Spring Tackle "Training"
Anglers can take a tip from the pre-season warmups and training now underway in the baseball camps. Seeing that equipment functions perfectly is just as important to a fisherman as good physical condition is to a touted 20-game winner or the team's "big stick."

Swiss Cheese Stars
1 cup New Bisquick
1/2 cup milk
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese
Heat oven to 450°. Mix New Bisquick, milk and cheese with fork to a soft dough. Gently smooth dough into a ball on cloth-covered board lightly dusted with flour to prevent sticking. Knead 5 times. Roll out 1/4 inch thick; cut into star shapes with cookie cutter. Sprinkle with paprika. Bake 8 to 10 minutes. Serve warm. Makes 1 1/2 dozen. And do remember, ladies like to linger longer. WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

It is sometimes weird the way the government goes about seeking authority for a course of action, usually in the area of raising taxes.
Early this year the Vice President of the United States made a swing around the black nations of Africa.

the bush could emanate so much wisdom on what is best for the balance of trade, or how the world monetary system should be adjusted.
In fact, to most of the people in this area traditional polygamy, where cattle are traded for wives, the term inflation, if they even use the word, has a very simple meaning.

How do you like your fish? If you're like most Americans, you like it fried—fried crisp and golden and served with a wedge of lemon.
Now, how you fry your fish is altogether another kettle of fish. First of all, it depends on the fish. If you're frying oysters, shrimp, crab or other small fish, you may prefer to fry it in shallow or deep fat, while if you're frying a fish steak, fish fillets or whole fish, it's better to pan fry it in 1/8 to 1/4-inch of fat.

Library News

Mrs. Jessie Fouche' of Denver City Library and Mrs. Lorene Alberding of Plains Library have recently returned from the State Library Convention held in San Antonio this year. A special attraction to the Convention was the "HemisFair '68." All of the Library exhibits were set up in the Convention Center, HemisFair Exhibit Hall. One of the treats for the librarians was an autograph party held on Friday for the author Mr. John Creasey. Also, a great treat was the FIESTA held Friday night on the river side in San Antonio. Mexican food and entertainment were served free to the librarians. Mrs. Fouche' and Mrs. Alberding came home foot weary but, bubbling over with library enthusiasm.

Tsa Mo Ga In Club Meet

The Senior Class of Plains High School were special guest when the Tsa Mo Ga Study Club met in regular session April 22, 1968 in the clubhouse.
 President Mrs. A. B. Carpenter presided and Mrs. Jack Hayes was program director.
 Mrs. Hayes said in her introduction that Plains could be justly proud of our young people in our community. In her contact as teacher she finds them inquisitive, industrious and fair. She also said they expect fairness in return from their elders. Mrs. Hayes expressed such confidence in their ability to adopt to a changing world, tempered with the fact that they, like we when young or as grown ups are not perfect.
 Mrs. Hayes presented Miss Sherry Miller who gave her Valedictory address.
 Miss Miller's theme for her address was built around "Yesterday" to be cherished and learned from. "Today" to be lived our fullest capacity while making plans for "Tomorrow." This young lady had put much thought into her preparation of the address and very enjoyable and thought provoking.
 Mr. Rodney Trout is Salutatorian for his class. His address was built around aspects of our changing world. The wide gulf between generations condemned him and he stated that even though the gulf had never been closed between the ages it could and must be bridged by learning to communicate.
 Miss Sharon Tarkington gave a very interesting review of her trip to Girls State. This trip is Co-Sponsored each year by the Legion Auxiliary and the Tsa Mo Ga Club.
 Miss Tarkington said it will always be one of the highlights of her life and expressed warm thanks for the privilege of being our representative.
 Mrs. R. W. St. Roman stated that the State Convention of Texas Federated Clubs will be in Austin May 7-7 at the Terrace Motel. A special bus will leave from Lubbock, round trip $15.00, if enough club members are interested. If any club members wish to go to the convention and ride the bus contact Mrs. P. W. St. Roman at once.
 The Social Committee served refreshments from a beautiful table carrying out the black and gold theme for Plains School. Tiny capped graduates sat atop an olive on the salad plate, and miniature P. H. S. banners waved from the white, black and gold cake. Gold punch and a relish plate completed the menu. The center pi-

The library ask me to tell everyone how important it is to use the library this summer. Also the teachers say it makes better students for next year if all students read good books this summer. And besides it will be fun, too! Join the summer reading program and read 12 books this summer to receive a library certificate showing you have read these books and are a member of your local library. Reading buttons will be issued again this summer after 6 books have been read and placed on each child's reading log.

same old stomping ground of New Moore over in Lynn County.

