

Dr. Harris To Replace Dean Spies

AUSTIN, Aug. 3 (AP)—The controversy medical school of the University of Texas at Galveston operated under a new administration today, a step decreed by the board of regents in a plan to remove the institution from probation ordered by the American Medical Association.

Acting dean of the 350-student school was Dr. Titus Harris, professor of neuro-psychiatry assigned temporarily to replace Dean John W. Spies who was dismissed by the governing board Saturday.

Although Dr. Spies' contract had not expired, the regents did not pay him for the unexpired portion, University President Homer P. Rainey revealed.

Dr. Rainey announced he would go to Galveston Wednesday or Thursday in connection with readjustments to be made as a result of the board's action.

President Rainey announced the regents had made substantial progress toward selection of a medical-licensing board, a position created by the board after it investigated the medical board earlier this year.

Unremoved credits earned by students are in jeopardy. Dr. Rainey announced he would go to Galveston Wednesday or Thursday in connection with readjustments to be made as a result of the board's action.

tors with infantry and tanks supported by aircraft which bombed Soviet troop positions. Our troops firmly withstood the enemy pressure and flung them back to their original positions.

The Germans were dropping parachutists in some key regions across the Don and in addition the Russians reported finding Nazi spies by the dozen operating in that area. Fifty-five were executed in one sector.

Presumably these were fifth columnists. It was not clear immediately from what group of the Soviet peoples they had been recruited.

However, large German settlements had developed before the war in the German Volga area, a large section some 150 miles north and northeast of Stalingrad. Germans in this area were understood to have been rounded up and moved back from the potential battle area soon after the war started.

Moscow newspapers gave increasing space to demands for a second front to ease the strain on the Red army. The Communist party newspaper Pravda, declaring that "the danger in the south is more acute," said "the enemy is draining Germany and German-occupied countries to send all reserves into the fight."

British military quarters said in London that sixteen Nazi divisions had been transferred from France and the low countries to the Russian front, but added that this did not necessarily indicate a weakening of Germany's defenses to the west since the transferred troops had been replaced by other units.

These sources estimated that the Germans now have about 26 divisions (280,000 to 390,000 men) in France, Belgium and the Netherlands, exclusive of the troops in Norway.

In the air war across the English channel, one Northeastern English town was raided by daylight after German bombers made scattered overnight attacks on the industrial Midlands and East Anglia. London had a short night alarm but was not bombed, and damage altogether was described as light. Three raiding bombers were shot down from a total which the British estimated at not more than 20.

The Germans said Bedford, Harwich and Great Yarmouth were among the English towns attacked during the night.

Unfavorable weather over the continent interrupted the RAF's pounding of Germany. Spitfires attacked railway targets and barges in the low countries yesterday, however, after another night fight between British and German torpedo boats off Cherbourg. The British said they sank two German boats and got away while the Nazis fired upon their own craft in the excitement.

On the Egyptian front, land operations were limited to patrol skirmishes and artillery fire, but overhead, Allied fighters and bombers kept up their steady bombing and machine-gunning of the Axis communications and bases of supply.

"There was never one act of violence performed by the Silver Shirts," Pelley replied to a question from his counsel and he added, "they were not educated to do that sort of thing."

Christian asked Pelley as to his attitude prior to the entrance of United States into the war. Pelley replied he believed the United States "should keep out because it would be in a more powerful position when the time for settlement came."

He said his only intent in his writings was "to criticize the administration of the government."

PERSONALITY PLUS

"Ideal girl" of soldiers at Fort MacArthur, Calif., blonde Marjorie Woodworth, won title in personality contest.

DIVE BOMBERS

Germans were said to have left 2,000 head officers and men on the field after an attack, and a few miles away a detachment of Soviet marines were credited with killing 700 more Germans.

The Germans were trying desperately and in some places successfully to force more crossings on the Don near Tsilyansk and send other reserves to the units which have crossed to the south bank, the Russian reports reported.

