Pampa H2O reports successful first month

During a summer with record high temperatures, Pampa is seeking big time relief from the heat at Pampa H2O, the municipal water park. The park has just completed its first month in operation.

"We've had a successful first month." said Shane Stokes, assistant city manager of Pampa. "22,000 people came through the water park's gates." Stokes reported that the Aquatic Center has earned $120,000 in gate entrance revenue during its first month of operation, and $40,000 from concessions.

The park features a lazy river and several slides, but Stokes said the bowl slide is his personal favorite. This slide spins riders around, then eventually drops them off in a pool. "It's more than a slide-it's a thrill ride, and you never know how you will land in the water," he said.

Pampa H2O plans to be open through Labor Day, switching to nights and evenings towards the end of the season.

"Pampa came up with a proposition for them," Curry said. "We happened to have the best deal at the time." After the tournament was played in Borger for three years, Pampa hosted the tournament starting in 1970. The entries were limited to 160 players, so the members could use the course. This ultimately created a problem with the Country Club members. In 1981, the country club board didn't invite the

NEW YORK (AP) - Former Fox News Channel personality Glenn Beck is bound for Texas.

Beck said Monday that he's relocating his family to Dallas, where his media company is building a new television and radio studio.

Beck is starting a new online network, GBTV, on which he will beam a two-hour program each evening starting in late summer. He's continuing his syndicated radio show.

The president of Beck's company, Mercury Radio Arts, says the move doesn't mean the company will be abandoning its studio and offices in New York.

Beck doubled the ratings at his time slot almost immediately after joining Fox in January 2009. But critics persuaded advertisers to boycott his show last summer after he said President Barack Obama had "a deep-seated hatred for white people." His last show was in June.

16-pound baby born to TX mom

LONGVIEW (AP) - A Texas mom expected a big baby, but nothing like this: 16 pounds, 1 ounces.

Janet Johnson on Monday remained in an East Texas hospital after giving birth to what her doctors called one of the biggest newborns they've ever seen. She was awaiting word on whether her son, JaMichael Brown, ranked among the biggest births in state history.

"Everybody was amazed that he was so big," Johnson, 39, said. "I don't think too many people have heard of having a 16-pound baby.'

JaMichael was born Friday at Good Shepherd Medical Center in Longview. Johnson has gestational diabetes, which results in bigger newborns for many mothers. Doctors had estimated JaMichael would be around 12 pounds prior to the cesarean birth.

The hospital has asked the state's vital records department whether JaMichael is big enough to approach any Texas newborn records, said Victoria Ashworth, a hospital spokeswoman. He is certainly the biggest in the history of the Longview hospital and was born, Ashworth said, almost two years to the day after the hospital delivered its smallest baby ever, who weighed Guinness World Records says the heaviest newborn ever recorded weighed 23 pounds, 12 ounces, born to an Ohio woman in 1879.

Perry to 'shake up' GOP field

EXETER, N.H. (AP) - Texas Gov. Rick Perry is calling influential Republicans in early voting New Hampshire and Iowa, the latest indication that he's seriously considering a presidential run.

New Hampshire Senate President Peter Bragdon tells The Associated Press that Perry called him over the weekend to gauge his support and seek his thoughts on what might happen if he entered the race and "shook things up a little bit."

Perry also was making calls to GOP leaders in Iowa, which holds the first contest in the fight for the January, 2011 incident. Republican nomination. He left a voicemail Sunday telling Iowa Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds he looked forward to meeting her soon. Other Republicans were called, Bragdon says Perry is doing his homework as he weighs whether to run.

Oil pipeline firm 'too optimistic'

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - A new report says a Canadian company underestimated the potential for spills along the pipeline it wants to build to carry tar sands oil across the Plains to refineries near the Gulf of Mexico.

University of Nebraska-Lincoln engineering professor John Stansbury says TransCanada has been overly optimistic about the frequency and possible impact of spills along the proposed Keystone XL.

Stansbury examined several worst-case scenarios along the proposed route and came up with much incident. larger estimates.

