Studebaker, Meaker urge Pampanans to vote

The candidates for Ward I Commissioner agree that the outcome of the May 25 runoff election will boil down to how many people bother to cast a ballot.

"I have some new ads and new signs, and have people say they voted for me last time, but that doesn't mean anything," said Cleo Meaker, who is facing John Meaker had the second highest tabulation with 296 votes, or 31.76 percent of the total cast.

A third candidate, Gary L. Winton, collected 274 votes or 29.4 percent of the total cast.

The city charter and state guidelines mandate that a candidate must garner 51 percent of the vote to win the election outright, hence the runoff election. Early voting for the runoff starts on Monday.

The irony of a runoff election is not lost on the candidates, neither of whom has made a foray into politics previously. They both

New church driven by outreach

ANDREW GLOVER

Brothers C.J. and Ryan Frazier grew up in a church family. Eleven years ago, the two had envisioned starting a church together.

Years of discussion and dreaming has turned their vision into reality.

C.J. and Ryan have founded Paint This Town Red, looking to reach the community of Pampa through outreach.

C.J., who will be lead pastor, said that when he and Ryan were thinking about where their church would be, neither of them thought it would be Pampa.

"We through out ideas of where it could be," he said. "A place in New Mexico, places in Florida, or a place in Amarillo, maybe."

"In Christmas of 2010 came back for a visit because I lived here previously. The Lord continued to reignite that passion and the love I have for Pampa. It's kind of how it developed."

Executive pastor Ryan said they have a lot of people supporting them.

"We got about 25 people that have been supporting us the past three months, helping us raise money to move out here and helping us to get some funds to prepare to make equipment purchases," Frazier said. "Part of our big vision is to be outreach-driven in trying to purify the city."

Update: Light added at Hobart-Alcock junction

ARNIE AURELLANO

An operating signal has been installed at the intersection of Hobart and Alcock in place of the temporary four-way stop, Paul Braun of the Texas Department of Transportation said on Friday.

The four-way stop had been controlling traffic flow at the junction since the original stoplight was felled by high winds earlier in the week. The new traffic light is suspended with cables and is not intended to be a permanent fix.

Conditions worsen as AZ fire spreads

SPRINGVILLE, Ariz. (AP) — Smoke from a huge wildfire in eastern Arizona that has claimed more than 30 homes and forced nearly 10,000 people to flee has officials worried about serious health impacts to residents and firefighters as tiny particles of soot in the air reached "astronomical" levels.

"It was off the charts," Mark Shaffer of the Arizona Department of Environmental Quality said Friday night.

Calmer winds helped firefighters gain some ground, but also concentrated the sooty air, keeping it stagnant and raising pollution to levels not yet seen since the blaze began several weeks ago.

"We've got a serious potential health problem on our hands," Shaffer said. "When you get levels like this, it's off the map."

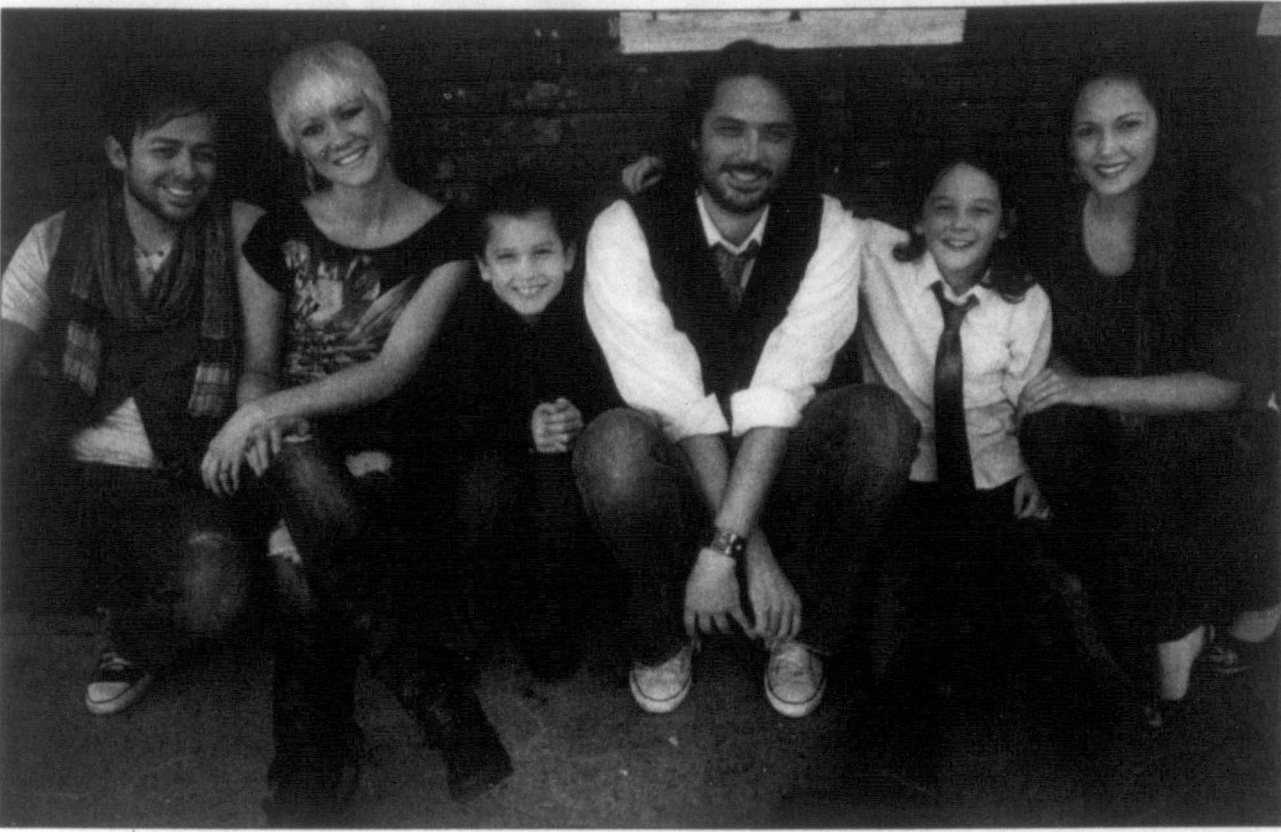

Officials planned to bring in more air quality monitoring equipment over the weekend, and warned people to just stay away.

Meanwhile, the blaze was poised to move into New Mexico on Saturday, pushed by stronger winds, threatening more towns and possibly endangering two major power lines that bring electricity from Arizona to West Texas.

The fire has burned 639 square miles of forest, an increase of 114 square miles from a day earlier, officials said.

"It's getting very, very close to the New Mexico state line," Jim Whittington, spokesman for the teams battling the fire. "This is really rugged country. There is a lot of potential for the fire to grow."

Outreach

C.J. said that their mission is to meet people's needs. "Gathering people once a week isn't really going to significantly impact the community," he said. "It's going to be on a day-to-day basis serving the people. Being out there loving people and loving the unlovable." Ryan agreed.

"Gatherings don't change cities," Ryan said. "It's people getting out in the city that changes the city."

The church has a website, www.paintthetownred.org, which includes a tool called "Meet the Need" where people can insert needs or what the church can potentially do to fulfill a need. Ryan said the hope is that this will help connect people to help one another out.

"They can go on there and say, I can't fix a house but I can pay for a roof," Ryan said. "We can connect all these people together. I think that's the biggest thing that stops community outreach. There's people that have a good heart and just don't know what to do with it."