Soviet bombers were reported active in raiding the pontoon bridges already set up by the Germans and Red army artillery units south of the river were making new crossings difficult and perilous.

The German plan in the Kuschevka-Salsk region appeared to be to fan out in all directions in an effort to cut off large Russian units to the east, west, and south.

On the upper reaches of the Don at Voronezh, the Germans counter-attacked six times in an attempt to regain positions snatched from them by the Red army, but were forced to retire, from dispatches said. The Russian seized two tactically important hills from the Germans, it was reported.

While the Russian reports indicated that the Nazi advance in the North Caucasus was slowing, there was little genuine encouragement in the latest dispatches from the battlefield.

Pravda printed on its foreign news page five stories on the possibility of a second front. More space was devoted to the activities of Yugoslav guerrillas than to the RAF's bombing of Germany or United States' raids on Japanese bases in China.

Rationing Of Fuel Oil Likely, No Fooling

By PETER EDSON
Rationing of fuel oil for 1,400,000 oil-burning home furnaces in 17 eastern seaboard states is the nastiest prospect for the coming winter.

If that is strong language and it scares a lot of these 1,400,000 oil-burning home owners into converting their furnaces to coal, well and good, that's the purpose.

Nobody in government wants to ration fuel oil. It is a headache of only slightly lesser severity than the headaches of gasoline or sugar rationing programs. But the way things are heading now, fuel oil rationing seems inevitable.

It is due to two circumstances. First, to a conflict of authority and responsibility among the various government agencies responsible for making the necessary decisions to increase and conserve the supply. Second, to the colossal quibbliness of the people in the threatened area, who have lazily refused to do anything at all to protect themselves against this shortage, in spite of repeated warnings.

For months the Office of Petroleum Co-ordinator, the Office of Price Administration and its divisions of civilian supply and rationing, the Office of Defense Transportation, the War Production Board, and the department of commerce have warned of this impending shortage and advised the people living in houses heated by fuel oil to convert their units to coal burning where that was possible. Furthermore, the Office of the Solid Fuel Co-ordinator has been staging a campaign all spring and summer urging people to put in their coal now so there would be no trouble about getting it in the fall and winter. And on top of all this, there has been the actual gasoline shortage, stuck like a bolt on the nose, to warn everyone that this fuel oil shortage was real and no phony.

PUBLIC APATHETIC
In spite of all this, the reaction of that portion of the public which should have been concerned has been an amazing lack of interest. The customary attitude has been, "Oh, let the other fellow convert." People who have found that conversion back to coal might cost from $50 to $75 have refused to make the expenditure, apparently waiting for a government subsidy. Others, who have cleaned up the old coal bin in the cellar, hesitate to convert it back into storage space for the winter. Some have been unable to get grates to re-install in their furnaces, formerly burned coal, due to a confusion of priorities and allocations of metal for manufacture of the grates which are necessary.

Best guesses are that only about two per cent, or 28,000 of the 1,400,000 oil burners in the eastern states have actually been converted to coal. The average oil-burning home furnace consumes about 2,000 gallons, or approximately 50 barrels of oil a year. That figures out to 70 million barrels to supply these eastern states in an average winter. At most, 60 per cent of this quantity now seems available. If oil rationing comes, therefore, the average home owner affected must expect to get only about 60 per cent of his usual 2,000 gallons, or 1,200 gallons.

RESERVES DWINDLE
In peacetime, it took 1.5 million barrels of all petroleum products per day to keep this eastern area going. By gas rationing, consumption has been cut down to one million barrels a day, a wonderful saving. But petroleum products coming into this area now by occasional tanker, by tank car, tank truck, barge, and pipeline total only 600,000 to 800,000 barrels a day. In other words, the east is using up its reserves at the rate of from 200,000 to 400,000 barrels a day. It doesn't take a dollar-a-year man or a government economist to tell you that you can't keep the kiddies warm this winter if that goes on very long. The solution lies in a concentrated program of the most drastic action from all government and private agencies in the next 30 to 60 days.

