Romney clear favorite in Gray County

BY TIMOTHY P. HOWSARE thowsare@thepampanews.com

Republican Mitt Romney was clearly the favored presidential candidate in Gray County with 6,428 votes to President Obama's 885. Romney garnered nearly seven times as many votes as Obama in the county. Members of the Gray County Republican Party gathered for a "watch" last night at the Knights of Columbus Hall.

Jana Vinson was among about 10 Republicans at the hall around 8 p.m.

Asked believed Romney was the best candidate, she said, "Absolutely. People realize he hasn't made the changes he was going to make and he's cause a lot of problems." She said it was fun to gather with fellow Republicans and watch the election results.

John Sparkman said he voted early, and he voted for Romney.

Romney was the predicted winner of Texas' 38 electoral votes, and Republican Ted Cruz was likely to win the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Kay Thornberry, Republican incumbent in Texas' U.S. Congressional District 13, received 6,238 votes. He had no Democratic opposition.

None of the local elections in Gray County were contested, so control of all local offices remained in the hands of Gray County wasn't always as heavily Republican as it is now.

Judge Richard Peet, who was at the court house last night writing election numbers for each precinct and political race on a dry-marker board, said until around 1985 most local offices in Gray County were held by Democrats.

However, for U.S. Congress and governor the county would usually favor a Republican, he

Of the 12,885 registered voters in Gray County, the turnout was 7,495, or 58.1 percent.

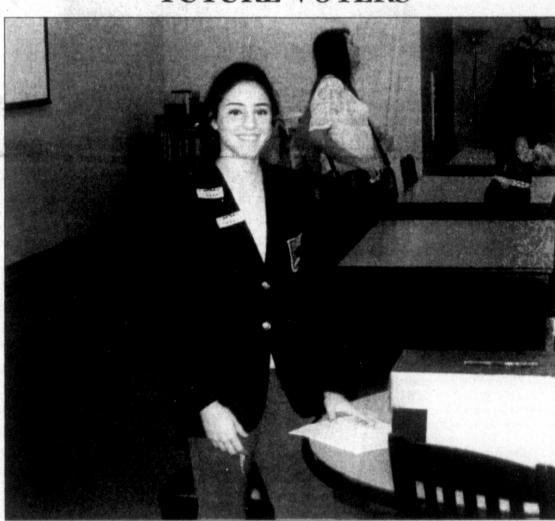

Nell Bailey was a poll worker at Precinct 2 at the Lovett Memorial Library.

She said turnout was steady and that by 2 p.m. 290 people had voted. Bailey said turnout seemed a little under what is in the 2008 election.

PHS holds mock presidential election

The Pampa High School held a mock election Tuesday. Students gathered in the cafeteria during their social studies classes. Once in the cafeteria the students filled out mock voter registration cards.

After that the students headed to the library to sign in, as if they were at an actual polling place, and cast their mock votes in the voting booths. The students all received "I voted" stickers like one would get at a polling booth.

Distributive Education Clubs of America member, Millie Borunda said that she thinks both Barack Obama and Mitt Romney have a fair chance. She hopes the best one for America wins.

As for the mock election at school, "It is nice to see the student body getting involved in politics," said Borunda. The mock election was put on by the student organization DECA, which is a high school VOTES cont. on page 7

Tea party darling Cruz wins Texas' U.S. Senate race

BY WILL WEISSERT Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — Texas overwhelmingly elected tea party-backed Republican Ted Cruz to the U.S. Senate on Tuesday, completing the former state solicitor general's once seemingly impossible rise from virtual unknown to the first Hispanic to represent the Lone Star state in the

The 41-year-old Houston attorney beat Democrat and former state Rep. Paul Sadler. Cruz will replace Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison of Dallas, who is retiring. "I'm proud to stand in front of you and say we have a new senatorelect, Ted Cruz," Sadler said during a concession speech in Austin. "And I want us to be proud of the voters' choice." But even before Election Day, Cruz had already changed the nature of Texas politics by shocking one of the state's most formidable establishment figures, Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst.

Cruz began the Republican primary polling at 2 percent. His father was born in Cuba and fought alongside Fidel Castro before his government embraced communism, then fled for Texas speaking no English and with $100 sowed into his underwear.