Currently, the church doesn't have a building but is looking at a couple of possibilities. Ryan said they won't go into debt, allowing them to use their money to reach the community.

"We aren't going to take out a loan to buy a building," Ryan said. "The most we will do is pay rent... We are going to be a mobile church for the sake that we don't want to go into debt. We want to use the funds we raise to go back to the city and people and not put them into banks."

The brothers added that they want to get out in the community before they hold weekend gatherings.

"One of the visions we have is to help change the economy of this town," Ryan said. "As we bring beauty to the physical locations, hopefully it will increase property values and make people proud to live in this town."

C.J. said they have to act on what their vision of their church is. "I want to be the church that I want to see," Frazier said. "If I want to see the church do more outreach, I've got to do more outreach."

Ryan said their church will hopefully stand out because it's different.

"When somebody is in a house and see someone next to them with a group of people paying to have their house painted or roof fixed, that's attractive," he said. "There's 31 flavors of Baskin Robbins ice cream, and all we are is just a different flavor."

The church is already started on outreach and will start weekend gatherings on Saturday night. An official date hasn't been set, but the Fraziers are shooting for July.

acknowledge that the outcome of the upcoming election will amount to whomever can get the greatest turnout of people who voted for them in the first election.

"We aren't voting for mayor or any other Ward positions, so I think that makes it difficult to get voters to turn out," Studebaker said. "It is going to come down to who gets out and votes."

"I think people have their minds pretty well made up. I'm just trying to remind as many people as I can that the election is coming up on the 25th."

Meaker agreed. "That is really what it amounts to. The third candidate — how many of those votes will even turn out?"

"A lady asked me today, 'How do you think you are running?" I said, 'Ma'am, I won't have any idea until the election is over.'"

"Amarillo and a lot of cities, not just in Texas, have the same problems (as small towns) in getting people to turn out for municipal elections, and that turnout usually is low," Meaker added.

"It has been interesting," he continued. "I wish we did not have two wait so long between the election and the runoff. It seems to drag out a little bit, but I'm sure there are all kinds of people."

"Hopefully, people will get out and vote," Studebaker said. "You don't want (the election) to come down to just a handful of people."

AFTERNOONRUSH LULAC files suit over redistricting plan

Life for Waco drunk driver

WACO, Texas (AP) - A man has been sentenced to life in prison after being convicted of drunken driving - his ninth such charge since 1984.

Russell Don Sneed faced a minimum 25-year penalty when McLennan County jurors sentenced him in Waco on Thursday, a day after his conviction.

Defense attorney Melanie Walker had told jurors no one was seriously injured in last year's rollover accident and her client suffers from alcoholism.

However, prosecutor Lauren McLeod said alcoholism is no excuse for criminal behavior.

The Waco Tribune-Herald reports that the 52-year-old Sneed and his wife both testified that she was driving. Karroll Sneed told jurors she fled over fears of being jailed on misdemeanor warrants. Sneed said he took the blame out of concern for his wife, who had recently suffered a stroke.

AUSTIN (AP) - A Latino civil rights group on Friday combined its lawsuit to stop Republican-drafted redistricting plans with one by Hispanic lawmakers.

The League of United Latin American Citizens filed a motion Friday to join their suit with one originally filed by the Mexican American Legislative Caucus. The federal lawsuit alleges that proposed congressional and legislative redistricting plans diminish the voting power of Hispanic citizens in Texas.

The league, better known as LULAC, has brought hundreds of lawsuits over the last 40 years, most of them successful. LULAC testified against the new redistricting plan before the Legislature and submitted an alternative map. LULAC argues the Republican plan splits Hispanic communities so that conservative Anglos would be more likely to win seats in Congress, or packs Hispanics into other districts so that they can't influence other districts.

"The Texas Legislature has never, ever, successfully drawn a legislative redistricting plan since the Voting Rights Act came into Texas in 1975," said Luis Roberto Jr., LULAC's national general counsel, who filed the suit. "Texas is one of the most polarized states in the United States. People vote along racial lines."

The Republican lawmakers who drafted the new maps insist they are fair and legal but said they expected numerous lawsuits to challenge them.

At least six other suits have already been filed, but LULAC's history of winning makes theirs particularly significant.

The Legislature redraws congressional maps every ten years based on new census data. Because of the state's rapid growth Texas is adding four new congressional seats. More than 87 percent of the state's growth has been from minorities, leading civil rights activists to demand more representation for those groups.

Bush vets: Still time for Perry

AUSTIN (AP) - Gov. Rick Perry says he's considering a run for the White House, but the longest-serving Texas governor hasn't yet capitalized on Newt Gingrich's campaign implosion with a quick move into the GOP presidential field.

It doesn't matter, say several veteran fundraisers who helped former President George W. Bush break records as he vaulted from Texas to the White House.

They say there's still plenty of time for a candidate to get in the race even if he hasn't hired a staff, raised a dollar or made an official campaign trip to Iowa or New Hampshire. In fact, they argue, it could become an advantage for Perry, a conservative who has never lost an election.

TX gasoline prices slip 5 cents

IRVING (AP) - Retail gasoline prices in Texas have fallen for a fourth straight week, dropping 5 cents to average $3.58 a gallon.

AAA Texas on Thursday reported the average price per gallon nationally is also down 5 cents, reaching $3.73 this week.

The association says the declines are due to a recent drop in crude oil prices and a decline in U.S. retail gasoline demand.

The cheapest price at the pump in Texas is $3.50 a gallon in Beaumont. Amarillo has the state's most expensive gasoline, averaging $3.65 a gallon.

US rig count up by 1 to 1,855

HOUSTON (AP) - The number of rigs actively exploring for oil and natural gas in the U.S. rose by one this week to 1,855.

Houston-based drilling product provider Baker Hughes Inc. reported Friday that 969 rigs were exploring for oil and 879 for natural gas. Seven were listed as miscellaneous. A year ago, the rig count stood at 1,527.

Of the major oil- and gas-producing states, New Mexico gained seven rigs, Louisiana rose by six, Wyoming by four and Pennsylvania by three. Texas dropped 10 rigs, while Oklahoma decreased by four. North Dakota and Colorado each decreased by two. California and Alaska each dropped one. Arkansas and West Virginia remained unchanged.

The rig count peaked at 4,530 in 1981, the height of the oil boom. A low of 488 was recorded in 1999.

Exxon's TX refinery reports leak

HOUSTON (AP) - Exxon Mobil Corp. has told Texas environmental regulators there was an eight-week-long, 108,000-pound propylene release at the company's refinery complex near Houston.

Irving, Texas-based Exxon reported to regulators a tubing leak was discovered on June 2 in the chemical plant portion of the sprawling complex in Baytown. The leak was isolated within a half-hour, but Exxon says the leak may have started on April 12.

Propylene is a component of ground-level ozone. According to the report, Exxon isn't permitted to release any propylene at the olefins plant.

Exxon says it won't comment beyond the report it made to the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality.

300 rounds exchanged during Texas border shootout

SAN ANTONIO (AP) - U.S. law enforcement officials exchanged about 300 rounds of gunfire with suspected drug runners during a pre-dawn shootout across the Rio Grande, but only about six came from the suspects, authorities said Friday.

The Texas Department of Public Safety, whose Rangers were involved in the shootout, said such an overwhelming response was standard given the United States' zero tolerance policy when guns are pointed at its authorities. Department officials previously said the Americans were under "heavy fire," but they've since backed away from that.

