Planned Economy Defeats Own Ends

There are those who say they do not believe in socialism but do believe in such things as the Brannan plan for agriculture or the Ewing plan for health insurance. They are deluding themselves when they say this - and the danger is that they may be deluding others.

The advocates of the "planned economy," of which the two plans mentioned above are illustrations, believe in socialism whether they know it or not — for socialism and the planned economy are one and the

.. This fact was once set forth by Prime Minister Atlee of Great Britain. In the course of a speech he made this statement: "It is the function of socialism to control the blind economic forces that govern the affairs of man."

In making this statement, Mr. Atlee let the cat out of the bag . . . he revealed the fundamental beliefs of the proponents of socialism - that people are not capable of governing themselves and that natural laws should not be allowed to have free sway.

These beliefs, of course, are directly contrary to the whole philosophy of freedom which underlies our own constitutional republican form of government. Our government is based upon the belief that people are capable of governing themselves. Once we abandon that belief, we abandon all our gains of 175 years under this form of government.

Moreover, people who believe in freedom believe in the free sway of natural laws. They know that "the economic forces that govern the affairs of man" are anything but "blind"; they know that they are the most alive, wide-awake forces in the world, that they represent the combined intelligence of all the people all the time.

People who believe in freedom cannot accept the belief that a dictator or a prime minister and his cabinet or a president and his cabinet or any other small group of men can claim for themselves omniscient knowledge that will enable them to plan things for the people better than the people can plan things for themselves. Such a doctrine has never worked and never will work - for the simple reason that it is contrary to natural laws.

Try as man will — under dictatorship or socialism or communism or the planned economy in any form - he cannot repeal the laws of nature. Goethe well expressed this when he said, "Nature understands no jesting; she is always true, always serious, always severe; she is always right, and errors and faults are always those of man. The man incapable of appreciating her she despises and only to the apt, the pure, and the true, does she resign herself and reveal her secrets."

It is contrary to common sense to believe that any individual or group of individuals can be more interested in a person's welfare than he is interested in it himself - yet that is what the planned economy means. It means that everybody hews to a line, that everybody is encompassed within the plan, that individualism and freeuom are dead.

That it does not work in the practical sense, we have seen many clear illustrations. Great Britain accepted the planned economy in the nationalizing of her industries - and Great Britain has been brought to the brink of bankruptcy. The two main products of Argentina have always been wheat and meat. Now, after inaugurating the planned economy two or three years ago, Argentina is importing wheat and observing meatless days! We have seen the corruption and inefficiency from our own controls here in the U.S.A.

The planned economy defeats its own ends. Nature and freedom will not be denied.

The Best Poll

The new head of the Office of Price Stabilization is attempting to find out what the public in general thinks about price control, with special attention to the views of the housewife. This effort is in the nature of a poll.

In an editorial on the project, the Wall Street Journal said, "When Congress extended the price control law early this summer it cut down the powers of the price controllers in spite of frequent and urgent requests from the President for the opposite action. In an election year, Congressmen, especially the ones in the House, all of whom go before the voters, are hardly likely to take action which they don't think their constituents will like. In fact, the actions they take are the best sort of clue to what their constituents want.

"What they did about the price control law is thus the best poll we've got on what the people think about

Everybody wants lower prices — just as everybody wants higher incomes. But there is plenty of evidence that the public is at last learning that political controls over the economy can't produce much except confusior and dislocations and long enough continued scarcities and poorer goods. You can tell a man that the product his factory turns out must be sold for so much and no more - but you can't force him to continue to produce t if the price is too low to pay the bills and return a little profit. You can tell a storekeeper that this item and that must be sold to the consumer for so much and no more - but you can't make him stock it if the selling price isn't sufficient to make both ends meet.

It is perfectly clear that most Congressmen want fewer controls, not more. And Congress is the best barometer of grass roots sentiment we have.

Our National Wealth-Is It Increasing

I know of few subjects on which which is more important that voters understand than the question as to whether our national wealth increasing or decreasing. One of the clearest examinations of this subject I have come across is an article by Wm Chamberlin, Saratoga, Calif., as published in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle. An associate of Mr. Chamberlain asked him to amplify his assertion that the people are deceived regarding the increase in the wealth of the nation. Here is the letter he wrote on the subject. From here on Mr. Chamberlain is speaking:

BY WILLIAM CHAMBERLAIN Saratoga, Calif.

