Meals on Wheels recognizes volunteers, sponsors.

STAFF REPORT

Pampa Meals on Wheels held its 36th annual volunteer luncheon yesterday to recognize its corps of dedicated volunteers and sponsors.

Meals on Wheels delivers nutritious meals Monday through Friday to senior citizens in the community.

But the volunteers deliver more than just hot meals. They bring a warm smile and friendly conversation to seniors who often live alone and have little contact with other people.

The lunch was held at the M.K. Brown Heritage Room and the Pampa High School show choir performed.

Meals on Wheels director Jeane Autry thanked the sponsors, including Charmichael-Whitley Funeral Home; Culberson-Stowers; Duncan, Fraser & Bridges Insurance; Lewis Meers, CPA; Thomas Reynolds,

Statewide gas price average moves six cents higher

SUBMITTED BY AAA TEXAS

Today's statewide gas price average in Texas is $3.49. That's six cents more than last week, according to the AAA Texas Weekend Gas Watch. Of the major metropolitan areas surveyed in the Lone Star State, drivers in Dallas and Ft. Worth are paying the most at $3.57, and drivers in El Paso are paying the least at $3.32 per gallon. On average Texas drivers are paying 17 cents less per gallon than the national average of $3.66.

With just two weeks remaining before refiners must switch to producing summer-blend gasoline, retail gas prices continued to move higher over the last week. Each spring, approaching that May 1 deadline for summer-blend fuel, seasonal refinery maintenance and the changeover itself increases the chances that an unplanned disruption to production puts upward pressure on prices, and can send prices sharply higher in an area that is supplied by an impacted facility. These sorts of issues have been minimal so far this spring but should be watched as we count down to the switchover deadline.

"To maximize fuel efficiency during these days of higher prices, keep vehicles maintained according to the manufacturer recommendations," said AAA Texas/New Mexico Representative Doug Shupe. "Also, get rid of unnecessary weight in the vehicle, don't speed or drive aggressively, and try to complete errands in fewer trips."

Regular gas was selling for $3.49 a gallon Thursday at the Allsup's convenience store at North Hobart and Alcock streets.

Crime Stoppers' Fugitive of the Week

SUBMITTED BY PPD

The Gray County Crime Stoppers' Fugitive of the Week is Joshua Lee Rivas, who is wanted for assault, family violence — impeding breathing or circulation.

Rivas is a 22-year-old Hispanic male, is 5-foot, 7-inches tall, weighing 140 pounds with black hair and brown eyes.

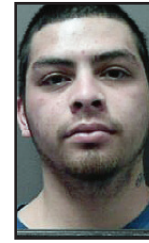

If you have any information about Rivas or any other fugitive, you are urged to call Crime Stoppers or submit a Web Tip. They don't want your name, only your information.

Never try to detain the fugitive yourself. In determining whether someone is a fugitive, a suspect must have a felony charge coupled with an arrest warrant that was not cleared within a week of being issued.

If your information leads to an arrest, Crime Stoppers will pay a cash reward of up to $200 and you will remain anonymous.

The wanted status of the posted fugitive or fugitives is updated as often as possible. Persons listed above may be arrested and no longer wanted. Upon confirmation of a person's arrest, Pampa Gray County Crime Stoppers will change or remove the post to reflect their status.

There are three ways to submit your tip, call 806-669-2222, visit Web Tips at www.pgc-stips.com or text the word "pampa" along with your tip to 274637.

Fort Worth man convicted for insurance fraud

SUBMITTED

AUSTIN — A Fort Worth man faces ten years in federal prison following a conviction for insurance fraud. Caleb Deason, an insurance agent for Transamerica Life Insurance Co., was convicted on charges of wire fraud and money laundering in a two-day trial before U.S. District Judge John McBride last December. On April 3, Deason was sentenced to 10 years in federal prison by Judge McBride.

In addition to his prison sentence, Deason was ordered to pay $99,491 in restitution.

The conviction follows an extensive investigation by the Texas Department of Insurance (TDI) Fraud Unit, working with the U.S. Secret Service and the U.S. Attorney's Office in Dallas. Deason was found to have sold a $1 million life insurance policy and subsequently, upon the death of the policyholder, diverted the death benefit funds to his own bank account for his personal use.

"Insurance fraud is a crime that will not be tolerated in Texas," said Neftali Carrasquillo, director of TDI's Fraud Unit. "Our investigators and special prosecutors are working tirelessly with local law enforcement to combat this problem that affects all policyholders."

In fiscal year 2013, the TDI Fraud Unit investigated more than 500 cases of alleged insurance fraud. A total of 222 investigations were referred for prosecution, resulting in 108 indictments, 130 final dispositions and total restitution of more than $2.5 million. Since 2005, a total of more than $8.5 million in restitution has been ordered in cases prosecuted by TDI Special Prosecutors.

To report suspected insurance fraud, call TDI's Consumer Helpline at 1-800-252-3439 or visit website at www.tdi.texas.gov/fraud/onlinereport.html.

BSA to host Mother Daughter Remembrance Tea

SUBMITTED
The Mother Daughter Remembrance Tea is being hosted by BSA Hospice Care of Amarillo and Pampa. It will be held in the BSA Auditorium at BSA Hospital in Amarillo from 6:30 to 8:30 pm. April 29. Joni Prater, owner of the Nordic Galley Bakeri, will speak about her personal grief journey after the death of her mother which eventually led to Prater opening her business. This is a new event BSA Hospice Care is offering for the entire Pampa community of mothers and daughters as we all reflect on the up-coming celebration of Mother's Day. Remembering and finding opportunities to share our memories — happy and painful — aids in the healing of our grieving hearts. To make a reservation, call 806-212-8716 by April 22.

Robber who was homesick for prison to be sentenced

CHICAGO (AP) — Walter Unbehaun has spent nearly all of his adult life behind bars, so it's not surprising that he faces sentencing Thursday for yet another crime, a bank robbery last year. His reason for robbing the bank is surprising, though: He was homesick for prison. The 74-year-old high-school dropout and part-time bathtub repairman isn't the first long-term convict to apparently prefer being barked at by guards to life on the outside, which has its own demands. But feeling discontent, Unbehaun hit on the idea of committing a crime in order to get caught.

Sending Unbehaun to prison would be more reward than punishment to him, but setting him free would risk him committing another serious crime. "Did the system fail Mr. Unbehaun? Or was his inability to stay out of jail the result of his own free will?" Fairly asked. "We may never know. But what we do know, clearly, is Mr. Unbehaun lacks the desire to lead a law-abiding life outside of prison walls."

Even if his age and infirmity might seem to invite leniency, that "is arguably offset by his lengthy and violent criminal history," Fairly said. The Chicago-born Unbehaun first went to prison at 23 for transporting a stolen car. His criminal record includes more than half a dozen convictions for crimes from home invasion to — ironically — escaping from prison.

Media accounts from 1970 describe how Unbehaun kidnapped a 19-year-old girl and left her bound to an Ohio motel bed as he fled the state in her car. For that, he was convicted of kidnapping and sentenced to 25 years. His most recent decade-long prison term, for bank robbery, ended in 2011.

Unbehaun pleaded guilty in September to the 2013 bank robbery in the Chicago suburb of Niles and faces a maximum 30-year prison term. Prosecutors asked for a sentence of about seven years.

In his presentencing filing, defense attorney Richard McLeese called on the judge to show Unbehaun mercy.

"An individual driven to commit bank robbery so that he can return to prison is, we submit, less culpable than someone who acts simply out of greed," he said. A three-year sentence, he argued, would be appropriate. In a brief letter filed to the judge last week, Unbehaun didn't withdraw his wish to go to prison. But he did write, "I wasn't thinking straight."

Unbehaun's third wife died while he was behind bars for the previous bank robbery. But it's not as if no one extended the childless widower a helping hand. Following his 2011 release, his sister and her husband bought Unbehaun a trailer home in Rock Hill, S.C., the couple said Wednesday.

Bored and alone, Unbehaun spent his days watching television or drawing, and in a court filing he compared his life at the trailer park to living in a prison isolation "hole."

"We tried to help him and do as much as we could, but it didn't work out," Unbehaun's sister, Darlene Kellner, said in a phone interview from South Carolina.

Defense filings say Unbehaun, a D and F student in school, spells at a first-grade level.