The incident began about 6:30 a.m. Thursday, when U.S. Border Patrol agents spotted a Dodge Durango near the lightly populated border town of Abram, Texas, said Steve McCraw, director of the Department of Public Safety Director. He joined officials from Border Patrol and Texas Fish and Wildlife for a news conference Friday in Weslaco, roughly 250 miles south of San Antonio and just north of the river separating Mexico and the U.S.

Agents who gave chase found the truck abandoned on the banks of the Rio Grande, and a group of people on the Mexican shore unloading bundles of marijuana from rubber rafts, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Border Patrol agents say Mexican smugglers often use small, high-quality rafts to float drugs into U.S. territory, where they load them onto waiting vehicles to be taken farther north. Of late, however, smugglers wait with the rafts in American territory in case the vehicles are spotted and have to flee back to the river. There, they quickly put the drugs back onto the rafts and head back to Mexico to keep U.S. authorities from seizing the load.

That's what happened Thursday, the Department of Public Safety said, except U.S. authorities arrived in time to see a group of people who had already made it back to the Mexican side removing packets of marijuana from rafts.

The group threw rocks and shot "at least six" rounds at American agents, who responded by flooding the area with gunfire, the Department of Public Safety said. A U.S. Border Patrol boat was the first to arrive on the scene, followed by boats from Texas Parks and Wildlife and one belonging to the Texas Rangers, it said.

Authorities said they are still looking into how many Americans fired shots and what agencies they were from.

Three suspects on the Mexican side of the river were believed injured or killed, although authorities in that country were still working to confirm that. Two U.S. game wardens were treated for cuts and abrasions after being struck with rocks.

A video shot from a Department of Public Safety helicopter shows a blue raft with bundles of marijuana packed in plastic and burlap. Smoke is seen pouring from a small structure nearby, although what caused the fire is unclear.

U.S. authorities seized the Durango but found no drugs in it. They contacted authorities in Mexico, who seized about 400 pounds of marijuana on that side of the river and destroyed a raft left behind. No arrests were made.

The shootout happened near a part of the Rio Grande where Border Patrol agents seized about 1,200 pounds of marijuana on Wednesday.

In that incident, Border Patrol agents chased a black Chevy Silverado across U.S. territory as its driver sped back to the Rio Grande. There, about 20 people were waiting with rafts that likely had been used to move the drugs onto American soil moments earlier. The plan was to move the drugs back into Mexico, but the driver only had time to steer the truck partially into the river.

He and at least two passengers, as well as those on the bank, escaped into Mexico.

Since January 2010, the Department of Public Safety has tracked at least a dozen incidents of shots being fired from Mexico into Texas, with U.S. agents shooting back in some cases. No U.S. authorities have been reported hurt.

Residents near Texas nuke dump get health survey

LUBBOCK (AP) - Residents living near a low-level radioactive waste burial ground in West Texas will be asked to complete a health survey as part of a study commissioned by state officials.

State environmental and health officials have hired the University of North Texas to assess about 24,000 people who live within a 35-mile radius of Waste Control Specialists LLC's nuclear dump site in Andrews County near the New Mexico border.

University spokeswoman Leslie Wimmer said letters encouraging residents in Texas and in New Mexico to participate will go out in the next few days.

The survey, authorized in legislation in 2003, will provide a baseline health assessment before radioactive material is buried at the site later this year. Neither the questions nor the results will be made public, Wimmer said.

"The health survey is an appropriate safety precaution to take," Waste Control spokesman Chuck McDonald said Friday. "I think it's another example of the prudent approach the state has taken throughout this process."

Lawmakers agreed this year to let 36 other states to dispose of their low-level radioactive waste at the site. Previously, only the federal government, Texas and Vermont were authorized to dispose of radioactive waste there.

No radioactive waste is currently at the site. The waste that will be buried there includes workers' clothing, glass, metal and other materials now stored at nuclear power plants, hospitals, universities and research labs.

Environmentalists are concerned about the possible contamination of groundwater sources that lie 150 feet from the dump and close to the nation's largest aquifer. A recent report by Public Citizen

Texas says contamination of the Ogallala Aquifer would be devastating both economically and environmentally.

The survey, which residents can do over the phone or online, is a good start, said Tom "Smitty" Smith of the environmental group Public Citizen.

"The devil's in the details and the quality of the survey will be determined in its usefulness over time, both in terms of what's considered in the baseline but also in how the residents are tracked because most of us move several times in our lifetime," he said. "You often live someplace else when the cancer shows up."

The survey was put together by the university's Survey Research Center, the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality and the Texas Department of State Health Services.

E-mails show Palin eyeing VP slot in '08

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Much of the country was taken by surprise when Sarah Palin became the Republican vice presidential candidate in August 2008, but newly released emails show the little-known Alaska governor was angling for the slot months before Sen. John McCain asked her to join him on the GOP ticket.

Earlier that summer, Palin and her staff began pushing to find a larger audience for the governor, nudging the McCain campaign to notice her.

Palin and her staff talked excitedly on June 19 about plans to repeal Alaska's fuel tax. Ivy Frye, a longtime Palin aide and friend, said she would send details to McCain staffers when they became available.

"They're going to love it!" Frye wrote. "More vp talk is never a bad thing, whether you're considering vp or not. I still say President Palin sounds better tho..."

The glimpse into Palin's first 21 months as Alaska governor, from the time she took office to her ascension to GOP vice presidential candidate, came in more than 24,000 pages of emails released Friday by the state. Citizens and news organizations, including The Associated Press, first requested the emails during the 2008 White House race as they vetted a nominee whose political experience included less than one term as governor and a term as mayor of Wasilla, Alaska.

The emails showed that supporters across the country began suggesting to Palin that she would be a good vice presidential candidate as early as April. That attention increased after she appeared on conservative commentator Glenn Beck's Fox News show in early June.

"We have heard your name, along with our own Governor, mentioned as a possible vice-presidential candidate," wrote a person who identified himself as Ron Peters of Shreveport, La. "I think you could do a lot for the Republican Party and would be an outstanding choice. Is this within the realm of possibility?" Letters congratulating her on the birth of her son Trig poured in at the same time, even as Palin dealt with rumors that Bristol Palin, not the governor, was the baby's mother.

"Even at Trig's doc apt this morning his doc said that's out there (hopefully NOT in their medical community-world, but it's out there)," Palin wrote on April 22. "Bristol called again this afternoon asking if there's anything we can do to stop this, as she received two girlfriend-type calls today asking if it were true."

In June, Palin and her team were making final preparations on a letter about the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. She told one aide to make sure the letter was sent to newspapers across the country. Then she added in a follow-up email: "Pls also send to McCain and Obama's camps. Thanks."

Also in June, spokeswoman Meghan Stapleton sent Palin a draft of an op-ed piece carrying the governor's name that would be pitched to national publications "beginning with the New York Times." Palin responded the following day, writing: "Pls print."

Many reporters were already paying attention. A deputy press secretary told Palin in early June that she was fielding interview requests "on everything from polar bears to the VP buzz" from national media outlets, including The Wall Street Journal.

Three years later, Palin is among the top tier of potential 2012 presidential candidates in polls of Republican voters. Her recent bus tour of the Northeast fueled speculation about her national ambitions. She has said she has not yet decided whether she will run.

Within minutes of the emails' release on Friday, Palin tweeted a link to the website for "The Undeclared," a documentary about her time as governor and her arrival on the national political stage.

