

Natural gas consumption cut by utility companies urged by transport official

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas electric companies have had enough time to switch to alternate fuels and should rate a low priority for natural gas in times of shortages, according to a Valero Gas Transmission Co. official.

Chief Operating Officer Ellis Wind's testimony came in a statement prepared for a Texas Railroad Commission hearing on natural gas curtailments. The hearing, which opened Wednesday, is aimed at determining if the 1973 policy still in use should be updated.

Many gas-fired generating plants can switch to heating oil. A number of power companies have coal or lignite-fired boilers. Two nuclear generating plants are being built in Texas.

Under the 1973 curtailment policy, adopted as a result of the Arab oil embargo, electric power plants are spared curtailments to the extent that the electricity they generate is used for "human needs" customers such as hospitals, schools and homes.

The Valero proposal moves electric companies to a much lower priority, despite the human needs service. Wind said the proposal will "assure deliveries to small commercial and industrial customers who either lack alternate fuel capability or cannot economically burn other fuels." "These smaller customers suffer severe hardships when they must shut down their facilities due to fuel shortages," Wind said.

Wind said Valero curtailed some customers for 11.4 days last winter.

Howard Peterson, assistant director of the City of Austin Electric Department, said the city is pursuing alternate fuels, but still is not ready to face gas curtailments.

Austin has coal-fired facilities on line, but Peterson said they are not yet sufficient to make up for gas cut offs.

"In periods of curtailment Austin may not be able to meet its generation requirements with coal alone. Austin will have to burn more costly oil and, by doing so, will affect the country's balance of payment problem and will add to the nation's dependence on foreign sources for oil," said Peterson.

He said the current curtailment guidelines "best meet the needs" of Texans.

"However, in the future when Austin completes its building program, it would not oppose a reassessment of the curtailment priorities," he said.

DOE seeks $8 million from petro companies

DALLAS (AP) — Department of Energy regulators say 12 petroleum companies in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana overcharged customers by $8 million and must cough up the illegal gains.

The department has instituted a variety of legal actions against the 12 who are alleged to have violated federal price controls on crude oil and petroleum products.

A "notice of probable violation" — the first step in the administrative hearing procedure — was issued to Houston Oil & Minerals Corp., of Houston, for allegedly overcharging for crude oil from September 1973 through June 1978. DOE seeks to recover $3,928,949.

Murphy H. Baxter, a Houston producer, also received the DOE notice for crude oil sales made between September 1973 and August 1978. DOE claims he overcharged by $912,926.

DOE seeks $78,714.38 from Arkla Chemical Corp., a Shreveport, La., subsidiary of Louisiana Gas Co., for gasoline, diesel fuel, naphtha and kerosene sales made between November 1973 and January 1974.

Legal action also was initiated to recover $1,753,529 in alleged overcharges by APEXCO, a Tulsa, Okla., natural gas processor. The notice alleges that between September 1973 and Dec. 31, 1974, that APEXCO improperly calculated its selling prices for natural gas liquid products.

Another notice served on Louis Porter, doing business as DALCO Petroleum Inc., a Tulsa propane distributor, seeks recovery of $592,477 in alleged overcharges between November 1973 and March 31, 1974.

DOE further seeks to recover $285,567.73 from B.M. Hester, a Wichita Falls producer, for allegedly selling crude oil above the legal price between September 1973 and May 31, 1979.

In addition, DOE entered into consent orders totaling $230,000 with two Houston crude oil producers. Roy Huffington Inc., allegedly overcharged by $180,000 between September 1973 and Dec. 31, 1979.

