Denver City
Red Wings

The fall and winter of 1933 were dry and warm on the South Plains of the Texas Panhandle and the Eastern Plains of New Mexico. Most particularly in the area of Bronco, Texas, the new year started with high west winds day after day, and there was enough sand in the air to give a reddish-brown cast to the daylight hour. The cows stood with their tails to the wind, and we stayed in the house, mainly talking about when the June rains would come. But we never even had a sprinkle, just more sandstorms.

In July it was still hot and dry with south winds and no rain. The general drought forced many ranchers and farmers to dispose of their livestock. The movement of canner-grade cattle to market depressed prices until it was a toss-up whether to sell the animals or let them starve. Of course, the concensus was to sell them for any price rather than watch them starve.

People held onto their cattle as long as possible - sometimes too long. Thinking of the animals as their principal asset, they believed if they weathered the drought the mother cows would give them something to start over with when the rains finally returned.

Most of our neighbors were homesteaders or small landowners with a section or less of grass and maybe eighty acres devoted to dry-land farm. All of them had a windmill, a garden and a few chickens. With the wind we had that year, the windmill could easily supply the livestock, house and garden. The gardens and chickens were God's blessing, because a straight diet of salt pork, beans and cornbread can become monotonous. Such precious commodities as flour, sugar and dried fruit were zealously hoarded for special occasions and Sunday dinners.

Many of the men left their women and children on the homestead and went off to look for work in the oil fields of the Permian Basin or the irrigated farms of the Pecos Valley. My father, Harve Harris, was off with his truck, supporting our little ranch by peddling fruit in the oil fields.

The drought's widespread economic effects on the Southwest led to a government program of buying and destroying cows and heifers. It was supposed to reduce the pressure on the livestock market, avoid the impending starvation of the cattle, and conserve the denuded, arid range. The government paid up to seventeen dollars per head for yearling heifers that otherwise might not have sold for ten dollars - if a buyer could have been found.

Papa had sold our older cattle when the drought first became severe, keeping only the one and two year old heifers. He hoped the younger stock would be able to pull through on the dry range.

When the drought hung on, my mother, Naomi Harris, decided to put some of the yearling heifers in the government program. Over and over she said she wished Papa were there to help make the decision. But he might not be back for several weeks, so she went ahead with plans to sell thirty head of the yearlings.

A young college man came out to examine the cattle, inspecting their brands and verifying their age and sex. Mother signed the government contract, and the man said he would be back with the check the next Monday morning. Then he would take delivery of the heifers and destroy them.

Papa came in that Saturday night. He was upset about the sale of the heifers. But he really hit the ceiling when he learned the government planned to leave them, as he put it, for the coyotes and buzzards. Early the next morning, he rode out over the ranch, examining the range con-

Plains Independent School District

From The Superintendent's Desk

DEAN ANDREWS

The Special Session of the Legislature continues to be an intense one. Legislators were the targets of concentrated lobbying efforts to preserve public school spending level as the State House Appropriations Committee made good its threat to try to reduce education funding. In brief, the House Appropriations Committee recommended eliminating $4.1 million from the Texas Education Agency's nearly $21 million 1987 administrative budget, including eliminating $1.7 million for the accreditation division. But the committee majority prevented an attempt to completely eliminate the school accreditation monitoring program. Another attempt by committee members to prevent the education agency from transferring money from other budget items into the accreditation division was also stopped.

A minority of committee members complained that the agency was doing a poor job in monitoring local school districts and ensuring the money directed to local school districts was being well spent. One TEA official estimated up to 80 people would lose their jobs and the HB 72 reform effort would be seriously jeopardized if the recommended cuts become law.

A coalition of 30 education groups lobbied legislators August 12 to preserve education spending. On the bright side, the committee rejected earlier proposals for reduction - or elimination - of State funds for the career ladder, vocational education, half-day kindergarten and other programs at the local school district level.

Meanwhile, a bill revising student discipline mandates in HB 72 was endorsed by the House Education Committee. The bill, sponsored by State Representative Bill Haley, would reinstate suspensions of no more than five days, permit teachers to remove disruptive students from class and require the TEA to provide assistance for districts having trouble setting up such programs. The bill would change requirements regarding mandatory parent-teacher conferences during the school year. Instead, conferences would be required only if a student is failing or is a discipline problem - or in other instances where a conference is warranted. The discipline measure is expected to be among topics approved by Governor Mark White to be taken up by the Legislature during the special session.

Also waiting in the wings are several other bills, including proposals to eliminate state full-day kindergarten funding and allow the Permanent School Fund principal to be used by public schools.

ditions and the cattle. The dry, dusty pasture, the cloudless sky and the ever-present hot, south wind brought him back to the house saying, "Naomi, you made the right decision. Let's go to church early."

We were the first ones at the Highway School House that Sunday morning. Papa met every family as they arrived and told them the government had bought thirty head of our yearlings and would kill them the next morning. He invited every one of them to come and take as much fresh meat as they wanted.

The minute we were home from church, Papa sent us boys to saddle up. After a hurried dinner, we were instructed to round up all the yearlings from the South Mill and bring them to the home corrals.

When we had the yearlings penned, Papa judiciously cut out the best and strongest yearlings into another corral. That was easy at first, but as we got down to about thirty-five head, the decision became more difficult. Papa sent for Mother to come help us. Then the conversations ran, "What do you think of that bald-faced heifer over in the corner? Or would you rather save this long-legged one over here?" Eventually we were down to thirty head. Except for their long tails, they looked more like calves than yearlings. Papa had us take the "savers" as he called them, over to the East Mill.

