Captains Mark and Laura Martin

MOLLIE BRYANT mbryant@thepampanews.com

Capt.Mark Martin of the Salvation Army has had a busy 2011, and part of his time has been spent on the miniature golf facility on Ballard, which he hopes to develop in the future for the Salvation Army Boys and Girls Club and the general

"We're trying to create, for lack of a better term, a hangout for the teenagers, where school kids can drive their cars or walk up there, and sit at the picnic tables, and socialize," said Martin. "If they do the registration paperwork for the (Salvation Army) Boys and Girls Club, any time they want, they can play miniature golf for free."

Registered members of the Boys and Girls Club will also be able to get discounted snacks. In the future, Martin hopes these members will become more involved in the facility by manning the concession stand.

"The ultimate goal, within a year period, hopefully, is to have some of the kids that come out on a regular basis and use the facility, to get them involved in running it, taking the inventory and getting the money, learning what business is all about," he said. "This program is not just a hangout per se. It's a combination of many minor programs inside the one program."

Martin hopes to open the miniature golf center up sometime in the spring with hours that extend into the evening. He also wants to keep the facility affordable, so all children may have a chance to enjoy it.

"When we do open up, it will be open to the public, and it will be open for parties and groups like church groups, and we're not going to charge a set fee," he said. "We're going to ask for donations, whatever they feel is appropriate for them."

The Salvation Army Boys and Girls Club also is busy with a tutoring program that runs at the end of every school day. The program is free to become a part of, although the Salvation Army does ask for donations.

"The tutoring is the main thing when they come in after school," said Martin. "We pick them up, bring them in, give them a snack of some sort. At least three times out of the week, they get a hot meal."

The snack time is followed by a tutoring session that includes at least fifteen minutes of reading. Afterwards, the kids can play outside, and if the weather is bad, they can play board games, sing karaoke or use the center's computers.

A 10 week summer program also is offered by the Salvation Army, where they take kids on field trips, to a movie once a week, and also out to swim or to the park.

Aside from the Boys and Girls Club, the Salvation Army provides social services to people who need them, including assistance with prescriptions, utilities, rent and transportation. People in the need of the group's help must fill out paperwork that includes proof of income and expenses. "The unique thing is, when we do help, if everything is in place, we try to take care of the entire cost of whatever they're coming to us for," said Martin. "We don't give just a small amount of money, and they have to go someplace else, and get another small amount of money around town."

However, the Salvation Army also refers clients to other agencies that may be able to help them.

Pampa News file photo "Our main function on most of the stuff is to try and point them in the right direction to help them get the things they need that we can't always supply," said Martin. "So, what we try to do is know enough people around, so the community can pitch in and help out, and take care of it." "Anyone, if they've got a problem, I encourage them to at least contact us," he added. "If we can't help them ourselves, maybe we know somebody who could do it." Martin has been a part of the Salvation Army since 1989, and he said the Salvationist ministry's emphasis on service has been a calling for him.

"We do things differently than other denominations, because it's about service," he said. "It's not about going out there and telling people. It's about showing people and doing what you've got to do."

CASA ends a 'year of transition'

MOLLIE BRYANT mbryant@thepampanews.com

For CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocates) of the High Plains, the past year was a time of transformation, with new challenges and victories.

"2011 was a year of transition for us," said Janet Watts, Executive Director of CASA. "We had lots of changes that happened, so it was a good year, but it was a challenging year at the same

The non-profit child advocacy agency, which represents eight counties in the Panhandle, works to help children who have been placed in the foster care system as a result of child abuse or neglect.

"The only way we can be involved is if a judge appoints us to a case," said Watts. "Children have to have two things appointed to them once they're in the foster care system. One is an attorney ad litem, and one is a guardian ad litem. The attorney ad litem is there to represent their legal interest, and the guardian ad litem is there to represent their best interest. In our cases, we're appointed as the guardian ad litem for the child, so our responsibility is to speak for the best interest of the child for the length of time they're in the fos ter care system and the court system."

Last year, 41 volunteers served with CASA. They often are the only consistent person in the life of a child who has been placed in the foster care system. They keep track of CPS documentation, and speak with the kids' family members, teachers, therapists and foster parents to get an idea of how the kids are doing. "Most importantly, they'll talk to the child, and find out how they're doing, and then the volunteer's responsibility is to represent to the court what is in the best interest of that child," said Watts. "We're kind of like the independent voice of the child. We like to tell everybody everytime we're sitting in the courtroom, everyone is paid to be there except for our volunteer...They're there simply to say what is best for this child." Becoming a CASA volunteer involves more than simply signing up. Volunteers must complete 30 hours of training that includes how the court system works, how the CPS system works, child development, educational needs, how to gather information and write reports, and

W.L. "Dub" Norton, 83

W.L. "Dub" Norton, 83, of Amarillo died Sunday, Jan. 1, 2012

Services will be at 2 p.m. Thursday in Carpenter's Church of Pampa with Fred Palmer, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Llano Cemetery. Arrangements are by Cox Funeral Home, 4180 Canyon Drive.