Decision on fuel oil rationing must come first from WPB. The rationing division of OPA does not want to ration fuel oil, but has made its preliminary studies and will be prepared to put in a fuel oil rationing program on schedule, even if it means reducing the existing four-gallon "A" gasoline ration to three gallons, in order to divert tank car capacity to hauling fuel oil. And it may be necessary to spread rationing of gasoline and fuel oil clear to the Mississippi river, to stretch supplies.

Anyway you look at it, it's going to be a cold winter.

WASHINGTON COLD WAVE
If fuel oil rationing is put into effect in the eastern states during the coming winter, here are some of the things people may be told

CHRISTIE LOSES SOMETHING

CHAPTER IX
THREE things—Tommy's letters to the family, Sandra's job, and the loss of Stephen's were the sparks that touched off the marital explosion.

Tommy's bitterness and his petty jealousy of Bart, smoldering always near the surface, were all too apparent in those brief notes from home. He didn't see much of Sandra, he wrote. Girls always went for insignias and stripes, and it didn't matter whether they were worn by single or married men. Girls were funny that way. Sandra gave Bart credit for landing it. Mrs. Colton said irritably: "I think Tommy has a right to be angry. Why should Bart waste any time with this girl, Bart has a wife, and if I do say so, a lovely one. I think all this is a reflection on you, Christie."

"All this?" Christie's tone was indignant. "I'm not sure what you mean. You know how Tommy takes me a minute to know why I got my job back. There I was—jobless, one day—and the next day called back. Mr. Wainwright told me someone in whom he had great confidence had confidence in me. This somebody told me I was too big and fine to listen to a lot of youthful and intolerant chatter. Funny thing, Christie, if I hadn't been so worried about Mother, I'd have wanted to stay fired."

"Stephen?"

"Yes. There's something I want to do. I appreciate what you did anyway. I think you are absolutely the most wonderful girl in the world."

His words were soothing to the open wound that was Christie's hurt pride. Stephen was a dear. He thought everything she did was right—wonderful. Bart didn't have a right to be so worried about Mother, I'd have wanted to stay fired.

"I simply won't let anybody create trouble between us," she told herself. But her heart was heavy as she thought of Sandra, who was in a position to see Bart so often, and who had no scruples about trespassing.

Christie plunged more deeply in war work. Red Cross, home defense, victory garden meetings. Jan told her she was running a race with her—to see which one would be the skinnier girl in the circus.

"And your eyes—they're not exactly filled with happiness, my dear sister," Jan said. "Wouldn't it be funny if you and I sat down and had a truth game. It might help, but we can't. We're not made that way."

"In the first World War, they always said 'c'est la guerre,'" Christie said slowly. "I guess it's still the war. It is upsetting a lot of people."

"You and Bart certainly picked the wrong time to be married. All you really knew about him was that he was good-looking and could dance."

"Ridiculous!" Christie spoke

impatiently. "I had been dating Bart three years."

"Oh, dating! The time you really find out about a man is when the kitchen sink smokes and the kitchen stove is stopped up. Those little minor things, my dear."

"Oh, hush," Christie said. "Bart was disappointed in her. Maybe marriage had proved dull and different from what he had expected. Maybe he would have been happier with some girl who was fun instead of a sober somebody who was taking the war seriously."

SHE was sitting in a little park across from the apartment the next Friday afternoon. Stephen found her there huddled under Jan's plaid coat—looking dejected and very much like a little girl.

"I'm a pretty good detective," Stephen said, smiling. "I didn't take me a minute to know why I got my job back. There I was—jobless, one day—and the next day called back. Mr. Wainwright told me someone in whom he had great confidence had confidence in me. This somebody told me I was too big and fine to listen to a lot of youthful and intolerant chatter. Funny thing, Christie, if I hadn't been so worried about Mother, I'd have wanted to stay fired."

"You and Bart certainly picked the wrong time to be married. All you really knew about him was that he was good-looking and could dance."

