Two youths 'serious' after motorcycle wreck

Two teenagers were seriously injured Sunday afternoon when the motorcycle they were riding collided with an automobile at the intersection of Kentucky and Duncan Streets.

James Kenneth Hawthorne, 18, of 1153 Prairie Dr. and 16-year-old Brett Manning of 887 W. Little York, Houston, are both listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit of St. Anthony's Hospital in Amarillo by a hospital spokesperson early today.

Manning, a passenger on the motorcycle, received massive head and internal injuries after being thrown 63 feet from the point of impact, investigating officer Jerry Holland said.

Hawthorne — who was thrown 40 feet — is suffering from two broken legs, head injuries and lacerations, Holland said.

According to police reports, the mishap occurred at 1:20 p.m. Sunday when a 1973 Ford Torino driven by Anna Melson Ross, 67, of 406 N. Warren pulled from a stop sign on Kentucky into the path of the on-coming motorcycle driven by Hawthorne. The motorcycle was traveling south on Duncan, police said.

The two vehicles collided, Holland said, knocking the Ford into a 1974 GMC camper pickup driven by Dossie Lee Nickell, 49, of 807 Lefors. The pickup had stopped at the stop sign on Kentucky facing east, he said.

The motorcycle riders were thrown over the hood of the Ford when they collided, Holland said.

The two injured men were taken by Metropolitan Ambulance to Highland General Hospital Emergency Room and were later transferred to Northwest Texas Hospital Emergency Center.

After receiving emergency treatment at Northwest Texas the injured teenagers were taken to St. Anthony's Hospital.

The drivers of the other vehicles, Ross and Nickell, were not injured in the mishap.

The motorcycle riders were not wearing helmets at the time of the accident, police said.

Shooting victim 'improved'

A Pampa man is "improved" today, according to a hospital spokesman, after suffering a gunshot wound in the abdomen from shots fired from a passing vehicle Saturday night.

Marcus Gonzales, 25, of 429 N. Starkweather is reported to be improving at Highland General Hospital early today by hospital personnel.

He was admitted to the facility in serious condition Saturday evening after being shot in the abdomen with a 22-caliber pistol fired from a passing vehicle.

Gonzales was standing in front of his residence when the shooting occurred shortly before 7 p.m. Saturday, police said.

A Pampa man remains in the Gray County jail and another city man is free on bond after they were arrested by city police and charged with aggravated assault in connection with the earlier shooting incident.

Johnny J. Rosalez, 22, of 216 E. Tuke and John Paul Smith, 23, of 210 Gillespie were arrested at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the intersection of Francis and Cuyler streets. The two were charged with aggravated assault.

Sunday, bond for Rosalez was set at $2,500 by Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge for one count of aggravated assault.

A total bond was set for Smith at $15,000 who was charged with aggravated assault, carrying a prohibited weapon and possession of a stolen weapon — $5,000 for each charge.

Rosalez is free on bail today, a spokesperson for the county said, while Smith remains in the county jail in lieu of bond.

Witnesses to the shooting told police seven or eight shots were fired from an older model blue Chevrolet. The injured man was taken to the hospital by a friend.

The shooting is believed by police to be connected with the stabbing murder of Roy Dario Rosalez, 20, of 216 E. Tuke in April of this year.

Felipe Miranda, 27, of 833 Wall was convicted of Rosalez's murder and sentenced to 20 years at the Texas Department of Corrections.

The case is presently under appeal.

Jimmy Rosalez is the brother of the slain man.

Weather

The weather forecast calls for a 30 percent chance of thunder showers this afternoon. Conditions will remain partly cloudy today with cooler afternoons.

Hurricane Allen moves across Caribbean

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — Hurricane Allen, packing winds up to 125 mph, tore into the Caribbean island of Barbados, ripping roofs off houses and flooding some coastal areas. It took aim at St. Lucia in the Windward chain but passed the island and moved over open Caribbean waters today.

There were no immediate reports of deaths or injuries from Allen, the season's first hurricane, but authorities said thousands were driven into public shelters and that houses in the northern and eastern parts of Barbados were heavily damaged.

The wind picked up corrugated sheets of metal used as fencing in Bridgetown and tossed them about. On the southeast coast, flood waters were reported three feet high.

Telephone communications to the area were knocked out when the storm passed Barbados shortly after midnight. In San Juan, Puerto Rico, telephone operators said they had been unable to reach any of the Lesser Antilles since coming on duty at midnight.

At 9 a.m., the U.S. National Weather Service in San Juan reported the center of the hurricane was near latitude 14.2 north, longitude 63.5 west, or about 170 miles west of St. Lucia and 350 miles southeast of San Juan.

It said the storm was moving in a direction slightly north of due west at about 20 mph, that a slight turn toward a west-northwesterly direction and a decrease in forward speed was likely during the next 24 hours, and that conditions favored further strengthening.

An amateur radio operator at the Barbados airport, monitored in Haiti, said there had been no loss of life and no serious injuries on the island. The radio operator, who said his name was Mack King, said five buildings had been knocked down and there was heavy flooding.

King said the airport was being reopened, although flights had not yet resumed. He said a 150-foot freighter was aground near Barbados's deepwater port.

A fragmentary report from an amateur radio operator in St. Lucia, whose identification could not be heard clearly, said several aircraft and some buildings at the island's modern Hewanorra Airport on the south coast had been damaged but there were no known fatalities or serious injuries.

Jose A. Colon, director of the weather service in San Juan, said that on its present track Allen would pass 175 miles south of Puerto Rico's south coast at 8 p.m. today, hitting the island with winds and rain that would be "nothing extraordinary."

Colon said weather service communications with the Windward Islands were out of service and he had no information on the area.

St. Lucia and nearby St. Vincent are newly-independent former British colonies. The weather service warned of torrential rains which could produce disastrous flash flooding, especially in mountainous regions of both islands, which are volcanic in origin.

Hurricane warnings also were in effect for Dominica, and the French island of Martinique, with gale warnings in effect for neighboring islands to the north and south. Small craft as far away as Puerto Rico were warned not to venture far from port.

The Windward Island chain has deep memories of the devastation caused to the tiny island nation of Dominica a year ago, when Hurricane David struck it head-on and blew apart much of the housing and nearly all of the banana crop on which that impoverished island depends. The island still has not completely restored its electricity and telephone service, and just last week its government asked the United States to continue reconstruction aid.

Weather officials said it would be about a week before the storm hit the United States, if at all.

As Allen blew down power lines in Barbados during the night, authorities cut the supply of electricity to most of the island. At the storm's peak, only three facilities on the island were receiving public power — a water pumping station, the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, and the Hilton Hotel.

Lord Carrington, the British foreign secretary, cut short a visit to Barbados to avoid being on the island when the storm hit. He left ahead of time for Venezuela, his next scheduled stop. Barbados, with a population of 250,000, is 700 miles northeast of Caracas, Venezuela.

At the Hotel Sandy Lane, where Carrington had been staying, General Manager Norbert Petersen reported swelling tides and fierce wind gusts Sunday night with tree branches breaking.

He said the 120 guests — most from the United States, Britain, Italy and Venezuela — had been moved to safer rooms away from the beach.

TODAY'S SATELLITE CLOUD PICTURE, recorded at 9 a.m. EDT, shows Hurricane Allen approximately 150 nautical miles west of the Lesser Antilles. The hurricane passed near the islands of Martinique, St. Lucia and Barbados during the night. The picture shows the eye of the storm which has maximum winds of 125 miles per hour.

Angry at student treatment

Iran threatens hostage trials

Iran's Parliament speaker, in angry reaction to the detention of Iranian students in the United States, declared today that the Parliament debate on the American hostages is being postponed and preparations for their trial as "spies" might soon begin, Tehran Radio reported.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr called on the detained Iranians, meanwhile, to resist deportation by U.S. authorities, "so that they have to drag you into the planes" if necessary.