Dub's life began 83 years ago, on Oct. 8, 1928, in Eldorado, Okla. He was born to Walter Lee Norton and wife Hettie. He was the sixth of seven children and was raised in the area of Harmon County, Okla. He married Rhonda Mae Hughes in Mangum, Okla., on May 6, 1951. They enjoyed 61 years of blessed married life.

Norton

Dub spent 53 years working at the Ford dealerships in Borger and Pampa. He started his career in Borger. He later moved his family to Pampa and became the parts department manager. He retired in 1997 but continued to work part time for the company until officially retiring in the fall of 2010. He and wife Rhonda then moved to Amarillo to be closer to their children. He was crazy about all things Ford and would jokingly tell anyone who would listen they needed to drive a Ford.

He was a member and deacon of Carpenter's Church in Pampa. Dub loved the Lord with all his heart and was an inspiration to family and friends. He loved gardening and always said it was his therapy. He enjoyed fishing, observing wildlife and taking long drives with his wife looking at the countryside and enjoying God's world. He was an avid sports fan. His favorite teams were the Dallas Cowboys, Oklahoma Sooners, Texas Tech Red Raiders and Texas Rangers.

Dub loved spending time with his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and he treasured watching them participate in their athletic endeavors. He cherished his family and will be missed and remembered by all who

He was a very giving and thoughtful family man. His friends and family were inspired by the way he fought his valiant battle with cancer. His life ended with him surrounded by family. The last words Dub spoke were a spontaneous prayer for his loved ones. He was holding the hands of his great-grandbabies and spoke in a vibrant, clear voice that we had not heard in days. He said he didn't want to go, but the Lord was calling him home. It was a spiritual moment and will be a cherished memory for those who were present.

He was preceded in death by his precious grandson, Tyler James Carr; his parents, Walter Lee Norton and Hetti Dunfield; four brothers, Al, Ray, Herschel and Ansel; and a sister, Dorothy.

Survivors include his wife, Rhonda Norton of Amarillo; a daughter, Debbie Carr; a son, Grant Norton and wife Rhonda Gail; four grandchildren, Kelci and husband Ryan, Dana and husband Chad, Kresha and Tre; and three great-grandchildren, Kameron, Mali and Baux, all of Amarillo.

Abortion law arguments heard

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - A federal appeals court is weighing whether to lift an order blocking the state of Texas from enforcing a law requiring doctors to show sonograms to patients and describe the images before

In August, U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks in Austin, Texas, ruled that several provisions of the state law violated the free-speech rights of abortion-performing

A three-judge panel from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals didn't immediately rule after hearing arguments Wednesday on the state's request to lift a preliminary injunction issued by Sparks.

A group of medical providers is challenging the law, which also requires doctors to describe the fetal heartbeat to a patient before performing an abortion.

The state argues its interest in protecting "fetal life after viability" trumps any free-speech claims.

Perry tweets, 'Here we come South Carolina AUSTIN (AP) - A deter-Wednesday. that the governor was him to restart his cam-mined Rick Perry said Wednesday he will not abandon his presidential campaign despite a fifthplace finish in the Iowa caucuses.

"And the next leg of the marathon is the Palmetto State. ... Here we come South Carolina!!!," the Texas governor wrote on his Twitter account.

Perry, an avid runner, attached a photo of himself jogging near a lake, wearing a Texas A&M running shorts and showing a thumbs-up.

Phone messages left with his campaign were not immediately returned

After winning 10 percent of the vote in Iowa on Tuesday, Perry said he would return to Texas "to determine whether there is a path forward" for his

White House bid.

After entering the race in August to great fanfare, he nosedived, plagued by missteps most notably in debates. He had planned to make South Carolina his final stand, but put events in that state on hold Wednesday while he headed back to the Texas

Perry's national political director told campaign workers early Wednesday reviewing his organizational and financial resources, and assessing the political landscape in South Carolina and beyond. South Carolina's primary is Jan. 21. The next contest in the race for the GOP nomination is

Jan. 10 in New Hampshire. The photo of Perry after what appears to have been a jog in cold weather was decidedly defiant compared to the emotional speech he gave in Iowa. In his remarks, Perry told supporters that he appreciated their work but needed to consider whether there was a viable strategy for paign in South Carolina.

"With the voters' decision tonight in Iowa, decided to return to Texas, assess the results of tonight's caucus, determine whether there is a path forward for myself in this race," Perry said, his family standing behind

Before Perry spoke, his advisers tried to paint the first contest in the South as the real start to his strategy and braced for a lackluster performance in the Iowa caucuses, which typically winnows the field of presidential hopefuls.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A smiling Mitt Romney making his way to New Hampshire told reporters that he spoke with all his GOP rivals except Newt Gingrich on Tuesday night. Romney says he only got about two hours of sleep as the wait for final Iowa caucus results stretched into the early morning.

Romney says he and wife Ann learned from his campaign manager that he had pulled out a narrow win.