Her supporters, meanwhile, encouraged everyone to read the messages. "The emails detail a Governor hard at work," said Tim Crawford, the treasurer of her political action committee, Sarah PAC, in a prepared statement.

The nearly three-year delay in releasing the material has been attributed largely to the sheer volume. The emails were packed into six boxes, weighing 250 pounds in all, stacked in a small office in a complex of buildings near the state capitol in Juneau.

The emails were sent and received by Palin's personal and state email accounts, and the ones being released were deemed state business-related. Palin and top aides were known to communicate using private email accounts.

Lawyers went through every page to redact sensitive government information, and 2,275 pages were withheld for reasons including attorney-client, work product or executive privilege; an additional 140 pages were deemed to be "non-records," or unrelated to state business.

Palin's attorneys did not ask to withhold any emails for privacy concerns, said Linda Perez, who was in charge of coordinating the release.

As news organizations began vetting her record in 2008, Palin was accused of essentially turning over questions about her gubernatorial record to McCain's campaign managers, part of an ambitious GOP strategy to limit any embarrassing disclosures and carefully shape her image for voters.

Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich offered advice to a McCain-Palin campaign manager on how to blunt the impact of a September 2008 Washington Post report that she accepted $17,000 in per diem payments for time she spent at her Wasilla home.

Gingrich said the campaign should elaborate on its initial defense that Palin did not charge the state for money she could have collected to spend on her kids.

Palin also dealt with death threats. On Sept. 17, 2008, she forwarded a profanity-laced, threatening email from a man claiming to be a Juneau resident from her government account to two aides.

The release of the emails generated widespread interest online.

Many news organizations, including The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times and msnbc.com, began scanning and posting the emails on their websites throughout the day. The New York Times asked readers to join reporters in reviewing the documents. Tidbits of the emails were featured on blogs and Twitter.

Letter to the Editor

Hospital not in danger of closing

To the Editor:
In last Friday's edition of The Pampa News, there was an article on what transpired at the "Save the Hospital" Town Hall Meeting at the Junior High Thursday evening. As a non-participant, I can only respond to what I have read in the news and heard from the participants of the meeting. As the CEO of Pampa Regional Medical Center, my duty during the sale process is ensure we remain focused on the delivery of care to our patients, help retain the focus on appropriate due diligence processes and to answer any and all inquiries without prejudice to any interested party.

Since last Friday's article appeared, the hospital staff and the medical staff have been inundated with questions about the potential closure of the hospital or the impact of an acquisition by one of Amarillo's health care providers. First and foremost, the hospital is not in danger of closing. Secondly, any potential buyer has the right to represent their own plans or proposals and not have others opine or speculate about what will or won't happen under their ownership.

The future of the health care industry includes elements of uncertainty given the related factors of health care reform. The future of healthcare in Pampa will undoubtedly involve elements of risk accompanied by the inevitable difficult or tough choices; however, we can eliminate one element from the risk assessments and tough choices, fear.

In a previous letter to the editor, I attempted to allay any fears that the hospital is in danger of closing. Unfortunately, I must have missed that mark given the rumors floating throughout the community. Again I will state, PRMC is not in danger of closing and year-to-date has performed better than the preceding year. Our intention is to maintain the current course of action by increasing the volumes while practicing good, strong financial management. No matter who owns PRMC, volumes will remain a significant focus. Each party that is currently interested in PRMC will undoubtedly examine the risks and opportunities associated with ownership and have to answer the same question: "is the investment of millions of dollars worth the risk or does the risk outweigh the financial incentives of ownership?"

If any individual, group or business in Pampa or the surrounding area is interested in PRMC's current performance, please contact my office and I will share the performance data with you or your group/business. Call or email your concerns and I will respond to your inquiry. If we can deal with facts, I think everyone will be more knowledgeable and less fearful.

Steven Spielberg's Top Ten

Steven Spielberg has been an enduring name in American cinema for over five decades now. Ever since his directorial debut in 1964's "Firelight," the Spielberg name has been synonymous with pretty darn good movies.

With the critical success of this summer's "Super 8," the man continues his impressive cinematic winning streak. So today, I'd like to take a short stroll back through the Spiel's career with a list of Steven Spielberg's top ten contributions to the silver screen.

Of course, with his long and highly successful career, there are some films that were incredibly tough to leave off the list. The list also only includes movies he directed, wrote or produced and doesn't take into account the movies he starred or made cameos in ("The Blues Brothers," for example). Without further adieu, my ten best:

10. "True Grit," 2010

The newest movie on the list (Spielberg has a producer credit) marries the rough-as-horsehide western atmosphere of the novel with the Coen brothers' signature offbeat direction. Proof that classics can still be made in the 21st century.

9. "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," 1977

The movie that kicked off Spielberg's fascination with films about aliens. If you've ever seen it, that weird sequence of notes never leaves your head.

8. "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," 1988

People and cartoons on screen at the same time? Crazy awesome. Those curves on Jessica Rabbit? Even better.

7. "Raiders of The Lost Ark," 1981

Tom Selleck is still ruing the day that he had to turn down the Indiana Jones role. No offense to Magnum P.I., but Harrison Ford was definitely the right choice.

6. "Schindler's List," 1993

I've written it before and I'm writing it again. It's an amazing film, but I've only seen it once.

Why?

Well, jeez... it's so insanely depressing, why would you ever want to see it again?

5. "Jurassic Park," 1993

It was around fifth grade for me when this came out, so it happened right when I was crazy about dinosaurs. I had the poster, the action figures, everything. I even still keep that Jurassic Park font on my laptop, just for nostalgia's sake. I never use it, but it's still that cool.

4. "E.T. The Extra Terrestrial," 1982

Admittedly, normally I can't stand movies where the main cast is predominantly kids, because child actors are almost always pretty bad at what they do.

Spielberg, though, always manages to make it work. Drew Barrymore and company were infinitely endearing, and movies like "Gremlins" and "Super 8" show that Spielberg definitely has the magic touch when it comes to assembling ensemble kiddie casts.

3. "Indiana Jones And The Last Crusade," 1989

Harrison Ford and Sean Connery. Any questions? Good. Let's move on, shall we?

2. "Jaws," 1975

Doo-doot. Doo-doot. Doo-doot-doo-doot-doo-doot-doo-doot-doo-doot-doo-doot. Bwaaaaaaang.

(Admit it. You read that exactly how I meant you to read that.)

1. "Back To The Future," 1985

Travis will tell you — over and over and over again — that it's his favorite movie, and given it's enduring appeal, it's hard to argue with the choice. Still reliable and still quotable after all these years, for my money, it's Spielberg's best.

'Super 8' super good cinema

As a child of the 80s I grew up on a steady diet of films directed or produced by Steven Spielberg, with "E.T.," "Gremlins," and "Back to the Future" among them. One of the things all of these films had in common were that they all featured protagonists that were either kids or teens. So when I heard J.J. Abrams ("Lost," "Fringe," "Cloverfield") was working with Spielberg to create a movie that harkened back to those films of my youth I was at once excited and a bit apprehensive. Could Abrams, a man whose work I dearly love, capture the excitement, comedy, and wonder of those early films?

Apparently I had nothing to be apprehensive about. Abrams' newest film, "Super 8," not only harkened back to those earlier films, but it did something even better, it made me feel like a kid again.

The movie is about a group of kids who witness a train crash, out of which, something emerges, while making a movie with their Super 8 camera. And that's all the plot information you'll get out of me, because really that's all you need to know. This is the kind of movie that you should know as little about as possible going in to. To say more would be to ruin the experience. Instead I recommend you remove all your preconceived notions and expectations and just go in and enjoy the ride.