Of Course I don't remember the Curry's but we know a lot of the same folks. When Joesaid that he didn't know I was from New Moore, I told him I had never had a reason to advertise it, because most folks just say, "Where's that!" We'll add that it's a pretty good place to call home tho.

Missed Frank Whitlock at the Tuesday morning Chamber meet. I figured he knew I was going, so he decided to stay at home. But he gave some excuse of being tired... probably from bowling the night before.

Enjoyed lunch recently with Sue Randall and Wana Trout. Took an afternoon break and visited with Lois Romans and Betty Trout. Always enjoy Mr. Barrett's visits to the paper and count on at least one daily cheerful smile and hello, from Bill Overton. Did you hear Dub Nelms yelling at Cindy Vorheis and Irecently? Our apologies go to Sue Nelms for the misspelling of her name but to Dub we say--Keep yelling those complaints, it helps keep us on our toes!

Ruby Heald couldn't believe it when she read the Record in East Texas Friday! What she couldn't believe, was that it had gotten so far so quick! She said she could hardly read it for Jerry and Leonard wanting her to hurry. They had gone to visit their daughter last week and kept up with home town news at the same time.

Now we did do a record job of getting the papers in the mail Thursday. I hate that Jack Hayes was gone and didn't get to see it. He'll never believe it!

I know you're all backing the Cowgirls at Austin this weekend. Wish we could travel there to watch them play but all things are not possible. We're confident they will come back state champs again, tho.

Did you know: In 1835, 1836, and 1837 the federal government was out of debt entirely.

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Privacy and the Census

During the last federal census, a disgruntled citizen decided the government was getting altogether, too nosy. So he refused to answer certain questions, calling them an invasion of his privacy and an "unreasonable search and seizure" forbidden by the Constitution.

But in a test case, the court held the questions within the proper scope of governmental curiosity. "The authority to gather reliable statistical data reasonably related to governmental functions is a necessity," said the court, "if modern government is to legislate intelligently."

By and large, the taking of the census (itself authorized by the Constitution) has not run into serious

ous opposition. One big reason, no doubt, is that personal information is kept confidential—as a kind of compensation to the citizen for accepting a little prying into his private life. Federal law specifically provides that census information about any individual may not be disclosed "to his detriment."

What does this mean? In one case, an insurance company refused to pay a man's claim because it suspected he had lied about his age on the application form.