TransCanada spokesman Terry Cunha says the company is still reviewing the report released Monday and couldn't immediately comment on it.

The pipeline is designed to carry oil from Canada across Montana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. It could also connect to the Bakken oil field in Montana and North Dakota.

Progress against Los Alamos fire

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) - Firefighters are making progress against a wildfire that has charred more than 147,000 acres near Los Alamos.

Crews were reporting 50 percent containment Monday on the Las Conchas fire, the largest blaze in New Mexico

The area did get some rain over the weekend, but fire information officer Reynaldo Rivera says it wasn't enough to help extinguish the hot spots.

More thunderstorms are expected, and the National Weather Service has issued a flash flood watch through Tuesday evening for portions of north and central New Mexico, including the Jemez Mountains.

Fire officials say the burn scar encompasses portions of Sandoval, Los Alamos and Rio Arriba counties.

The fire also affected more than 95 percent of Bandelier National Monument, as well as a significant portion of the Santa Clara Pueblo.

Payoff.com gives motivation for dreams

TERRY SAVAGE Creator's Syndicate

There's a new money website launching this week. Payoff.com promises to make dealing with money "simple, social and fun." That's not my usual attitude toward personal finances. Yes, I try to make things simple, but I inherently believe that money management is also serious - and a very private matter.

That's definitely not the approach being taken by Scott Saunders, a 35-year-old entrepreneur who has the backing of some of the country's most sophisticated venture capitalists in launching Payoff. com. And after spending some time watching Saunders demonstrate the features of this new site, I'm convinced he is headed for a huge success in this unique approach to money management.

Saunders' starting point: "Money is a means to an end. We start with dreams and goals - and then move into money. ... Payoff.com is about money in the context of life. ... Dreams are the context that make caring about money worthwhile."

Lest you think this is just a "touchy-feely" approach to money, let me assure you that this wellbuilt site is a financial data aggregator powered by Yodlee, offering all the tools and capabilities of current programs such as the desktop Quicken or the rapidly growing free online service of Mint.com. All promise to give you a complete picture of your financial data with one click, plus track your spending.

But Payoff.com takes it a step farther. It creates a community of users to applaud and motivate your success and encourage you when Payoff.com is free, like Mint. com — paid for by the connections you make to financial advertisers suggested by the site to improve your money management skills. The Savage on money

So you might be directed to a free checking offer by a bank even to a website like LegalZoom. com to help you set up that business you've been dreaming about.

And that brings us back to the "dreams and goals" focus of this website. Saunders is building a community of users who start by posting their dreams and goals to be shared with others. It's sort of like posting your "bucket list." The concept is that the social network 'connection" with others will help you reach those goals through their comments and suggestions - a sort of "dream support group."

Saunders feels that this positive starting point for money management will encourage people to learn more and do the right things, noting: "People have no freedom to dream these days. They're in the daily rat-race, and they never seem to get ahead financially. We're showing them they can reach their goals - step by step.'

The entire site is based on positive reinforcement. You earn "badges" for smaller accomplishments along the road to your goals such as paying off a credit card, or making 25 percent progress in getting toward your goal, checking your credit score - or even just signing in to check your finances on a daily basis. Those badges are posted publicly on your site (much as Girl Scouts accumulate badges on a sash) - and are applauded by others. Every badge earns you entry into a sort of sweepstakes, with "sur-prizes" from participating advertisers.

In short, Saunders has built the total community - motivating and educating individuals, providing revenue for advertisers and encouraging connection with popular brands.

The money management aspect of this website is also based on psychological rewards. Saunders points out that there are no red warning flags or red bars on charts to remind you that you're falling short of your goals. And when it comes to categorizing spending, you don't get a pie chart that forces you to do the work of categorizing your spending.

Instead Payoff.com tracks your spending by brand name. Yes, as your checking, credit card, and debit card info is securely downloaded into your online Payoff account, it is automatically categorized by the regular brands you use - whether you spent money at Starbucks or Chipotle, Shell Oil or ExxonMobil, Victoria's Secret or Target or Old Navy.