Alleged police mistreatment of the 193 young Iranians, who were arrested during a demonstration last week in Washington, touched off a series of bitter protests in Iran, where many demanded that the threatened trial of the 52 American hostages as "spies" begin immediately.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has decreed that the fate of the hostages, who today began their 10th month in captivity, is in the hands of the Iranian Parliament, or Majlis. Almost 200 U.S. congressmen recently wrote to Majlis Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani asking that the issue be given top priority.

But today, speaking at the morning session of the Majlis, Rafsanjani was quoted as saying "Our reaction (to the Iranians' detention) is to postpone the discussion on the letter of the American congressmen. In this respect the Majlis has suggested a plan that the Supreme Judicial Council should be asked to prepare the grounds for the trial of the hostages."

The statement was reported by state-run Tehran radio in a broadcast monitored in London. It could not be determined immediately how firm the trial plans were.

Many members of the Islamic Republican Party, which controls the Majlis, favor putting the Americans on trial for alleged espionage, and then either "punishing" or expelling them.

The radio also quoted Bani-Sadr as saying in a letter to the Iranian Islamic Society in America and Canada that the U.S.-detained Iranians should "stand firm."

"If they are going to deport you, resist as far as possible, so that they have to drag you into the planes," he reportedly wrote.

Many of the detained Iranians, being held in New York prisons, are on a hunger strike.

U.S. officials said all 169 men held at a federal prison in New York State were examined Sunday by an Iranian doctor from New York City who found less than a half-dozen injuries, all of them minor. Officials said about 40 Iranians had been treated for the effects of their hunger strike and said charges injured demonstrators were locked up without treatment were "categorically untrue."

U.S. immigration authorities said deportation hearings could begin within a week for the 169, along with 20 Iranian women demonstrators held in a New York City federal detention center. Four other men are hospitalized — three in New York and one in Washington.

They were arrested in Washington on July 27 when their demonstration in support of Khomeini's regime turned into a violent confrontation with anti-Khomeini counter-demonstrators and police.

The Iranians' lawyers have charged the demonstrators were brutalized by police.

Carter rushing to complete Libya report

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, eager to get his side of the story before Congress and the public, is rushing to complete a report on his brother's Libyan connection as a special Senate committee begins hearings on the Billy Carter-Libyan affair.

Carter, in a precarious political position with the Democratic National Convention just a week away, said Sunday he hopes the report will put an end to weeks of rumors and revelations about White House involvement in the Billy Carter-Libyan matter.

After spending the weekend with top aides at his Camp David, Md., retreat, the president told reporters upon returning to Washington that the document was "just about" complete.

Alfred Moses, one of the lawyers working on the account, described it as "a full report to the Senate" containing no surprises. However, White House press secretary Jody Powell said the report would include some previously undisclosed documents to support the president's case.

"It should be delivered to the Senate late" today, Moses said. By that timetable, Carter then would hold a nationally televised, prime-time news conference this evening to answer questions about the report.

The special Senate committee was opening its public hearings today with a review of U.S.-Libyan relations.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., predicted the investigation will show "bad judgment and rather amateurish handling of foreign policy" in the Billy Carter case, but he said he doubted it would find evidence of wrongdoing by the president or his staff.

Billy Carter registered with the Justice Department three weeks ago as a representative of Libya and disclosed that he had received $220,000 in installments on a $500,000 loan.

One of the president's key political allies, Democratic National Chairman John C. White, tried Sunday to play down the political fallout.

"There's no fire. Not even any smoke. Just a lot of hot air," White said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., a member of the special Senate committee, urged the president to make sure his report is complete, even if it means delaying it.

"Rather than rushing to tell all on Monday — and risk a spate of denials and clarifications throughout the rest of the week — I would suggest that the president might do well to take his time until he is sure he has worked out the definitive version," Dole said.

Powell also alluded to that before joining Carter, Moses, White House counsel Lloyd Cutler and long-time Carter adviser Charles Kirbo at Camp David.

"What we have been dealing with here is a tremendous quantity of material and paperwork and peoples' recollections and the White House counsel's office has had to talk to a lot of people," the spokesman said. "They've had to have a lot of people combing back through records, notes. There is always a possibility that there is something that does not show up there."

Captives to hold reunion

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Lost Battalion of World War II — soldiers, sailors and Marines whose years in Japanese captivity forged a bond closer than brotherhood — will meet here to renew friendships and to honor their dead.

The 36th annual reunion is scheduled for Thursday through Saturday. It will be the first time the battalion has met in Austin.

Vice President J. M. Hicks of the Lost Battalion Association traces the name "Lost Battalion" to inquiries from angry wives who wanted to know where their husbands were.

The Lost Battalion consists of the 2nd Battalion, 131st Field Artillery, which was snared in Java when the Dutch Army surrendered to the Japanese on March 8, 1942, and survivors of the U.S.S. Houston, a heavy cruiser which was sunk in a fierce firefight in the Sunda Strait a week earlier.

These young men — many of them teen-agers — from the Great Depression had challenged the Japanese with 1918 Springfield rifles and, in the case of the Houston, mounted guns that ran out of ammunition near the end.

They came together in a POW camp known as Bicycle Camp in Batavia, Java. They seemingly had disappeared.

Beatings, hard labor and starvation took their toll as 166 of the 912 prisoners died in 3 1/2 years of captivity in POW camps throughout Asia, Java, Sumatra, Borneo, Singapore, Thailand, Burma, French Indochina and Japan.

Many of the men worked on "Death Railway" in Burma and Thailand.

"Wives up in arms went to Washington and asked the government, 'Where the hell are our husbands?'" Hicks, a former PFC in the 131st, recalled in an interview.

"I guess they're lost," was the government's reply as Hicks remembers the story. "I guess they're the 'Lost Battalion.'"

The first reunion was held in Wichita Falls in October 1945, before some of the men had even returned. It has been held every year since on the weekend nearest to V-J Day, Aug. 15.

"We have nothing to sell, and we're not trying to impress anybody," said Hicks, a retired Austin school teacher. "We draw strength from each other."

Executive Secretary Crayton Gordon of Fort Worth, former member of the 131st, keeps tabs on all moves and distributes new addresses three or four times a year.

Hicks carries a complete roster underneath his car seat. "These men are closer than my own brothers," said Hicks. "When you talk to your own brother, you don't get goose bumps."

Hicks himself credits a can of sweetened condensed milk and two buddies who forced fed him boiled grain with saving him from a possible fatal attack of malaria. He weighed 98 pounds at the time.

Their daily lives and attendance at the annual reunion testify to the continued closeness of the Lost Battalion.

"Give me 25 cents," Hicks proposed, nodding at a restaurant pay telephone, "and I could call one person, tell him I need $100,000 by morning, and he'd say, 'You'll have it.'"

"By the same token," he said, "if you need it, you've got one-half of what I've got."

In 1978 two Marines checked out of the hospital early to make the reunion. This year a former Army officer who had heart surgery and his wife, also seriously ill, paid the $100-a-couple registration fee.

"They'll be here," said Hicks.

A battalion member died at Jacksboro, Texas, recently and 43 others attended his funeral.

"If I dropped over dead at this table, 300 Lost Battalion members would know about it tomorrow," said Hicks.

A special battalion floral arrangement is sent to each funeral. Approximately 500 of the battalion are alive.

Hicks told of his recent urge to see another survivor in California. "I drove to San Antonio, caught an airplane and was in his house in San Francisco two hours later."

It was suggested that Hicks' long-distance phone bill must be astronomical, and he said, "I don't know, my wife pays it."

He noted, however, that most of the members are retired, with some affluent, and their retirement incomes are supplemented by monthly disability payments. "There's not one of us getting food stamps," he said.

Hicks reserved 175 rooms at a downtown hotel for the convention, and more than 200 former POWs registered from 25 states, the Philippines and Australia. The overflow will stay in another hotel.