At least while behind bars, Unbehaun was usually well-behaved and compliant, filings said. At pretrial hearings, Unbehaun sat in a wheelchair wearing orange jail garb, appearing attentive and at ease.

McLeese said mild dementia may have contributed to his client's decision to rob his way back into prison, and he also speculated that depression or what he dubbed "soul sickness" could also have been factors.

Salmonella decline seen in food poisoning report

NEW YORK (AP) — The government's latest report card on food poisoning shows a dip in salmonella cases but an increase in illnesses from bacteria in raw shellfish. The report counts cases in only 10 states for some of the most common causes of foodborne illness, but is believed to be a good indicator of national food poisoning trends. Highlights from Thursday's report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention:

What's making us sick?

Salmonella remains at the top of the chart, far ahead of most other foodborne germs. Only campylobacter (camp-ee-loh-bak-tur) — a bacteria commonly linked to raw milk and poultry — comes close. Other causes, listeria, shigella (shih-GEHL'-uh) and E. coli, trail behind.

Food poisoning getting worse?

Overall, no. Last year, there were no significant changes in most kinds of food poisoning, compared to the previous three years. The new report tallied about 20,000 illnesses and 80 deaths in the 10 states, similar to previous years. The CDC estimates that 1 in 6 Americans get sick from contaminated food each year, though most cases are not reported.

Any good news?

Yes, for salmonella. The rate of new cases dropped 9 percent — the biggest drop in about a decade. But officials are cautious about making too much of it, since it was compared to a time period that included a big outbreak linked to eggs in 2010. Last year's rate is similar to what it was about five years ago. CDC officials hope new regulatory proposals, like one to prevent salmonella in chicken parts, will keep pushing rates down.

What about bad news?

There was an increase in infections from vibrio (VIB'-ree-oh) bacteria found in raw shellfish, like oysters. Last year, cases were up 32 percent from the previous three years and 75 percent from about five years ago. But the numbers remain very small — only 242 of the 20,000 illnesses recorded in the 10 states. Climate change is warming coastal waters in some places, and that may be helping spread some vibrio strains to new locations, said Dr. Robert Tauxe, a CDC food-germ expert. "The warmer the water, the more vibrio," he said. A strain traditionally found in the Pacific Northwest is now showing up along the East Coast. Tauxe said it might have been spread through water in ships' ballast tanks.

What can prevent food poisoning?

Carefully wash and clean food, and cook meat, poultry and eggs thoroughly. Avoid raw milk and unpasteurized juices.

Promptly refrigerate leftovers. A government report last year showed leafy greens like lettuce and spinach were the leading source of food poisoning, and produce in general accounted for nearly half of all illnesses. There were slightly more deaths attributed to poultry than to vegetables in the decade studied.

Easter butter lamb gets 'pardon' at Buffalo market

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — There's at least one butter lamb in Buffalo that won't be going under the knife this Easter.

Butter sculptures in the shape of a lamb are a traditional part of Easter meals among Buffalo's large Polish-American population. Butter lambs are sold this time of year at western New York delis, Polish markets and supermarkets.

On Wednesday, an elected official went to Buffalo's Broadway Market to "pardon" a butter lamb, much in the way U.S. presidents issue pardons for a turkey before Thanksgiving.

Eric County Executive Mark Poloncarz pardoned a butter lamb from its traditional duties on tables throughout the Buffalo area for the duration of Easter.

Polish immigrants brought the butter lamb tradition with them when they came to America and settled in large numbers in upstate New York cities such as Buffalo and Schenectady (sheh-NEHK'-ta-dee).

Man fined $525 for drink refill

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A man who helped himself to a refill of his 89-cent drink at a Veterans Affairs hospital found it cost a lot more than he expected when he was fined $525.

WCSC-TV reports there are signs in the cafeteria telling people refills are not free. When Christopher Lewis of North Charleston, S.C., refilled his drink without paying Wednesday, a federal police officer gave him a ticket.

Lewis is a construction worker and says he never noticed the signs and has refilled his drink without paying before.

The medical center said in a statement that Lewis was ticketed for shoplifting, but that the VA doesn't determine the amount of the fine.

Lewis says he wasn't given a chance to pay for the refill and will contest the fine in federal court.

Abbott campaign accepting Bitcoin contributions

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott's campaign for governor says it will accept contributions made with the bitcoin virtual currency.

Abbott on Thursday called bitcoins, a decentralized digital currency, symbolic of free-market principles.

The Republican's campaign said it would accept bitcoin as in-kind contributions. Like traditional contributions, bitcoin donors will be required to submit names, addresses, employer and occupation. All bitcoin contributions will be reported on campaign finance reports.

Bitcoins were created in 2009 by a mysterious figure or group known as Satoshi Nakamoto and are used for transactions across borders without third parties such as banks. They have also become an investment craze.

The Internal Revenue Service issued guidance last month concluding that bitcoins can only be taxed as property and are not legal tender.

Lost Hank Williams radio program found

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Previously unreleased recordings of country music legend Hank Williams performing songs on a 1950 radio show will be released next month for download and on vinyl.

"The Garden Spot Programs, 1950" features 24 songs and jingles from a taped show that aired on early country radio stations, sponsored by a Texas plant nursery. Most of the tapes were lost, but one station, KSIB-AM in Creston, Iowa, saved its copies.

US stock market mostly higher as earnings pour in (AP) — Stocks edged mostly higher Thursday afternoon after spending much of the morning shifting between small gains and losses. Investors waded through a mixed crop of U.S. company earnings that drove up shares for Morgan Stanley and General Electric even as Google, IBM and UnitedHealth declined.

KEEPING SCORE: The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose four points, or 0.2 percent, to 1,866 as of 3:09 p.m. Eastern Time. The Dow Jones industrial average edged up 11 points to 16,435. The Nasdaq composite added 17 points, or 0.2 percent, to 4,103. U.S. markets will be closed for Good Friday.

EARNINGS, THE GOOD: General Electric described the economic situation as "positive" and said its industrial division was doing well. PepsiCo reported higher income as the company slashed costs and sold more snacks around the world. GE gained 61 cents, or 2.3 percent, to $26.73, while PepsiCo added 56 cents to $85.33.

Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley each reported higher income than financial analysts had forecast. Goldman rose 66 cents, or 0.4 percent, to $157.90. Morgan Stanley added $1.01, or 3.4 percent, to $30.90.

EARNINGS, THE NOT SO GOOD: Google and IBM each posted steep declines after reporting results late Thursday that disappointed investors. Google lost $16.50, or 2.9 percent, to $547.38, and IBM fell $6.27, or 3.2 percent, to $190.12. Mattel fell 37 cents, or 1 percent, to $37.51 after the toy maker said weak sales of Barbie dolls and markdowns to clear out inventory from a sluggish holiday season led to an unexpected loss in the first three months of the year.

CHERRY PICKING: More stocks rose than fell on the New York Stock Exchange. Thursday's trading reflected buying and selling on earnings news, rather than a broader market theme taking hold, said Paul Mangus, head of equity research and strategy for Wells Fargo Private Bank.

"Going into this quarter, expectations are low, so if you disappoint on low expectations you're likely to be penalized," Mangus said. "However, they also present the opportunity for some significant beats because the estimates are that low."

UNHEALTHY RESULTS: Several large health insurance stocks fell after UnitedHealth Group said its income slid 8 percent in the first quarter as fees and funding cuts from the health care overhaul dented its performance. UnitedHealth shed $2.70, or 3.5 percent, to $75.46. WellPoint slid $3.11 or 3.3 percent to $92.52, while Humana fell $3.23, or 3 percent to $105.56. Aetna dropped $2, or 2.9 percent to $67.87.

TAKEAWAY: Despite Google, UnitedHealth and other high-profile stocks trading lower on earnings Thursday, the latest wave of quarterly results has been positive, said John Fox, director of research at Fenimore Asset Management.

"The overall read across five or 10 or 15 earnings reports is positive," Fox said, noting that many companies have reaffirmed their earnings forecasts for the year. "The fundamental underpinnings are good, and I'm not hearing anything from management that changes that."

BAD READ: Leonard Riggio, founder and largest shareholder of Barnes & Noble, disclosed Thursday that he sold 3.7 million shares in the bookseller. It's his second such move in five months. Investors followed in Riggio's example, sending Barnes & Noble shares down $2.33, or 12.5 percent, to $16.26.