You can see which companies you spent the most with, and the most recent transactions. Saunders figures people think in terms of 'brand spending" - and that they'll be more willing to contemplate changing their spending habits to reach their goals.

Quite literally, Payoff.com is designed to change the mindset of an entire generation - a generation raised on credit and debt and now plunged into despair about their future. "Debt steals dreams," says Saunders. "My dream is to help as many other people achieve their dreams as possible.

Check out his approach at Payoff. com. I think Saunders has a great shot at reaching his dream. And that's The Savage Truth.

Sackett said the country club members didn't like having to adjust their golf schedule that week.

"They couldn't golf those days or had to golf in the afternoon," Sackett said. "The merchants were upset because the tournament brought in a lot of money. One of things planned for the women was a treasure hunt where they would go to the different merchants in town. The next year the country club invited them back.'

In the first five years of the tournament, it was off limits for members' wives. That changed in 1940 when the wives become a part of the tournament and its activities. However, they didn't actually get to play in the tourney until 2005. Eddie Rice of Sunray (and 2002 champion) said the tournament made that move to increase attendance.

"Attendance had been dropping in the previous years," Rice said. "In order to revive it, the tournament allowed women to play in a Ladies division.

"We have a lot of friends that get people to come," Stowers said. "They say 'I haven't been to Pampa, I have to go.' They enjoy it and invite friends the next year. It's just camaraderie"

In 1991, a Japanese professor (Hitoshi Igarashi) who had translated Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses" was found stabbed to death, nine days after the novel's Italian translator was attacked in Milan.

Ten years ago: Abner Louima, the Haitian immigrant tortured in a New York City police station, agreed to an $8.7 million settlement with the city and its police union.

Five years ago: Hezbollah guerrillas kidnapped two Israeli soldiers and killed eight others in a cross-border raid. (The bodies of the kidnapped soldiers, Ehud Goldwasser and Eldad Regev, were returned to Israel in 2008 in exchange for five Lebanese militants.)

State cuts could put more seniors in nursing homes

JOHN SEEWER Analysis - Associated Press

Born with cerebral palsy, Jennifer McPhail relies on a home health aide to help her get dressed for work and ready for bed at night.

Her motorized wheelchair keeps her active, working as an organizer with a disability rights group in Austin, Texas, and volunteering to help people find housing and to staff hurricane shelters. She now fears deep cuts in the state's Medicaid spending will prevent her from living independently.

"What it says to me is that the state doesn't value the lives of people with disabilities," said McPhail, 39. "A lot of people are going to be hurt in a very intimate way

It's a concern facing families across the country as states with gaping budget deficits cut home health services that help keep the elderly and disabled out of nursing homes. States are reducing how much time a nurse can spend making house calls and ending meal deliveries for the homebound. Many also are gutting adult day care programs that give seniors a safe place to spend their days while their relatives are at work Aging and disability services in three out of four states have been reduced over the last two years or face cuts, even though demand is increasing.

Texas lawmakers underfunded Medicaid by nearly $5 billion in the state budget, a move that home health advocates say leaves the elderly and adults with disabilities unsure how their care at home will be provided.

California eliminated funding for about 330 adult day centers, a move that will affect some 35,000 seniors who use them for medical care and socializing. Lawmakers are hoping to restore about $85 million to transition seniors into an as-yet undetermined alternate program - about half the amount cut from the budget.

Minnesota is considering cuts to home health aides and a program that allows disabled people to live on their

With each cut, the ability to live at home becomes more difficult.

"You end up losing control over your decisions," said Neil Johnson, executive director of the Minnesota HomeCare Association.

About 12 million people receive home health services nationwide, according to the National Association for Home Care and Hospice.

Home health services are an easy target for budget-cutters because they are not required by federal law, have been subject to fraud and don't have deep-pocketed special interests advocating for them. But down the road, steep cuts in these services eventually could cost states more money if they end up pushing more people out of their own houses and into nursing homes that would require taxpayer subsidies. "Just because you cut the budget doesn't mean their needs go away," said Anita Bradberry, executive director of the Texas Association for Home Care & Hospice Inc. Medicaid, the state-federal program that pays for medical and long-term care for the poor and disabled, is required to help fund nursing homes but not home care and community services.