This will be a year when you'll have more opportunities than usual to build and develop fresh beginnings. Many interesting personal advantages can be gained from experiences encountered during this cycle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Get off to a good start and don't fight the events as they unfold for you today. Something quite good comes from unusual and original sources. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph, which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Ask a lot of questions if you must, but depend upon both instinct and logic in making any important decisions today. Don't let others throw you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today is especially favored for beginning any new project, particularly if it deals with modern, updated principles. However, be careful how you allocate funds involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) In competitive situations you can come out far ahead of the other guy by seeking new procedures. Use your smarts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your intelligence and resourcefulness today will finally solve something that has been bugging you for a long time. Put these assets to work.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You may get an unusual opportunity to get involved in a new venture with someone today. It will be important to pull together if it is to succeed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Although you may not get the cooperation you had planned on today, good suggestions from others may not only save the day, but could result in a new start.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) It may not be problem-free, but you might get a brainstorm concerning something to do with your work or career that can be exceptionally good.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This could turn out to be an interesting day, when you hit it off quite well with someone new you meet. Don't, however, ignore your old pals.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A complete new way of handling a problem that has been bothering you may be found today. Give it a try. Chances are it will solve things beautifully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Although you like to do things in established ways, allow lots of room today for revision. You may be pleasantly surprised when new methods turn out better.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Concentrate on areas that could better your material well-being or security today. You're especially ingenious at developing ways to enhance them.

Carter plans third year of wage and price guidelines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is planning a third year of anti-inflation wage and price guidelines, despite acknowledging they have been "essentially powerless" against rising interest rates and oil and food costs and may be less useful because of the recession.

Robert Russell, director of the president's Council on Wage and Price Stability, pointed to a resurgence in wholesale prices last month and emphasized that "inflation certainly is not over."

The Labor Department reported Tuesday that wholesale prices rose 0.8 percent in June, more than in the previous two months — although energy prices fell for the first time since March 1978. The index for finished goods other than food and energy rose 1.1 percent in June.

"We must have continued restraint," Russell said. "We've had moderation in food and energy prices recently, but how long we can rely on that is worrisome."

The second year of the voluntary wage and price standards ends Sept. 30.

Russell warned that the underlying rate of inflation — which excludes food, energy and interest rates — will be at least 8 percent when recovery from the recession begins next year and a tax cut is expected to go into effect.

Moreover, the administration's mid-year budget review, due July 21, is expected to predict that consumer prices will rise at an annual rate of 11.9 percent in 1980 and 9.8 percent next year.

That same review is expected to predict an unemployment rate peaking at or near 8.5 percent, which means 8.9 million people out of work. The revised forecast is considerably higher than the administration's March prediction of 7.2 percent joblessness by year's end, but it still is somewhat more optimistic than projections of some private economists.

Russell, unveiling a detailed evaluation of the wage and price guidelines, conceded they have had limited effect to date in controlling crude oil price rises — which jumped 110 percent between early 1979 and early 1980 — or increases in mortgage interest rates.

These two items were responsible for nearly half the inflation in 1979 and even more than that in the first three months of 1980, when consumer prices were rising at an annual rate exceeding 18 percent, Russell said.

But even with these limitations, Russell said, the voluntary guidelines have held down price increases and wage demands.

In other economic news Tuesday, Assistant Treasury Secretary C. Fred Bergsten said that despite recent large trade deficits, the nation's export performance is "considerably stronger" than most observers recognize.

President Carter, meeting with auto industry representatives in Detroit on his way to Japan, stopped short of supporting import controls. Instead, he promised to speed up consideration of a trade complaint aimed at reducing auto imports.

Smugglers suffered with aliens

AJO, Ariz. (AP) — A grave blunder by four smugglers — not a cruel scheme — may have caused the tragedy in the Arizona desert where 13 people died in searing heat after a group of Salvadorans were spirited across the border.

One of the smugglers is believed to be among the dead. "They didn't have enough water," said Lt. Jack Garchow of the Pima County sheriff's department.

Interviews with the 14 survivors cast doubt on earlier reports that the smuggler-guides purposely abandoned the Salvadorans, he said. He said the guides suffered along with the aliens they had smuggled into the United States.

One of the four suspected smugglers probably is among the dead, Garchow said. Two of the alleged smugglers survived the ordeal and were in custody, and the fourth was among three or four from the party who remained unaccounted for Tuesday.