Born in Canada while his parents were there working in the oil fields, Cruz grew up mostly in Houston and has a fiery, populist oratory style which he honed while becoming a debate champion at Princeton and earning his law degree from Harvard.

Dewhurst, meanwhile, was the presumed next senator from Texas when the state Legislature adjourned in June 2011. Most observers considered Cruz — who was appointed solicitor general from 2003 to 2008 by Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott and had never before sought political office or won an election — an extreme fringe candidate vying only for recognition from the tea party wing of the GOP. Dewhurst had the support of the state's conservative establishment, including Gov. Rick Perry. He had overseen the state Senate since 2003, and poured more than $20 million of his own personal fortune into his campaign.

But Cruz started a two-year slog of a campaign that took him to dozens of candidate forums Dewhurst skipped. He spent hundreds of hours convincing grassroots Republicans that a vote for Dewhurst was a vote for moderation, and that he was the true conservative in the race. Local work group sets priorities for 2013 Environmental Quality

SUBMITTED

The Gray County Local Work Group (LWG) meeting for the 2013 Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP) in Gray County in September to give local landowners, operators, and other stakeholders in the county the opportunity to provide input about the priority of land uses and natural resource concerns to be addressed with 2012 EQIP funding.

Those present for the meeting, sponsored by the Gray County Soil & Water Conservation District (SWCD), included local landowners and operators, as well as representatives from state and federal agencies including the USDA-Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) and the Gray County SWCD. The purpose of the meeting was to provide local input to the State Technical Committee, which sets state ranking and policy decisions for each year's USDA conservation programs administered by NRCS in Texas.

The State Technical Committee members represent more than 70 state and federal concerns ranging from the Texas Cattle Feeders Association, to the EPA, to Ducks Unlimited, to the Texas Wheat Producers Association.

EQIP funding levels for 2010-2012 based on land uses, were used to determine that Grazing Lands, Irrigated Cropland, and then Dry Cropland would be given priorities 1, 2, and 3 respectively for 2013 EQIP funding levels. It was also decided that county funding allocation by land use would be: 60 percent grazing lands, 30 percent irrigated cropland, and 10 percent dry cropland. These funding levels pertain only to County Base funds, which exceeded $48,000 in Gray County for 2012. A national initiative,

The Lesser Prairie Chicken Initiative, should also have money available for rangeland practices for areas that fall within prairie chicken range. These practices include livestock water development, fencing, and prescribed grazing. In 2012, over $129,700 were awarded to participants through this program in Gray County. Two other fund sources, the Agricultural Water Enhancement Program, and the Ogallala Aquifer Irrigation concern of EQIP, should be available for use on irrigated cropland to address improving efficiency of water use.

These funds can be used for installing new pivots on previously row-watered land, replacing existing pivots at least 20-years old, installing drip irrigation systems, converting existing pivots to higher efficiency, replacing leaky existing concrete pipe, and installing soil moisture monitoring systems.

For grazing lands, it was determined that the priority resource concerns would be: Plant Condition & Health - No. 1, Animal Health - No. 2, and Soil Erosion - No. 3. For Irrigated Cropland it was determined that the priority resource concerns would be: Water Quantity - No. 1, Soil Erosion - No. 2, and Water Quality - No. 3. For Dry Cropland it was determined that the priority resource concerns would be: Soil Erosion - No. 1, Water Quality - No. 2, and Soil Quality - No. 3. NRCS is currently taking applications to participate in the EQIP program for 2013. Some of the conservation practices that will be eligible for funding assistance through this program include livestock water development, brush management, fencing, grass establishment, well decommissioning, terraces, diversions, waterways, and tree and shrub planting. Also included are management incentives such as prescribed grazing on rangeland, no-till/strip-till farming, and soil moisture monitoring systems on irrigated cropland. To find out more about the EQIP program, contact the Pampa NRCS office at (806) 665-6561, ext.3, or come by the NRCS office located in the Gray County Annex at 12125 E. Frederic Ave. (High-

Ellen DeGeneres, 'Sacred Cow' of PBS

The PBS broadcast of the Kennedy Center's Mark Twain Prize on Oct. 30 was a festival of tributes to Ellen DeGeneres — which is fine, since she is quite talented comically. But it wasn't so much a tribute for the comedy as it was for her pioneering work promoting homosexuality.