Because the programs are not required, most states first look at cutting home health care funded through Medicaid, even though such programs are much cheaper than nursing homes.

The price of an adult day health center is $67 a day on average, compared with $229 a day for a private room at a nursing home, according to a 2010 survey released by insurance company MetLife Inc.

Overall, Medicaid spending on nursing homes came to $46.5 billion in 2007, the latest figures available, while home health services cost $6.3 billion, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Before the recession, states actually expanded home health programs. because they are less costly. But now, with so many states facing billiondollar deficits, lawmakers say they have no choice but to cut Medicaid spending, the second-biggest spending item for states behind education.

South Carolina is ending payments for adult dental and vision care. In Massachusetts, Gov. Deval Patrick has proposed cutting $55 million from the state's adult day care program, two-thirds of its funding. That would affect some 5,200 participants.

Among them is the 81-year-old mother of Irva Almonor.

She agonized for months over what to do with her mother, who was forgetting to take her diabetes medicine and turn off the stove inside the Massachusetts home they share, before enrolling her in an adult day center.

The family feared she would hurt herself - or worse - while she was alone, and she resisted any thought of going into a nursing home.

Without the adult day health care centers, Almonor's only choice would be to leave her mother, who suffers from diabetes and mild dementia, alone again at their Holliston, Mass., home. Quitting work wasn't an option, and hiring a home health aide would cost her about $21 an hour.

"Financially, I can't afford to have anyone to come take care of her," she said. One problem for home health care programs is image. Some lawmakers are skeptical of the industry that provides the services and say lax regulation makes the program susceptible to fraud.

In April, a home health care provider in Virginia pleaded guilty to fraud charges after federal prosecutors said the company failed to provide required training for personal care aides and issued false certificates. A New Mexico woman was sentenced to three years in prison in January after she and another woman were convicted of claiming to be each other's caregivers and getting more than $96,000 in Medicaid benefits.

Investigators in Florida a year ago found that when they tried to visit 16 home health agencies, there were no such businesses at the addresses.

"Home health care appears to be experiencing fraud and abuse issues that are significantly increasing spending on home health care," said a report released last year by the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, an independent arm of Congress.

The report went on to say the number of home health care agencies has risen dramatically in states where fraud concerns have emerged, including California, Texas and Florida.

Home health advocates say that kind of bad behavior is rare and that cutting funding only hurts people who need the most help.

In most cases, it's the family members who provide much of the care for the elderly and disabled at home - and usually for free, - even if they get help from home-health aides.

Among Alzheimer's patients, nearly 15 million caregivers are family members and friends who provide unpaid care, said a report released in March by the Alzheimer's Association. Home health services often bridge the gap when family members are unable to provide around-the-clock care.

Adult day care centers provide her avenue for the frail and their givers, but those programs also are on the wane.

Several states have been chipping away at adult day care programs over the last year and some have eliminated them, even though the number of facilities has grown by a third since 2002, according to a 2010 study from the National Adult Day Services Association.

Mary Nonnette, who lives in Hawthorne, Calif., isn't sure how she will take care of her mother if she is no longer eligible to stay at one of the centers in Los Angeles.

Nonnette, 67, said she does everything for her 87-year-old mother "except breathe, really," and that she has provided the care alone since her husband suffered a paralyzing stroke in December. The only time she's free to visit her husband is when her mother is at the center.

"For four hours, three days a week, I don't have to worry," Nonnette said.

Water Slide a water waste?

Dear Editor:

As I set here trying to cool down after a hot Texas day and watching the national news, I cannot help but see the similarities between the suicidal "progressive" government spending in Washington and the way our little municipality is being run by the current administration.

I wonder how fellow Pampans can overlook what I can only describe as "Obamanomics" being practiced here in the heart of a state that is supposed to be an example of "individual liberty and small government.

