It Has Been

Editor's Note: The following item is taken from The Rising Star, a column written by Vada Arnold and titled 'It Has Been.'

In recent months womens styles have been the topic of the day. To be sure some of the present styles are horrifying, with the advent of the mini-skirt, see through blouses and costumes, and now the maxi-coat so long that wearers are getting their feet tangled in the coat causing some near serious accidents.

But when we turn the pages of styles and look at the prevailing mode of the early nineties we find the close fitted, basques, heavily boned to all most resemble a tight fitting corset. These basques were made with mutton leg sleeves and high boned collars. Worn with skirts of voluminous widths. A dress of this type required from 10 1/2 to 12 yards of material for a medium size.

1910 brought an ankle length skirt for dress up occasions. They were made of taffeta and black voile worn with severe white linen shirt waists or white voiles elaborately trimmed with rows and rows of insertions, tucks and lace, taffeta petticoats that swished under the voile skirts. Wide brimmed, coarse straw hats with black bands and elbow length black silk gloves and black glove silk stockings worn with wide patent leather slippers with high heels completed a perfect costume.

Then came 1914-15-16 with the pencil slim skirts, ankle length, so slim that a woman dared not try to step up on the sidewalk or try to get into a buggy or into a train. Then some merciful designers came up with a slim, slim skirt slit on each side to aid stepping for the wearer. Even then many women had to be hoisted into and out of trains, buggies and up onto a high step.

Much shorter skirts were introduced in the 20's. Draped skirts were the mode, also overskirts of all kinds and tunics. Satin, bright and shiny, was a favorite material along with crepe-de-chine and georgette crepe. The draped skirt was designed to create a peg top appearance and narrowed hem line. These skirts were

Soil Survey Made On 95,000 County Acres

Soil surveys were made on 95,000 acres in Eastland County last year by soil scientist of the Soil Conservation Service. They covered many individual farms located throughout the county and Upper Leon Soil Conservation District. The survey of the entire county is planned for completion in 1971, according to Joe Moore and Fred Coburn.

Soil scientist examine the soil and associated land features and record the information on aerial photographs. They study landscape features, relief, vegetation and the materials from which the soils have formed. They walk over each field and dig holes deep enough to examine the underlying layers.

Some of the characteristics shown and recorded for each different soil include: surface texture, which is important on crop and pasture plant adaptation; surface depth, some may be 6 feet of sand or 6 inches of clay loam; Presence of free lime, some soils high in lime prevent elements such as iron and phosphorus from becoming available to plants; texture and structure of subsoil, a blocky clay subsoil restricts root growth, holds small quantities of water and air, is difficult to irrigate, whereas, a less clayey or more crumbly type clay holds water well, takes in water adequately for irrigation, permits roots to penetrate deeply and release fertilizer elements more readily. Many other characteristics are also noted, such as kind or underlying material; slope of the surface; degree of erosion; stoniness and evidences of poor drainage of flooding.

Other information needed by the users of the soil survey is included with the soils information on the aerial photo. The map shows drainage pattern, position of lakes, ponds, rock outcrops, roads, farm houses, schools and churches.

Landowners cooperating with the Upper Leon Soil Conservation District use the maps in planning how to treat the farms and ranches. Whether one plans to treat a field, dig a cellar, install a septic tank, field or build a road, the kind of soil is important. Soil characteristics greatly affect the cost and degree of success.

County Agricultural Agent

Cilbert Meredith of the ASCS office reports no crops damaged by the ice storm since crops are already harvested, and only possible damage would be pecan trees and this is considered slight. He said the ice storm and freezing weather did a great deal to help the peanut farms. Peanut production for this year is short of the 1968 production because of a strong problem with insects. When the ground is covered with ice and frozen insects, hibernating under the soil are killed. More cold weather with the ground re-freezing 10 to 12 inches deep, would be a giant step toward control of the insect problem, he said.

All area roads were passable Wednesday morning, according to Gil Gaeta, dispatcher for the Texas Highway Department maintenance department.

"Of course, the roads are still icy in spots," Gaeta said, "but it's possible to travel from here to Midland or from here to Lubbock. We've been out putting gravel on bridges and hills; we worked Tuesday night putting gravel on the hill just east of Cisco but that was our only bad spot Tuesday night."

Gaeta added, "We're just hoping that the cold front expected tonight (Wednesday) doesn't get here."

The heavy ice storm in this area earlier this week has been the cause of much damage and temporary loss of service to our electrical, telephone, and cable high lines.

The term, ballot, meaning "little ball," stems from classical Greek jury practice. White balls meant acquittal, black balls, banishment.

Stock Raisers Urged to Dallas 2-Day Conference

A two-day Animal Health Conference for Livestockmen is to be held at Marriott Motor Hotel in Dallas January 30-31, offers programs of interest and value to all producers of livestock. Dr. Cardwell, Cisco veterinarian, said this week.

The program during which some 50 speakers on 59 subjects related to the economic production of livestock from the standpoint of livestock health, is sponsored by the Texas Veterinary Medical Association and the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University.

There will be a general session Friday followed by section devoted to beef and feedlot problems; dairy production, sheep and goat production, horse care and swine production.

Registration, if done before January 15, will require a fee of only $15 for the entire program. A charge of $20 will be made of the registration is made after that date.

The program, it was emphasized, is for the benefit of livestock producers who will view demonstrations and receive valuable information related to their programs.

There will be practical workshops in each section.

Urging local stockmen to register and attend the workshops, Dr. Cardwell said that those who wish to register may contact him for the necessary blanks.

(Continued from Page One) topped with a contrasting material of a bright color. Blouses were heavily beaded with various type beads. Hats were all sizes and shapes from the flower covered turbans, stove pipe styles with a big single cabbage rose perched atop of the high crown. Veils were great favorites.

In the late 20's old timers and modest women were schooled beyond words when knee length skirts made their debut. But as usual when the shock passed women of all ages, sizes and weights adopted the style and short skirts were commonplace. At this point waist lines were dropped below the hip line and short, short skirts were pleated, gathered or circular with a width of four to five yards a round. Hats were lovely wide brimmed black lace models with wreaths of multi-colored flowers circling the crown. There were peanut straws and other materials in hat making. Shoes were extremely round, toed, short vamps and high, high heels. Women looked as if they were doing the goose step as they meandered down a side walk. These shoes came in black, red and light blonde kid.

Then not too many years ago came the Can-Can petticoats of stiff nylon net, made of row after row of graduated ruffles edged with lace or satin ribbon. Continually there was a contest to determine which young lady wore the fullest and most elaborate Can-Can under full, full skirts. In walking on an ordinary side walk only two girls could walk side by side, because of the umbrella like petticoat that held the dresses so far out. Tongues wagged and criticism of this style ran high, but the Can-Can remained to live out its popularity, and was gone. During the life of said petticoat, dresses were elaborate with trimmings, laces, braids embroideries, buttons of all sizes and shapes. There were collars large and small, just so there were collars.

After all perhaps womens styles create a relief from talk of crime, wars, marches, riots and every day scandal so lets keep the criticism going and see what we come up with.