"Ridiculous!" Christie spoke

"I couldn't bear for you to be hurt," he said in a low tone.

Christie avoided his gaze, and they walked on slowly. She was troubled. She must be more casual in the future. Stephen had sounded—oh, well, romantic was the word.

TOMMY came home the following week-end.

He looked around Christie's small living room with critical eyes. "How does Bart like it?"

"Oh, fine," Christie answered, without animation.

"Not good, not bad—but if it suits you two, I guess it's okay. I thought I was coming in with Bart last Friday, but I didn't stand in with the Powers-Thal-Be, so I didn't get leave."

"But Bart didn't come home last week-end."

Tommy looked astonished. Then he laughed: "Don't hand me that casual stuff. It was Friday, the 13th. Remember now? Bart and Sandra were driving off and I reminded them what day it was. Bart said it was lucky for him no matter what numerals were tacked on the day, and Sandra said she took her luck where she found it. Remember now? Did you have any bad luck?"

"Yes, I remember," Christie said in a low tone. "Yes, I had some bad luck."

"What, for instance?"

"I lost something," Christie's voice choked.

She was fighting to be calm, to hold her head high until Tommy was gone. No use to let him know that he had pulled her world down for her in the last few moments.

"You are looking pretty low, Christie. Bart is, too. When I told him so, he threatened to pitch me out. He's soreheaded lately if I ever saw one. Have you had a row?"

"No," Christie whispered. "Please don't talk, Tommy. I can't bear any more."

She closed the door after him. She walked about, emptying the ash tray, moving an ornament on the mantel, stirring the fire. He had come home that day, but he had not come near her. He had been with Sandra. She could see them together. Sandra looking up at Bart, her dark hair like a cloud about her small face, her red poppy mouth lifted, her big dark eyes laughing at Bart.

"It didn't take her long," Christie thought, wildly. "I'll write him, I'll tell him I've found out there's someone else. He'll know what I mean. I'll offer him his freedom, and I'll say I want mine."

Pioneer Southwest Cattleman Passes

DALLAS, Aug. 3 (AP)—The burial of William Neeley Claxton, 88, pioneer Southwestern cattleman, will take place today near his old home at Hale center in Hale county, Tex. He died last Saturday.

He was born in Buck county, Pa., and educated at Cornell university. He came to Texas at the age of 20, dating his life from that time. He raised the cattle business in Shackelford county with Jim Holt.

The two men split their herd in 1886, and Claxton and a friend, Bill Landers, drove their cattle to the plains, settling near Bull Lake. He filed on land near Harris Camp later.

He married Miss Cornelia Ann Leonard, and they moved to Indian territory. Claxton made a run and got a claim near Blackwell after Oklahoma was opened to settlement.

He and Mrs. Claxton later returned to Texas and settled near Hale Center. They lived there until 1926, when they moved to Dallas after Claxton's retirement.

Survivors include the widow and four sons.

Japs May Have Reinforced Their Garrison

GENERAL MACARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Australia, Aug. 3 (AP)—The possibility that the Japanese have reinforced their garrison at Buna was acknowledged by an Allied spokesman today as General MacArthur's headquarters reported a renewal of savage fighting in the New Guinea jungles midway between that enemy base and Port Moresby.

The communique announcing the jungle fighting declared Allied troops had routed Japanese outposts near Kokoda, 60 miles east of Port Moresby, and said Allied bombers had set fire to enemy supply dumps in that area.

It was the first reference to the existence of such supply dumps, and an Allied spokesman said it was not impossible that Japanese had been moving men and equipment in from Lae—some 165 miles north of Buna.

There have been no indications, however, that the original force which the Japanese landed July 22 in the Buna area—estimated at not more than 2,500 men—has been reinforced by sea, the spokesman said.

In addition to attacking the supply dumps at Kokoda, Allied heavy and medium bombers pounded enemy positions near Buna. Japanese fighters rose to intercept the Allied planes and a hot fight ensued in which five of the enemy planes were shot down, General MacArthur's headquarters said.