You wish me to amplify my re-cent suggestion that the American people labor under a misconception respecting the wealth of the nation. Since you desire it.I am now stating more specifically its nature and what I apprehend will be its consequences.

The misconception is the belief that despite the destruction of war and the postwar gifts to foreign governments the aggregate wealth of the people has made steady increase and suffered no diminution. The prevalence of this belief is attested by the books of account of the country's individuals, banks, and business institutions which support and confirm it. These private and corporate accounts reflect nothing of the waste and destruction of war nor of the fabulous gifts and benefactions which which followed. They record receipts of full value for everything supplied the government for destruction or alienation and for every service rendered. As a consequence they record in the aggregate great gains and profits as generated by war and policies of uncompensated property aliena-tion on a scale heretofore unknown in human affairs.

That which I propose is to point out how erroneous this belief is in respect to the nation as a whole as distinguished from the separate individual who may or may not be better off as his personal af-fairs may indicate. I shall also point out the dangerous character of this belief which underlies and prompts proposal and acceptance of vast and unwarranted spending programs one following the other in quick succession as the supposed wealth of the nation appears

You will not question that in the prosecution of the war and implementation of postwar policies, an immense quantity of the nation's material wealth, as-sembled, fabricated, and transported by the highly paid effort of tens of millions of persons, was destroyed or given away. Natural resources, ores and metals, oil, gas, coal, timber, sulphur and chemicals, even the fertility of the soil were unsparingly consumed. The destroyed things no longer exist. That given to foreign governments no longer forms part of our national store,

Neither will you question the statement that in terms of value the asset accounts of the individwal and corporate suppliers of these destroyed or alienated things reflect nothing of their disappear ance, that on the contrary record in the aggregate the receipt of a full equivalent in value plus profit for everything supplied and you question that they record as well the payment of billions of dollars of income, profits, and excess profits taxes upon the income and profits presumed to have been secured by owners in selling things to the Government for immediate destruction or alienation.

I now beg you to reflect upon this most interesting and inescap-able conclusion: Under our existing monetary and accounting theory and practice should that melancholy end be reached where the last item of the poeple's material wealth shall have been purchased by Government and destroyed or given away, the na-tion's books of account will record highest pinnacle of monetary worth and affluence.

Can it be doubted that there is consumer and destroyer of wealth, not its creator. Few, perhaps none have been as destructive as the last. Moreover, the material things given to foreign governments have disappeared from the nation's stock. So I do not hesitate to suggregate wealth of a people, as calculated from their books of account, is shown to have grown greater, despite war and fabulous benefactions, and when under their accounting practices their wealth must be shown to have become continually greater as property is purchased by government and immediately destroyed or alienated there is reason for pause and sober reflection.

There was just this bare announcement from the Pentagon. But behind it is one of the great individual dramatic stories of the Korean War.

For, with the official report of his death, it becomes possible identify Isbell as the "Old Colonel" whose courage and death were reported in a memorial dispatch by Milo Farneti, Associated Press war correspondent, from the Central Front

Farneti related that the colonel led an infantry charge of Triangle Hill, although it wasn't his job and, in the words of a captain, he "didn't have any damn business up there."

The dispatch could not indentify the colonel because censors held up the name.

The naming of Isbell had to wait until official notification moved through channels to his widow, Mrs. Masie Gwendolyn Gambrills, Md., and his father, William H. Isbell, Russell-

By Army standards, Isbell was an old man to be leading infantry-men up a fire-swept hill. But he was only 45.

Army records list him as a native of Houston, Tex., born March 21, 1907. In Korea, the captain recalled that 'the colonel said he had a Rebel flag and was going to pin it up there" on top of Tri-angle Hill.

Isnell was a West Point grad-

Newsman Farneti got the story of Isbell's death chiefly from M. Sgt. John Hanson, Thief River Falls, Minn.

Hanson's company of infantry was dug in below the crest of triangle Hill. The sergeant was n command because all scnior offiers had become casualties. Their orders were to take a trench at the crest. Quoting Hanson, Farneti re-

"The colonel came up and asked us where there was a kole big enough for him to sit in Then without saying anything, he walked to the top. "He looked in the trench and waved his pistol for us to come Chinks in the trench. "About 10 men scrambled up the slope after him. The colonel