A big part of any movie is finding the right actors to fill the parts, in this case it's likely hard where most of the acting is being done by kids between the ages of 12 and 14. Yet, Abrams has managed to assemble a group of youngsters who have no problem of convincing you that what you see on screen is real. Most of that responsibility falls on two actors, Joel Courtney (Joe Lamb), for whom "Super 8" is the first professional acting role, and Elle Fanning (Alice Dainard), the much more talented sister of Dakota. These two by far steal the show and create characters that live on after the credit role. Elle, especially brings a quality to the film, that I doubt any other actor her age could have done, she manages to make Alice both a child with maturity beyond her years and someone who longs to stay a child just a bit longer.

While Abrams fills his movie with wonderful characters, he also proves that he truly is a master of the technical art of movie making. His shots are beautiful, the editing is masterful, and the special effects are top notch (especially based on the relatively small budget for a sci-fi flick of this caliber). Like Cloverfield before it, "Super 8" does an amazing job of showing you the thing from the crash, while also not fully revealing it, until he is ready.

"Super 8" is a roller coaster ride of a film that manages to both thrill and has a fully realized emotional core. "Super 8" is my favorite film of the summer thus far and ranks with "True Grit" as one of my favorites of the year.

Local attorney Travis Tidmore reviews movies for The Pampa News as well as on his blog, www.thecinemaniac.com.

Joplin survivors catch infection

JOPLIN, Mo. (AP) — In the aftermath of the Joplin tornado, some people injured in the storm developed a rare and sometimes fatal fungal infection so aggressive that it turned their tissue black and caused mold to grow inside their wounds.

Scientists say the unusually aggressive infection occurs when dirt or vegetation becomes embedded under the skin. In some cases, injuries that had been stitched up had to be reopened to clean out the contamination.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Friday that it was conducting tests to help investigate the infections, which are so uncommon that even the nation's largest hospitals might see only one or two cases a year.

"To my knowledge, a cluster like this has not been reported before," said Dr. Benjamin Park, head of the CDC team that investigates fungal diseases. "This is a very rare fungus. And for people who do get the disease, it can be extremely severe."

Three tornado survivors who were hospitalized with the infection have died, but authorities said it was unclear what role the fungus played in their deaths because they suffered from a host of other serious ailments.

"These people had multiple traumas, pneumonia, all kinds of problems," said Dr. Uwe Schmidt, an infectious disease specialist at Freeman Health System in Joplin. "It's difficult to say how much the fungal infections contributed to their demise."

The infection develops in two ways: when the fungal spores are inhaled or when a tree branch or other object carrying the fungus pierces the flesh.

Most people who get sick by inhaling the spores already have weakened immune systems or diabetes. But healthy people can become sick if the fungus penetrates their skin. The fungus blocks off blood vessels to the infected area, causing tissue to turn red and begin oozing. Eventually it becomes black.

If diagnosed in time, the infection can be treated with intravenous medications and surgical removal of affected tissue. But it's considered exceptionally dangerous, with some researchers reporting fatality rates of 30 percent for people infected through wounds and 50 percent for susceptible people who breathe it in.

Small numbers of cases have been reported after some disasters, but Park said it's the particular circumstance of the wound — not the disaster itself — that creates the risk.

The Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services has received reports of eight suspected deep-skin fungal infections among survivors of the May 22 twister, which was the nation's deadliest single tornado in more than six decades. All of the patients had suffered multiple injuries.

Also Friday, Joplin officials raised the death toll from the twister to 151, a figure that includes the recent deaths of the three people who had the fungus.

Schmidt said his hospital treated five Joplin tornado victims for the infection, which is formally known as zygomycosis (zy'-goh-my-KOH'-sihs). In 30 years of medical practice, he said, he had seen only two cases. Both involved patients with untreated diabetes.

U.S. agent named in suit over teen death

EL PASO (AP) — The family of a 15-year-old Mexican boy fatally shot by a U.S. Border Patrol agent is now naming the officer as part of its lawsuit against the federal government, a family lawyer said Friday.

Bob Hilliard told The Associated Press that the agent is Jesus Mesa Jr., whose last name has also been spelled Meza.

"This allows us to identify the shooter, we hope we can get his history," Hilliard said in a phone interview.

The Corpus Christi, Texas-based lawyer says he is trying to establish such facts as whether the agent had been previously reprimanded for using his weapon or if he had a history of violent outbursts.

An attorney for the agent, Randolph Ortega, has denied wrongdoing. Ortega did not immediately return a message Friday to The Associated Press. The U.S. Border Patrol has not replied several emails requesting information on the agent who allegedly shot the boy.

Sergio Adrian Hernandez Guereca of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, was killed in June 2010. U.S. investigators have said the agent was trying to arrest illegal immigrants who crossed into the U.S. when he came under attack from rock throwers.

Hilliard says the teen was unarmed and did not threaten Mesa.

Local media have reported that the family is demanding $25 million in compensation. Hilliard said they put a $10 million dollar request when they initially filed the suit but could ask the jury for more.

Hilliard also said that in an eye witness video, additional Border Patrol agents are seen arriving at the scene of the shooting. They left along with Mesa, without checking if the boy needed medical assistance.

"No matter what, if you think you have a right to shoot him, you should go and see if they need first aid," Hilliard said.

The amended wrongful death lawsuit, filed Wednesday in El Paso, updates documents from January.

Federal arrest records obtained by The Associated Press shortly after the June 7, 2010, shooting showed the boy had been arrested at least four times since 2008 and twice in the same week in February 2009 on suspicion of smuggling illegal immigrants across the U.S.-Mexico border. However, he was never charged with a crime.

Alaska officials release Palin's e-mails

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska officials on Friday released thousands of pages of Sarah Palin's emails, giving a glimpse of her time as governor, her struggles in dealing with gossip about her family and her rise to national prominence as the GOP vice presidential nominee.

Reporters and photographers crowded into a small office to pick up the six boxes of emails — 24,199 pages and weighing 250 pounds. Some carried the boxes down the stairs and others, wheeling them on dollies, scrambled to be the first ones to reach elevators.

Within minutes of the release, Palin tweeted a link to the website for "The Undeclared," a documentary about her time as governor and her entrance onto the national political stage.

Her supporters, meanwhile, encouraged everyone to read the messages.

"The thousands upon thousands of emails released today show a very engaged Governor Sarah Palin being the CEO of her state," said Tim Crawford, the treasurer of her political action committee, Sarah PAC. "The emails detail a Governor hard at work."

Palin has been placing in the top tier of potential presidential candidates in polls of Republican voters. Her recent bus tour of the Northeast fueled speculation about her national ambitions. However, she has said she has not yet decided whether she will enter the 2012 race.

Many news organizations, including The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times and msnbc.com, began scanning and posting the emails on their websites. The New York Times asked readers to join reporters in reviewing the documents.

The emails released Friday were first requested during the 2008 White House race by citizens and news organizations, including The Associated Press, as they vetted a nominee whose political experience included less than one term as governor and a term as mayor of Wasilla, Alaska.

The nearly three-year delay has been attributed largely to the sheer volume of the release. Lawyers went through every page to redact sensitive government information. Another reason was the nearly 500 open records requests during Palin's time in office, and state records officers being told to deal with smaller, easier ones first.