Two of the suspects, the victim and one survivor, are Mexican, and the nationalities of the other two were not immediately known, Garchow said.

Meanwhile, federal charges of illegal entry into the United States would be filed against all the survivors, Garchow said.

Three women remain in serious condition at New Cornelia Hospital here and one woman and 10 men are being held at the Pima County sheriff's station. The destination of the group was Los Angeles, he said.

A meeting here today was to determine what would be done with the 14 survivors.

One of the suspected smugglers, identified in The Arizona Republic as Mexican Mateo Preciado, 54, reportedly had been accused in a federal warrant of alien smuggling and aiding and abetting smuggling.

The paper also said the dead smuggler was Preciado's son, and that Preciado was the man who told his rescuers no other aliens were in the desert.

Unidentified border patrol agents were quoted in the paper as saying they did not believe the tragedy was the result of a blunder. But other initial reports of robbery and rape in the desert were denied Tuesday by investigators.

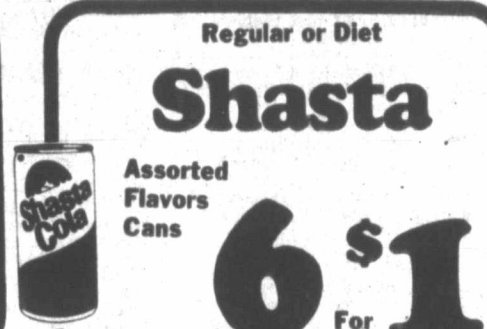

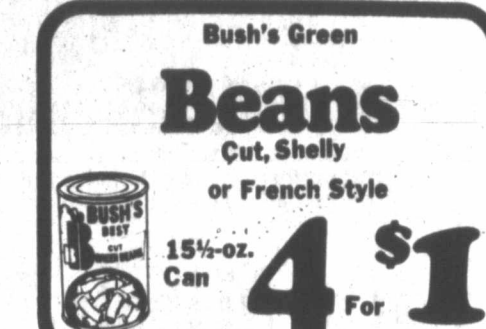

Consul General Hugh Stanley Orantes, who came from the consulate in Los Angeles to interview the survivors, discounted reports that some survivors said they did not want to return home for fear of being killed.

"There have been no such threats and I believe these may have originated from people who did not want to return because of economic conditions," Orantes said.

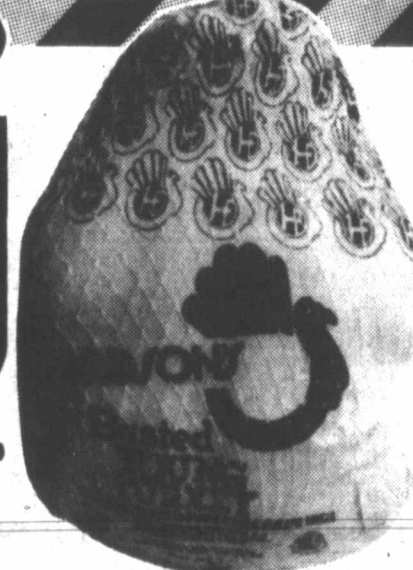

The consul general was to attend a 2 p.m. conference today with Border Patrol agents, sheriff's office and immigration officials on the fate of the surviving Salvadorans.

Information about robbery and rape was reported by some Border Patrol agents, but sheriff's deputies did not share the theory that the illegal aliens were abandoned, robbed and raped.

Asked about the reports of rape, Garchow said, "Apparently one woman felt that she would be raped, but decided later that she was not."

Keeping pace with Mitch Miller

By Norman Nadel

NEW YORK (NEA) - Suddenly I realized why the spacious, sun-lit living room overlooking Manhattan's Central Park felt so exuberantly crowded, with only the two of us. It was full of Mitch Miller.