For laughs, consult top producer Cappy

wasn't

BRENT picked for political reasons: "The Kennedy Center is apolitical. We have had so many people who have their own brand and type of humor. We don't pick winners because of any advocacy they do. It is all about funny and a funny life."

DeGeneres certainly has earned her shelf full of People's Choice Awards. But in the Obama years, the Twain Prize has shifted unmistakably toward liberal politicking. In 2010, this gang chose 40-yearold Tina Fey for this lifetime-achievement honor, and she laid into conservatives from the stage. "I want to thank everyone involved with the Kennedy Center, or, as it will soon be known, the Tea Party Bowling Alley and Rifle Range.'

Fey was so militantly left wing that PBS censored (oh the irony) her nastiest stuff. "The success of Sarah Palin and women like her is good for all women — except, of course, those who will end up, you know, like, paying for their own rape kit and stuff," Fey said. "But for everybody else, it's a win-win — Unless you're a gay woman who wants to marry your partner of 20 years — whatever. But for most women, the success of conservative women is good for all of us - unless you believe in evolution.'

In 2012, the same tilt happened. Witness the Latino comedian John Leguizamo. "How about that, people? A gay woman on PBS with public money and the Kennedys, huh? It's like the Tea Party's worst nightmare, being chased by a binder full of smart women into an event like this, with a guy like me on stage who looks illegal!"

This year's show was a one-sided tribute to the gay agenda, and like your typical PBS show, no conservative point of view was anywhere in sight. The program's emcee, Jimmy Kimmel, began: "In 1998, I mustered the courage to come out of the closet despite the fact that I'm not gay. That's how inspiring this woman is ... She's one of the most inspiring people I've ever met."

Then came her fellow Hollywood homosexuals. Jane Lynch: "I'm pretty darn sure I could not have the career I have, that I could not live as openly as I've lived, if it hadn't been for you. You really took one for the team back then in the 1990s ... You are also a sterling example of how to be a force for compassion, good and understanding in the world, and you are my idol."

Sean Hayes: "You are a hero to me and to countless others. You have changed America. You have changed the world. We didn't have a voice till there was you. We didn't have visibility till there was you. And quite simply, we didn't have the level of hope that we have now till there was you."

Lily Tomlin picked up on the Mark Twain theme: "Ellen, this honor so befits you, so becomes you. Like Huck, you are a folk hero, too. And like Huck, who had the courage to confront the code of convention (racism), rather than betray a friend, you, Ellen, had the same courage to confront convention and not betray yourself or your sense of destiny, and the world would never be the same."

Being too active not always a good thing

Q: Since my husband died six years ago, I have taken full charge of my life, and now I do everything for myself. We did not have children. I am healthy, have a great deal of energy and find myself very busy. Everyday I work on my to-do list, which is becoming longer and longer. I am so involved with details that I have become an unhappy workaholic. How can I learn to live with my list?

A: Consider dumping the list. The major challenge with to-do lists is that they are about

your past and future, but not about the present. Your list is controlling your actions. Unfortunately, you appear to have set yourself up for failure by overly committing and becoming governed by it. Sometimes we create our own prisons.

Guilt and fear can become major components to overcome them when we attempt to change. However, if you want to put more balance and happiness in your life, consider workable options, such as penciling in an hour each day for your personal freedom and distraction. Commit to it!

Another option could be to limit your list to only three must-do items, and let everything else fall into place. Individuals sometimes learn they actually accomplish more by limiting the number of their priorities. Some things prove not worth doing.

When we lessen the pressures on ourselves, we often reenergize and bounce forward by focusing on what we really want to accomplish. Avoid listing something that is impossible for you to do. Minimize, relax and convince yourself that making positive attitude changes will be what makes your hard work worthwhile. Most of us are trying to do the best we can!

Q: My grandparents love me, and I love them. I have just graduated from college and have moved back home while looking for a job. My grandparents are lonely and want to see me a lot. They find excuses for me to join them for meals, ask for menial help which they could perform themselves, are trying to keep themselves posted and involved with the family, and are always asking how my search for work is going.