Aboard his campaign plane, the former Massachusetts governor wouldn't characterize his victory margin of only eight votes when asked if it would have been better to win in a landslide.

Romney says landslides are terrific, but he didn't see that in last night's figures.

Updated 'Dallas' to air on TNT

DALLAS (AP) - A new version of a famous TV series about big oil money in Texas will be generating $1,000 a day for Dallas County.

County commissioners on Tuesday approved an agreement with the company behind the updated version of "Dallas" to shoot scenes inside county buildings.

Horizon Scripted Television has agreed to pay a $25,000 security deposit, plus $1,000 per day of filming.

Texas native Larry Hagman is reprising his lead role as conniving oilman J.R. Ewing in the new version of "Dallas," to air on TNT.

Filming began in October and is expected to wrap up later this month. Dallas County officials expect the agreement to generate as much as $10,000.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) - A company seeking to redevelop ex-Naval Station Ingleside into an offshore drilling service facility has another week to make its $19 million down payment.

Port of Corpus Christi commissioners in November approved the sale to Canyon Supply and Logistics of Houston, with a $1 million down payment. The rest of the down payment was due in late December as part of the final purchase price of $66 million.

Commissioners on Tuesday granted the extension, until midnight Jan. 9, as the company awaits international financing

The Corpus Christi Caller-Times reports the extension requires Canyon to pay an extra, nonrefundable $110,000.

Canyon CEO Larry Ramming says the $19 million payment is part of a $100 million bundle for other project developments pending in a Dec. 28 wire from an Austrian bank.

Houston murder rate lowest since '65

HOUSTON (AP) Houston's police chief says the city's murder rate in 2011 was the lowest in more than four decades. Police Chief Charles McClelland Jr. said Wednesday that preliminary figures show Houston had 198 murders in 2011, the lowest it has been since 1965.

Police say the murder rate has significantly dropped since 2006, when there were 377 homicides.

McClelland attributes the drop to the police department's better use of technology that can identify problem areas and allow officials to quickly deploy officers and other resources. He also credits the public's help in identifying trouble spots and sharing that information with officers.

McClelland says other crimes in Houston also dropped in 2011, including robberies, which were down about 17 percent and burglaries, which were down 4 to 5 percent.

Today in History

Today is Thursday, Jan. 5, the fifth day of 2012. There are 361 days left in the year. Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 5, 1972, President Richard Nixon announced that he had ordered development of "an entirely new type of space transportation system," the reusable space shuttle. (The first operational shuttle, Columbia, was launched in 1981.)

On this date:

In 1589, Catherine de Medici of France died at age 69.

In 1781, a British naval expedition led by Benedict Arnold burned Richmond, Va.

In 1809, the Treaty of the Dardanelles, which ended the Anglo-Turkish War, was concluded by the United Kingdom and the Ottoman Empire.

In 1895, French Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, convicted of treason, was publicly stripped of his rank. (He was ultimately vindicated.)

In 1896, an Austrian newspaper, Wiener Presse, reported the discovery by German physicist Wilhelm Roentgen of a type of radiation that came to be known as X-rays.

In 1925, Nellie T. Ross of Wyoming became America's first female governor.

In 1949, in his State of the Union address, President Harry S. Truman labeled his administration the Fair Deal.

In 1957, President Dwight D. Eisenhower proposed assistance to countries to help them resist Communist aggression; this became known as the Eisenhower Doctrine.

In 1970, Joseph A. Yablonski, an unsuccessful candidate for the presidency of the United Mine Workers of America, was found murdered with his wife and daughter at their Clarksville, Pa., home. (UMWA President Tony Boyle and seven others were convicted of, or pleaded guilty to, the killings.)

Ten years ago: Charles Bishop, a 15-year-old student pilot, deliberately crashed a small plane into a skyscraper in Tampa, Fla., killing himself.

Five years ago: The White House announced a shuffling of U.S. military leaders in the Iraq war. Adm. William Fallon ended up replacing Gen. John Abizaid as top U.S. commander in the Middle East; Army Lt. Gen. David Petraeus succeeded Gen. George Casey as top American general in Iraq; Casey replaced retiring Gen. Iowans wanted candidate who could beat Obama WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney won strong support Tuesday from Republicans seeking a candidate who can topple President Barack Obama in November's elections and from those most concerned about the weak economy, according to an entrance poll of GOP voters attending Iowa's presidential caucuses.

Rick Santorum, the former Pennsylvania senator, countered with solid backing from tea party supporters, religious voters and those who ranked abortion as their paramount campaign issue.

Each candidate's reservoir of support helped explain a night in which Romney and Santorum were running neck and neck - and ahead of their four other competitors - in the year's first votes as Republicans started selecting their presidential nominee. Running third was Texas Rep. Ron

Paul, who scored highly with young voters, independents and people concerned about huge federal budget deficits.

Given a choice of four qualities they wanted in their party's nominee, about 3 in 10 said they wanted someone who could defeat Obama this fall. Forty-eight percent of that group said they were backing Romney, more than twice as many as cited any other candidate.