There was Mitch of the moment, the nation's most popular conductor of symphonic pop concerts. Only days before his 69th birthday he was bright-eyed as ever, with his bearded face weathered not by the storms of life but by his joys. He was talking, gesturing, explaining, predicting, revealing facets of the most all-embracing musical personality of our time, without boastfulness or self-consciousness, only with the enthusiasm and mental agility which always have refused to be contained.

On the wall over the fireplace hung painter Waldo Peirce's serene oil, "Afternoon on an Oboe Player." The young musician, of course, is Mitch, 30 or 40 years ago; he and Peirce had neighboring properties in Rockland County, N.Y., and Mitch already was known as one of the finest oboists in America, if not in the world.

And in my thoughts, as well as in some of our conversation, was Mitch of (good heavens!) almost a half-century ago, in Rochester, N.Y., when he was playing first oboe in the Eastman School of Music's conducting orchestra, as it was called, and I, though still in high school, was first trombonist.

I felt like a pair of parentheses, bracketing this man's utterly astonishing career — or careers, more accurately. It seemed that every time we'd run into each other he'd been off on a different tack. Fresh out of Eastman he had toured as oboist with composer-conductor George Gershwin, then had played under the finest conductors, including Beecham, Goossens, Coates, Harty, Toscanini, Stokowski, Reiner and Stravinsky. His recordings of the oboe concertos of Mozart, Vaughan Williams and Ciaconas, and Sibelius' "The Swan of Tuonela," for English horn and orchestra are considered classics.

First with Mercury, then Columbia records, Mitch had developed a unique style for each of several singers:

MITCH MILLER at 69 is as bright-eyed as ever, with his bearded face weathered not by the storms of life but by his joys.

Rosemary Clooney, Guy Mitchell, Patti Page, Frankie Laine, Johnny Mathis and Tony Bennett, among others. Next came the "sing-along" records and "Sing-along with Mitch" for 3 1/2 record-breaking years on television. The records sold over 20 million copies. In two years as a Columbia Records executive, Mitch had moved the company from fourth to first in record sales.

In recent years, Miller has conducted almost every important orchestra in the United States. Whenever the late Arthur Fiedler was ill, which occurred with increasing frequency in the last couple of years, Miller was the only conductor whom the management of the Boston Pops Orchestra wanted to substitute for him. When Mitch was the replacement, there were no ticket returns and the Pops always played to a full house.

Under the circumstances, it shocked musicians and audiences when the Pops management not only did not sign Miller to succeed Fiedler, but did not even consider him. "They never asked me," he explains, adding, with a shrug, "maybe they thought I was too old." However, there is more youthfulness in Miller's programming and his rapport with audiences than seems to be the case with John Williams, 48, who got the Boston job. Mitch adds that "the pleasure of Boston included doing the television concerts. I had some ideas about music and TV I wanted to try, to make it more interesting. Most orchestras are photographed in such a way that people tend to lose interest in the visual aspect of the performance. I'd like to combine the music with the collection of an art museum, or with photography that would complement whatever was being played."

Actually, Miller was pioneering TV techniques when TV was still pioneering itself. "On the sing-along show I made use of the Chapman (motor-propelled) camera, which made people at home feel they were part of the chorus. I was the first to use close-ups of singers. We got letters: 'We don't want to see Leslie Uggams' tonsils.' But if you're going to get the emotional impact, you have to have that. Now everybody does it." Miller denies any magic in his musical innovations. "As far as I'm concerned," he interjects, "Stokowski was the only magical conductor I ever played under." He insists that his ideas reflected just good musicianship and good sense. His development of individual styles for pop singers is an example.

"I would spot their unique qualities and constantly remind each of them of whatever that quality might be," he recalls. "Rosemary Clooney had a kind of curvaceous lushness to her voice, which would show up once in a while. So when we'd play back the music I'd say: 'See the way you sound there? Now make the whole phrase with that sound.' They weren't trained musicians, and didn't know how to analyze their own voices. Johnny Mathis to this day doesn't sound the way he did when I recorded him. I would stand with him when he was singing, and hold my hand as a signal for him to hold the note in a certain way, so that he got that choirboy quality."