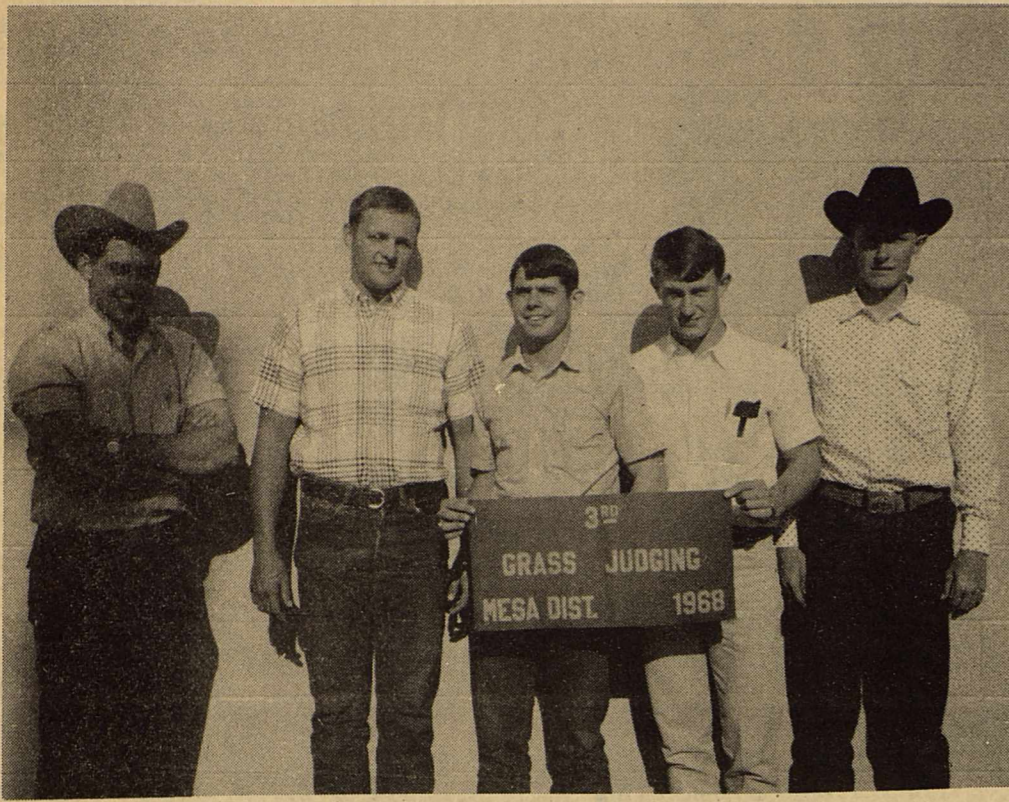

"To double check," the company told him, "we would like to see what age you gave to the census taker." However, in a court hearing, the insurance company was denied access to the census records. The court pointed out that the desired information might indeed be to the man's detriment — and therefore could not be released without his consent.

That doesn't mean general statistics cannot be used, merely because they are unpalatable to some individuals. Thus:

A city wanted to use census figures to classify a certain block as a "blighted area." Property owners objected that this was using census information "to our detriment."

But the court overruled their objection, because this was not personal information but simply the statistical profile of a neighborhood.

Over the years, such statistics have become a valuable source of guidance not only for government but also for business, for agricul-

Library Week Observed Here

THE LIBRARY IS OPENED MONDAY THRU FRIDAY FROM 10:00 A. M. TO 5:00 P. M. WE HAVE A LIBRARY FOR YOUR ENJOYMENT BECAUSE:

1. Many adults who lived in our town and county did not want us to grow up in a community without books that only a public library could give us.
 2. The Civic Clubs wanted our town to have a library, too, and many of them worked very hard to get it.
 3. Our parents were willing to pay a small tax for all of us to have books to read.
 4. Our local elected officials thought it was important for boys and girls to have good books and they voted to support the library with public funds.
- VISIT YOUR PUBLIC LIBRARY TODAY. I ASK THE LIBRARIAN WHAT KIND OF BOOKS SHE HAD AND THIS IS WHAT SHE TOLD ME:
- PRESCHOOL AGE: Picture books, primers, nursery rhymes and story telling hours.
 - CHILDREN OF GRADE SCHOOL AGE: Stories about heroes, adventures stories, sport stories, classics for young, things to do, and animal stories.
 - YOUNG ADULTS OF HIGH SCHOOL AGE: School reading, teen-age problems, sports, adventure books, mysteries, etiquette and family, and biographies.

Elderly Citizens Warned

Clay Cotten, Commissioner of Insurance, warned elderly Texas residents of a fraudulent operation which has developed recently. The operation is being conducted by unknown parties and is being investigated in several areas where activities have been reported. Apparently, the operation is directed against elderly Texas residents and concerns promise of insurance policy refunds.

"These parties," Cotten said, "will review policies and then tell the policyholder that he is due a substantial sum of money which the State Board of Insurance is requiring the company to refund. The policyholder is then advised that he will have to pay a sum of money (ranging from $200-$700) and that the party will return in about three weeks with the substantial refund."

Commissioner Cotten stated, "In no instance where a company is required to make a refund by the State Board of Insurance is there any requirement that the policyholder must first advance any money to secure such refund." He advised the public to notify local police authorities after being approached with this or any other similar proposition which involves advancing money to secure a refund on a policy.

Sudie Thompson CHDA Says...

Serve a potatis, potet, pommies de terre, kartoffel, potato and pap tonight. Sound like a huge meal. Not really. All those words account for just one item--potatoes. This all-American favorite also ranks as a mighty popular food all over the world. It's the mainstay of many peoples' diets.

Potatoes on the way to your store live in luxury these days, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. When it's too hot, they get refrigeration. When it's cold, they get central heating. Temperature is important to maintaining high quality, and sometimes freights cars are precooled or preheated even before the potatoes are loaded in.

Too, potatoes get plenty of air-circulated over, under and around them. Many shippers also provide some kind of padding underneath the potatoes to keep them from getting bruised.