The emails cover the period from the time she took office in December 2006 to her ascension to vice presidential nominee in September 2008.

In the months before she was named the nominee, Palin's emails showed a governor dealing with complaints, rumors and gossip about her family. In several, she asked about the identity of someone who alleged that she had not buckled her son, Trig, properly into his car seat.

In another, she lamented about gossip about her family and marriage. Palin and her daughter, Bristol, appeared to be traveling in a car, and Bristol emailed a Palin staffer in July: "Mom and I were just praying about the hurt and anger that comes with her job. Thank you for your faith in God."

"We share it and we love you!" Bristol wrote, from her mother's personal email account.

After she was selected the GOP vice presidential nominee, news organizations began vetting her record.

Palin resigned partway through her first term, in early July 2009. Requests also have been made for Palin's final 10 months in office. State officials haven't begun reviewing those records. Leighow, now spokeswoman for Gov. Sean Parnell, said she doubted the release of those emails would come soon.

PHS grad Watson earns ample time on diamond at Clarendon

Shelbie Watson makes a catch in her final game as a Lady Harvester in May 2010. Watson played in 38 games with Clarendon College last season.

ANDREW GLOVER

aglover@thepampanews.com

Some college freshmen don't get the opportunity to play in their first year, but Clarendon College freshman softball player Shelby Watson has a different story.

"I got to play in at least half of the games," Watson said after completing her freshman year.

Last season, Watson played in 38 games, recorded 15 hits, one double, three RBI and scored nine runs. Watson said it wasn't too difficult adjusting to college level pitching.

"We had good competition in high school," Watson said. "It wasn't any different than high school, really."

Clarendon College played Howard Junior College in two series, allowing Watson to play against her longtime high school teammate Carlyn Teichmann. Watson said she played her best games in those series.

"It was exciting because you want to show them you are playing just as good as they are," Watson said.

In the two series Watson was 1-for-6 with a sacrifice hit. On defense, the 2010 Pampa graduate recorded six put-outs and eight assists. Watson said when she reached first — where Teichmann was playing — there wasn't much of a conversation.

"We didn't talk much because we were both in the game," Watson said. "I saw her afterwards and we talked."

Teichmann said she knew Watson would play hard, adding it was different being on opposite teams.

"I knew that Shelby was such a great competitor, so she would bring her 'A' game," Teichmann said. "It was weird not wearing the same jersey as her because we have played together for so long."

Watson said she hopes to improve her numbers next season and a better win percentage.

"I hope we win more games next year and have fun with the new people I'm playing with," Watson said.

Clarendon went 8-44 last season.

BE ALL YOU CAN BE WITH Chiropractic

"The hands-on, active care of doctors of chiropractic and their advice on a healthy lifestyle are essential to our military men and women."

Retired U.S. Army Brigadier General & First Female West Point Graduate to be promoted to that position
Becky Halstead

Becky Halstead shares with the public her positive experiences with chiropractic care. Halstead served 27 years with the United States Army, is the first female in U.S. history to command in combat at the strategic level, and is a recipient of the 2007 national Women's History Project Generations of Women Moving History Forward. She is the first female graduate of West Point to be promoted to Brigadier General.

"The year I was deployed to Iraq I missed my friends and family — and my chiropractor!" asserts Halstead, noting that chiropractic care is available through the U.S. armed forces healthcare delivery system at 25 percent of U.S. military treatment facilities and just a little more than half of active duty troops actually have access to a chiropractor. "Personally, I hope someday chiropractic care becomes a standard component of our military's healthcare program, so that all those serving, and their dependents can have the opportunity to benefit from the care that only a Doctor of Chiropractic can provide."

Halstead says that "the hands-on active care of doctors of chiropractic and their advice on a healthy lifestyle are essential to our military men and women."

Mavs SG Terry's NBA trophy tattoo was quite a premonition

DALLAS (AP) — Jason Terry put his faith in these Dallas Mavericks in ink. On the inside of his right biceps.

With one more win, he'll get to keep his tattoo of the NBA's championship trophy — plus have the real thing.

Terry had his title hopes injected into his arm in October, during a get-together at teammate DeShawn Stevenson's house. At the start of the playoffs, Terry vowed to have it removed if the Mavericks didn't win it all.

Thanks largely to him regaining his shooting touch in that inked-up arm, Terry and the Mavs flew to Miami on Friday closer to a title than ever before in franchise history. It could belong to them as soon as Sunday night.

"We put ourselves in the situation we wanted, to go back there with this opportunity," center Tyson Chandler said. "But we can't get too ahead of ourselves. We can't get caught up in all the hoopla."

In their previous 30 seasons, the closest the Mavericks came to being champs was in 2006, when they held a 2-0 series lead over the Heat and a big, late lead in Game 3.

Dallas ended up blowing it in six games. The Mavs had to watch the Heat celebrate on their own home floor. So the chance to close it out in Game 6, in Miami, is a delicious bit of payback to Terry and Dirk Nowitzki, the only holdovers.

"Game 6," Terry said, savoring the notion. "We must go out, play aggressively and take advantage of our opportunity."

The Mavs have done that all postseason.

Every time they've gotten three wins a series, the fourth has followed right away. They are 3-0 in knockout chances. Only one was on the road, but it was in one of the NBA's most hostile arenas, in Portland. Dallas already has tamed the Miami crowd, handing the Heat their first home loss of the postseason in Game 2.

"It's going to be hard to go in there in Miami and win, but we know we are capable of doing it," forward Shawn Marion said. "It's going to be crazy. We know what's at stake here. It's going to be exciting."

The Mavs are keeping their excitement level under wraps.

They've been in anti-celebration mode since Game 2 of the second round, when Nowitzki was upset about how giddy guys got over a second straight victory in Los Angeles. He's remained stoic regardless of the circumstances, even walking out of the Western Conference title celebration before it was over.

On Thursday night, following the most significant win in franchise history, with fans going bonkers, all Nowitzki did was wearily raise his arms.

"I really can't enjoy it much," he said, still sniffing a bit because of a sinus infection that gripped him in Game 4, but now is as much of a nuisance as the splint on his left middle finger, which isn't much.

"In the playoffs, for some reason, you're always on the edge," he said. "You don't sleep much. You think basketball 24-7.

I can enjoy it hopefully next week when we're on vacation."

The Mavs have needed fourth-quarter rallies in each of their three wins. But they keep getting smaller, from 12 to nine to four. In the last game, Dallas also had the luxury of playing from ahead most of the night, a first in this series.

The best sign for the Mavericks was how many guys were scoring.

Terry, Jason Kidd and J.J. Barea all had their most productive games of the series, pacing an offense that blistered the Heat's vaunted defense. Dallas was especially good on 3s, making 13 of 19.

"We're happy with our performance," Kidd said, "but there's always room to get better."

Like on defense.

While Dallas made 56.5 percent of its shots, Miami made 52.9 and scored 103 points, its best this postseason. Easy buckets fueled a fourth-quarter rally that put the Heat ahead and made the Mavericks need yet another late rally.

State climatologist: Drought third-worst in Texas history

ROBERT BURNS
Texas AgriLife Extension Service

COLLEGE STATION — Is this the worst Texas drought ever?

The answer is no, but it certainly is one of the worst, according to Dr. John Nielsen-Gammon, Texas A&M University professor and Texas state climatologist.

"Based on Palmer Drought Severity Index values, this is the third-worst drought Texas has ever seen in the month of May," Nielsen-Gammon writes in his blog, the Climate Abyss. "Records go back to 1895. May also marks the end of the driest eight-month period on record."