THE ECONOMY: The number of people seeking U.S. unemployment benefits last week rose 2,000 to 304,000.

That was less than analysts were expecting and a sign that layoffs aren't increasing rapidly. The number of weekly claims continues to be near pre-recession levels despite the slight increase.

MORE EARNINGS AHEAD: Investors will be looking at more company earnings news for the next couple of weeks as they try to assess whether the impact of a severe winter has begun to ease.

"The companies that would be most impacted by that have yet to report," Mangus said, adding that homebuilders, automakers and consumer discretionary companies should provide a better read on whether consumer demand has rebounded as the winter weather has faded.

BOND TRADING: Bond prices fell. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note rose to 2.72 percent after reaching 2.63 percent late Wednesday.

This Land Is Our Land

Hate, indifference must always be opposed

Last Sunday, our Pastor at First Methodist United Church gave us a different perspective of Jesus' cleansing of the temple during the celebration of Passover. She suggested that there are times when churches become preoccupied by doing "business as usual" and, in doing so, drift away and risk becoming indifferent to the holy work of the Almighty.

BRUNO BALTODANO

One of the central messages of her sermon, and of the gospel story, is that in God's temple we are in His presence. It is axiomatic that evil deeds have no place in there and, most importantly, when called upon we must act deliberately to get rid of it.

Recent events in Kansas City, Kansas and in Katy, Texas made me consider the words of my pastor.

But we will come back to that in just a moment; first let's continue our discussion about the "temple of God."

A couple of weeks ago I attended my first Kairos meeting as a volunteer. Kairos is a Christian ministry whose stated mission is to share God's transforming love and forgiveness in order to impact the life of individuals who are in prison and in need of redemption. The first thing that struck me in the meeting was how the older volunteers in the group kept stating that they were a temple of God.

"My body is the temple where I worship," they kept saying. And they are right of course.

Our bodies, WE, are temples of God.

I remember that message very clearly from my youth. "Your bodies are temples of the Holy Spirit!" the priest would scream to us over and over during catechism, quoting Corinthians.

Last Sunday afternoon, around the same time most folks in America were attending church, neo-Nazi Frazier Glenn Miller went on a shooting spree at two Jewish community centers in suburban Kansas City that left three people dead, including a grandfather and his 14-year-old grandson. Miller is the former "grand dragon" of the Carolina Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which he founded and ran in the 1980s.

Last month, FBI agents in Katy, Texas arrested Robert James Talbot, a man who allegedly was plotting to use C-4 explosives and firearms to kill police officers, rob banks and blow up Muslim mosques. The crimes Talbot was plotting to carry out — detailed in a six-page criminal complaint filed in the Southern District of Texas — sound eerily similar to a series of terrorist attacks carried out 30 years ago by members of an infamous neo-Nazi group called "The Order" (also known as "The Silent Brotherhood").

And I couldn't help but wonder... since we are a temple of the Holy Spirit, what would Jesus do about THIS desecration of the temple, about desecration by hate based on religion or race?

"Jesus said to the people who had been selling doves, 'Get those doves out of here! Don't make my Father's house a marketplace.'"

Hate and the odious ideology spread by groups that traffic in the language of racial and religious superiority are again drawing attention in the wake of these events in the heartland of America.

There are 939 active hate groups in the United States, 57 of them in Texas (the third most in the country) — according to the Southern Poverty Law Center. Members of these groups were involved in 5,796 incidents resulting in 7,164 victims in 2012, the last year for which the FBI has compiled data.

The worse thing about hate is that it provides justification for evil deeds, deeds that desecrate not only our nation but our bodies and souls, temples of the Almighty.

Any preacher worth his or her weight in gold will tell you that it is the Devil who hates and God who loves. The question then becomes, why is hate so pervasive?

I don't have the answer. And yet, I believe that hate exists in so far as good people allow it to, by becoming indifferent to it. It is in that way that hate becomes "business as usual" for some of us.

On the day of the cleansing of the temple Jesus took responsibility when no one else would, He acted deliberately and went all "shock and awe" on those who desecrated the temple. He did so because He was not indifferent.

In the spirit of Easter, I hope we do a little cleansing of our own temple.

These hateful acts do not represent us. Not if we hold true to the claim of being a democracy and of being children of God.

"If anyone says, 'I love God,' and hates his brother, he is a liar; for he who does not love his brother whom he has seen cannot love God whom he has not seen."

Once he was under arrest, Miller, while handcuffed in the back of a police car, shouted "Heil Hitler!" while three people, two Methodists and a Catholic, lay dead.

We can't afford to be indifferent in the face of hate.

Bereavement and Healing Man of steel

My first case as a fully licensed funeral practitioner was my Uncle Roy Don. As I was sitting in church Easter Sunday, I was reminiscing over family gatherings and events I had shared with my Uncle Roy Don.

He was the strongest man I had ever known. He could pull the engine out of a car without the assistance of a lifting winch. He had super strength; he was a "Man of Steel." He had grown up in a rougher time, when people worked hard for what they had and fought hard to keep it. Men would come from far and wide to challenge his strength. They always left with a new respect for his reputation.

I had seen him do so many things in life that were physically impossible for the average person. His super strength is what had kept him going after losing his beloved, Betty Jean. I prayed for him that day at church. Prayed that he would have the strength to live another day, so that my cousins would not lose their father on Easter.

As church was ending, my cell phone rang. I walked out into the foyer to answer it, and my cousin informed me that her father had just passed away. Now every year when Easter comes around, I think of my Uncle Roy Don and the special experiences I shared with him when he was living. I see my cousins, his daughters, either around town or on social media, and every year at Easter, they express memories of their late father.

When one has lost a significant loved one on a holiday, that holiday instantly changes forever in their heart. The primary focus or celebration now becomes the marker in one's memory, as the day they suffered the loss of their loved one. The first few years, one may be sad when that holiday comes around. One hopes that the sadness of the death experience will eventually be replaced with happy memories of wonderful times shared together. Reality however, works at a snail's pace, and such a change does not happen quickly.

One need not lose a loved one on a holiday to feel an increase of pain on holidays. The loneliness of loss is magnified every holiday, as we cycle through the first year, and each year after a substantial loss. Holidays are set aside for family and close friend gatherings.

They are social events, shared with those we love most. By disrupting our social circles, death disrupts our social events. If you know someone who has lost a loved one, be mindful that he or she might delight in a thoughtful card, call or visit to get through a very painful day.

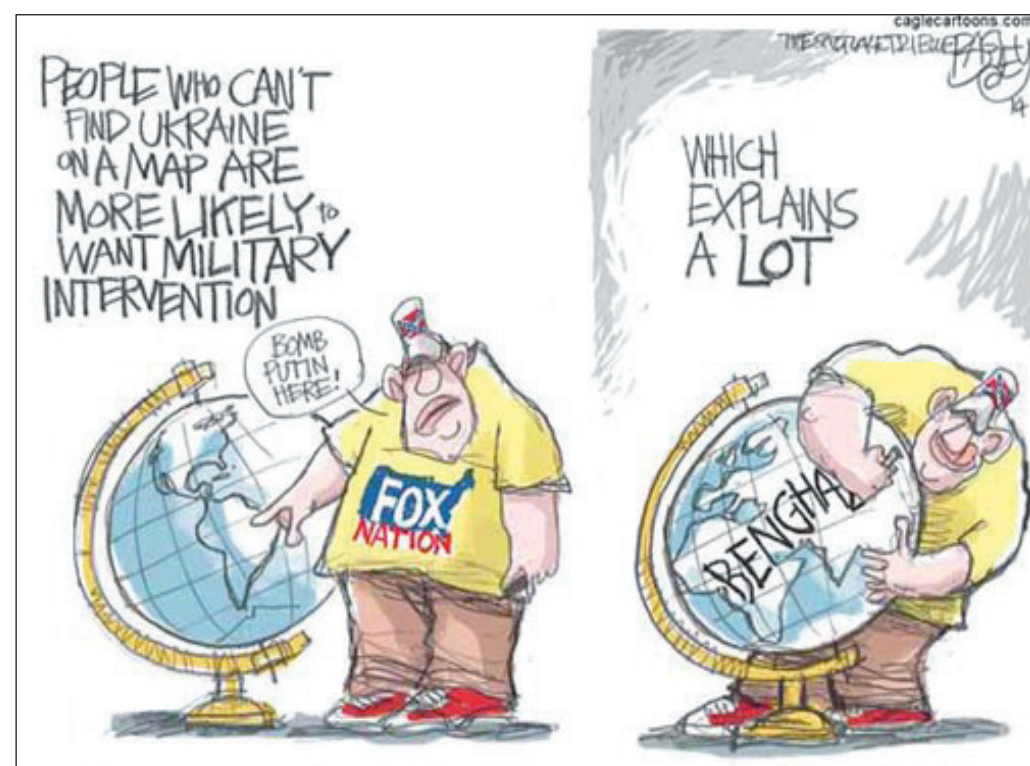

I was so honored that my cousins called upon me to lay their beloved father to rest. It shall remain forever a special memory, that they put their trust in me to get them through such a dreadful experience. Moreover, Easter has forever changed for me. The profound celebration depicting the resurrection of our Savior gives me hope that one day, my darling cousins will reunite with their real life superhero, "Man of Steel."