I understand that, but now I really need to concentrate and be free to pursue and finding a good job. I am sending out as many resumes as possible, continue to look for a mentor, am networking with my peers and learning how the system works. I find juggling time for my grandparents tough to deal with right now. What could I do?

A: Tell them the truth, that you would like to share more time with them, but you are now focused on a career path and need to be available whenever you have an interview opportunity. Grandparents know how tough it is to get a good job now.

Suggest to them you could visit once a week, say Sundays at 4 or whenever is best for you. When grandparents were looking for their first job, they remember how tough the process can be. They will understand your timing. They know you love them, and they always want the best for you. That is what grandparents do best!

What do I tell my black child if Obama loses?

What do I tell my black child if Barack Obama, America's first black president, loses his bid for re-election? This is a question many parents are asking themselves — especially those who would blame the loss on racism.

Jubilant black parents on the front pages of newspapers, the day after Barack Obama won the presidency in 2008, said things like, "for the first time" they could "sincerely" say to their children that a black person could realistically aspire to become president of the United States.

The New York Times wrote: "That a new day had dawned was immediately apparent at breakfast on Wednesday at Eagle Academy, a young public school in the spot where the often hard-edged Brooklyn neighborhoods of Brownsville and Ocean Hill intersect: The sixth-grade boys sat in silence over their eggs, biscuits and apple juice.

"They were too busy poring over the transcripts of President-elect Barack Obama's speech that teachers had handed them as they walked in. Too tired, perhaps, from having been awoken at midnight to hear the news from their tearful mothers. ...

"The 30-year-old principal, Rashad Meade, pushed his proteges, asking why they thought
... this moment was so important ... why their parents had woken them

"Isaiah Purcell, who is 11, started to say something about the issues, then trailed off. He picked up again, asserting that Mr. Obama's ascendancy to the White House

'makes us think that we could accomplish anything when you put your mind to it (emphasis added)." Goodness! Pre-Obama, what were these parents and teachers telling these kids about their future? What would the tearyeyed parents have said had Obama lost? Would they have told their children that racism remains a major force in America and Obama's defeat proves the point? And assuming he loses his bid for re-election, what will this defeat say about "race" in America?

My father, a former Marine, World War II vet, was born to an illiterate
single mother in Athens, Ga. An only child, he never met his biological father. He was a 14-yearold teenager in that Jim Crow South when the Great Depression began.
Hard, hard knocks.

But as I write in my new book, "Dear Father, Dear Son," my father taught my brothers and me that the only barrier to success is lack of effort. My Huntsville, Alabamaborn mother also taught us that, through education and steady application, goals could be achieved — no matter how lofty.

Yes, even the presidency of the United States.

I write: "Mom made me feel like I could spit lightening and make bullets bounce off my chest. She sat me down on the front porch when I was about 6 years old. She had an illustrated book of all the presidents from George Washington to Dwight Eisenhower. We talked about their achievements and disappointments.

and disappointments.

"'Larry,' she said, tapping the book, 'if you work hard enough and want it bad enough, someday you can be in this book."

My parents told us that no one can make you feel inferior without your permission. In high school, we read a sad, bitter poem about racism in a black literature course:

"While riding through old Baltimore, so small and full of glee, "I saw a young Baltimorean keep a-lookin' straight at me. "Now, he was young and very small, and I was not much bigger

"And so I smiled, but he put out his tongue and called me 'nigger.'
"I saw the whole of Baltimore from May until September, "Of all the things that happened there, that's all that I remember."

The teacher angrily talked about the permanent damage done to this little boy's psyche. The permanent stain of racism. The assault on the little boy's dignity. The boy, said the teacher, will never be the same. By the time the bell sounded, everyone was angry.

When I got home, I read the poem to my mother. She was in the kitchen, cooking a pot of greens. When I finished the last line, she turned, big spoon in hand, and looked me in the eye.

"Too bad," she said,
"that boy let something so trivial spoil his vacation."

If Obama loses, how many parents will tell their children that his race did him in? Already, The Associated Press published a poll supposedly showing that the negative "racial attitudes" people hold against blacks could likely cost Obama 2 points in the election.