The worst droughts remain those in 1918 and 1956, according to Nielsen-Gammon.

Nielsen-Gammon's blog is hosted by the Houston Chronicle and can be found at <http://blog.chron.com/climateabyss/>.

According to the U.S. Drought Monitor, nearly 50 percent of the state remained in what is termed an "exceptional" drought, which means a once in 50-year occurrence. More than 90 percent was experiencing either a severe or exceptional drought. Only parts of north central and northeast Texas were not at least abnormally dry as of May 31.

It may not be the worst drought ever, but lifelong farmers throughout the state are telling Texas AgriLife Extension Service agents this is the driest they've ever experienced.

"Weather continued to be hot and dry," said Mark Brown, AgriLife Extension agent for Lubbock County. "Blowing dust from gusting winds occurred on several days. Irrigation continues where feasible. May ended with 0.26 inches of moisture recorded, making this year the driest five-month period on record for Lubbock."

And while a few weeks ago, rains may have greened things up in East Texas, the region remains in a drought, according to AgriLife Extension agent reports.

"We are in bad need of rain," said Clint Perkins, AgriLife Extension agent for Wood County, about 100 miles east of Dallas. "Hay production is starting with drastically decreased yields. I have reports that the first cutting is one-quarter to half of normal."

"Corn, milo and cotton are under severe drought-like conditions and stressing," said Pasquale Swaner, AgriLife Extension agent for Falls County, near Temple. "Stocker cattle producers have shipped cattle to feedlots. Pasture conditions are severe with little hay production across the county."

More information on the current Texas drought and wildfire alerts can be found on the AgriLife Extension Agricultural Drought Task Force website at <http://agrilife.tamu.edu/drought/>.

AgriLife Extension district reporters compiled the following summaries:

PANHANDLE: A few isolated showers were reported, with accumulations ranging from 0.1 inch to 1.5 inches. However, the region overall continued to experience hot, dry and windy weather. Soil-moisture levels were mostly very short. The danger of wildfire remained high. Farmers with irrigation were applying lots of water to all summer crops. Rangeland and pasture conditions were very poor in most counties. Ranchers continue to cull herds due to the drought. Supplemental feeding was heavy by those ranchers trying to hang on to cattle.

ROLLING PLAINS: The region was dry, windy and with highs above 100 degrees. Cotton producers were planting on irrigated fields, but even applying enough water to plant has proven to be a challenge. In the areas that received rain, producers were fighting blowing sand and soil erosion. In some cases they were performing a light tillage operation called "scratching" to loosen up caked soil and allow cotton plants to break the surface. Some cotton farmers had to replant. Only limited dryland cotton acreage was planted. Stock-tanks water evaporated because of wind and high temperatures. Cattle were suffering. Producers were bringing in hay and further culling their herds.

SOUTH PLAINS: The region remained hot, dry and windy, with most counties still under burn bans. Most farmers were finishing up planting to meet insurance deadlines. Some irrigated cotton emerged but was being blasted from sand driven by high winds. Newly emerged cotton was also threatened by thrips and early spider mites. Pasture and rangeland were still dry, and producers continued supplementing cattle. Stock-water ponds were dry, and ranchers had to make daily inspections to save cattle trapped, bogged down in the mud.

Ponds throughout Texas, like this one in the Panhandle, continued to evaporate because of high temperatures and winds. Livestock producers depend upon such ponds as water sources for cattle.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, June 13, 2011.

This year, you will need to channel your energy well in order to prevent unnecessary volatile situations. Don't suppress your feelings; rather, express them before they hit the point where you lose self-discipline. Your daily life draws more of your attention. You might want to make some changes that involve health and stress. You need an outlet for tension. If you are single, relating also assumes an active role. You might meet someone very special close to your birthday next year. If you are attached, if open, the two of you could work through a lot of previously hot issues. SAGITTARIUS and SCORPIO can test your patience!

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
 ★★★★★ A situation where you have to give more than you are comfortable giving might trigger some frustration, if not anger. You are not a sign people like to be around when you lose your temper. Some of your insights or judgments could be off. Tonight: Detach. How about some yoga to relax?

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
 ★★★★★ Your temper is close to the surface, and you find someone to be provocative. Ask yourself whether you are projecting your stuff onto this person. Knowing when to back off could be very helpful. Tonight: Defer to a close friend or loved one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
 ★★★★★ Funneling your temper into your work might be best for now. The side effect could be carelessness when dealing with machinery, tools or glass. Later today, when you can express your feelings, jump on the occasion. Tonight: Touch base with a friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
 ★★★★★ You might not realize how pushed you are by a situation or how triggered a friend might be until the fireworks start. Though your instinct might be to duck, you are better off just going with the moment. Tonight: Exercise your stress away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
 ★★★★★ You are perhaps more anchored than you are aware. Putting so much energy into your work might be good, but it also could make a boss or associate feel pressured. Tap into your great imagination to find other ways to express this energy. Tonight: So what if it is Monday?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
 ★★★★★ New information or news from someone in the know or at a distance comes forward. Try to detach and absorb what is being said. You continue to put a key person in your life on a pedestal. Tonight: Burning the midnight oil.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
 ★★★★★ Honor what you want, and be more in touch with your needs. Curb a need to have things your way, especially as that attitude today could lead to a lot of flak. Open up a discussion late today if you want it to be successful. Tonight: Hang out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
 ★★★★★ Though you might judge that everything is copasetic, you have a surprise on the way. Someone else is of the opposite opinion. Boy, is this person going to let you know it, too! Try to pass a peace pipe later in the day. Tonight: Make a gesture.

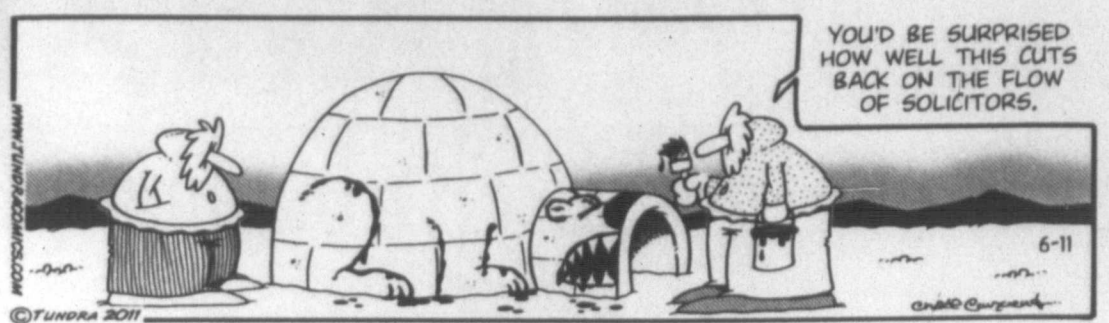

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
 ★★★★★ Lying back during the earlier part of the day clearly works best. A co-worker, family member or friend starts acting as if you are competitors. Don't play into this scenario. Tonight: Do what you want.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
 ★★★★★ A meeting or get-together also could be a source of friction and jealousy. Try not to get into this adversarial position with others. Detach and listen. Plan on distancing yourself late afternoon. Tonight: Not to be found.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
 ★★★★★ You might want to discuss a situation with far more color and flair than you need to. A boss or supervisor also could push you very hard. Focus on the positive elements in this situation. Tonight: Hang with your friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
 ★★★★★ Reach out for others at a distance or someone with greater knowledge than you. You will want their feedback, but at the same time become contentious. Use your differences to strengthen an idea. Tonight: Head home.

sunday horoscope

Note: Bigar's Stars is based on the degree of your sun at birth. The sign name is simply a label astrologers put on a set of degrees for convenience. For best results, readers should refer to the dates following each sign.