"Some guys live from one year to the next for this convention," said Hicks. "Many plan their vacations around it. There's not another outfit in the country like us."

Senator Kennedy claiming victory

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, sounding more optimistic with each passing day, says he has the votes for an "open" Democratic National Convention — and for the party's nomination.

"I believe we'll have an open convention and our telephone surveys indicate that," Kennedy said at a political fund-raiser in Medford, Mass., on Sunday before returning to Washington.

"I'd expect your surveys would probably show that," he told reporters, some of whose organizations are canvassing delegates on their own.

Although Kennedy said he is taking things one step at a time, he also declared:

"I'm confident that with an open convention we can gain the nomination."

The statement was the most recent in a series of increasingly optimistic assessments of what is shaping up as a critical vote at the party convention.

Kennedy is hoping that a victory on the question of the convention rules will help propel him into the nomination despite the president's overwhelming lead in convention delegates.

Carter is backing a rule to require delegates to vote on the first nominating ballot for the candidate they were elected to support. If the rule is adopted, Carter's nomination is assured since he has far more than the 1,666 delegates needed.

But an aide to Kennedy, Richard Burke, said campaign volunteers had called between 700 and 800 pre-selected Carter delegates believed to be "soft" on the question of the rule. From that total, Burke said, 350 said they would vote for an open convention, some 100 others said they probably would and an additional 115 said they were possible converts.

The Kennedy campaign claims it already has 1,295 delegates of its own, slightly higher than The Associated Press count of 1,234.

IRS called off taxpayer cases

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Law Journal says the Internal Revenue Service has decided not to prosecute most tax evaders who cheat for less than $7,500 over three years — but the IRS is advising taxpayers not to press their luck.

"The jails are full of people who thought they knew what they could get away with," said an IRS spokesman, Leon Levine. He refused, however, to confirm or deny the report.

According to a copyright story in the Aug. 11 issue of the Journal, the IRS has told its agents not to pursue criminal prosecution of most tax cheaters unless underpayments average at least $2,500 a year for three straight years.

The policy, reportedly contained in a classified directive issued last month, provided the first written indication of dollar limits for tax prosecutions, according to the weekly publication for the legal profession.

Previously, there was only an unwritten policy that cases involving less than $1,000 in unpaid taxes would not be prosecuted, it said.

According to an unidentified source quoted by the Journal, the new policy allows for exceptions in the case of flagrant violators or celebrities whose cases might draw enough publicity to serve as a deterrent to ordinary taxpayers contemplating cheating.

"If they're going to look at a doctor, they'll want one who just wrote a popular diet book," the source said. "If they're going to look at an attorney, they'll want someone well-known, particularly a tax lawyer."

The guidelines do not cover most cases of tax underpayments, uncovered in routine audits, which are handled as civil matters. The new policy is only for criminal matters.

Mother says sons did no wrong

ARGYLE, Texas (AP) — President Carter's mother told a Texan her eldest son, the president, and her youngest son, Billy Carter, have done nothing improper in their dealings with Libya and the current furor is only a plot to deny the president re-election.

"All intellectual people know this was put out at this time to try to defeat Jimmy," Lillian Carter said Sunday during an open house at the Texas retreat of her daughter, evangelist Ruth Carter Stapleton.

She was questioned repeatedly about reports that Billy Carter acted improperly, without registering, as an agent for the Libyan government and that the uproar has damaged President Carter's chances for the Democratic presidential nomination next week.

"I think it (the Libyan controversy) is absolutely blown out of context," she said. "It's been blown sky-high. You see every day that he's done absolutely nothing wrong. It's going away day by day."

The whole issue, she contended, has been caused by "someone trying to cost Jimmy the election."

"It will all be cleared away before election day," she said, adding, "I believe this — I think Jimmy will get the nomination."

Mrs. Carter, 81, refused to answer questions about whether it was proper for Billy Carter to receive $220,000 from the Libyan government.

"Sorry, I have no comment," she said. "I will not answer political questions. That's Billy's business and Jimmy's business. It's certainly not mine."

She said she will attend the convention, but Billy will not, because of a Senate investigation into the Libyan matter scheduled to begin today in Washington.

Waste pit lawsuit moves to trial

PLAQUEMINE, La. (AP) — There appears to be no chance for an out-of-court settlement to the unwieldy lawsuit against a hazardous waste dump at Bayou Sorrell and scores of companies that used it or trucked chemicals to it, a state judge says.

But although the case is inching toward trial, district Judge Ian Claiborne says that won't come any time soon.

Claiborne refused last week to cross 71 companies whose wastes became part of the chemical mess from the list of 93 defendants, but said he expects those companies to try again.

"I don't want to give them any ideas, but at least one of their lawyers has said what he'd do. And when one of them does something, they'll all follow suit," he said.

The Bayou Sorrell dump is the one where chemical fumes killed Kirtley Jackson, 19, as he delivered wastes in 1978.

About 155 other residents of the Iberville Parish community claim in this $4 million suit that noxious odors and wastes seeping from the dump made them sick and damaged their property.

Claiborne would not estimate when the case may come to trial, but new hearings are apparently at least three months in the future.

In court papers explaining why he would not excuse the companies, Claiborne gave attorney Patrick Pendley 60 days to ask the defendants anything that might affect the need for a new amendment to his suit.

Pendley must then file a new petition setting out everything he alleged in the original suit and the four amendments he has filed so far, Claiborne said. He must be specific, the judge said, listing each piece of property involved and explaining how it was damaged.

Pendley is representing the 155 Bayou Sorrell residents who brought the suit.

The original suit says "obnoxious, repugnant and nauseous odors and substances ... have poisoned the atmosphere, inundated petitioners' homes; and, in general, have created unsanitary conditions in and around the homes of the petitioners," but it does not get down to specifics.

Once the new petition is filed, Claiborne said, the defendants will have another 30 days to file new pleadings, motions, or requests to be excused as defendants in the suit.

The request rejected last week was based on the claim by companies that used the dump that they gave up all responsibility for the wastes once the trucks of chemicals left their gates.

Claiborne rejected that claim, although he did not go as far as saying they had a duty to make sure the chemicals were dumped safely.

"From a procedural standpoint this case will be cumbersome to try and will, when it comes to trial, pre-empt an unusually large time segment in the Court's docket," Claiborne said in his introduction to that ruling.

Man beats charges after selling tax-free cigarettes on reservation

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — A man who was charged with violating tax laws by selling tax-free cigarettes on Indian lands in 1979 has reopened for business and says state and county officials are looking the other way.

But an Oklahoma Tax Commission spokesman and an assistant Osage County district attorney said they would be checking up on Jerry King.

King, a Samish Indian, was slapped with misdemeanor charges in 1979 when officers confiscated about $6,000 worth of cigarettes from his store. He claimed state officials have no power to enforce cigarette tax laws in Indian Country — land given to Indians by the federal government.

He said he paid about $2,400 in taxes to get the cigarettes back and reopened for business shortly thereafter.

King sells most popular brands for about $1.25 less a carton than most retail outlets.

"It seems like they (the Tax Commission) have just let things go along ... it seems the state pulled in its horns," he said.

But Marjorie Patmon, the commission's general counsel, said selling cigarettes tax-free still is a violation of state law and investigators will be checking on King's operation on an Osage County road near Bartlesville.

Osage County Assistant District Attorney Wayne Woodyard said prosecutors also will be investigating King's store.

A friend of King's, Jesse Mays, reportedly is selling tax-free cigarettes on Indian land in White Eagle.

But Kay County District Attorney Joe Wideman said he doesn't plan to prosecute because he doesn't feel he has jurisdiction in Indian Country.