Really?
Not only does Obama benefit from a near-unanimous black vote, but also from the many whites who voted for Obama because

Hall of Famer Frank Robinson became the first black manager in the modern major leagues. There have been many since. Robinson's hiring made a statement about the irrelevance of race. Years later, when his team underperformed, Robinson was fired.

Obama can be fired, as well.

Chad and the Cadbury Easter eggs

It was Saturday, April 10, 1999 and I had just finished my morning coffee with Nathan, my preacher bud. On the way to the office I made my usual stop by Albertson's Supermarket to check out their reduced meat section, which I called "cheap meat". As I checked out I noticed that they had their Cadbury Easter family.

MIKE would be to buy some SUBLETT extra ones to take to church the next day for all the kids at the Easter service. So I wrote out a check to Albertsons, signed the check and told my youngest son, Chad, "Hey, Chad, drive down to Albertsons and buy all of the Cadbury Easter Eggs that they have on sale for 25¢." I had seen 1-2 dozen in the display box when I checked out, but wasn't exactly sure how much it would

Just a little while later Chad came walking in the front door with 3-4 plastic bags full of Cadbury Easter Eggs. It was check # 5731, made out for $49.88; 184 Cadbury Easter Eggs. Of course, my first reaction was, "Chad, what in the world did you do?" His reply was lightning fast, "Dad, I did exactly what you told me to do. You said buy them all and that's what I did." I couldn't argue with him and I learned several powerful lessons that

1- When you train up your child to be unquestionably obedient, then you better be very, very careful what you tell him to do.

2- If you want to really excite every kid at church, just drop in with a big bowl of Cadbury Easter Eggs and tell them they can have as many as they

3- If you want to get all the parents at church really fired up, just drop in with a big bowl of Cadbury Easter Eggs and tell their kids they can have as many as they want.

4- No matter how delicious a food is, you will eventually get sick of it if you have 184.

ous as buy 184 of anything, people pretty much remember it for a very, very long time and they also feel a need to re-tell the story over and over again with significant laughter.

Group again asks for monument at Okla. courthouse

POTEAU, Okla. (AP) — A veterans group is again asking LeFlore County commissioners to place a Ten Commandments monument on the courthouse lawn.

The plan was approved in 2009 but was put on hold when a lawsuit challenged a similar monument on the courthouse lawn in neighboring Haskell County.

The Times Record reports that Disabled American Veterans commander Charlie Horsley made the request Monday to commissioners Lance Smith and Ceb Scott. Smith said he wants to discuss potential legal issues with the District Attorney's office.

A federal appeals court ruled that the Haskell County monument was an unconstitutional government endorsement of religion and it was moved to the lawn of an American Legion building after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal of the ruling.

Democrats maintain control of Senate

By DONNA CASSATA Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)
— Democrats handily secured a majority in the Senate on Tuesday, snatching Republican-held seats in Massachusetts and Indiana and turning back fierce, expensive challenges in Virginia, Ohio, Wisconsin and Connecticut to maintain the control they've held since 2007.

With a third of the Senate up for election, Republicans were undone by candidate stumbles. GOP hopefuls in Missouri and Indiana uttered clumsy statements about rape and abortion that severely damaged their chances and the party's hopes of taking over. The losses of Senate seats in Massachusetts and Indiana, combined with independent Angus King's victory in the Republicanheld Maine seat, put the GOP too far down in their already uphill climb.

Democrats held open seats in Virginia, Wisconsin and New Mexico, and were leading in North Dakota shortly after midnight. The only pickup for the Republicans was Nebraska, where Deb Fischer denied former Democratic Sen. Bob Kerrey's bid to return to the Capitol.

Democrats, once on the wrong side of the political math with 23 seats at risk compared with only 10 for the GOP, suddenly looked like they could increase their numbers. They entered the night with a 53-47 edge, including two independents who caucus with them. After midnight, Democrats controlled 52 seats to the GOP's 44 with three races still outstanding and one newly elected independent, Angus King of Maine, saying he hasn't decided which party he will align with.