It's time to say goodbye

It seems like yesterday when I came rolling into Pampa with a U-Haul truck

TIMOTHY P. HOWSARE

Monday.

I remember my first day was Oct. 1, 2012. I had to start on relatively short notice, having been offered the job only a little more than two weeks before I had to start.

It seems God has brought me down a similar path once more. On April 28, a Monday, I will start a new job as the managing editor of the Roswell Daily Record in Roswell, N.M.

My last day at The Pampa News is Friday, April 25.

If you are thinking, "Isn't that the newspaper that broke the story about the flying saucer crashing in the desert?" then you are correct.

I had the opportunity to interview over the weekend and was offered the job at the end of the interview.

The Daily Record is a larger newspaper with a larger staff and this will give me more opportunities to accomplish some of my goals as a journalist. It has a weekend arts and entertainment guide, and, as many of you know, I am also a musician. I am looking forward to overseeing and contributing to that part of the newspaper.

First of all, I'd like to thank the staff at the newspaper. Without all of their help I would have never been able to accomplish in 18 months the priorities I had set when I started. I can remember in the weeks after I started people were telling me they thought The Pampa News might be going out of business.

Fortunately, not only has the newspaper stayed in business but it is thriving.

With the tiny staff of just three editorial people — John Lee, Lindsey Thom-schik and myself — we produce as much work in less time than the staff of six or seven at the newspaper I worked at in Florida. Both of them are "first-year journalists" and are doing a terrific job.

I have complete faith that both will keep the ball in the air after I leave.

I also want to thank publisher ReDonn Woods for hiring me. This has been a great opportunity to run a small news department and I know it is partly because of what I have accomplished here that I was offered the job in Roswell.

Last but not least, I want to thank all of you in the community.

Perhaps you have heard the parable of the stone soup? A beggar with nothing to eat throws a big rock in a big pot of boiling water in the town square.

A curious townsman asks the beggar what he is doing and the beggar answers, "I'm making stone soup."

The townsman, of course, thinks this is crazy so he offers to go back to his house to get a few potatoes.

He brings the potatoes back to the boiling pot and throws them in.

The next townsman comes by and asks the men what they are doing.

"Making potato and stone soup."

This man thinks they are both crazy and volunteers to throw in some meat. Little by little, everyone in town throws something into the pot and shares in the feast.

I believe this is what a good community newspaper does. The more people in the community who contribute, the better the feast.

I have made so many new friends and it will be hard to say goodbye. I wish all of you the best of luck and please feel free to contact me at thowsare54@gmail.com.

Astronomers spot most Earth-like planet yet

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Astronomers have discovered what they say is the most Earth-like planet yet detected — a distant, rocky world that's similar in size to our planet and exists in the Goldilocks zone where it's not too hot and not too cold for life.

The find, announced Thursday, excited planet hunters who have been scouring the Milky Way galaxy for years for potentially habitable spots outside our solar system.

"This is the best case for a habitable planet yet found. The results are absolutely rock solid," University of California, Berkeley astronomer Geoff Marcy, who had no role in the discovery, said in an email.

The planet was detected by NASA's orbiting Kepler telescope, which examines the heavens for subtle changes in brightness that indicate an orbiting planet is crossing in front of a star. From those changes, scientists can calculate a planet's size and make certain inferences about its makeup.

The newfound object, dubbed Kepler-186f, circles a red dwarf star 500 light-years from Earth in the constellation Cygnus. A light-year is almost 6 trillion miles.

The planet is about 10 percent larger than Earth and may very well have liquid water — a key ingredient for life — on its surface, scientists said. That is because it resides at the outer edge of the habitable temperature zone around its star — the sweet spot where lakes, rivers or oceans may exist without freezing solid or boiling away.

The planet probably basks in an orange-red glow from its star and is most likely cooler than Earth, with an average temperature slightly above freezing, "similar to dawn or dusk on a spring day," Marcy said.

The discovery was detailed in Friday's issue of the journal Science.

Lead researcher Elisa Quintana at NASA's Ames Research Center said she considers the planet to be more of an "Earth cousin" than a twin because it circles a star that is smaller and dimmer than our sun.

While Earth revolves around the sun in 365 days, this planet completes an orbit of its star every 130 days.

"You have a birthday every 130 days on this planet," she said.

Scientists cannot say for certain whether it has an atmosphere, but if it does, it probably contains a lot of carbon dioxide, outside experts said.

"Don't take off your breathing mask if you ever land there," said Lisa Kaltenecker, a Harvard and Max Planck Institute astronomer who had no connection to the research.

Despite the differences, "now we can point to a star and know that there really is a planet very similar to the Earth, at least in size and temperature," Harvard scientist David Charbonneau, who was not part of the team, said in an email.

Since its launch in 2009, Kepler has confirmed 961 planets, but only a few dozen are in the habitable zone. Most are giant gas balls like Jupiter and Saturn, and not ideal places for life. Scientists in recent years have also found planets slightly larger than Earth in the Goldilocks zone called "super Earths," but it is unclear if they are rocky.

The latest discovery is the closest in size to Earth than any other known world in the habitable region.

Kepler-186f is part of a system of five planets, all of which are roughly Earth's size. However, the other planets are too close to their star to support life.

Astronomers may never know for certain whether Kepler-186f can sustain life. The planet is too far away even for next-generation space telescopes like NASA's overbudget James Webb, set for launch in 2018, to study in detail.

Kepler completed its prime mission and was in overtime when one of the wheels that keep its gaze steady failed last year. NASA has not yet decided whether to keep using the telescope to hunt for planets on a scaled-back basis.

Tiny power plants hold promise for nuclear energy

PARIS (AP) — Small underground nuclear power plants that could be cheaper to build than their behemoth counterparts may herald the future for an energy industry under intense scrutiny since the Fukushima disaster, the incoming head of the Nuclear Energy Agency told The Associated Press.

Size is relative — the modular plants could be about as big as a couple of semi-trailers — easily fitting on the dimensions of coal plants they're ultimately intended to replace in the U.S. They would have factory-built parts that are slotted together like Lego blocks and hauled by train or truck — making assembly possible anywhere.

William Magwood, the incoming director of the Paris-based forum for nuclear energy countries, said the U.S. has a window in the second half of 2014 for the first contract to build one of the small, modular nuclear reactors, a key test to learn whether they can exist beyond the theoretical.

The Energy Department has sunk $450 million into a multi-year effort to persuade companies that the technology can be developed profitably, but companies have been drifting away from the project, citing funding and regulatory questions. It would be at least another six years before one could be built.

"Anything with nuclear takes a while, and that's appropriate when you're talking about a technology that has to be built correctly," Magwood said in an interview ahead of his formal introduction this week to his new post. "We haven't built one, so we don't know whether they're going to be financially successful."

Microsoft founder Bill Gates has offered enthusiastic support — and investment funds — for expanding nuclear technology he believes can provide affordable electricity to the world's poor and help combat climate change.

But one of the most promising developers in the Energy Department effort, Babcock & Wilcox Co., this week announced plans to scale back spending, citing the need for "significant additional investors."