A baby born today, June 12, 2011, has a Sun in Gemini and a Moon in Scorpio.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, June 12, 2011:

This year, you might be more open to taking on projects or helping others. You have a lot on your plate. Your career or community commitments alone could be overwhelming. If you are single, you will meet someone in your daily travels. If you are attached, take up a new hobby together in order to bond more closely. SCORPIO challenges you on a nearly daily basis.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ The unexpected could occur within a partnership. See what is driving this interaction. Avoid idealism. In the long run, it could be more effective to toss away your rose-colored shades. Tonight, catch up on a neighbor's news.

This Week: Evaluate what a partner says. Then do your research.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★ Make it your pleasure to be with family and loved ones. Don't question, observe. You'll gain insights out of the blue. Your creativity comes up in a discussion with family. Know that anything is possible. Tonight: Just don't be alone.

This Week: Let others display their true colors. Then decide what to do.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★ You gain a great deal of pleasure from completing a project. Deal with a difficult emotional situation. Of course, this might not be the best course of action, depending on who is involved. Be smart and stay open to having a discussion. Tonight: Think "tomorrow."

This Week: Others are quirky. Depend on yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★ You might gain understanding by imagining a loved one's position and life. When you do, the rapport between you increases. Have that inevitable discussion. A parent or boss could be tough on you. Tonight: Let the good times rock and roll.

This Week: Let creativity flow into your work. Others put in their two cents on Thursday.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ Listen and see what is going on with a child or loved one. Help root out the real issue. Don't personalize so much when you hear negatives. A discussion evolves into a brainstorming session. Tonight: Happy at home.

This Week: You cannot suppress your ingenuity. Try to focus on what counts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ You might be uncomfortable with a discussion. This news could involve a partnership and/or a money matter. You and a key loved one look at life far differently -- you could be stunned by how differently. Tonight: Make dinner a social occasion.

This Week: Keep conversations moving. Listen to all points of view. Still, make your own decisions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★ Think of the costs of proceeding as you wish. You might feel overwhelmed. A loved one might be acting in an unusual manner. You might wonder what is appropriate to do here. Remain authentic. Tonight: Treat time.

This Week: Understand and help another person resolve an issue.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★ Act rather than wait. Others like hearing from you. If someone or an issue disrupts your plans, make a detour. Communication soars. If you are single, someone you meet today could be most interesting. Tonight: You like what is happening.

This Week: You move into the week a force to behold. Handle funds wisely.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★ Ask yourself how you feel before you get started. Take care of yourself. If you keep pushing as you have, you can expect to fizzle out and not have enough energy when you need it. Tonight: Play it low-key.

This Week: You might start Monday like a turtle, but by the end of the day you become a rabbit. This pace continues day after day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ Friends coax and manipulate to have you join them! The activity might not be as important as the company. Be open to trying something new. Observe whether your intuition is right. Tonight: Where you want to be.

This Week: Don't hesitate to say less and reflect more.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Do you understand what someone is really asking? You need to be very clear about the terms, as a lot of responsibility will be dropped on you if you agree. Respond rather than react. Tonight: Make a list of what must be done tomorrow.

This Week: Friendship means more to you than many. It also could dominate your week.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★ Your sixth sense opens doors. More than many people, you are ready to risk feeling uncomfortable while exploring other options. Take a drive or meet a friend who lives at a distance. The change of scenery will do you good. You might see a money conflict emerging. Tonight: Go for exotic cuisine.

This Week: Dealing with those in charge could be tiring, but you need to do it!

BORN TODAY
Banker David Rockefeller (1915), former President George H.W. Bush (1924), diarist Anne Frank (1929).

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: "Kyle" and I have been good buddies for 10 years. The problem is I'm crazy about his younger sister. She and I have been talking over the last few months. Kyle knew we were talking in the beginning, and he told her to stay away from his friends. I think I understand his reasons, and I tried to talk to him on my own.

Kyle said he doesn't want to deal with me calling him eventually about problems that may arise between me and his sister.

Now when I hang out with her we have to be secretive. I would like to be open about being with this awesome girl. Can you please help me? — JOHN IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR JOHN: Kyle's reason for not wanting his sister to involve herself with any of his friends is a selfish one. He is not his sister's keeper. Her parents are. If you like her, find out from them if it's OK to hang out with her. But stop sneaking around because it's childish and reflects badly on both of you. And if there are any problems, refrain from taking them to Kyle.

DEAR ABBY: I grew up disliking a lot of things about my mother, but the main thing was how she treated my father. I still don't like it.

Now I realize I have started treating my husband the same way sometimes. He says it doesn't bother him and everything is fine in our marriage, but I lie awake at night worried about how I'm treating him. Situations come up, and before I can stop myself, I say something I wish I hadn't. One of my husband's friends noticed it and mentioned it.

I married a wonderful man, and I don't want to put him through what my dad endured. What can I do? — SEEING A PATERN

DEAR SEEING: It's not unusual for children to model the behavior of their parents, even when the example isn't a good one. You will need to learn to self-censor before you open your mouth in stressful situations. One way to do it is, before snapping, ask yourself, "Is this true? Is it helpful? Is it kind?" However, learning the tools to create new patterns of behavior isn't easy — and you may need the help of a licensed counselor in order to overcome the patterns of a lifetime.

DEAR ABBY: Every weekend my husband goes to all the yard sales and estate sales in our area. He brings home stuff he considers treasures, but I'm sure even the trash collectors wouldn't pick it up.

He is obsessed with his hobby and doesn't realize he is turning our beautiful home into a trash storage warehouse. I tried talking to him, but he says he'll do as he pleases. Abby, I'm writing to you as my last resort. I am desperate for any advice you can give me. — SECONDHAND ROSE IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR ROSE: Your husband has been seduced by the "thrill of the hunt" and is responding to primitive impulses passed down from our long ago ancestors. Women have it too — ask anyone who has lost track of time during a department store sale and bought more than she set out for.

Try this: Go with him to the yard and estate sales, so you both can agree to buy or reject a "treasure" before it becomes a purchase. While this may not put an end to your problem, it may curb your husband's impulse buying — a little.

DEAR ABBY: No one in my family will tell my grandmother the reason they don't call her is she talks too much. None of us is retired like she is, and our evenings are chaotic enough without a two-hour conversation with her. Relatives ask me to relay messages on their behalf so they won't have to call her. She's always crying and telling me I'm the only one who is "good to her."

I'd feel guilty if I had to tell Grandma the truth — but I, as well as the rest of the family, have had enough of her long, guilt-inducing talks and trips down memory lane from 1940. How can I get the point across without devastating her sensitive nature? — CAPTIVE AUDIENCE IN FLORIDA

DEAR CAPTIVE AUDIENCE: The next time your grandmother tells you you're the only one who is good to her, you need to tell her she'd have better luck with the other relatives if she limited the length of her phone calls to them. Encourage her to find other interests so she isn't as lonely and dependent as she appears to be. To do so isn't cruel; you'll be doing her a favor because what's driving people away is her neediness.

I don't know what your grandmother retired from, but she should have retired TO something more than her telephone. Unless she lives in the wilderness, she should be encouraged to get out and volunteer.