Potatoes also are kept in sootting darkness until they reach the store. There's special reasons. Light, even artificial light, can affect potatoes to extent of turning the skin green. However, this "light burn" doesn't usually go into the potato flesh.

ous opposition. One big reason, no doubt, is that personal information is kept confidential—as a kind of compensation to the citizen for accepting a little prying into his private life. Federal law specifically provides that census information about any individual may not be disclosed "to his detriment."

What does this mean? In one case, an insurance company refused to pay a man's claim because it suspected he had lied about his age on the application form.

"To double check," the company told him, "we would like to see what age you gave to the census taker." However, in a court hearing, the insurance company was denied access to the census records. The court pointed out that the desired information might indeed be to the man's detriment — and therefore could not be released without his consent.

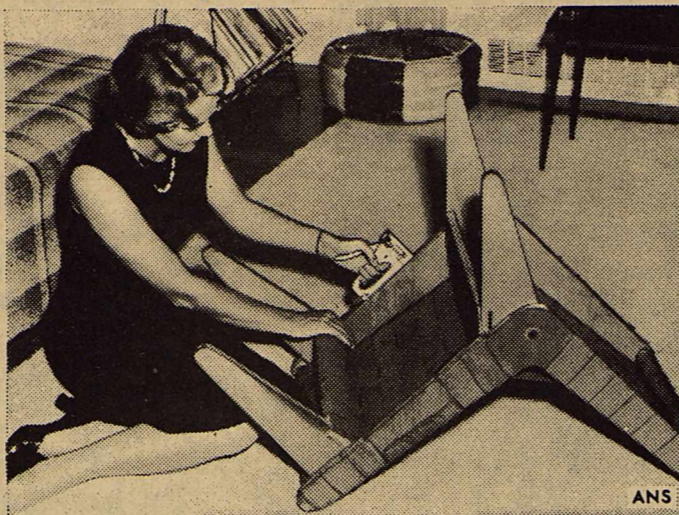

That doesn't mean general statistics cannot be used, merely because they are unpalatable to some individuals. Thus:

A city wanted to use census figures to classify a certain block as a "blighted area." Property owners objected that this was using census information "to our detriment."

But the court overruled their objection, because this was not personal information but simply the statistical profile of a neighborhood.

Over the years, such statistics have become a valuable source of guidance not only for government but also for business, for agricul-

Probably the most important development of recent years in pointing-dog training aids is the "call-back" trap for quail, says Henry P. Davis, Sporting Dog Editor of Sports Afield magazine. Modern methods have simplified the rearing and keeping of bobwhite quail, and this comparatively new trap will enable either the amateur or the professional to use the same birds over and over in a limited training area. The trap is simple in construction. A sturdy wooden frame is covered (top, bottom and sides) with hardware cloth of a close-woven predatorproof wire. Entrance tunnels on both sides, flush with the sides but extending inward, lead into the trap. They are placed low enough to the ground to permit the birds to enter easily, but high enough on the inside to prevent them from using it to escape. A wooden closure board is fastened above the tunnel so that the entrance may be closed to prevent the entry of cats and other predators. One end of the trap is covered to protect against the elements. An access gate is fixed at the other end.

The trap is usually placed in a fairly open area, conveniently close to the kennel so that the trainer can easily look after it, providing feed and water at regular intervals. Some dozen or 15 quail are placed in the pen. The number depends on the size of the pen—they must not be too crowded. The trap can be positioned permanently or easily moved from place to place, as the trainer desires.

The quail can be removed from the pen, capture being made through the use of a small net, and the birds "planted" or released singly. Or the trainer may desire to drive a number of the birds from the pen at a time, allowing them to fly in any direction they desire. Then he can work his dog or dogs on them in a manner closely duplicating natural hunting conditions. Unless the trainer desires to shoot one or two birds over the dogs, no effort is made to recapture them.

After the trainer returns his dogs to the kennel and things get quiet again, the quail remaining in the pen will lure the released birds back to the trap by calling them. Hence the name "call-back trap." At nightfall the trainer returns to the trap and closes the entrance tunnels, thus preventing predators from entering and killing the birds.