Samples collected from oil slick not from plane

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Investigators were analyzing data collected by a robotic submarine that completed its first successful scan of the seabed Thursday in the hunt for the missing Malaysian plane, but say tests have ruled out that a nearby oil slick came from the aircraft.

The unmanned sub's first two missions were cut short by technical problems and deep water, but the Bluefin 21 finally managed to complete a full 16-hour scan of the silt-covered seabed far off Australia's west coast, the search coordination center said. While data collected during the mission, which ended overnight, were still being analyzed, nothing of note had yet been discovered, the center said. The sub has now covered 90 square kilometers (35 square miles) of seafloor.

Separately, the center said the oil analysis done in the western city of Perth came up empty when the samples tested negative for aircraft oil or hydraulic fluid. The oil was collected earlier this week from a slick about 5.5 kilometers (3.4 miles) from the area where equipment picked up underwater sounds consistent with an aircraft black box.

It was hoped that the oil would be evidence that officials are looking in the right place for Flight 370, which vanished March 8 while en route from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, to Beijing. Searchers have yet to find any physical proof that the sounds that led them to the ocean floor where the Bluefin has been deployed were from the ill-fated jet.

Twelve planes and 11 ships were scouring a 40,300-square-kilometer (15,600-square-mile) patch of sea for any debris that may be floating on the ocean surface, about 2,200 kilometers (1,400 miles) northwest of Perth.

Despite weeks of searching, no debris related to the jet has been found and earlier this week, search effort leader Angus Houston said the surface hunt would be ending within days. But the search coordination center on Thursday said crews would continue searching the ocean surface into next week.

Malaysia's defense minister, Hishammuddin Hussein, confirmed that the search would continue through Easter weekend, but acknowledged that officials would have to rethink their strategy at some point if nothing is found.

"There will come a time when we need to regroup and reconsider, but in any event, the search will always continue. It's just a matter of approach," he said at a news conference Thursday.

Radar and satellite data show the Boeing 777 flew far off-course for an unknown reason and would have run out of fuel in a desolate patch of the Indian Ocean west of Australia.

A ship-towed device detected four underwater signals that are believed to have come from the plane's black boxes shortly before the batteries powering the devices' beacons likely died. The sounds helped narrow the search area to the waters where the Bluefin is now operating.

The U.S. Navy's unmanned sub cut short its first mission on Monday because it exceeded its maximum operating depth of 4,500 meters (15,000 feet). Searchers moved it away from the deepest waters before redeploying the sub to scan the seabed with sonar to map a potential debris field.

But the center said Thursday that officials are now confident that the sub can safely go deeper than was thought, allowing it to cover the entire search area, which has been narrowed based on further analysis of the four underwater signals.

In addition to finding the plane itself, investigators want to recover the black boxes in hopes the cockpit voice and flight data recorders can explain why the plane lost communications and flew so far off-course before disappearing.

Former BP-employee settles US insider-trading charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former BP employee who was a coordinator during the 2010 oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico has agreed to settle federal charges of using confidential information on the seriousness of the spill to profit illegally from trading in BP stock.

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced the settlement of civil insider-trading charges with Keith Seilhan, saying he agreed to pay $224,118. Seilhan neither admitted nor denied the SEC's allegations but agreed to refrain from future violations of securities laws.

The agency says Seilhan was a crisis manager in BP's incident command center in Houma, Louisiana, and coordinated the initial cleanup operations after the spill that occurred April 20, 2010.

The SEC says he received private company information on the magnitude of the disaster, such as estimates of oil flow.

The explosion on the BP-operated drilling rig Deepwater Horizon four years ago killed 11 workers about 50 miles off the Louisiana coast and set off the nation's worst offshore oil disaster.

Seilhan, 47, who lives in Tomball, Texas, was a 20-year employee of the British oil company. He left BP in January 2011.

Seilhan settled the case because he "wants to avoid further distraction and protracted litigation," his attorney, Mary McNamara, said in a statement. "Mr. Seilhan is widely respected for his work helping to lead the cleanup and containment efforts in the Gulf of Mexico in 2010."

Under terms of the settlement, which must be approved by a federal judge in Louisiana, Seilhan agreed to pay a $105,409 penalty and an additional $105,409 in restitution plus $13,300 in interest.

The SEC alleged in a civil lawsuit that while he had the confidential information, Seilhan sold his family's entire $1 million portfolio of BP stock on April 29 and 30 in 2010. He made profits and avoided losses totaling about $100,000 as BP stock dropped, the SEC said.

"Corporate insiders must not misuse the material, nonpublic information they receive while responding to unique or disastrous corporate events, even where they stand to suffer losses as a consequence of those events," Daniel Hawke, head of the SEC enforcement division's market abuse unit, said in a statement.

BP shares, which closed at $60.48 on April 20, the day of the explosion, plummeted as low as $27.02 over the following weeks. They closed at $38.92 on July 15, the day BP announced it had successfully capped the well and oil was no longer leaking into the Gulf.

The SEC said Seilhan

also traded BP stock on July 21, 2010.

By April 29, BP had estimated in filings to the SEC that the oil was flowing at up to 5,000 barrels a day. That estimate was far less than the actual rate, which was later estimated at 52,700 to 62,200 barrels a day, according to the SEC. The agency alleged that Seilhan had information indicating that the size of the spill and BP's potential losses and liability were likely to be much larger than what the company had publicly reported.

BP agreed to pay $4.5 billion in 2012 in a settlement with the Justice Department and to plead guilty to felony counts related to the deaths of the 11 workers and company executives' statements to Congress. In addition, BP estimates that since May 2010, it has paid out some $11 billion so far in claims to individuals and businesses over economic losses and damages.

Texas town recovering, year after deadly blast

WEST (AP) — As word spread of a spiraling fire at this Texas town's fertilizer plant, volunteers raced to protect families and elderly residents who lived nearby. Then came the deafening explosion.

Stores of ammonium nitrate exploded in a gigantic blast that registered as a small earthquake and sprayed debris miles away. Fifteen people were killed, including 12 volunteer firefighters and others responding to the fire, and more than 200 were injured. The blast caved in homes and schools, and destroyed water lines and roads.

Residents of West, which is recovering but has a long way to go, will mark the one-year anniversary of the blast Thursday with a moment of silence at 7:51 p.m., the exact time of the leveling blast at West Fertilizer Co. Organizers want to honor the past but make clear that "greater things are yet to come," said John Crowder, the senior pastor of the First Baptist Church in West.

West was settled by Czech immigrants more than a century ago, and some of their grandchildren and great-grandchildren still call it home. Its Czech bakeries are well-known among drivers on Interstate 35 between Dallas and Austin.

It's a place where even if residents "don't know you from Adam, you're welcome with a handshake and a hello," said Brian Uptmor, whose brother, Buck, was killed in the blast.

In the weeks and months after the explosion, residents and city officials talked about how to persevere — to "Keep West." The signs of physical progress are obvious: Gone are the dozens of wrecked homes with tongue-in-cheek "For Sale!" messages spray-painted on their walls, and about 70 homes are finished or in the process of construction. Two new schools and a nursing home to replace those destroyed by the explosion will soon give displaced students and elderly residents a better sense of normalcy.

Transportation leader pushes for highway funding

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — U.S. Transportation Secretary Anthony Foxx says that during an eight-state bus trip, he's experiencing what other Americans feel on highways every day.

"There are a lot of bumps. There are a few pot holes here and there," Foxx said Thursday during a stop in Mississippi. "You know, it's been a terrible winter in terms of the wear and tear on our road systems."

Foxx is traveling this week to promote President Barack Obama's proposal to keep federal transportation money flowing to states at least four more years. The Highway Trust Fund is set to run out of cash before the federal budget year ends Sept. 30. Congress put money in the trust fund in 2012 by making some tax changes and cutting spending that's not related to transportation.

Uncertainty over federal funding could make some state and local officials wary about starting big, expensive highway or bridge projects.

Obama is proposing a four-year, $302 billion plan to reinforce the trust fund with savings from proposed changes to corporate tax laws. The White House says that up to $150 billion could come from its proposal to close corporate loopholes, such as ones that encourage U.S. companies to invest overseas.

Foxx appeared Thursday at Tougaloo College in Jackson, meeting with lawmakers and Mississippi Department of Transportation officials to discuss roads and bridges. He was joined by U.S. Rep. Bennie Thompson, D-Miss., who said he's optimistic that Congress will agree on a way to keep the Highway Trust Fund solvent.