Pop concerts, in which the serious musical repertoire, Broadway show scores and popular standbys are combined, would seem to be the logical culmination of Mitch Miller's several careers. He insists that the first half of each of his concerts have substantial, though certainly not heavy, musical weight, with the frothier stuff later. He won't conduct a whole evening of, for example, musical theater compositions; the balance is essential to him.

Does he miss the classical musical diet with which he launched his career. "No," he answers, "popular music is just another piece of the pie. You play the music as musically as you can, whether it's a popular song or a Mozart symphony."

FATHER CHARGED WITH MURDER

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The stepfather of a 4-year-old girl who died after she apparently was beaten and sexually abused has been charged with murder, said Assistant District Attorney Bob Marshall.

The 30-year-old man, a resident of Germany, was held in the Tarrant County jail on $50,000 bond.

The suspect was arrested Sunday after his stepdaughter died at a local hospital. An autopsy showed the child had skull fractures, internal injuries and probably had been sexually molested.

Hunt testimony probed

DALLAS (AP) — Justice Department investigators are checking to see if the billionaire Hunt brothers or one of their former top aides lied to a congressional panel looking into the silver market crash, according to published reports.

The Dallas Morning News reported Tuesday that the Justice Department's criminal division has received transcripts of the Hunts' testimony before three congressional panels.

The transcript review apparently comes in response to a call by U.S. Rep. Ben Rosenthal, D-N.Y., for an investigation of the Hunts' testimony.

Rosenthal, chairman of a House subcommittee looking into the silver market crash, asked Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti last month to investigate the Hunts' statements after Bill Bledsoe, a former vice president of Hunt Energy Corp., contradicted several key points of their testimony.

Bledsoe said in a sworn deposition that Nelson Bunker Hunt and W. Herbert Hunt made "a concerted attempt to manipulate or control the world's supply of silver" and to drive the price up, which is a felony under the Commodity Exchange Act.

At one point in his sworn testimony, Herbert Hunt said: "Let me make it very clear. I look after my own investment in silver. I do not stay apprised of what my brothers own."

Herbert Hunt also denied any "joint venture or joint enterprise."

But Bledsoe disputed those statements when they were read to him.

"It's more than just having lunch together... The business of Hunt Energy Corporation, the first order of business, is silver."

Besides the three congressional panels, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission have been conducting investigations relating to the Hunts and the silver market.

Silver prices peaked at an unprecedented $50 an ounce in January, only to tumble to less than $11 an ounce on March 27.

Bledsoe also said Nelson Bunker Hunt once tried to have him arrange fraudulent tax shelters.

But the Hunts' attorneys have said a "substantial portion" of Bledsoe's testimony was "blatantly untrue," and referred to the former top aide as "a disgruntled former employee."

The two brothers were unsuccessful in recent attempts to convince a Dallas County grand jury to indict Bledsoe for allegedly defrauding them out of thousands of dollars in real estate commissions.

Transcripts of the Hunts' testimony before the House government operations subcommittee on commerce, consumer and monetary affairs; the Senate Agriculture subcommittee; and a House agriculture subcommittee were sent to the Justice Department, the newspaper quoted its Capitol Hill sources as saying.

Six killed trying to see Pope

FORTALEZA, Brazil (AP) — A surging crowd rushing to see Pope John Paul II trampled at least six people to death today at a soccer stadium in this Brazilian coastal city, officials reported. Another spectator died of a heart attack in the panic, they said.

Police were still trying to determine the exact number of deaths, and injuries were "in the area of 100," said Helio de Araujo Passos, a state government spokesman.

A reporter from TV Verdes Mares, the main local television station, said he saw the bodies of three women and a girl.

The tragedy occurred about two hours before the pontiff, on a 12-day visit to Brazil, was scheduled to arrive in this city of 1.2 million people to inaugurate a Eucharistic conference organized by this country's bishops. He was to ride to the stadium to greet the people of Fortaleza. State officials said the fatal rush of hundreds of spectators occurred either when the pressing crowd pushed down a door to the Castelao Stadium, or when the door was opened by stadium workers.