GOVERNORS ON ISSUES AND ANSWERS. Four of the nation's governors attending the National Governor's Association Conference in Denver appeared on the ABC-TV program, "Issues and Answers." Sunday. Governors' meet political battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wrangling by partisans for President Carter, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and a phantom Democratic "unity" candidate is turning the annual meeting of the nation's governors into a battle of presidential politics.

The political intrigue at the 72nd annual meeting of the National Governors' Association is causing a stir because political heavyweights are doing the lobbying and doing it just the week before the Democratic National Convention in New York. It is also overshadowing the less glamorous but pressing state problems that the governors came here to discuss.

One group of lobbyists wants to lock up a second presidential nomination for Carter by getting the Democratic convention to adopt a rule tying delegates to the candidates they were selected to vote for in primaries and state party meetings.

Another wants to open the way for Kennedy by defeating the rule. A third group wants to defeat the rule, then dump both Carter and Kennedy.

Those speaking out on the so-called "open-convention" movement include Govs. Hugh Carey of New York and Richard Lamm of Colorado and former Wisconsin Gov. and Ambassador to Mexico Patrick Lucey. Being quieter, but very much in evidence, is Carter campaign chief Robert Strauss, who is leading what Carey calls the "White House shock troops" against an open convention.

Carey's salvo on the question was issued at a news conference Sunday. He said many of the party's candidates for lower offices are trailing Republicans in early polls and he attributes it in large part to Carter's own unpopularity.

"That's a dangerous condition, a dangerous situation," Carey said. "And that's why I feel that this is an issue that should be looked from the point of view of the entire party."

Other opponents to the loyalty rule predicted at the governors' opening sessions that a captive Democratic convention could split the party, cost Carter his job and maybe flush a lot of other Democrats down the tube with him.

Carter's defenders said the whole commotion was a fraud designed to salvage Kennedy's losing campaign, but those speaking out against the White House strategy outnumbered its friends and reached beyond the Kennedy camp.

Gov. Richard Lamm of Colorado, host to the three-day convention and an uncommitted delegate, said the stakes are so high that the Democrats cannot afford to field a "flawed candidate" for president.

Residents scared in 'toxic city'

WOBURN, Mass. (AP) — When she is especially upset, 26-year-old Jean Shure goes to work wearing a T-shirt with a bitter message printed across the front: "Woburn may be hazardous to your health."

Her job at the Woodcraft Supply Co. is 1,000 yards from an abandoned, three-quarter-acre pit. Some romantically call it a lagoon, but dried arsenic is so concentrated in it that two pounds of soil contain enough poison to kill five adults, health officials say.

Soil samples also have turned up various acids, antimony, chromium, formaldehyde, hexamine, lead, tin, zinc and tannery wastes such as cow and horse hides — and the search goes on.

Across the road, a pump sucks up potentially explosive methane gas seeping into another office building from wastes buried as long as a century ago. Tanneries, explosives and fertilizer factories have used the site since 1853.

Powdered arsenic and chromium wastes in the Industroplex industrial park still blow into the atmosphere. A consent decree, under which a contractor who owns some of the contaminated land agreed to cover it, is tied up in a court fight.

Meanwhile, barbed wire strung to keep youngsters and animals out of the area has proven useless, residents say.

"We're tired all the time," said Ms. Shure. "And we don't know why. We still eat outdoors on nice days. But we wonder if anything is happening to us."

Woburn has the highest cancer rate among Massachusetts communities of 20,000 or more, and the state Department of Public Health says Woburn's 569 cancer cases between 1969 and 1978 was 12 percent more than a community its size should have had. Between 1974 and 1978, the difference was 24 percent.

The city's 14 cases of childhood leukemia over 10 years — when five could be expected — have triggered a special study by the national Center for Disease Control. Results are due in October.

"The people are scared," said the Rev. Bruce Young, an Episcopal priest who is among those trying to determine what toxic wastes are doing to this community of 37,000 located 12 miles north of Boston.

Cancer, arsenic and methane are only part of Woburn's litany of toxic troubles, which also include:

—Trichloroethylene, a commercial solvent suspected of causing cancer, in two wells serving the east side of town. They were closed.

—Tetrachloroethylene, also a cancer-causing suspect, in the vinyl lining of the town's water pipes.

—Radioactive material dumped in the industrial park area.

"You name it," said Young. "We've got it."

In addition to state health officials and the CDC, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is also studying Woburn's problems.

"All these agencies take bows for finding it but not for doing anything about it," says Mayor Thomas H. Higgins. "I'm tired of surveys. I'm looking for solutions."

Brush fire burns 20,000 acres

SONORA (AP) — More than 100 volunteers, using hand sprayers, trucked-in water and bulldozers, battled for three days and saw more than 21,000 acres of pastureland destroyed before the finally controlled a range fire in West Texas.

Sonora Fire Chief Carl Teaff supervised the effort in 100-degree temperatures and winds whipping up to 35 mph.

"We were just lucky," Teaff said after the fire finally was brought under control Sunday afternoon. Teaff directed the efforts of about 60 volunteer firemen and about 50 civilians during the firefighting efforts.

The fire, which was dying Saturday until stiff prairie winds fanned smoldering grass back into flames, scorched 34 square miles of grasslands, estimated firefighter Ken Thorp. He made the estimate after making an aerial survey of the burned area in a private airplane.

"We have it under control now, but it'll burn for another 4 or 5 days in the middle," he said. "There's about 30 people still watching it with stock sprayers. That will probably dwindle to about 15 in a day or so."

His force of volunteers dug firebreaks around the flames with earth-moving equipment and used portable stock sprayers filled with water hauled from towns as far as 30 miles away.

Firefighters from Sonora, Ozona, El Dorado, Junction and Menard manned five bulldozers in their effort to choke off the blaze. Seven oilfield tank trucks ferried water to the remote area, located northeast of Sonora in West Central Texas.

Teaff said importing water is nothing new in the dry, flat country.

"We always have a problem with water. It's superdry," Teaff said. "We haven't had any rain except for a few sprinkles for six months."

Teaff said the fire started about 3 p.m. Friday when sparks from a welder's torch ignited pastureland on a ranch near Sonora.

Firefighters thought the blaze was contained early Saturday, but gusty winds sent it roaring out of control about 10 a.m.

Man kills three family members, shoots himself

HOUSTON (AP) — A 40-year-old Houston man ended a crime spree that included three murders, an abduction and an attempted rape by putting a bullet through his own head, deputies said.

Hugh Leon Tyner, described by relatives as "kind" and "sweet" was found dead Saturday on a dirt road by deputies from the Harris County Sheriff's Department.

Tyner's father, wife and son-in-law also died in the rampage, according to police.

Officers said Tyner came home early Saturday, after a family argument, went into the bedroom and shot his sleeping wife, Patricia Marie Mangham Tyner, 46, with a .25-caliber pistol, then shot his father, Hugh Leon Taylor Sr., 87, with the same weapon.

Sheriff's Lt. M.C. Schottie said there were more than 20 spent cartridges in the house.

"It looked like the guy was trying to use a machine gun," Schottie said. Pat Poole, 31, who was married to Mrs. Tyner's daughter by a previous marriage.

Tyner then drove to the home of his son-in-law, Pat Poole, 31, shot Poole once in the head and abducted a 15-year-old girl.

She was taken to a dirt road near Interstate 45, where Tyner tried to rape her, Schottie said. The girl was released, however, and called police.

Deputies said they found Tyner's body by following car tracks and footprints from Tyner's home.

Fighting the gas war

Motorists are using about 20 percent less gasoline than is available these days. The less gasoline we burn, the more independent we become.

The high price of gasoline and the recession are, of course, major reasons for the cutback in usage.

But, for whatever reasons, more and more Americans are making one trip in the car serve several missions. There is a lot less pleasure driving these days.

Last month the demand for gasoline dropped to its lowest level in nine years. Motorists consumed an estimated 6.69 million barrels of gasoline a day, down 2 percent from May. It was the smallest amount used since 6.45 million barrels were consumed daily in June 1971.