This type of trap, or release pen, has proved very satisfactory for both amateur and professional trainer. Anyone who is handy with tools can easily make it. Only a moderate amount of care is needed, though feed and fresh water must be provided regularly. Through its use the trainer can "have his cake and eat it too." It can be used to good advantage in a very small area. Released quail usually do not fly far, particularly if cover is nearby. Some do wander off occasionally, but comparatively few are lost. The remaining birds miss their pen mates and are generally quite vociferous in trying to call them back—usually with success.

HOW OFTEN have you envied your husband and the thousand and one uses he has for his staple gun?

Not only does he spare himself the swollen fingertips associated with hammers and nails, but a staple gun does the job quickly and easily, often saving more than half the time needed when using old-fashioned methods.

But, as you sadly realized when you took your husband's staple gun in hand, it was not built for use by women. Heavy duty staple guns required a man's strength to work—leaving you with the old-fashioned hammer and nails for all your minor tacking jobs that you had to do around the house.

one and the 3/4" staple. It comes in a beautiful chrome finish that will last for years and features a safety handle lock, a built-in staple lifter, rear load and is guaranteed non-jamming if genuine Arrow staples are used in the magazine.

Now that a staple gun for the feminine hand is available, what are some of its uses? Actually, you are hindered only by your imagination, but here are some suggested by Arrow.

- Lining closets and shelves.
- Covering valances.
- Mending upholstery (as we show in the photo above).
- Replacing window shades.
- Tacking curtain tie backs.
- Repairing screens.
- Identifying garden plants.
- Mending toys.

The Corps goes back before the Revolutionary War. It evolved from two battalions authorized in 1775 by the Continental Congress.

Ima Blabmore

Dear Ima Blabmore:
Wretched is the word which describes the attitude of my husband when it comes to thinking of me. Last week we went to a card party and an attractive young lady who is visiting in our community was substituting at the party. I was almost in my chair when that rotter husband of mine snatched the chair out from under me to offer the seat to the blond substitute and on the floor I went like an over ripe plumb plopping on the ground. The room was deathly silent for several seconds, before the howls and laughter intensified like the Rose Bowl crowd cheers when Southern Cal hits paydirt. To make matters worse, he didn't even help me up off the floor, because he was still busy trying to make his new found friend comfy. Never have I been so humiliated. Should I offer excuses or apologies to our hostess.

Desperate.
Dear Desperate:
Let a sleeping dog lie as far as the hostess goes, but hit the old nail on the head, and tell your rotter husband to shape up or ship out.

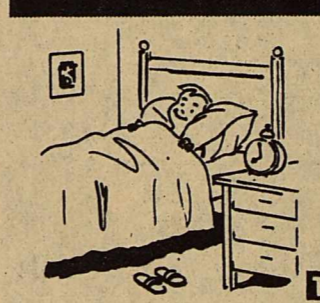

Dear Ima Blabmore:
My situation is one of pure agony. My husband has a large auditing firm and has provided for me and our nine children in a way that has been well above average. For the most part he is considerate of us all by remembering each birthday and never missing an anniversary. He is even above average in helping out at home on weekends and with the family chores which are common to a large family. My husband gave me a new car for my birthday, and furnishes me with a healthy budget to take care of our shopping needs, but I have decided that after 23 years of married life that I no longer love him. Now don't get me wrong, there isn't another man in the picture, but my maid suggested to me that if I felt that way to look for another fish in the sea. Should I put the cards on the table and tell John the way I feel and ask for a community settlement, or keep up the act for years to come?

What Next?
Think twice...you will never get another fish with that much play on the line. Wake up, because you wouldn't be a bargain for anybody with your attitude. With nine off-springs, evidently there was fire in the furnace at one time. Stoke the furnace and stay with John.

BARNACLE BILL IS GOING DOWN

The cost of combating barnacles may soon decline sharply. A new dripless marine paint that is guaranteed to prevent bottom fouling for at least 12 months may provide a dramatic end to mariners' age-old battle against barnacles.

The paint, "Super Dripless #8," is manufactured by Chilton Paint Company, College Point, New York, which believes the product is the first guaranteed bottom paint ever manufactured.

Three-Year Test Period
The new, anti-fouling paint has been tested for over three years in the laboratory and on the waterways. Chilton officials say:

During this test period, they claim, Super Dripless #8 substantially out-performed all conventional bottom paints tested with it. In many cases, the paint completely prevented marine growth on hulls of commercial and pleasure craft for over three years, they say.

Splatter Proof
The manufacturer says two coats of the paint forms a coating ten mils thick, twice that of conventional bottom paints. The paint's thick, no-drip consistency, Chilton says, also eliminates splattered clothing and skin.