In charge again, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said Republicans brought defeat on themselves with their preoccupation with denying President Barack Obama a second term.

"Things like this are what happens when your No. 1 goal is to defeat the president and not work to get legislation passed," Reid said. "The strategy of obstruction, gridlock and delay was soundly rejected by the American people. Now they are looking to us for solutions," he said in a separate statement.

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., said the voters have not endorsed the "failures or excesses of the president's first term," but rather have given him more time to finish the job.

"To the extent he wants to move to the political center, which is where the work gets done in a divided government, we'll be there to meet him half way," McConnell said.

The results were a bitter loss for the GOP and are certain to prompt questions about the promise and peril of the tea party movement that just two years ago delivered a takeover of the House to the GOP. In 2010, three tea party Senate candidates in Nevada, Delaware and Colorado cost Republicans seats they were favored to win. On Tuesday, a tea party-backed candidate in Indiana denied the GOP a seat that the party had been favored to win, while Fischer and tea partybacked Ted Cruz of Texas prevailed in their races.

In a sober statement, Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, said the GOP has work to do.

"We have a period of reflection and recalibration ahead for the Republican Party. While some will want to blame one wing of the party over the other, the reality is candidates from all corners of our GOP lost tonight," Cornyn said, though he added that the party's "conservative vision is the right one to secure a stronger America for future generations."

Democratic Rep. Joe Donnelly edged out tea party-backed Indiana state treasurer Richard Mourdock in a race rocked by the Republican candidate's awkward remark that pregnancy resulting from rape is "something God intended."

Mourdock also upset some Indiana voters for his decision to sue to stop the federal auto bailout of Chrysler, which means jobs building transmissions to thousands in Kokomo. And he alienated some in his own party with his divisive win over six-term Sen. Richard Lugar in the May GOP primary. Lugar refused to campaign for him.

In Massachusetts, Democrat Elizabeth Warren knocked out Republican Sen. Scott Brown, who had stunned the political world in January 2010 when he won the late Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's seat. The strong Democratic tilt in the state and President Barack Obama's easy win over former Gov. Mitt Romney helped the consumer advocate in her bid.

The Massachusetts race was one of the most expensive in the country — $68 million — even though both candidates agreed to bar outside spending.

In Missouri, Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill was considered the most vulnerable incumbent, but Republican Rep. Todd Akin severely damaged his candidacy in August when he said women's bodies have ways of avoiding pregnancy in instances of "legitimate rape." GOP leaders, including Romney, called on him to abandon the race. Akin stayed in.

The results ensure plenty of new faces in the Senate, many of them familiar from the House. Republican Rep. Jeff Flake won in Arizona and will join Democratic Reps. Mazie Hirono of Hawaii and Martin Heinrich of New Mexico. In Wisconsin, Democratic Rep. Tammy Baldwin defeated former four-term Gov. Tommy Thompson and will be the first openly gay senator. .

The caustic campaign for control of the Senate in a divided Congress was marked by endless negative ads and more than $1 billion in spending by outside groups on races from Virginia and Florida to Montana and New Mexico. The outcome in Ohio and Virginia was closely linked to the presidential race.

In Maine, independent Angus King prevailed over Republican Charlie Summers and Democrat Cynthia Dill in the race to replace Republican Sen. Olympia Snowe, who blamed partisan gridlock in Washington for her unexpected decision to retire after 18 years in the Senate.

King has resolutely refused to say which party he'd side with if elected. But members of both parties have indicated that they expect the former Democratic governor and Obama supporter to align with Democrats. Reid reached out to him Tuesday night, according to a Senate aide.

In Ohio, Democratic Sen. Sherrod Brown survived an onslaught of outside spending, some $30 million, to defeat state treasurer Josh Mandel. In Pennsylvania, Democratic Sen. Bob Casey survived a late scare from businessman Tom Smith, who invested more than $17 million of his own money in the race.

Democratic Rep.
Chris Murphy won the Connecticut Senate seat held by Sen. Joe Lieberman, the independent who was the Democratic Party's vice presidential nominee in 2000. Murphy's win marked the second straight defeat for former wrestling executive Linda McMahon, who spent $50 million of her own wealth in a failed effort against Sen. Richard Blumenthal in 2010 and more than $42 million this election cycle.