American motorists are doing a lot better than was anticipated when the gas shortage struck. But now is not the time to become more casual about burning gasoline.

Ask yourself, "Is this trip really necessary?" before turning that starter switch.

When animals practice on humans

In 1836 Peter Chaadayev, a famous Russian philosopher, wrote an uncompromising appraisal of his homeland in a well-read literary magazine. One of those who read Chaadayev's rather unpatriotic piece was Czar Nicholas I.

The czar concluded that this well-known citizen was insane. Chaadayev was immediately condemned to a mental hospital, which in those days was little more than a damp dungeon.

"Punitive Medicine," a book recently published by Karoma-Caroline House, reveals that little has changed since those days of the czar. Alexander Podrabinek, the author, is currently in Siberia, living out a sentence of internal exile for "slandering" the Soviet system. He must be happy about being in Siberia; he could have ended up in a mental hospital.

Like Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Podrabinek spends much of this time attempting to chronicle Soviet repression. Podrabinek, however, concentrates on the use of psychiatric medicine as an instrument of political control.

He began his research in 1972 when he was only 20 years old. For three years he worked as a medical assistant in the Moscow Ambulance Service, an inconspicuous method of entry into psychiatric hospitals. His book is invaluable in understanding how political despots can pervert medical science.

Although questioning the sanity of the political opposition did not flourish until after the death of Stalin, Podrabinek points out that it was a tactic used by the early Bolsheviks.

Maria Spiridonova, for example, was a leading member of the Socialist Revolutionary Party. In February 1919 she was sentenced by a revolutionary tribunal to one year in a sanatorium - for her own mental health, of course. Luckily she escaped before the sentence was carried out.

From the end of the Russian Civil War, about 1924, until the death of Stalin there was little reason to use mental hospitals as instruments of terror. The gang that ruled Russia was doing a good job without having to label the opposition crazy.

Since Stalin's death the situation has changed. Repression has become more sophisticated. It now includes extensive use of mental hospitals as a means of stifling dissent. In 1964, for example, a major general in the Soviet army was slapped into a mental hospital when he protested the anti-semitic trends he saw emerging in the Soviet leadership.

He was told he was crazy because the Russians had fought Hitler; therefore it was, according to his accusers, not rational to suggest the Russian leadership was anti-semitic. He has been in and out of mental institutions ever since.

Similar fates have been suffered by the few Soviet citizens courageous enough to protest the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Life in a Soviet mental hospital is far different from sitting calmly in a sun-drenched garden. "Punitive Medicine" contains pictures of some of the Soviet facilities. They are more like medieval dungeons than hospitals. Inside, "patients" suffer shock treatments and druggings far more brutal than physical torture; Solzhenitsyn calls it psychic murder.

The experimentation that goes on is so inhumane it has received criticism the world over. Alexander Ginzburg, the former Soviet prisoner who wrote the forward to "Punitive Medicine," labels the practice "Experiments by Animals on Human Beings."

If there is one lesson from all of this it is that medicine, especially psychiatric medicine, should be kept separate from political authority. It is something to keep in mind in an era when so many voices are calling for more government involvement in medicine.

And does that include sales tax?

And now for something completely different on the subject of dollars. Canada supposedly exists in some concern of eventually being absorbed by the United States. So a Toronto resident has come up with a novel suggestion for turning the concern to the profit of Canadians.

He is one Ben Pich, appropriately in real estate. According to a recent brief in the Wall Street Journal, he proposes nothing less than selling Canada outright to the United States. For $15.6 trillion. Which, he figures, split among all Canadians 18 and older would work out to $1 million each.

There's a precedent on the American side, he observes, since Manhattan Island, the Louisiana Territory and Alaska, among the more notable examples, were all acquired by purchase.

Canada, considering what's happened to the dollar since those transactions and even at the multi-trillion proposed price tag, would probably be the cheapest deal in real terms of all.

By Robert Walters
DETROIT (NEA) - The political mating of Ronald Reagan and George Bush is hardly a marriage made in heaven, but the Republican Party's national ticket could prove to be especially durable and popular in the forthcoming campaign.

As everyone who didn't sleep through the entire Republican National Convention knows by now, Bush was Reagan's second choice for a running mate, chosen only after the abrupt collapse of a torrid but brief political romance between Reagan and former President Gerald R. Ford.

In addition, the lack of any positive personal chemistry between Reagan and Bush suggests that they are something of a political "odd couple." But marriages of convenience are neither unknown nor unfeasible in contemporary campaigns.

When Reagan ran for his first term as governor of California in 1966, for example, he embraced an ideology perhaps more conservative than his current one—but he gracefully and readily bowed to the ticket-balancing exigencies of the time in campaigning against Robert H. Finch, the moderate Republican who was running for lieutenant governor.

Reagan's uneasiness with Bush—a man viewed by the GOP presidential nominee as too stiff and aloof—was an ill-kept secret throughout the primaries earlier this year.

Bush's inflexible performance during the Nashua, N.H., debate with Reagan already has become a major piece of 1980 campaign lore, but less publicized was a similar incident that occurred only hours before he was picked by Reagan for the GOP ticket.

The two men sat next to each other at a luncheon that day sponsored by the Polish-American community in nearby Hamtramck, Mich. Bush was so tense and nervous that he spilled soup on himself during the meal.

Indeed, before Bush went to the podium in the convention hall that evening to deliver a previously scheduled major address, he was informed that negotiations with Ford were well under way and probably would be successful—thus apparently scuttling his vice-presidential aspirations.

But the need to balance the Republican ticket was especially crucial this year, because Rep. John B. Anderson, R-Ill., threatened to attract moderate and progressive Republicans to his independent candidacy for the presidency.

"The addition of Ford to the ticket would have totally eliminated the Anderson problem," says one knowledgeable Republican insider. "Bush isn't quite that strong, but he'll cut Anderson off at the knees."

Ford might well have been on the Reagan ticket if he hadn't insisted upon the transfer of so much power and authority from the president to the vice-president in a Reagan-Ford administration.

"Ford wanted too much," says one senior member of the Reagan campaign staff. "The only thing left for Reagan would have been (the Interior Department's Bureau of Indian Affairs)."

Bush, on the other hand, offered himself to Reagan as a "team player" during a subtle but impressive campaign for the vice-presidential nomination conducted during the week prior to his selection.

While others striving to be Reagan's running mate—notably Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., were waging high-powered propaganda campaigns replete with rallies, petitions and a blizzard of promotional literature, Bush and his senior campaign staff were quietly yet effectively serving Reagan's cause.

On the second day of the convention, for example, Reagan's political operatives were faced with the threat of opposition to the proposed Republican platform from as many as 10 state delegations—a potential display of disunity the party was determined to avert.

When the Reagan forces traced a substantial portion of that dissent to delegates originally committed to Bush, he was called upon to aid in quelling the nascent uprising.

"Bush cracked heads," says one observer of what followed. "He made it very clear to his people that there were to be no platform fights on the convention floor because bigger things were at stake." (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

When the queen comes to town

by Paul Harvey

In the early American West it was really something when the stagecoach came to town.

Similarly, when the first paddlewheel steamboats came whistling 'round the bend, river towns converged at the dockside.

The pufferbelly railroad trains brought crowds to makeshift depots to gawk.

When the Super Chief was scheduled through Peoria, the trackside would be lined with spectators at any hour of the day or night—just to wave as the train sped by.

Airports, though remote from towns, hosted crowds to watch the first airliners land and take off.

In 1980 we have gone full circle; public fascination is with the riverboats again.

Along the Mississippi River from New Orleans to Minneapolis—and up the Ohio as far as Pittsburgh—it's a cause for celebration when "The Queen" comes to town.

The Mississippi Queen—newest, largest and finest of our nation's riverboats—and her elder sister ship, the Delta Queen, are incomparable attractions wherever they go.