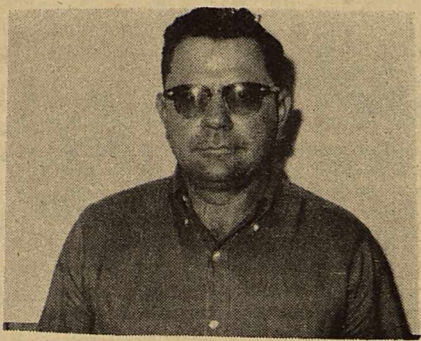

Surface preparation for the new dripless is similar to that of other anti-fouling bottom paints.

Cost of the new paint, available only by mail order from Chilton Paint Company's College Point, New York plant at 109-09 Fifteenth Avenue, is $39.95 per gallon, $10.95 per quart. A gallon covers 800 square feet, a quart 75 square feet.

"Parade of the Teddy Bears"

It's still the "Parade of the Teddy Bears" in the hearts and minds of the majority of the nation's parents and children.

Reliable when other playmates are not, and friendly when other friends get angry, teddy remains the most popular guy in the entire stuffed animal kingdom—accounting for some 30 per cent of all animals sold each year.

But, the teddy bear has plenty of plush pals these days; not only with the small-fry, but with teenagers who collect them and decorate their rooms and dens.

The trend is toward giant sized plush animals in wildly exotic and child-pleasing forms and colors. Monkeys, apes, chimps and other simians are big favorites. Expressive and comical faces molded of soft material add an extra touch of fun and realism.

Dogs, ranging from huge keg-toting St. Bernard's to tiny Pekinese, plus tigers, lions, giraffes and other zoo dwellers strike a responsive chord with children and parents—not to mention grandparents.

New and popular on the scene this year are such unusual items as a cobra, a cross-eyed vulture with a bumblebee on his beak, and a sad but lovable Henrietta the Hippo.

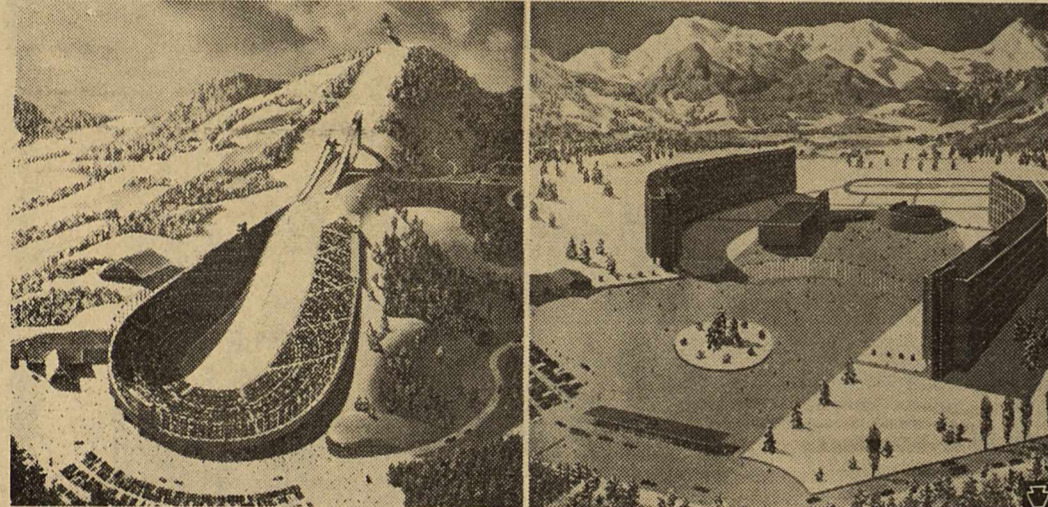

According to Collins & Aikman, producers of the soft and luxurious plush fabric that most animals are made from, stuffed toys are more popular today than ever before.

Part of the reason, says the company, is because stuffed toys provide an "oasis of tranquility" among all the guns, tanks, and monster toys on the market.

And, according to psychological studies, stuffed animals become more than just another toy to most children; they become a child's dearest and most trusted friend and ally. This kind of childhood fantasy is healthy and most youngsters have indulged in it at one time or another, psychologists claim.