"I like Santorum's character and values. But I like Romney's experience and record," said Jeff Young, a salesman from Waterloo, Iowa, who said he was split between the two before Tuesday's caucus. "He's best-positioned in the most ways to compete with the other party.

Santorum, whose candidacy surged in recent days while emphasizing family and faith, was leading among those seeking a candidate with strong moral character, with 40 percent picking him. Santorum and Paul, a libertarian, were running about evenly among those who said they wanted a true conservative as their standard bearer. Nearly 3 in 10 supporters of the conservative tea party movement were supporting Santorum, and about the same proportion of bornagain or evangelical voters were also backing him. That gave Santorum a clear lead among both groups, important because each account for about 6 in 10 Iowa GOP caucus

Santorum's recent burst of popularity was spotlighted by the entrance poll, which showed he was backed by a third of all voters who said they made their decisions in recent days more than any other contender.

Only about 1 in 7 voters said abortion was the issue that mattered most when they picked a candidate, but an overwhelming 58 percent of them were backing Santorum.

Asked the campaign's top issue, about 4 in 10 named the economy. Romney led among that group with support from about a third of them, underscoring the appeal of his background running an investment company before entering politics and his emphasis during the campaign on his business experience.

Romney entered the caucuses widely viewed as the favorite to ultimately win his party's nomination, and the opinions expressed by voters in Tuesday's entrance poll underscored his strengths and weaknesses in the GOP contests ahead.

Besides his perceived strength as an Obama opponent and among those worried about the economy, Romney was running ahead of his rivals among the 43 percent of Iowa caucus voters who were not born again or evangelical Christians. He was also doing well among those age 65 and up, people earning $100,000 annually or more and the 54 percent who said a business background was more important than government experience to be an effective president.

But only 58 percent of Romney's backers voiced strong support for him, a slightly weaker show of enthusiasm than his other chief rivals. He was also running poorly among those considering themselves very conservative, the most ardent tea party backers and born-again and evangelical voters ΓÇö a crucial portion of GOP voters in South Carolina and some other states in upcoming nominating contests.

Paul had the backing of 48 percent of voters under age 30 and nearly as many independents, giving him large leads in both categories. That could be good news for Paul in New Hampshire, where independents represented almost 4 in 10 voters in that state's 2008 GOP presidential primary. Nearly a quarter of Iowa's GOP voters Tuesday were independents, up from 2008, so their proportion in New Hampshire might grow this year as well.

About a third of GOP caucus goers said they were most concerned about budget deficits, and 3 in 10 of them picked Paul, more than any of his rivals.

Romney, Santorum, Paul and Texas Gov. Rick Perry were running roughly evenly among onefourth of voters who said campaign advertising played an important role in choosing a candidate ΓÇö a testaent to the millions in TV advertis-that blanketed Iowa in the weeks ing up to Tuesday's caucuses. The survey was conducted for AP and the television networks by Edison Research as voters arrived at 40 randomly selected caucus sites in Iowa. The survey involved inter-

Boeing to close Kan. defense plant by end of 2013

ROXANA HEGEMAN Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) -Faced with defense budget reductions, the Boeing Co. announced Wednesday it will close its defense plant in Wichita by the end of 2013.

The closure will cost more than 2,160 workers their jobs and end the firm's presence in a city where it has been a major employer for generations.

The decision was not entirely unexpected. The company said in November it was studying whether to close the Wichita facility, which specializes in modifying commercial aircraft for military or government operations, to address Defense Department budget cuts. The first layoffs are expected to begin in the third quarter of 2012.

The company said it was moving future aircraft maintenance, modification and support to its plant in San Antonio, Texas, and engineering work to Oklahoma City. Work on the Air Force refueling tanker will be performed in Puget Sound, Wash. The company said the 24 Kansas suppliers on that program will continue to provide parts as originally planned.

"In this time of defense budget reductions, as well as shifting customer priorities, Boeing has decided to close its operations in Wichita to reduce costs, increase efficiencies, and drive competitiveness," said Mark Bass, vice president and general manager for the Boeing Defense, Space & Security facility in Wichita.

The study came even as the Pentagon had been working to prevent $500 billion in automatic, across-the-board defense budget cuts over 10 years in the wake of the failure by a bipartisan congressional supercommittee to agree on $1.2 trillion or more in deficit reductions.

Wichita had hoped the number of jobs at the facility would grow after worth at least $35 billion to build 179 Air Force refueling tankers. The modification work on the planes had been expected to be done at Boeing's Wichita plant ГÇö bringing with it 7,500 direct and indirect jobs with an overall economic impact of nearly $390 million. Wichita Mayor Carl Brewer said the city, which prides itself as being the air capital of the world, has a long history with Boeing in the community. Brewer noted he worked there for 20 years before the company sold off its commercial operations.

"Many people - generations upon generations have had an opportunity to be employed there and that could very easily be the end of that ... They are a very important part of us here," Brewer said.