For three years in a row the Harveys have re-experienced America's past and re-explored her historic waterways on one or another of those steamboats.

In every river town and at all the locks between, crowds converge to welcome "The Queen."

It's not just because there may be "celebrities" aboard—the boat is a celebrity!

To river people, most of whom have some sort of boat of their own, "Her Majesty" represents the utmost in luxury.

Only in their imaginations will most spectators ever see inside her staterooms and elegant dining room, ballroom and top-side swimming pool...but their imaginations build on the pictures they have seen.

It is never too late at night for mothers pushing baby carriages, children with parental dispensation and dads with flash-cameras to wait at dockside or locksides—sometimes for hours if the paddleboat is late.

Somebody from the bridge will return their greeting. Some sleepy-eyed passengers in their nighties will come out on deck to wave. At stopovers, the captain is respected, the passengers are pampered—but as I say—it is the boat which is the celebrity.

I remember one night when there had been delays afloat yet the entire town of Hannibal, Mo., remained awake for the near-midnight arrival of "The Queen." The crew responded with a calliope concert.

Sometimes the steamboat informally stops between towns, ties itself to riverside willow trees and lowers the gangplank for an imposing visit to a Louisiana plantation or some rural Iowa celebration.

Tugboats pushing barges, 12 at a time—oil upriver and grain down—are themselves celebrities of another sort.

But a hundred years dissolves and our country is young again and our problems are fathomable again when "The Queen" comes to town.

The SALT negotiator

By Anthony Harrigan

When high government officials resign, their activities often go unrecorded. They are out of the limelight. They often continue to occupy significant roles, however. The reasons for their policies in office frequently are clarified by their statements and associations in private life.

Consider the case of Paul Warnke. Remember him? He was director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in 1977 and 1978. He was the Carter administration's top negotiator with the Soviets on arms control. He negotiated the SALT II agreement which left the United States with the short end of the stick.

Mr. Warnke continues to be an important public figure whose activities are worth noting. Recently, I learned that Mr. Warnke is lecturing at the Washington School, a spinoff of the radical Institute for Policy Studies in the nation's capital.

It's interesting to run down the list of other faculty members who are on the teaching staff with Mr. Warnke. On the faculty are—

Isabel Letelier, wife of the murdered Chilean diplomat who served Castro's Cuba in Washington;

U.S. Rep. Ron Dellums of California, widely regarded as the most left-leaning member of Congress;

Jeremy Rifkin, former head of the radical People's Business Commission; Former Sen. James Abourezk, advocate for the Palestinian cause;

Karen DeYoung, deputy-foreign editor of the Washington Post who strongly boosted the Sandinista cause while reporting from Nicaragua;

Ivanhoe Donaldson, former member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

This, then, is the setting in which Mr. Warnke feels comfortable—in the bosom of an organization that is dedicated to the radical restructuring of American society and the dismantling of America's defenses.

In his frequent speeches around the country when he was in public office, Mr. Warnke endeavored to present himself as a moderate who supported a strong national security position. One couldn't be an advocate of strong national security policy for the United States and be given a platform by the Institute for Policy Studies. The IPS is on the far left end of the political spectrum, as the Heritage Foundation and congressional reports have made abundantly clear on many occasions.

The American people can be thankful that Mr. Warnke isn't in a key policy-making position any longer. One wonders, however, how many people on the IPS wavelength are still in high administration posts.

"That reminds me! We're out of cottage cheese."

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Why would an intelligent, good-looking, loving man encourage his 300-pound wife to overeat? He appears to adore her, and she seems eager to lose weight, yet between his adoration and her good intentions she has become one whale of a gal!

When they go to a movie, he buys her candy and popcorn. After the movie, he treats her to pizza. At potluck suppers, he brings her several pieces of pie!

This dear lady is my sister. She can't tie her own shoelaces, and I know relatives who hesitate to invite her to their homes for fear the springs in their chairs and sofas won't hold.

There is something funny going on here. I would like your evaluation of this situation.

CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: Unless one knows what is in the heart and head of her husband, it is impossible to evaluate the situation accurately. But one thing is certain: Offering fattening foods to a 300-pounder is tantamount to giving alcohol to an alcoholic or sugar to a diabetic. Your sister's husband is neither intelligent nor loving.

...

DEAR ABBY: I'm 29, male and unattached. For the last three months I've been talking on the telephone with a young lady whose firm does business with our firm. I really dig her voice and manner of speaking. She says she's 27 and single, and she sounds bright, sharp and witty.

I would really like to meet this chick and am considering asking her for a date.

The guy who lives with me says I'm crazy to take a chance — that she'll probably turn out to be a dog. What do you say?

INTRIGUED IN CHICAGO

DEAR INTRIGUED: Ask her anyway. If she's willing to date you sight unseen, she's risking as much as you. But don't get your hopes up. She may not dig you!

...

DEAR ABBY: How can conscientious parents keep children who are old enough to read from reading all those trashy girlie magazines they pick up at the newsstands? Our son is not quite 15, and some of the magazines we find in his room are pretty racy for a lad his age. Any suggestions will be greatly appreciated.

KANSAS CITY DAD

DEAR DAD: All adolescents have a normal curiosity that is satisfied in this way. A healthy, well-adjusted boy will pass through this stage unharmed in spite of the trash he reads. And so will your son. Don't make a big deal out of it. Just make sure you have plenty of good reading material available.

Then keep your eyes open. If your son appears to be overly preoccupied with trash to the exclusion of everything else, and his taste doesn't improve with maturity, he may need professional help.

Soviet pageantry marks closing of Olympics

MOSCOW (AP) — The first Olympics in a communist country ended in the same manner they began: with pageantry, pomp and unprecedented circumstances in the history of the Games.

No American team marched in the colorful, festive closing ceremony Sunday night because, for the first time since the Olympics were re-established in 1896, no American team came. The U.S. orchestrated a boycott to protest the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, and 35 other nations endorsed it by staying home.

In the closing parade, 16 teams demonstrated their own political protest by flying the five-ringed Olympic emblem instead of their national flags. As was the case in the opening ceremonies, these nations were: Australia, Andorra, Belgium, Great Britain, Denmark, Ireland, Spain, Italy, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Portugal, New Zealand, Puerto Rico, San Marino, France and Switzerland.

A representative selection of athletes — about 700 out of the 6,000 competitors — marched together in a group instead of country by country.

In a switch from its television coverage of the opening ceremonies July 19, Soviet TV did focus Sunday night on the maverick Olympic flags. The official in charge of televising the opening ceremonies had said at the time that to show the flags would have been as much a political statement as not showing them.

Lord Killanin, whose eight-year tenure as president of the International Olympic Committee ended with the closing ceremonies, also alluded to the boycott in his farewell speech.

"The Olympic Games must not be used for political purposes, especially when other political, economic or diplomatic means have not been tried," Killanin said as his speech was interrupted by applause from many of the 103,000 spectators at Lenin Stadium. "I only grieve for those who were not able to participate."

And before officially closing the Games of the XXII Olympiad, Killanin said: "I would ask the sportsmen of the world to unite in peace before a holocaust descends."

At 7:59 p.m., Killanin closed the Games, politically damaged but still a testament to the athletic prowess of Soviet athletes who won 80 golds and 197 total medals — both Olympic records.

"And in accordance with tradition," Killanin intoned, "I call on the youth of all countries to assemble four years from now in Los Angeles, there to celebrate with us the Games of the 23rd Olympiad."

The IOC bowed to the wishes of President Carter and did not fly the American flag, normal Olympic protocol symbolizing the host nation of the next Summer Games. Instead, Los Angeles' flag was raised. Ironically, this compromise was worked out after Soviet officials asked the IOC not to fly the U.S. flag for fear of aggravating East-West tensions over Afghanistan.