"Everybody that I've talked to supports a good, sound transportation system," Thompson said. "We just need to make sure that the vehicle that provides for that safe and sound system continues."

Speaking of the rough condition of some highways, Foxx said: "It highlights, again, the fact that our maintenance needs are expanding as a country and we're not keeping pace with them. So even doing better with what we have is becoming a challenge in America right now."

Foxx started the bus tour in Ohio and has been to Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. His final stops are in Louisiana and Texas.

Where is the offense in Texas?

By ZAC GREEN
Special to The Pampa News

This past offseason the Rangers made two big splashes, one via trade and one via free agency. The guys they signed were Prince Fielder and Shin-Soo Choo. When you add up their contracts the total comes to $268 million dollars. Right now the Rangers, and their fans, are hoping there is some sort of money-back guarantee or return policy within a year of the signings.

Fielder is batting a meager .185 average and only has one home run (that did not come until April 15) and four RBIs. If you take out this year and Fielder's rookie year his averages come out to 35 home runs, 108 RBIs and a .285 batting average. There are slow starts to a season, but after the amount of money he is making, he should be producing more for his ball club.

Choo is doing a bit better than Fielder in that he was not expected to be a power hitter. However his steals are down. He is a guy who averages about 20 per year and 14 games in he has one stolen base.

Before heading to the DL (disabled list) on Monday, Adrian Beltre was underperforming as well. That possibly could be because of his quad injury and when he returns maybe he will be producing again.

This past weekend was almost an embarrassment to Rangers fans. In the friendly confines of Globe Life Park, the Rangers could only muster up a total of six runs in the course of three games against Houston. The Astros are a team that ranks in the bottom 10 in ERA this year, but also in the last few previous years. One bright spot in the weekend was that there were two Ranger shutouts, along with another one on Tuesday. The pitching is really starting to gel for the Rangers even with Matt Harrison, Derek Holland and others still on the DL.

Robinson Chirinos singled to center to score Kevin Kouzmanoff in the bottom of the 12th for the Rangers to get the victory in game one on Friday night.

Yu Darvish led the way for the Rangers as he struck out nine and only allowed one hit and one walk through the course of eight innings. Joakim Soria, Alexi Ogando, Neal Cotts and Jason Frasor kept the Astros at bay in each consecutive inning after Darvish left the game.

Game two was not as posi-

PHS senior Hayley Burnett represents East in All-Star Tourney

Tom Kokoska
Special to
The Pampa News

The area was well-represented in the Golden Spread Girls' All-Star Basketball Tournament held in First United Bank Center at West Texas A&M in Canyon this weekend, with Pampa captain Hayley Burnett and Miami co-captain Shelby Bell on the East squad playing Miami's co-captain Shelbie Carr on the North squad in Sunday's championship game.

The North for much of the game utilized size advantage to dominate the inside game. With point guard Carr threading the needle with passes over, under, around and through the East's defense multiple times. Carr's former Miami teammate Bell helped the East keep the North's 6'4" star Rebekah VanDijk at bay and hold her to single digit points, but that created opportunity elsewhere for which the East had no answers.

The North led by 13 at half and 17 well into the second half.

However, Burnett had enough and flipped the script: she suddenly took charge and became a whirling dervish who almost single-handedly brought the East back from its deficit, leading the East press with multiple steals and causing turnovers that made it a running game that neutralized the North's height advantage. Burnett nailed three deadly treys in the second half when she scored 17 of her game-leading 21 points to lead a furious East All-Stars come-back rally.

When Burnett came out for a breather after bringing the East within three points, the North put Carr back into the game. Carr's ball-handling dissolved the East's full court press, settling the North back into its controlled half-court offense that enabled it to gain shots inside the paint and open kick out passes that extended its lead again.

When Burnett re-entered the game, the head to head competition for the final ten minutes between Burnett and Carr, point guards and the two most active and athletic players on the floor, was a pleasure for the crowd to witness. The two local stars, who obviously respect each other, battled intensely, seeking to gain advantage for their team, and in doing so provided an exhibition of the area's finest girls' basketball.

Burnett's excellence earned her selection to the All-Tournament team, while Carr led the North to the championship and also won the three point shooting contest in triple overtime at halftime. Kudos and congratulations to Hayley Burnett, Shelby Bell and Shelbie Carr on great high school careers earning them a place among the Panhandle's All-Stars.

LeBron still No. 1 with NBA's most-popular jersey

MIAMI (AP) — LeBron James' jersey remains the most popular in the NBA.

The league announced Thursday that the Miami Heat star topped the list of jersey sales in the NBA for the sixth time. With teammate Dwyane Wade — whose jersey number hasn't changed in 11 years — at No.

7, the Heat also had the top spot on the team-merchandise sales list.

"It means a lot to know that I have so many fans that want to wear my jersey because they respect the way I play the game and respect who I am as a man," James said. "Thanks so much to all that 'Strive for Greatness.'"

Donna Tartt wins fiction Pulitzer for 'Goldfinch'

NEW YORK (AP) — Donna Tartt's "The Goldfinch," already among the most popular and celebrated novels of the past year, has won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction. One of the country's top colonial historians, Alan Taylor, has won his second Pulitzer, for "The Internal Enemy: Slavery and War In Virginia." Annie Baker's "The Flick" won the Pulitzer for drama, a play set in a movie theater that was called a "thoughtful drama with well-crafted characters" which created "lives rarely seen on the stage."

The award Monday for general nonfiction went to Dan Fagin's "Toms River: A Story of Science and Salvation," a chronicle of industrial destruction in a small New Jersey community that was praised by The New York Times as a "classic of science reporting." Megan Marshall's "Margaret Fuller: A New American Life," about the 19th century intellectual and transcendentalist, won for biography; and Vijay Seshadri's witty and philosophical "3 Sections" received the poetry prize.

The Pulitzer for music was given to John Luther Adams' "Become Ocean," which judges cited as "a haunting orchestral work that suggests a relentless tidal surge, evoking thoughts of melting polar ice and rising sea levels."

Tartt's novel, a sweeping, Dickensian tale about a young orphan set in modern Manhattan, was published last fall to high praise and quick commercial success that has not relented.

"The Goldfinch" has been nominated for a National Book Critics Circle prize and an Andrew Carnegie Medal and on Monday was in the top 40 on Amazon.com's best seller list even before the Pulitzer was announced.

Fans of the 50-year-old Mississippi native, many of whom still had strong memories of her 1992 debut, "The Secret History," had waited a decade for her to complete her third novel. "The Goldfinch" was published after the disappointing "The Little Friend." The Pulitzer will likely ensure her place among the elite of contemporary fiction writers and make "The Goldfinch" a million seller.

"I am incredibly happy and incredibly honored and the only thing I am sorry about is that Willie Morris and Barry Hannah aren't here. They would have loved this," said Tartt, referring to two authors who had been early mentors.

Meanwhile, the 59-year-old Taylor has reaffirmed his stature as a premier scholar of early American history. His "William Cooper's Town: Power and Persuasion on the Frontier of the Early American Republic," winner of the Pulitzer and Bancroft prizes, was published in 1996 and praised as an enlightening and rigorous study of the founding of Cooperstown, N.Y.

"The Internal Enemy" has been cited as a worthy follow-up to Edmund Morgan's landmark "American Slavery, American Freedom," a story of the conflicting passions among white Virginians who both eloquently defended their own freedoms and suspiciously presided over the slaves who made their livelihoods possible.

Taylor said Monday that the book had been an education for him recalling how he came upon documents that showed how escaped slaves had assisted the British during the War of 1812 and were an important factor in the British capture of Washington, D.C.

"This is a story I had known nothing about and I was supposed to be a specialist," he said.

The Columbia University's prize board honored Baker, who is in her early 30s, for her play about friendship, morality and loyalty. "The Flick" played off-Broadway at Playwrights Horizons last year becoming divisive among critics. Many admired its attempt to capture real life but others found it tediously long.

'Hunger Games' top winner at MTV Movie Awards

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Hunger Games: Catching Fire" earned the prize for best film at Sunday night's MTV Movie Awards, besting even top Oscar winner "12 Years a Slave."