In Texas, Republican Cruz won the seat held by retiring GOP Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison. Cruz will become the third Hispanic in the Senate, joining Sen. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., and Marco Rubio, R-Fla.

In Florida, Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson triumphed in his bid for a third term, holding off a challenge from Republican Rep. Connie Mack. Republican groups had spent heavily against Nelson early in the race, but the moderate Democrat was a prolific fundraiser with wide appeal among Democrats and some Republicans in the Panhandle.

Independent Bernie Sanders won a second term in Vermont. Democratic Sens, Sheldon Whitehouse in Rhode Island, Ben Cardin in Maryland and Tom Carper in Delaware were all re-elected. Also cruising to another term were Democratic Sens. Debbie Stabenow in Michigan, Kirsten Gillibrand in New York, Amy Klobuchar in Minnesota, Dianne Feinstein in California, Maria Cantwell Washington state and Menendez in New Jersey.

why Xcel Energy continues to invest in our systems.

Especially if you've ever owned a 10-year-old car.

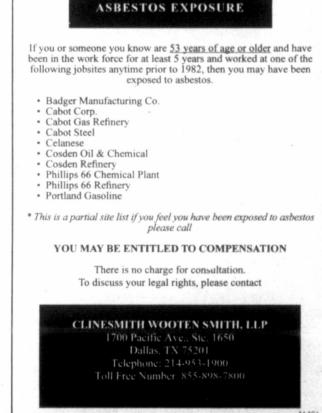

At Xcel Energy, our team of engineers and technicians do an amazing job of extending the useful life of our power plants, power lines, transformers and more.

But—just like with an old car—eventually, it becomes less cost effective to keep fixing what breaks. And the time comes to upgrade.

So when you see an Xcel Energy improvement project, you can be confident that it's part of our plan to make investments today that ensure reliable, affordable energy for our customers in the years to come.

It's our vision for a strong energy future. And it drives everything we do.

Judge Richard Peet writes in votes for each race and precinct at the Gray County Courthouse Tuesday.

Obama leads in electoral count

By DAVID ESPO AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama and former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney swapped hard-fought battleground states Tuesday night in a tense duel for the White House shadowed by a weak economy and high unemployment that crimped the middle class dreams of millions.

Obama won New Hampshire, and Romney put North Carolina in his column, the first two of nine battleground states to fall.

The rest of the pivotal states were anything but settled — Ohio, Virginia and Florida among them — with long lines in some locations hours after poll-close time. Romney led in the national popular vote with 40 million votes, or 50 percent. Obama had 34.4 million, or 48 percent, with half of the precincts tallied.

But Obama led in the competition for electoral votes, where it mattered most. He led 234-200, with 270 required for victory.

The economy was rated the top issue by about 60 percent of voters surveyed as they left their polling places. But more said former President George W. Bush bore responsibility for current circumstances than Obama did after nearly four years in office.

About 4 in 10 said the economy is on the mend, but more than that said it was stagnant or getting worse more than four years after the near-collapse of 2008. The survey was conducted for The Associated Press and a group of television networks.

Democrats got off to a quick start in their bid to renew their Senate majority, capturing seats in Indiana and Massachusetts now in Republican hands.

In Maine, independent former Gov. Angus King was elected to succeed retiring GOP Sen. Olympia Snowe. He has not yet said which party he will side with, but Republicans attacked him in television advertising during the race, and Democrats rushed to his cause.

Polls were still open in much of the country as the two rivals began claiming the spoils of a brawl of an election in a year in which the struggling economy put a crimp in the middle class dreams of millions.

der and has called for eliminating a string of federal departments.

Dewhurst didn't take Cruz seriously until he came in second in the Republican primary and forced a July runoff. But by then it was too late and Cruz won handily.

His victory shook the Texas political establishment to its core and vaulted Cruz to national prominence. He snagged a prime speaking slot at the Republican National Convention and became a fixture on political talk shows from coast-to-coast.

That made Tuesday's victory over Sadler almost anti-climactic — but no less decisive.

Voting at Walnut Hill elementary school in north Dallas, 61-year-old Jamie Parker said she didn't support Cruz during the primaries but has since warmed to him.