After the accident, the stadium was jammed to capacity with 120,000 persons, while thousands of others still milled outside trying to get in.

During the papal visit to Kinshasa, Zaire, in May, seven women and two children were trampled to death and 72 other people were injured in the crush to get into an open-air Mass celebrated by John Paul.

The pope had spent Tuesday night in the Brazilian city of Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon River, after a day in which he visited a leper colony.

Court rules family may sue city in jail death

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The widow and children of a man who died after setting his mattress afire in the Denton city jail are entitled to a jury trial of their $650,000 suit against the city, the Texas Supreme Court ruled today.

Without writing a new opinion, the court agreed with a decision of the 2nd Court of Civil Appeals in Fort Worth, that Denton is not exempt from a lawsuit.

Loretta Jane Forbus and her three children sued the city, as well as the mattress maker, after Jerry Forbus died in September 1975.

Forbus had been arrested for "suspicion of unacy" on Aug. 31, 1975. A jail search failed to disclose he had matches in his pocket. Angered when jailers refused to let him make some telephone calls, he set fire to his mattress. Forbus died 15 days later from his burns and from inhaling toxic fumes from the mattress.

Mrs. Forbus said the city should have provided flame retardant mattress and done a better job of searching Forbus. Denton won a district court judgment throwing out the suit but the court of civil appeals ordered a trial.

Denton claimed an exemption under a provision of state law that government bodies are immune to lawsuit for deaths or injuries resulting from civil disobedience.

But the appeals court said the kind of civil disobedience contemplated by the law was "commotions involving a large number of persons acting unlawfully in concert."

The city also claimed immunity under another provision that governments cannot be sued for injuries or deaths resulting from the method of providing police protection.

"The decision as to which particular type of mattress to use is incidental to the policy to provide a mattress. It is thus related to the implementation of a formulated policy and is not exempt from an attack on the grounds of negligence," the court said.

TEXAS BRIEFS

GARLAND, Texas (AP) — Golden Eagle Oil & Gas Service Co., an oil and gas lease lottery service, has filed a voluntary petition for liquidation under the federal bankruptcy act. The Garland-based firm, which terminated operations March 14, listed total assets of about $26,000 and total debts of more than $780,000. Of the debt, $569,000 is unsecured.

Golden Eagle was formed in August 1979. The management attributed Golden Eagle's failure to Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus' suspension of the federal oil and gas lease lottery system from March 9 to April 7 because of suspected fraud in the $35-million a year system.

DALLAS (AP) — A 5-year veteran of the Dallas County Sheriff's Department has gone on trial for allegedly spraying scalding water on a mentally disturbed prisoner in the county jail.

Testimony began Monday before an 11-member jury. The 12th juror was excused after she said she could not give the defendant, Raleigh Dale Pallett, a fair trial because she was prejudiced against law enforcement officers.

Pallett was indicted in February on a charge of violating the civil rights of Curtis Washington, 25, who was found in his jail cell earlier that month with second-degree burns on most of his body.

'Half dozen' recommended for summer reading fun

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Now is that lazy, hazy, happy time of year when the bee drones busily in the lilac bush, the smoke wafts enticingly from the barbecue grill and the columnist, rocking gently in his hammock beneath the tree of knowledge, draws up a summer reading list for his faithful followers.

A copout, certainly, but the hallowed custom has the dual advantage of lifting the reader's spirits with the sudden summer joy of books he or she might have overlooked, while at the same time relieving the resident seer at this end of the porch of the burden of finding something else to write about.

I have settled on six books to brighten what's left of anyone's vacation, a delectable half dozen to add a little cheer and the cooling breeze of culture to the dog days of summer. The list begins with "David Copperfield," since I have made it a rule in life each summer to re-read or perhaps catch up on some classic neglected or hurried through or read at the wrong age or under pressure during my formal schooling.