"Hunger Games" stars also took home some of the night's biggest awards. Jennifer Lawrence won best female performance and Josh Hutcherson was voted best male performer.

Zany categories were also in abundance. Zac Efron earned best shirtless performance, while properly accepting his award, well, shirtless.

Plenty of golden popcorn-shaped prizes were handed out at the 22nd annual MTV Movie Awards, but it was the summer movie teasers — and the stars attached to them — that really had Hollywood excited.

Andrew Garfield, Emma Stone and Jamie Foxx, stars of "The Amazing Spider-Man 2," coming May 2, introduced a brief clip of the film showing Spider-Man (Garfield) and the sparkling blue villain Electro (Foxx) battling in New York's Times Square.

Aaron Taylor-Johnson, the star of "Godzilla," opening May 16, presented Orlando Bloom with the award for best fight for his and Evangeline Lilly's tussle with the Orcs in "The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug."

Ellen Page, one of the stars of the upcoming "X-Men: Days of Future Past," introduced a clip from the film that sees the X-Men joining forces with their younger selves.

In the tease, some X-Men attempt to battle ruthless metal monsters using their special abilities. It's the first appearance for some of the mutants — Blink, Sunspot, Warpath and Bishop.

The MTV Movie Awards have become the ideal platform for the Hollywood studios to promote their summer movies and this year was no exception.

Disney Channel's 'Jessie' breaks romantic ground

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The title character of "Jessie" heads in an unprecedented direction for a Disney Channel series: toward the altar.

In a four-episode arc that will conclude the season this fall, 22-year-old Jessie Prescott dives into a whirlwind romance and accepts her boyfriend's proposal of marriage.

It's the first time a lead character on the children's TV channel has become engaged, said Adam Bonnett, Disney Channel executive vice president of original programming.

"Jessie is an adult, and we felt we could tackle this in a way that still feels appropriate for our audience," Bonnett said. The Disney Channel focuses on children ages 6 to 11, with "Jessie" also attracting 9-to-14-year-old "tween" viewers among its average weekly audience of 2.9 million viewers.

It ranks among the top five series for children and younger teenagers, according to Nielsen company figures.

Debbi Ryan stars as the young Texas woman who moves to New York City to pursue acting and becomes the nanny for an affluent family with children adopted from India, Africa and America. The comedy, in its third season, airs a mix of new and repeat episodes at 8 p.m. EDT Friday.

The budding relationship between Jessie and her new love, 25-year-old Brooks (Pierson Fode), is handled chastely, as befits a Disney project aimed at youngsters. The couple is shown bonding over picnics in Central Park and on movie dates and in other such innocent moments.

"The way we deal with this romance is very pure Disney fairy tale," Bonnett said, and one with a surprise ending.

Ryan, who will turn 21 on May 13, said she is far from tying the knot with her boyfriend of a year, Twenty One Pilots musician Josh Dun. Her focus is on her career, including directing her first episode of "Jessie" this season and finishing an album she plans to release in June.

But Jessie's decision to marry young is not out of step with her and Dun's social circle.

"In the last year, we have seen close friends, five of them, get engaged, five. ... One couple is getting married next month and they are both 20, a year younger than me," Ryan said.

She sees marriage and commitment as "delicate" topics for the young viewers who watch her character for clues to growing up: "Your principal character is deciding whether or not she should start her life with a man."

Although romance is not something young viewers necessarily can relate to, Bonnett said, there are elements of the story that can have meaning for them.

"Our audience isn't dealing with somebody proposing to them, but they are dealing with choices they have to make in their life, and thinking things through, following their heart and wanting to make the right choice," he said.

Jessie and Ryan were the right combination to break ground for the channel, he said. Viewers have watched Jessie "blossom" and have seen the actress grow up over the past half-dozen years on Disney Channel programs including "The Suite Life on Deck" and the TV movie "16 Wishes."

The actress has her own firm views on what saying "I do" represents.

"It's not about the dress, it's not about the wedding. It's about the marriage. That's something we lose sight of when we're so young and all we want to do is dress up and play fairy tale," Ryan said.

daily horoscope

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, April 19, 2014:
 This year you have an opportunity to break a pattern and become more dynamic; travel and a foreigner could be involved. Some of you might go back to school in order to learn more in your chosen field or to develop a new interest. If you are single, you will open up to a new group of friends. It is likely that you will meet someone special through them. This will happen during the summer or the second part of your birthday year. If you are attached, plan on taking that special trip you often discuss. The summer would be the perfect time for the two of you to experience this adventure. CAPRICORN just seems to annoy you.
 The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult
ARIES (March 21-April 19)
 ★★★★★ Explore a new spot or visit an area you don't know well. Try to leave your hassles behind, at least for the moment. Contact a friend who lives at a distance. You'll enjoy catching up on news, plus you might want to plan a visit. Tonight: Out late.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
 ★★ A loved one will want to spend more time with you. Make it your pleasure. A discussion about a child or younger friend will give you some insight. Do not push someone away from you, even if you find him or her to be intrusive. Tonight: Go where you can be entertained.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
 ★★★★★ You'll see life from a whole different perspective. You might realize that you seem to be excluding someone interesting from your life. Make it a point to take a break from being so assertive once in a while. Observe more. Tonight: Time to get to know someone better.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
 ★★ Complete a project that has been hanging over your head for far too long. Ask for some help if you need it. Your determination and endurance need to be called upon. Once you are done with this task, you will have a big reason to celebrate. Tonight: The party begins.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
 ★★★★★ What you consider to be a fun happening might intimidate a dear friend. Though you are relaxed this person might not be. A loved one will be full of ideas. Initiate a conversation and explore the limits of his or her imagination. Tonight: Let a loved one make the first move.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
 ★★★★★ Tension will stem from having too many obligations to fulfill. Ask for help. Make time to purchase a new item or two, perhaps for tonight. A loved one knows just how to appeal to you and lighten up the moment. Tonight: Let this person do his or her thing.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
 ★★★★★ You might want to stop at the gym while you do your normal Saturday errands. You could run into a special friend and have a strong reaction at first. Invite this person to join you for lunch and a chat. You will enjoy catching up on news. Tonight: All smiles.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
 ★★★★★ Visualize what you want, and make it so. Many of you might decide to organize an informal gathering at your place either tonight or tomorrow. Make calls in the late afternoon. Reach out to those at a distance as well. Tonight: Hang out. Catch up on some special news.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
 ★★ Remain sensitive to a friend or loved one. You might be having a great time on your own. This person might be unusually difficult and somewhat uptight right now. Treat him or her as you would like to be treated. Tonight: Great dinner, great company.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
 ★★★★★ Allow your needs to call the shots right now. Take some time off today to nap. Perhaps you might want to schedule a massage, too. If you don't take good care of yourself, you will be worthless to others. Tonight: All of a sudden you are up to snuff.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
 ★★★★★ Be willing to take a risk and share what you feel. You could find someone's reaction to be revealing. Get together with friends at a game or go off to the movies. An invitation will come forward that you'll want to say "yes" to. Tonight: Not alone and not to be found.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
 ★★★★★ You might have to take care of a situation. Whether it involves work or a relative will make little difference. Others admire your diligence. Make plans for late this afternoon, when you will be more than ready to let loose. Let your weekend begin now. Tonight: All smiles.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: How do I deal with an assistant who keeps calling me a “brown-noser”? She did it again yesterday at a staff meeting in front of my boss and another assistant. It was the third time she has said it. She is gruff and rude, and several people have complained to me about her attitude.

Should I address her comments during her next employee evaluation, or would it be better to speak to her privately? — THE BOSS IN LAKELAND, FLA.

DEAR BOSS: Talk to her privately and tell her what she said is insulting, not funny and you don't want it to be repeated. Then, put a note about her disrespectful attitude and poor judgment in her personnel file. And by all means revisit the subject at her next evaluation. She should also be made aware that people have complained about her rudeness.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to ask your readers — especially women — what is the one thing they feel is “make or break” in a relationship. A few months ago I divorced a man who was so disrespectful I don't think anyone in the world can match him.

As it turns out, I did myself a huge favor. Everything else — trust, compromise and honesty — is important in a relationship, but if there is no respect, it falls apart. That is what happened to me.