"I'm pretty much anti-Democrat right now," said Parker, who with her husband has a business that sells computers to dentists.

Sadler was also an unexpected candidate, stepping up after retired Lt. Gen Ricardo Sanchez dropped out.

Yet Texas Democrats did not turn out for Sadler, giving him less than $1 million in a state where a statewide campaign typically costs more than six times that. Sadler didn't have enough money to flood television airwaves with commercials in most parts of the state, and struggled to spread his message since Cruz only agreed to attend two debates — one broadcast during Friday night high school football games.

Sadler put on an old-school campaign, offering policies typical of southern, moderate Democrats. He had promised to support President Barack Obama's health care law, tax proposals and immigration policy — three positions that Cruz roundly condemned.

Betty Blanton, a 60-year-old educator and administrator at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, rode her bike to an elementary school to cast her ballot Tuesday.

"They're just way too far right," she said of the tea party.

After securing the Republican nomination, however, Cruz moved hard to the center and mended fences with the state's mainstream GOP — even appearing at fundraisers with Dewhurst and Perry. That helped Republicans statewide, like El Paso accountant Bob Ramey, embrace him.

Ramey said his vote was motivated by Democratic proposals to raise taxes on wealthier Americans.

"I don't think you should take money from people just because they are successful," Ramey said.

Freshman Lady Harvesters get first win, 44-29

BY ZAC GREEN sports@thepampanews.com

Pampa's freshman Lady Harvester basketball team beat the Palo Duro Dons Monday night 44-29. Both teams started the game sluggish with Palo Duro calling a timeout with 5:34 left in the 1st quarter with the score 2-0.

The game was tied 9-9 late in the second quarter before Reata Collins scored a three point play after being fouled on a made layup. She added the free throw to make it 12-9 Lady Harvesters with 2:52 left in the second quarter. That bucket, plus one gave Pampa the momentum to head into the half leading Pampa would lose the lead early in the third quarter, but they never trailed by more than two points the entire ball game. Pampa's biggest lead was the 15 points they ended up winning the game by.

Biftu Tula led the way for the Dons with 11 points, but she left the game due to injury with about a minute remaining in the third and didn't return until 5:22 left in the fourth. While Tula was on the bench, Pampa would take a 13-point lead after a 9-0 run.

After trailing 6-4 at the end of the first quarter, the Lady Harvesters outscored the Dons 40-23 in the final three quarters. The biggest reason for the pull away was that the Dons were unsuccessful in staying out of foul trouble. The Lady Harvesters were 20 for 37 from the free throw line, with the Dons going 1 for 11 from the foul line.

Collins led the way for the Lady Harvesters with 21 points, including going 11-16 from the free throw line. Megan Brock had 15 points, all of which came in the second half. Cameron Schaub added 5 points. Kassie Jerome added two points and Kathlyn Cummins scored the other Lady Harvester point.

For the Dons, it was Tula leading the way with 11 points. Michele Soria had 8 points. Brittany Person, Alicia Medina, Monique Flores and Patricia Marrufo all added two points for the

With the win the Lady Harvesters improve to 1-1 on the season and they will be back in action Nov. 12 at Panhandle. The game will tip off at 6 p.m.

Meet the Harvesters kicks off season

BY CHARLA SHULTS Special to the Pampa News

The PHS Basketball kick off celebration "Meet the Harvesters" took place in McNeely Field House Monday night. The annual event was full of excitement and anticipation as the crowded gym awaited the introductions of the 2012-2013 Pampa High School Varsity basketball teams.

With the ever loyal Trent Loter standing near the dressing room to greet every player as they were announced the introductions began. Every basketball team from the high school and junior high were recognized and the celebration of each person and team was shown as the crowd cheered them on.

Following introductions the shooting contest between varsity girls and boys really got the spectators making some noise as the varsity girls took a slim margin of victory over the boys with a 188-187 win.

The evening was concluded with the fun of some Hoops musical chairs and a surprise 50th birthday party for Girls Head Coach Gene Valentine.

If you missed the opportunity to come celebrate these amazing young people, come support them at any of their games, it'll sure make you proud.