Best of all among the new crop of bestsellers I like "Maugham, a Biography" by Ted Morgan, who once worked for The Associated Press under his baptismal name of Sanche de Gramont.

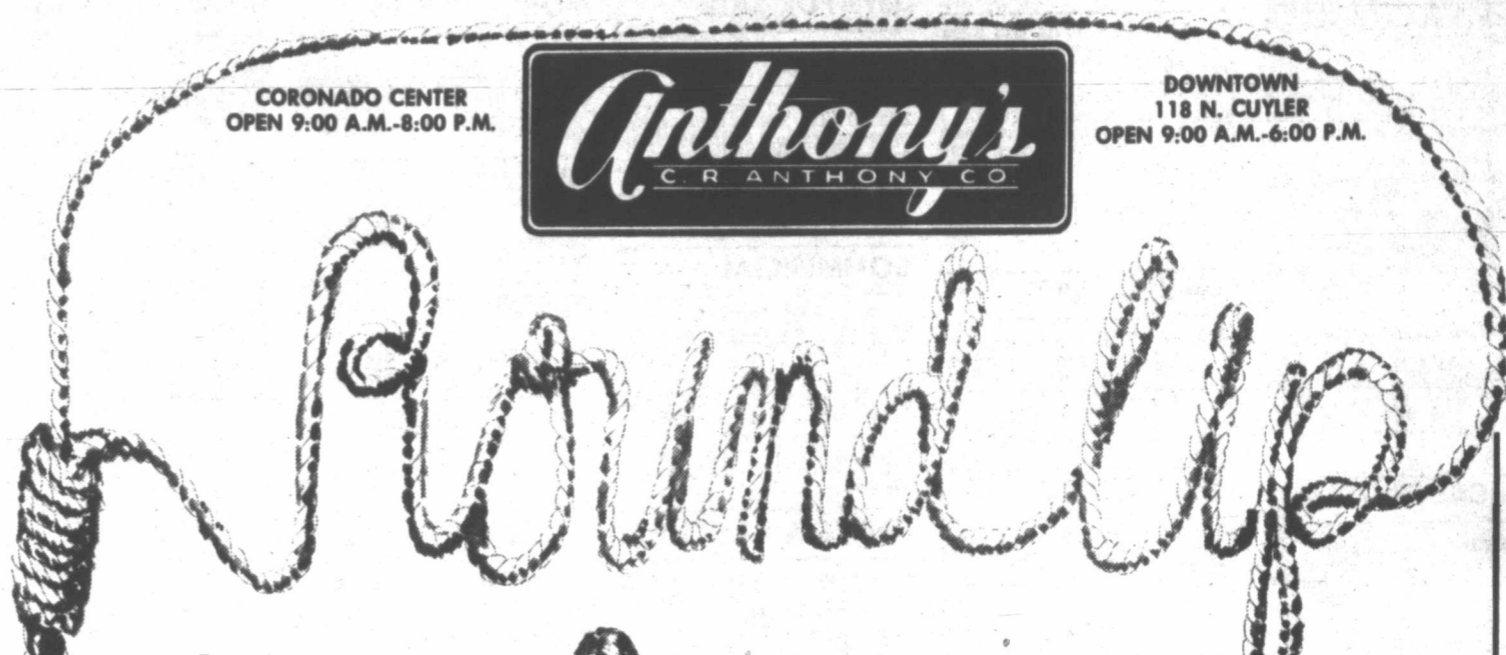

Also, try Maugham's "The Narrow Corner." In an exotic Southeast Asia setting, a sardonic, disbarred doctor and a delightfully dyspeptic scoundrel of a sea captain, afraid of nothing but his wife, observe together a torrid tropic romance. Great fun, marvelous Malaysian atmosphere.

For sheer enjoyment and English prose at its satiric best, discover or rediscover "Scoop" Evelyn Waugh's hilarious send-up of Fleet Street, the only great book ever written about foreign correspondents.