At 8:07, exactly on schedule, the Olympic flame was extinguished while fireworks exploded above the bowl-shaped stadium.

CARRYING ON. Cuba's Teofilo Stevenson carries his newly-conquered Soviet opponent Pyotr Zaev around the ring after Stevenson won the Olympic heavyweight championship match Saturday at the Moscow games. Cowboy's Lawless retires

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Reserve guard Burton Lawless announced Sunday he was retiring from the Dallas Cowboys to pursue private business interests in Texas.

"I thought about this last week," said Lawless, 26, who was entering his sixth NFL season. "I thought if I stayed and did the best I could I could get my mind right to play. But I couldn't."

"I don't want to be here; I want to be here wholeheartedly and my heart's just not in it."

Lawless, a second-round draft choice in 1975, was the first rookie starter in the Cowboys' offensive line since Ralph Neely in 1965.

Tenth inning home run propels Astros to victory

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

There's no place like home. Cesar Cedeno is looking forward to getting back to it. Don Robinson is still looking for it.

Cedeno hit a 10th-inning home run Sunday to propel Houston to a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets and back into first place in the National League West, one-half game ahead of Los Angeles. The Astros now head for a homestand in the Astrodome.

"We play much better at home in the Dome," said the 29-year-old Cedeno. "We have 60 games left, and how we do in those games will determine whether we win the West."

Robinson, meanwhile, couldn't find home in Pittsburgh. With the bases loaded in the sixth inning, the Pirates' pitcher walked his counterpart, San Diego's Bob Shirley, to force in the tie-breaking run as the Padres won 4-1 to complete a doubleheader sweep that dropped Pittsburgh two games behind first-place Montreal in the East. The Padres took the opener 5-2.

Elsewhere in the NL Sunday, Montreal edged Atlanta 6-5, St. Louis beat Los Angeles 4-1, Philadelphia ripped Cincinnati 8-4 and, in another doubleheader, Chicago beat San Francisco 3-2 twice.

Cedeno had missed the Astros' first two games in New York — both losses — with a bad back. "I took 15 minutes of batting practice and felt that I could go," he said. "I punched two hits to right field earlier and felt pretty good."

One of them was a third-inning single that produced the Astros' first run. Then came the game-winning homer on a two-strike pitch from Jeff Reardon.

"In late innings or extra innings with the score tied, no matter what the count is, I try to drive the ball for extra bases at least," Cedeno said.

Hall of fame inducts four members

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP)

— When Duke Snider was one of the "Boys of Summer" for the Brooklyn Dodgers in the 1950s, he was always being compared to two other classier center fielders in New York — Willie Mays of the Giants and Mickey Mantle of the Yankees.

The so-called "Duke of Flatbush" had his hard-line partisans, as much as the other two, and now he has his place with Mays and Mantle in the Hall of Fame.

The silver-haired Snider was among four people inducted into the Hall Sunday. The others included, Al Kaline, a 3,000-hit man for the Detroit Tigers, oldtime slugger Chuck Klein and Tom Yawkey, the popular longtime owner of the Boston Red Sox.

Two teammates of Snider's, pitchers Ralph Branca and Carl Erskine, were among some 3,000 people at this baseball shrine who watched the onetime

Brooklyn great thank former Dodger players, managers, the press and the fans for the honor.

In conjunction with the induction, Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn made reference to the three-sided argument that raged in New York during Snider's salad days.

"It was one of the rare times Casey Stengel was laconic when he was asked who was the better of the three center fielders," Kuhn pointed out.

"His answer was, he would take all three of them."

If Stengel had needed another outfielder, Kaline wouldn't have been a bad choice, either. Only the 10th player ever elected in his first year of eligibility, Kaline posted 3,007 hits in his fine career with the Tigers.

"This is the proudest moment of my life," said Kaline, who paid tribute to his wife, two sons, and father and mother who were in the audience.

Retired Detroit catcher Bill Freehan was the only Tiger teammate of Kaline's to attend the ceremonies in this bucolic community where baseball was supposedly invented in 1839.

Klein, the only man to collect 200 or more hits in his first six seasons, received the honor with his great nephew, Robert Klein, accepting for him.

"Entrance into the Hall means that Chuck will live on forever," said his great nephew.

Hall of Famer Ted Williams accepted the plaque for Yawkey, the late owner of the Red Sox.

"He was a man I loved," said Williams, "and a great sportsman."

Orioles trounce Twins 7-2

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The news is both good and bad for the Baltimore Orioles. The good news is that they are only 6½ games out in the American League East. The bad news is that they won't have the Minnesota Twins to kick around any more.

"We've stunk up Memorial Stadium every time we've come in here (Baltimore) the past two years," Minnesota Manager Gene Mauch said after the Orioles trounced the Twins 7-2 Sunday and finished the season series with a 10-2 bulge. "But we got about what we deserved. You don't get many breaks when you play lousy."

The Orioles, who have eight games with New York in the next two weeks, chipped another game off the lead when the Yankees were beaten by the Milwaukee Brewers 2-0.

Elsewhere, the Detroit Tigers edged the Seattle Mariners 4-3, the Chicago White Sox downed the Kansas City Royals 5-3, the Oakland A's pounded the Cleveland Indians 11-3 in the opener of a doubleheader but had their six-game winning streak snapped 4-2 in the nightcap, the Boston Red Sox held off the Texas Rangers 6-4 and the Toronto Blue Jays defeated the California Angels 3-1.

The Twins, who allowed four unearned runs in the weekend's two previous games, started the same way Sunday when shortstop Roy Smalley's two-out throwing error preceded Eddie Murray's 17th home run in the first inning.

Murray, who is hitting .378 since the All-Star break with five homers and 20 runs batted in, also had RBI singles in the third and fifth off loser Darrell Jackson, a former high school teammate in Los Angeles.

"I faced him once in a junior league exhibition," Murray said. "And I also faced him when I was about 10. We played in different parks and were always arguing about who was better."

Said Mauch: "You never know Murray's in the ballgame until you hit him the ball and he starts a double play or you hear the loud noise off his bat."

Brewers 2, Yankees 0
Dick Davis doubled home the go-ahead run in the fourth inning to back the three-hit, nine-strikeout pitching of Moose Haas as the Brewers salvaged the finale of a four-game series. The Brewers scored their other run in the seventh after singles by Paul Molitor and Don Money.

Fights over Miss Texas crown nothing new

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — When the 1980 Miss Texas crown was awarded in a courtroom instead of on the Tarrant County Convention Center stage, long-festering backstage complaints about the pageant turned into daily headlines.

The tawdry stories revealed in court — tales of minor cheating, backbiting and resentment of pageant officials by contestants and sponsors — marked a further step in the Texas pageant's evolution from a beauty contest to a high-stakes, high-pressure business.

"We just take the pageant more seriously than some other states," admits B. Don Magness, Miss Texas Pageant chairman and the target of most of the heated complaints.

"We work at it very hard," Magness said of the effort he expends grooming Miss Texas for the Miss America contest. "When we go up to Atlantic City, we go up there to win."

A woman earns the right to compete for the Miss Texas title, which carries a full college scholarship, a vintage sports car and a large cash prize as well as a ticket to the Miss America pageant, by winning local pageants licensed by the state contest.

And local pageant directors have complained privately about the Miss Texas contest every year for the past 10 years, charging favoritism.

Some years ago the El Paso pageant directors said Magness decided in advance which local winners would make the best Miss Texas, brought them to his suburban Fort Worth home and groomed them for weeks before the Texas pageant.

One of them, Miss Denton,

Shirley Cothran, eventually became Miss America of 1975. The El Paso people went public with their complaint and the El Paso franchise was revoked. There was no Miss El Paso at the 1980 Miss Texas Pageant.

The reigning Miss Houston, Lu Ann Caughey, is a two-year veteran of Miss Texas competition, but 1980 was her last shot.