Abby, am I correct about respect being the most important aspect of a partnership? — DESERVING IN SALT LAKE CITY

DEAR DESERVING: I think so, and I'm sure most readers will agree. When people respect each other, it follows that there will be honesty, trust and a willingness to compromise. Without these components, relationships usually don't last — or they shouldn't.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I spent a lot of money flying to our grandnephew's bar mitzvah. We stayed in a hotel and spent the weekend celebrating with the family.

During the last event, a Sunday brunch, my wife was approached by her penny-pinching sister — the grandmother — who asked her to co-sponsor the brunch. My wife, who is naive regarding financial matters, agreed without consulting me.

A few days later, we received an email with an amount that is far more than I want to pay. Had I known in advance, we would have skipped the brunch. How should we proceed? — ON THE HOOK IN AUSTIN

DEAR ON THE HOOK: Your sister-in-law is a walking definition of the word “chutzpah.” Your wife was wrong to obligate you without first making sure you agreed. That said, you have two choices: Refuse to share the cost of the brunch, which will embarrass your wife and cause hard feelings in the family, or grit your teeth, write a check and hope your wife has learned an expensive lesson.

known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Pampa currently ninth in golf at regional meet

STAFF REPORT

Freshman Bryce Parker and the Lady Harvesters girls' golf team are currently competing at the regional golf tournament in Lubbock. Parker shot an 88 on Monday and an 85 on Tuesday.

The Lady Harvesters currently ranked ninth as McKinley Hancox shot an 88 and Gracie Little shot a 94. Savanna Mertz, Ashlee Kieth and Katy Velasquez all shot a 99. Brittney Green rounded out the team with a 100. At time of print, the team was 50 strokes behind Andrews, a three-time defending state champion, who, head coach Brayden Barker is the "toughest in the state by far." The Pampa News wishes the golf participants the best of luck through the rest of the tournament.

McKinley Hancox

Clarendon College cross country coach to run in Boston Marathon

SUBMITTED

Clarendon College Cross Country Coach Zack Leggett will be running in the Boston Marathon on Monday, April 21.

Zack Leggett

Leggett qualified for the Boston run with his finish at the December 2012 Dallas Marathon — he placed 28th out of a field of 4,873 full marathon finishers. During that qualifying run, Leggett ran the 26.2-miles in 2:56:26, beating his personal goal of 3:00:00. Leggett said he enjoyed running in a large marathon — over 25,000 participants in Dallas and 36,000 runners have qualified to run in Boston. "It took 8 city blocks for the starting line," Leggett said of the Dallas event. "It was a lot of fun to get to run with that many people." In preparation for marathons, Leggett said he runs six days a week and averages anywhere from 70 to 80 miles per week. His motivation for running a marathon came after he graduated college and found himself at a weight of 260 pounds. "I ran two years in college, but when I stopped that's when I gained the weight," he said. "I started getting back in shape and my goal was to finish a marathon." He met that goal in 2011 when he ran the Dallas Marathon for the first time and finished with a time of 3:16:00. He bested that time by about 20 minutes with his 2012 run.

In his division for men age 30-34, Leggett finished the Dallas run in eighth place. The overall fastest time for all finishers in the full marathon was 02:19:38. Leggett is in his third year as Cross Country Coach at Clarendon College. While he doesn't require his cross country runners to train in the same way he does, he said he does have them run up to 15 miles a day and about 80 to 90 miles a week in order to compete in their 5 mile races. "They do more of a speed workout than I do," he said. "I have to conserve enough energy to finish the race, but still run at a marathon pace." This year's Boston Marathon will be broadcast on Universal Sports. Universal Sports can be found on DirecTV Channel 625 and Dish Network Channel 402. The Marathon coverage will begin at 8:30 a.m. local time on Monday, April 21.

Wednesday: Rangers rally for 2 in 9th to beat Mariners 3-2

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas center fielder Leonys Martin wound up being the star of a battle of top pitchers. Martin had a leadoff triple in the eighth that chased Seattle ace Felix Hernandez. An inning later, Martin singled in the winning run with two out as the Rangers scored two unearned runs off closer Fernando Rodney for a 3-2 win over the Mariners on Wednesday night. "He was in the middle of the first run by hitting the triple off Hernandez, who was outstanding tonight," Rangers manager Ron Washington said. "And then he comes up in that situation against one of the best closers in the game. He just tried to put the ball in play, and it worked. It's good for him, it's good for the team, and we can build on it."

Rodney (0-1) retired the first two in the ninth before Kevin Kouzmanoff's single ricocheted off the glove of sliding shortstop Brad Miller and dribbled into the outfield. Mitch Moreland drew a walk before pinch-hitter Donnie Murphy's grounder was fielded by Miller, whose toss to second base was high. The error allowed Moreland to slide in safely and extended the game.

Dugout

Monday the Rangers got rocked by Seattle 7-1. Once again it was a game where the Rangers offense was non-existent and Ron Washington made another questionable move by leaving Colby Lewis in too long. It was Lewis' first start since returning from the DL. He gave up a home run in the 5th which would not have been so bad if that was his final inning. In the sixth, the wheels fell off for Lewis. A triple, a single, another single, an error, a single, a fielder's choice and error and a sacrifice fly led to six Mariner runs in the sixth. Washington could have pulled Lewis after any one of those events. Instead he chose to ride out Lewis and faced the consequences. He was also ejected from the game in that inning for arguing a challenge. (This is a 100 percent guaranteed ejection if any manager in MLB argues a challenge. All umpires are forced to eject managers for arguing a challenge without question.) Robbie Ross seemed like he wanted to be included in the great pitching performances by the Rangers as he went seven and 2/3 innings against Seattle Tuesday, allowed only five hits and did not allow a run. Ogando and Cotts finished off the shutout for the Rangers. Fielder and Kouzmanoff hit back-to-back home runs for the Rangers in the second. Kouzmanoff had a double that scored two runs in the eighth, followed by a Mitch Moreland single to plate Kouzmanoff. Kouzmanoff is Adrian Beltre's replacement while Beltre is on the DL. He has a hit in every game since being called up by the Rangers and has an RBI scored in three of those six games. Now on to previewing this weekend's series. The Rangers (8-7, second in the West) will play host to the Chicago White Sox (8-7, second in AL Central). Martin Perez (2-0, 2.70 ERA) will face off against Felipe Paulino (0-1, 7.98 ERA) in Friday's opener. Paulino has been touched for six runs in his last two starts against the Indians and Rockies. Maybe this is a game where the Rangers offense can get back on track. Perez will hope to stay on the right track after his eighth inning shutout of the Astros on Sunday. My prediction is a Rangers win.

Colby Lewis (0-1, 6.75 ERA) faces Jose Quintana (1-0, 2.37 ERA) on Saturday. Quintana has only allowed five runs in his three starts this season. Lewis will hope to rebound from allowing four runs to Seattle Monday. Lewis will have to prove to me and other Rangers fans he is completely healthy and there are no issues. My prediction is a Rangers loss in a close one. If Lewis proves Monday was a fluke, Rangers maybe can squeak it out. Robbie Ross (1-0, 1.00 ERA) matches up against Erik Johnson (0-1, 6.35 ERA) in Sunday's finale. Ross will hope to continue to build on two great performances in which he pitched a total of 13 innings without allowing a run. Johnson will try to match his great performance from Tuesday in which he held the Red Sox to only one run. My prediction is another great start from Ross and another Rangers shutout. Hopefully the offense finds its rhythm this week and next week we can be talking about all of the home runs and RBIs that were scored by the

Anaheim Ducks hold off Stars 4-3 in series opener

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Anaheim Ducks roared to a big early lead before blowing three-quarters of it. They skated circles around the Dallas Stars early, only to hold on by their fingernails late. The Ducks know a Stanley Cup run can't possibly be easy, and they're not afraid of a little hard work along the way. Ryan Getzlaf had a goal and an assist, Frederik Andersen made 32 saves to win his NHL playoff debut, and the Ducks persevered for a 4-3 victory over the Stars on Wednesday night. Getzlaf, Kyle Palmieri and Mathieu Perreault scored in a dominant first period for the top-seeded Ducks, who began their playoff run on a dead sprint. Anaheim led 4-0 midway through the second period before the Stars nearly got all the way back into it, but the Ducks emerged grateful for the test. "A little adversity isn't going to hurt us," Corey Perry said.