So, whether it's a teddy bear or a pink llama, there seems to be a safe, sensible, and relatively inexpensive stuffed animal for any taste and age.

ELECTRONIC WEATHERMEN

Electronic weathermen, super computers charting the vast forces of the atmosphere, are quietly revolutionizing weather forecasting.

In less than 20 years, computers have changed the entire process of learning ahead whether you can expect the sun to shine or the rain to pour. Soon, you will have as much faith in a computer-based two week forecast as you now do in a two day forecast.

This means that vacationers will be able to pack clothes two weeks ahead with better certainty of being prepared for the right weather. Farmers will plant and reap their crops aided by more reliable computerized forecasts. Unexpected weather disasters, already a rarity because of modern weather diagnosis, will be almost unheard of.

The electronic weathermen which are helping make this possible are lightning fast UNIVAC 1108 computers which process data in billions of a second. These computers forecast ahead on the basis of ingenious, highly complex mathematical formulas about the interactions of the mighty forces involved in the weather. Without such computers, thousands of mathematicians would have to work out the solutions in many years of work.

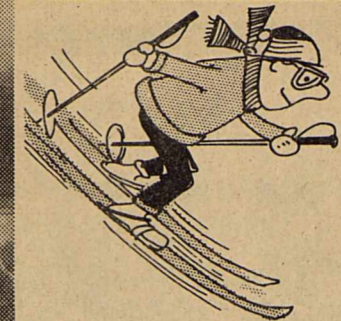

Today, experiments are continuing on two UNIVAC 1108's which execute about 100,000,000,000 instructions in producing a 24-hour forecast in some 14 hours of high speed computing. A total of 288 five minute forecasts are required for each variable at each measuring point. About one million words of data are stored for each five minute forecast.

The research has already paid some impressive dividends. In one case, a series of three storms formed and developed successively at about four day intervals off the coast of Texas and moved into the eastern third of the United States during a twelve day period. The computers forecast the birth and development of each of these storms with almost uncanny accuracy.

In the future, you will see even more startling advances. An advanced mathematical model, including extremely complex interactions of the air and sea, is now well along in development. A later version of this model is expected to produce two week forecasts which will be as accurate as present two day forecasts. You may even find yourself asking "what's the computer say today?" rather than "what's the weatherman say?"

ICE SKATING

If you are planning to ice skate on a frozen lake, river, pond or other locality where the water is generally deep, make sure the ice is strong enough to support you. Many accidents occur each year when ice skaters or others venture out on thin ice.

SKIING

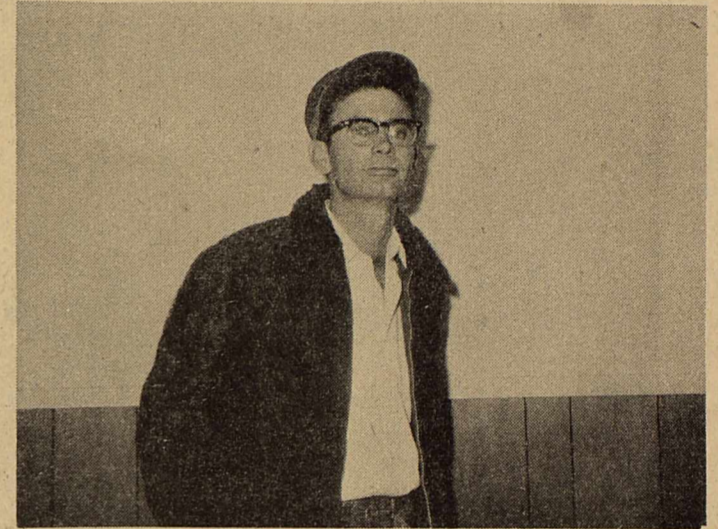

Poor physical conditioning is a major factor in ski accidents. The majority of skiers sit behind a desk five days a week, and then dash out to participate in one of the most strenuous of physical sports. Weekend skiers should set up a program of daily exercises that start before and continue during the ski season. Running, hiking, and swimming are all excellent conditioners for skiing.

WINTER WEIGHT PROBLEMS

People with an overweight problem are more prone to gain weight during winter when the weather is generally cold or inclement. If you fall into this category, keep a watchful eye on your intake of calories and make it a point to get some form of exercise each day. A brisk walk for a half hour each day will not result in any significant weight loss, but it should burn off enough calories to keep your weight stable if you eat sensibly.