"I'm never going back, never. And I'd never encourage it for anyone," she said.

Miss Caughey said favoritism was rampant, and that the judges had picked the top 10 finalists in time for evening gown rehearsals, hours before the official announcement.

"All the girls, all 69 of them, practiced once but the girls who turned out to be the top 10 practiced twice," she said.

"They must have thought we were dumb or something."

Everyone knew who the finalists were.

This year, the sponsors for Miss Dallas, Bobbie Lynn Candler, sued when their contestant finished second to Miss Lubbock, Terri Eoff. They claimed Miss Eoff ran overtime in the talent competition, gaining unfair advantage over other contestants, and did so with the tacit approval of Magness and other pageant officials.

Pageant attorneys retaliated with claims that Miss Candler had, herself, violated the rules by lying about her height and wearing the wrong style of shoe during a rehearsal.

After judge Hal Lattimore ruled against the suit, ordering Miss Eoff to keep her crown, Miss Dallas officials said Magness tried to make sure Miss Candler did not win, and even tried to keep her from entering her third Miss Texas competition.

"He didn't want me in the contest," Miss Candler said of Magness. "See, it's his hobby and passion in life to remake a girl for the Miss America Pageant. ... I think that's why he disfavored me. I was already prepared to go to Atlantic City. The only thing he might be able to do for me is help me with my wardrobe."

Magness' response to Miss Candler's accusation was a terse "No comment," but on the subject of grooming Miss Eoff for Atlantic City, he was enthusiastic about a project that will reach from hair — "I don't like it. It's too fluffy ... it can look better." — to toe.

"We'll buy her a new wardrobe, have her work with a coach on her talent — everything to get her ready," Magness said. "Her eyebrows in particular need help. They're not as I'd like them to be."

Names in the news

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet ballerina Ludmilla Vlasova spent three days last year trying to convince U.S. officials that she wanted to go home. Now the Bolshoi star says she wants to come to America after all.

Miss Vlasova says Soviet authorities have promised her she can leave the country and join her husband, Alexander Godunov, who defected to the United States during a Bolshoi tour.

Last August, a Soviet airliner was grounded for 73 hours at New York's Kennedy International Airport until U.S. officials were assured Miss Vlasova did not wish to stay with Godunov.

The ballerina said Saturday she speaks with her husband almost every day by telephone.

She said that although she had been promised permission to leave the Soviet Union, she had received no official notification.

SAN ONOFRE, Calif. (AP) — Richard Nixon said the stretch of beach near his former San Clemente home was great for sun worshippers — and some people who agree are baring all.

In 1971, Nixon, then president, ordered the federal government to give the 3.5-mile section of beach to the state of California. "This is a great beach for sunning," Nixon said.

Now it's a haven for nudists.

PARIS (AP) — Artur Rubinstein, 93, the virtuoso pianist, is reported in good condition at Hospital Foch de Suresnes, where he is being treated for a broken hip. Hospital officials said Sunday that Rubinstein was admitted last week and has been operated on with excellent results.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth's mother, a beloved figure in Britain, had a giant birthday bash three weeks ago. Her 80th birthday was today — and the ceremonies were a bit quieter.

The Queen Mother spent Sunday at her residence, Clarence House, in Sandringham and was to attend a ballet in her honor today at the Royal Opera House. On July 15, an outpouring of homage culminated in a service at St. Paul's Cathedral that was watched by millions.

The Queen Mother married King George VI in 1936. Her daughter, Elizabeth, became queen when King George died.

A fishing hut for a vacation home in Scotland was Queen Elizabeth's birthday present to her mother.

Agency nurses hold hospitals hostage

DALLAS (AP) — Private nursing agencies are holding hospitals hostage at $25 an hour for the service of a registered nurse, says the director of the Dallas-Fort Worth Hospital Council.

"It's just like the oil industry," said John Gavras, director of the council. "The hospitals need service, so they pay no matter how high the price goes."

At Parkland Hospital in Dallas, private agency nurses earn $13 to $16 an hour, and up to $25 an hour on holidays, Gavras said. Hospital nurses, by comparison, are paid an average of $7 an hour.

As the nursing shortage has grown increasingly critical, the number of private nursing agencies in the Dallas-Fort Worth area has increased from 24 to 68 during the last three years.

"A hospital makes a mistake when it hires its first private duty nurse," said Kent Norman, director of nurse recruitment at Parkland.

In the first six months of 1980, Parkland spent $1.3 million on private agency nurses compared with $1.7 million in all of 1979.

Higher rates, not increased usage, was the culprit in the phenomenal increase, Norman said.

Last week, Parkland announced abandoning the use of private agency nurses and forming its own pool of temporary and part-time nurses.

Norman estimated the hospital would save $500,000 a year with the new program.

However, some nurses who quit Parkland to protest cutting ties with the nursing agencies say it is poor working conditions and low wages that create nursing shortages and personnel problems for hospitals.

"Working conditions at hospitals are so bad nurses don't want to stay," said Carol Lubbers, one of three nurses who left Parkland.

Last week, Parkland announced abandoning the use of private agency nurses and forming its own pool of temporary and part-time nurses.

Norman estimated the hospital would save $500,000 a year with the new program.

However, some nurses who quit Parkland to protest cutting ties with the nursing agencies say it is poor working conditions and low wages that create nursing shortages and personnel problems for hospitals.

"Working conditions at hospitals are so bad nurses don't want to stay," said Carol Lubbers, one of three nurses who left Parkland.

Lloyd's may have to pay shipping settlement

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lloyds of London may have to pay $300 million in a claim for improperly insulated tanks in three methane carriers built at a shipyard here, the insurance company says.

That would be the biggest settlement in shipping history, the insurance company said.

The proposed settlement calls for Lloyds to pay $90 million as soon as an agreement is signed by various companies involved in litigation over the tankers, and $70 million a year for three years after that.

Lloyds, which provided insurance for construction risks, announced the settlement Friday but did not say who would get the money. Nor did any of the other companies involved.

The three tankers were built at Avondale Shipyards of New Orleans Inc., but the aluminum tanks were built and their insulation installed by Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp.

Both companies have denied fault since the problem was discovered in July 1979. Avondale, a subsidiary of the New York-based Ogden Corp., has sued Kaiser for more than $65 million in damages. The suit also asks return of about $74 million in payments to Kaiser.

In its 1979 annual report, Kaiser said it believes the suit is without merit.

Avondale and El Paso Co. of Houston, which ordered the vessels, also have sued Conch LNG, the French designers of the ship's containment system.

Ogden said the settlement is consistent with its expectations and will not hurt the company's financial position.

That statement said settlement negotiations should be completed by the third quarter of 1980, allowing the vessels to be moved from the shipyard and eliminating a "major and costly source of ongoing disruption."

El Paso said the insurance settlement is part of an overall agreement with Ogden and the U.S. Maritime Administration and will allow it to sell the ship hulls.

Lawyer ad rules too restrictive, ABA told

HONOLULU (AP) — Rules governing lawyer advertising are too restrictive and discourage the free flow of legal services information to consumers, the chairman of the American Bar Association commission on advertising contends.

Roger S. Bronsahan told ABA convention delegates meeting in Waikiki over the weekend that fewer restrictions on advertising for lawyers would be better for both lawyers and the public.

Bar associations now carry the burden of showing that restrictions are necessary to avoid real rather than imagined fears about the effects of lawyer advertising, Bronsahan said.

Not many lawyers have taken advantage of U.S. Supreme Court ruling which opened the door for advertising three years ago.

Quoting figures which show that only 7 percent of attorneys advertise, Bronsahan said lawyers have given in to peer pressure against advertising and the public impression that attorneys who advertise aren't very good at their job.

Good advertising can be effective in bringing in clients and educating the public about possible legal needs, he said.

Preliminary studies indicate, Bronsahan added, that fees for some services have been reduced in areas where advertising appeared.