But the mayor said the city would move on and take care of those families and continue working to be the "air capital of the world."

"This is not the first time we have had something of this magnitude. We have had other challenges and we have always managed to work through it and been able to survive," Brewer said.

Boeing has had a facility in Wichita since it bought the Stearman Aircraft Co. in 1929. During World War II, employment at the plant peaked at more than 40,000 as the company churned out four bombers a day. For decades the company remained the city's largest employer.

Then in 2005, Boeing spun off its commercial aircraft operations in Kansas and Oklahoma. At that time, the company still had roughly 15,000 employees in Wichita. After the divestiture, Boeing retained 4,500 workers for its defense work in Wichita but layoffs since have slashed that remaining workforce.

The Wichita facility is facing the end of some programs, such as the international tanker program that supplied refueling tankers to other countries. Over the summer, Boeing announced it would cut 225 jobs at its Wichita defense plant through the end of this year. Even with the loss of the defense plant, Boeing would continue to have an economic impact in this aircraft manufacturing city. Spirit AeroSystems, which took over Boeing's commercial operations, continues to build parts here for Boeing's commercial airplanes.

"But it would be different to a certain extent because of the fact that, you know, it is kind of like family that you actually have and a member of the family is moving away," Brewer said. "So there is a lot of emotional and economic attachment tied to this."

Horoscope for Friday, Jan. 6, 2012

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, Jan. 6, 2012:

This year you grow and evolve in new ways. Others clearly are drawn to you. Open up to new possibilities. Be willing to change your life. You enjoy living much more when you renew various areas of your life. If you are single, you could be very attracted to someone, and he or she to you. On the same plane, there could be a lot of fighting. If you are attached, the two of you will tend to risk more but in different areas of your life. Respect your differences. CANCER can be challenging.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

 You have the possibility of a new beginning. Be willing to express your vulnerability. Make a point of getting together with more open people. The smart and self-disciplined Ram will cut his or her defensiveness, which could manifest itself as aggression. Tonight: Hang out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

ike keeping up with the Joneses. Think carefully about what is happening and why you might be triggering. Tonight: Treat yourself well.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

 Open up to new possibilities. You see what many people cannot. Be affectionate with a friend or loved one. Open up to a family member or roommate. You know what works for you. Investigate a new opportunity without feeling insecure. Tonight: Use care with a volatile friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

 Feeling a little out of sorts isn't that surprising. Instead of taking care of your immediate universe, try taking care of yourself. Remember, if you aren't OK, neither is anyone else. Be secure deep breath

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

* Conversation is important, as is authenticity. Bring those skills into a meeting. Someone might be a little too direct in the way he or she tells you he or she is not interested in your ideas. At least you know where this person stands. Tonight: Enjoy the evening with friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

 You might want to attempt to deal with a situation but could come off as hostile and difficult. Step back rather than step in. Explore other ways to handle what you deem to be difficult. Try to walk in another's shoes. Tonight: Don't push.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★ Rather than be driven by your emotions, consciously make an effort to detach. Use your mind as well. Pretend you are the other person. You might want to gain a fuller perspective. Only then can you act. Listen to feedback carefully. Tonight: Opt for a different activity for a Friday night.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★ Dealing with quirky people easily could become a specialty, if it isn't already! You have humor and the ability to get past a problem. Emphasize in your mind how you might be different from the many people you know. Your reactions probably surprise them, too! Tonight: Be with a favorite

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

 Others come toward you. You are generally the one who is energized. How nice to see  Note how much you need to do to make everyone else taking the first step. You might be a difference with a key person. Avoid competition, touched by a friend's or loved one's effort to connect. Avoid a tension-laden situation Though you might not make the suggestions, you do get to choose!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ Follow through on what you feel is important to handle. You could feel out of sync when dealing with others. Right now your mind resides on a more intellectual, imaginative plain. Tonight: Clear your desk, and return a last-minute call before going out. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Your playfulness still dominates your actions. A partner or associate isn't too pleased with his or her perspective of your mischievousness. You might be having a ball right now, but there is a and listen to what is being shared. Tonight: Take a tomorrow. Be smart today, and handle this situation now before trouble hits. Tonight: Be sensitive to a close friend or loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

 Tension builds internally, but a lot of it comes from your idea of what you should do. Instead, drop some of your judgments, and tension will drop to a lower key. Often it is the stories that we tell ourselves that cause a problem. Tonight: Some time at home.

3 other GOP hopefuls join Perry lawsuit in VA

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) - Three other Republican presidential hopefuls have joined Texas Gov. Rick Perry's lawsuit challenging Virginia's ballot access

A federal judge in Richmond, Va., on Wednesday granted a motion by Newt Gingrich, Jon Huntsman and Rick Santorum to intervene in the lawsuit.

Perry went to court after failing to collect enough signatures from registered voters to get on Virginia's GOP presidential primary ballot. Gingrich also failed to qualify, leaving Mitt Romney and Ron Paul as the only candidates on Virginia's March 6 primary. Huntsman and Santorum did not submit petitions.