Am I the only Pampan that has a problem with a city government that uses money so, so badly needed for city streets to build a Water Slide, then just a few days after the "not so grand opening", that same city sends out circulars suggesting homeowners limit the watering of yards?

I was recently at a city commission meeting, observing the final vote on the Celanese deal, after the meeting I asked around and spoke to a couple of commissioners and especially Cleo Meaker who usually attends most

I could get no information on how many gallons a day evaporates over the Water Slide. Looks like someone would be able to quote an exact environmental estimate.

All Pampans know just how quickly conditions can bring on mandated water conservation and with it comes threats and possible fines for non compliance. In my opinion, the slide construction should have never even been considered as long as Pampans cannot cross their city without doing harm to the suspensions of the cars they work hard to keep rolling!

I believe Pampans should reserve the right to "raise Cain" if the city decides to forcibly mandate water restrictions while the "world famous" water slide is operating, evaporating away many, many precious gallons of Pampa water.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, July 12,2011:

This year you will work to get past an innate shyness or awkwardness. Sometimes you will experience anger rather than feel your vulnerability. Get past that uneasiness and learn to deal with your emotions. Once you do, you will feel empowered and much more capable. If you are single, you might want to establish a relationship. Yet what works today might not work later. Please keep that in mind. If you are attached, the two of you will transform many of your interactions for the better. Be open

Pampa, Borger alumni teams return for rematch

Andrew GLover aglover@thepampanews.com

Last year, when the Pampa and Borger alumni teams took the field, some of the players hadn't played full contact football in 15 to 20 years. The wait will be much shorter for the rematch, set for Sept. 16-18.

The Pampa alumni won 15-8 in August of last year. This year's squad started practice at the end of June and practice twice a week on Thursday and Sunday. Jason Burklow, who will be coaching the team said most of the players from last year are returning.

"Everyone wanted to play another game," Burklow said. "Everyone enjoyed playing."

Burklow said he couldn't see the team playing anyone else besides Borger.
"They're our biggest rival," Burklow said. "We want to keep that going."

Marques Long said they are more prepared for this year than last year.

"I think a lot of us didn't know what to expect last year," Long said. "It was really competitive last year and we got a lot more people this year."

Andy Schroeder said he is looking forward to playing with his teammates again. Schoreder said the increased participation is partly due to people knowing there will be a game.

"I guess that now everyone knows that there is actually going to be a game, more people are willing to spend time away from their families and other activities to come to practice," Schroeder said.

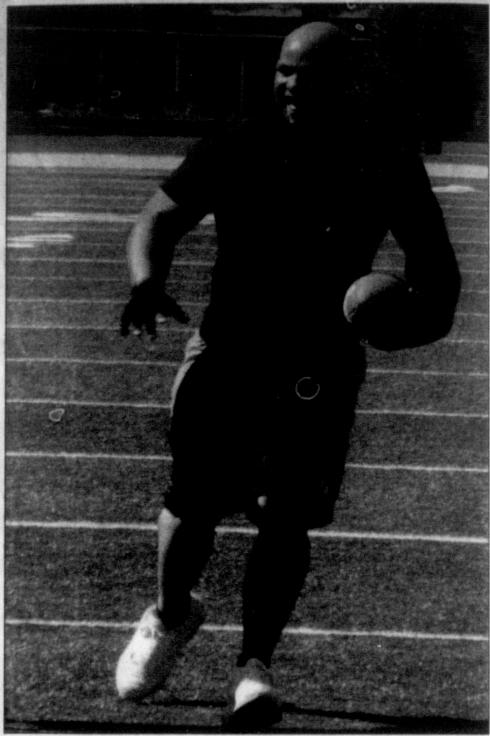

Long said he is looking forward to playing Borger again, adding the rivalry is still on though it's a little more friendly than in high school.

"We want to keep the rivalry going and show them that Pampa is the best," Long said.

Burklow said their motivation is the same as last year, adding that they are also playing for Luis Martinez, who was on last year's team but died in a car accident.

"We're still playing for Coach Cav and each other," Burklow said. "This year we're also playing for Luis Martinez, who passed away.

As of press time, the game location had not been announced.