Perry's lawsuit claims the state's requirement of 10,000 signatures, including at least 400 from each of the state's 11 congressional districts, is unconstitutional. A hearing on Perry's request for a preliminary injunction is set for Jan. 13.

Amid drought, water desalination gets attractive

Salazar is visiting El Paso's desalination plant on Wednesday to showcase the technology as a way to help alleviate the region's chronic water woes and to support a statewide water supply increasingly stressed by drought and population growth.

Salazar will join U.S. Rep. Silvestre Reyes, an El Paso Democrat, at the $87 million Kay Bailey Hutchison Desalination Plant, which began operation in August 2007. The plant, which takes in salty water from an underground aquifer and makes it drinkable, is the largest inland facility of its kind in the world.

As such facilities become more efficient and cheaper to operate, they are expected to increase their contribution to the Texas water supply in the coming years, said Jorge Arroyo, director of innovative water technologies for the Texas Water Development Board.

Construction is under way on several other desalination plants, and the state's 50-year plan for water supply inframore to be in operation by 2060, Arroyo said.

"It's getting more efficient, reliable and less expensive than what it used to be," he said.

Arroyo said desalination is the only option Texas has for bringing "new water" to the state's supply as the readily available fresh water in aquifers and reservoirs is used up. He also noted the stress caused by the record-setting drought in the region.

The plant treats brackish water, which has more salinity than fresh water but not as much as ocean water, to make it drinkable. El Paso's plant uses water from the local aquifer and treats it through reverse osmosis. The method forces water through a membrane, which retains the molecules that make the water unfit for drinking.

Last year marked the most intense one-year drought on record in Texas, and the dry conditions were expected to continue over 2012 because of the La Nina Effect, state climatologist John Nielsen-Gammon said in a recent report. How long the drought could last, he said, was impossible to predict.

Even though weather patterns influenced by oceanic temperatures "best bet is that global temperatures will continue to increase, causing Texas droughts to be warmer and more strongly affected by evaporation," the report

EL PASO (AP) - of drinkable water by Interior Secretary Ken 2060, said Larry Soward, former Texas commissioner for environmental quality. One acre-foot equals 325,851 gallons.

Improvements in membrane technology, new variations on evaporative-condensation techniques, and other more recent changes have made desalination more cost competitive. However, it is an energy-intensive process and power costs significantly affect the price of produced water, Soward

Under the state's water plan, as much as 2 percent of Texas' water supply will come from brackish water by 2060.

"It is my firm belief that despite these projected low volumes and percentages of total supply for 2060, desalination must be on the menu of water supply options if we have any hope of meeting all our water demands in the decades to come," Soward said.

Although desalination is one of the solutions for ensuring the region's fresh water supply, it should not be viewed as a one-sizefits-all approach, said Laura Huffman, Texas director of The Nature Conservancy.

"Desalination is part of a future water supply for Texas and beyond ... (but) it's not a silver bullet," she said.

Conservation accounts for nearly a quarter of the total water supply in the 50-year plan, so thinking of desalination plants as the only solution "undermines years of work by folks that have evaluated local approaches" to conservation, Huffman said.

Aside from the desalination plant and facilities that recuperate sewage to use to irrigate parks and replenish the aquifer, El Paso has implemented an aggressive water conservation strategy over the last 20 years. El Paso has about 700,000 residents, which is about 36 percent more than in 1990, yet the city's water consumption is actually 1.6 percent less than it was

With those measures, El Paso has proven wrong a study that predicted the city would run dry in 36 years.

El Paso's plant in named after U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchinson, who helped secure more than $29 million in federal funds for the project. It was built through a partnership between and Fort Bliss, the local

Judge off case after ruling executions illegal

DALLAS (AP) - A North Texas judge was removed from presiding over a death penalty case Tuesday after she ruled that the state law allowing executions was unconstitutional.

An administrative judge sided with Dallas County prosecutors and removed state District Judge Teresa Hawthorne from the capital murder case of Roderick Harris, who is accused of fatally shooting two men in 2009. Administrative Judge John Ovard ruled that Hawthorne should be removed because of personal beliefs she expressed about the death penalty.

Ovard is the presiding judge of the state's First Administrative Judicial Region, which covers most of East Texas.

Hawthorne ruled last month that the Texas death penalty law was unconstitutional because it allows prosecutors to arbitrarily seek the penalty, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Harris is accused of fatally shooting brothers Alfredo and Carlos Gallardo during a robbery at a southeast Dallas mobile home in March 2009, then getting into a shootout with police.

At a Tuesday hearing before Ovard, prosecutor Patrick Kirlin testified that Hawthorne told him outside the courtroom after her ruling that "sometimes you have to follow your heart." Kirlin said that comment and some by Hawthorne from the bench prompted prosecutors to seek her recusal.

The Dallas Morning News reported that Hawthorne, when ruling the capital punishment law unconstitutional, said: "My decision is not an act of unabashed judicial activism ... I remember when women and blacks could not vote. I remem- the state's appeals courts ber when so-called witches were burned. I remember when gays had to hide to be in the military. My decision is not to buck the system or stir the waters."

According to the court transcript reviewed by the newspaper, Hawthorne acknowledged that all of have "consistently rejected" the reasons she offered for her ruling, but she insisted that changes could still be made in the law.

Hawthorne was not in court during Ovard's hearing. However, Harris' defense attorneys, Brad Lollar and Doug Parks, told Ovard that prosecutors were seeking the judge's recusal simply because they despised her ruling.

"If she hadn't ruled the way she ruled, the state wouldn't have cared about her personal beliefs one iota," Parks said. "Those rulings should stand."

Factors to consider when choosing a dog Dog Talk

The decision to purchase or adopt a dog is one that requires careful consideration of a host of factors, including how much space the dog will need and whether or not the lifestyle of those who live in the home is a good fit for a furry, four-legged friend

Once the decision has been made and it's time find a dog, the kind of dog to bring into your home is the next decision that must be made. Many people have a natural preference for certain types of dogs, be it a small and lovable Dachsund or a friendly, happy-go-lucky Golden Retriever. Though personal preference is significant, there are additional factors to consider before bringing a dog into your home.

Temperament

Much like people, dogs vary greatly with regards to temperament. Some dogs are very active, while others are much more subdued. Some need significant play time outdoors on a daily basis, while others just need a few minutes outdoors to relieve themselves before heading back inside. A dog's temperament is important to consider for those bringing a puppy into their home, as temperament might dictate if a dog is responsive to training or strong-willed and resistant.

Maintenance

Many dogs shed significant amounts of hair, but how often they shed might help owners determine if a specific breed of dog will be a good fit. For owners who don't mind maintenance, a dog that sheds year-round likely won't be a problem. But those who don't want to be cleaning up dog hair on a regular basis should find a dog that sheds only at certain times of the year. In general, long-coated dogs require lots of grooming, while dogs with shorter coats typically don't need as much grooming.

Prospective dog owners with lots of space in their homes can accommodate a dog of any size, while apartment dwellers or those with smaller homes often find smaller dogs to be a better fit. But even those with ample space should know that larger dogs require more food and exercise, including walks or time spent running around in the yard. Smaller dogs don't need much space, and tend to eat less and stay healthy even with minimal exercise.

Age

Few people can resist a puppy, but there are advantages and disadvantages to adopting both puppies and older dogs. Puppies are adorable, and allow their owners to be involved in their development from the very beginning. But puppies can be stubborn and very difficult to train, often testing their owners' patience. In addition, those with especially busy or hectic households might not have the time to properly train a puppy, which can lead to disastrous consequences down

Older dogs are often trained already, and since many shelter dogs have already grown to their full size, owners won't be surprised down the road when their dogs are bigger than they expected. But older dogs adopted from a shelter might have some initial trust issues they need to overcome. Older dogs might also find it more difficult to adapt to a new home and a new

Health

Some breeds are known for having specific health issues, issues that can become costly to address as a dog ages. Hip and eye conditions are among the most common hereditary diseases or conditions, but these can be screened for before the pet adoption is completed. Purebred dogs might be more likely to suffer from certain hereditary conditions, though mixed breeds are not immune to such diseases or conditions. Before adopting an animal, be it a puppy or an older dog, educate yourself about a chosen breed and any potential health problems it might have.

how to effectively advocate for a child's needs.

"Not everyone is cut out for this kind of volunteer role, because it takes a long time to get through the training and the background screening," said Watts. "We have a very extensive background screening process, since we're working with kids that are coming from hard places."

During 2011, CASA saw staff changes, a new judge in cluster court and a legislative year, which meant the organization was busy speaking with legislators in an effort to secure funding from the Attorney General's office.

"We were able to close on 81 cases, so that was encouraging," said Watts. "We had children either that were reunited with parents or they were adopted. Some aged out of the foster care system. We had some that aged out, but went into an independent living program.'

During 2011, CASA saw in increase in the number of kids that they serve, jumping to 213 from 148 the year before. And Watts said that CPS predicts a 20 percent increase in the number of kids in foster care over the next two years.

"They're looking at trends, and there are lots of factors involved," she said. "One of the factors that they look at is the economy, and when the economy is tougher, we tend to see an increase of the kids that come into care, because of the stressors on the family. We see a lot more neglect, that parents just can't meet the needs of their children, and there's just lots of different issues that contribute to that."

"The other problem is that we have so many kids staying in foster care," Watts added. "We have so many kids awaiting adop- at the high school, and Watts looks at this as an tion right now in foster they had lots of activicare, so when kids tend to stay in foster care for a long period of time, that number never goes down, because kids are staying in care longer and because they're not being adopt-

on the agency during the last year.

"We had some successes, but we had cases coming in at such an increased rate that we had a very hard time keeping up with the demand for volunteers, so we've really had a big push to recruit and train volunteers, and that's pretty much our focus this year, because of the numbers," said Watts. "We don't see that there's going to be a decrease."

April was CASA's annual Child Abuse Awareness Month, which included a slew of activities to keep this problem in the forefront of the community's mind. For instance, the group put up a sign at four different locations in town that showed the number of confirmed victims of child abuse and neglect in their service area. Blue T-shirt cutouts surrounding the sign represent these kids.

"We had 245 T-shirts this year, which was a huge increase for us," said Watts. "That's a lot of kids that were confirmed victims of child abuse and neglect.'

The group hosted an outdoor informational fair as

"We had different agencies around town that were there to provide information to children, and then we had some fun things, like there were people that did face painting," said Watts. "We had an inflatable bouncer, cotton candy and just different things for parents to be able to come to that one location and find all of the resources that are available for children in the community."

This year, students in National Honor Society and National Junior Honor Society organized and ran CASA's Shine the Light Campaign.

"They did an excellent job, and we did it ties," said Watts. "The Minute to Win It games were very big this year, so they had all these Minute to Win It games centered around statistics for child abuse and neglect. They had a former foster child who spoke, and they made handprints. As kids came in, they had them draw their handprints on pieces of paper, and those handprints were then placed on a wall, and there were 215 handprints done."

The 215 handprints stood for the kids in Texas who died in 2010 as a result of child abuse and neglect. Kids who won flashlights during the Minute to Win It games shone their flashlights on the handprints at the end of the event.

Blue Sunday concluded CASA's April activities. The agency has organized the event for about six

"We send out information to all the local churches and ask them to observe Blue Sunday in remembrance of the children who have died as a result of abuse and neglect and for those that are suffering, and there's a prayer that goes with it that the churches can use," said Watts.

Last month, CASA organized a presentation on reporting child abuse, in conjunction with the Bridge and Suzanne Pingel of PISD. They showed a video from the Texas Young Lawyers Association, and a representative from CPS spoke on how to report child abuse, and how the agency responds to reports.

"We're planning on doing (the presentation) again in the spring," said Watts. "We felt like the timing was probably not really good to do that in December. There was so much publicity at that time about Penn State and the things that were going on there, so we felt like maybe the timing was good for it, but December is such a busy month that the turnout wasn't really what we'd hoped."

During 2011, three encouraging and positive note for the year.

"Children that grow up in foster care tend not to have very good outcomes," she said. "They have a very high rate of teen pregnancy, involvement in the juvenile justice system, homelessness, and their lives."

Watts said that one of the young people, who is getting her nursing degree, had help from her CASA representative along the path to college.

"Her CASA involvement was so crucial to that, because her CASA (volunteer) was the one who helped her fill out her applications to go to school, taught her how to balance her checkbook, manage her money and those types of things to help make her successful," she said.

"(Going to college) is quite an accomplishment for kids who are growing up without that intact family that we all think happens for kids," Watts added. "For them to have that good of an outcome has been just phenomenal. Our kids just tend to do better if they have that long term connection."

On January 17, at 5:30 at the CASA office at 315 North Ballard, the agency will host an informational meeting for people who are considering volunteering with CASA.

"If anyone is interested, we would love for them to come to that meeting, and learn more about CASA and how they can make a difference in the lives of these children," said Watts. "We've had volunteers that say they've never had a volunteer role that had such an immediate impact on the future of a child than being a CASA volunteer.'

CASA Volunteer training will begin February 2.

PHS boys basketball want to avenge last season's losses

ANDREW GLOVER aglover@thepampanews.com

Last year the Pampa Harvesters followed their performance in the Fibermax Caprock Classic with a three-game losing streak. This year, No. 22 Pampa looks to reverse those losses as it closes non-district with Lubbock Monterey and Farwell.

"We got some unfinished business against non-district opponents," head coach Dustin Miller said. "The kids took a couple of those losses personal last vear."

Pampa hosts Lubbock Monterey 7:30 p.m. Friday and visits Farwell 7:30 Tuesday. On Tuesday, the Harvesters avenged their loss against Bushland with a 43-39 victory. Senior Latigo Collins said Friday's game will be tougher.

"We will have to play better Friday," Collins said. "We will have a better team than Tuesday.' Monterey beat Pampa 76-54 last year in Lubbock. This will be the seventh game, Pampa has played against a class higher than them. The Harvesters are 2-4 in their previous six. Pampa got to see Monterey during play the Caprock Classic. Senior Cole Engle said the Harvesters need to play

"We know what's coming," Engle said.

"We want two W's this week and send a strong message heading into district." Farwell beat Pampa 69-63 last year in Pampa. Farwell is a 1A team and Pampa is 8-0 this season against teams in lower classes. However, the last three games Pampa hasn't won by more than five. Senior Reid Miller said the team set a goal of winning 20

"We want to go into district with 13 or 14 wins," Miller said.

The head coach said the biggest difference in these games is his team has a target on its back.

"You got a ranking by your name," Miller said. "Every coach I talk to before the game tells me you had a good run last year. It's different when you are the