Next morning at dawn, the neighbors started arriving. Some came in wagons, some in cars. A few were on horseback. Arriving precisely at nine o'clock, the government man seemed quite surprised by the large group of people. He gave mother the check and was introduced to Papa. "Mr. Harris," he said, "I'm a little concerned about all these people. What do they..."

Papa cut in quickly, "Don't worry about these neighbors. They're just curious. Now, let's get on with it. Where do you want to do the killing?"

The man answered, "Just drive them into a corner at least a mile from any habitation and I'll handle it from there."

We moved the cattle to the corner of a blown-out field. The crowd of neighbors, still growing, came along. The government man in his new pickup followed Papa's old truck to the site. The yearlings were hemmed in a corner with enough people to have formed a solid corral.

The young man jumped out of the government pickup with his .22 rifle screaming at our neighbors. "Get back! Get back! Stay away from the cattle!"

Then, methodically, he shot the heifers. One by one, almost as fast as you could count, he killed them, shooting each yearling once between the horns and a little above the eyes. He stopped only to reload the magazine of his eleven-shot rifle. In minutes, thirty yearlings were sprawled on the ground.

When he finished, the young man laid his rifle on the pickup seat. Papa picked it up and emptied the magazine, saying, "You sure have a nice rifle here, and you are a real good shot, too." Turning back to the young man, who was lifting a heavy, five-gallon can from the pickup, Papa asked him what he had in mind.

The young official replied, "I've got some kerosene here that I'm going to put on those carcasses to render them inedible. You know - or you should know - this program is intended to ease the pressure on the livestock market."

"Now the government has a bill of sale for those yearlings, and I'm going to dispose of them in accordance with regulations."

Papa suddenly seized the young man's right forearm and look him square in the face. "Listen to me and listen good, 'cause I'm only telling you once. If you put one drop of that coal oil on those beeves you'll damn sure drink a quart of the stuff. These people are going to have as much of this meat as they want."

The government man did not like the way things were turning out. He began another explanation about economics and how the government had bought the yearlings and paid for them and he had to carry out his orders.

Papa's response was firm. "Those bassackwards economics you learned in college don't hold water out here; your economics may say the coyotes and buzzards get the beef, but my economics say people

CLASS OF 1961 from Plains High school recently had a reunion. Shown here are (back row, left to right) Roy Lowrey, Darrell Barron, James Alberding and Vernon Etheridge. come first. There will be no further discussion, because all the decisions have been made. You will leave. Now."

As the young man drove off, Papa turned to the crowd and yelled, "Get those throats cut and start dressing out that beef before it spoils!" The neighbors cheered and started butchering. Within the hour, wagons, cars and horses were leaving, well burdened with fresh beef. Papa's truck was loaded, too, so he could help with transportation and distribution.

To this day, so far as I know, there has been no further discussion of the beef-eating orgy in the Bronco community that hot dry summer of 1934.

Allsup's Announces Annual Pre-Telethon Activities

Allsup's Convenience Stores, participants in the Jerry Lewis Muscular Dystrophy Telethon, will conduct pre-telethon fund raising activities during the month of August. The company will display collection canisters in all 286 Allsup's Stores throughout New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma.

According to J.R. Jacobs, Director of Public Relations, "The canister collection campaign is an integral part of fund raising prior to the telethon. The Muscular Dystrophy Association receives no tax supported grants nor does it see fees from patients or their families," Jacobs adds, "The MDA programs are funded almost entirely by private contributors and corporations through fund raising activities such as Allsup's."

Also during August, Allsup's Stores will conduct "Kids Doorbell Brigade and Win-A-Prize Campaign." All area youngsters are encouraged to visit the local Allsup's for details on winning valuable prizes by collecting donations for "Jerry's Kids." The official collection kits are available from Allsup's managers.

"We are looking forward to working with our neighbors to help fight the 40 neuromuscular disorders covered by MDA.

Plains Cowgirls Win Opener

Plains Cowgirls won their first volleyball match of the season by beating Lubbock Coronado Tuesday night in Mustang Gym. The victory didn't come easy however. The Cowgirls found themselves down early after losing the first game 5-15, but showed a lot of character and competitiveness by coming back to win the next two games, 15-5, 15-8.

High server for the match was senior Ruth Diaz. She had ten service points. Sophomore Lydia Jimenez had nine service points in the Cowgirl offensive effort.

The 1986 Cowgirl Varsity squad consists of Ruth Diaz, Cristi Stephens, Eve Flores, Vonda Fitzgerald, Tonya Lowrey, Martha Morales, Karen Cobb, Bertha Gonzales, Lydia Jimenez, Lynda Jimenez, Melissa Welch and manager, Sandy Ramos.

Plains Junior Varsity was defeated by the Coronado JV 7-15, 10-15. Terrie Galvan was high server with seven service points.

Playing on JV Tuesday night were Terrie Galvan, Jo Ann Martinez, Heather McGill, Alice Rios, Corie Spencer and Sally Burrus.

The Cowgirls rounded out their first week of volleyball competition by hosting Lubbock Monterey Thursday night and competing in the Monahans Invitational Tournament this weekend.

The "Old Chisholm Trail" from San Antonio, Texas to Abilene, Kansas was named for Jesse Chisholm, a part Indian cattle trader who opened the route in the mid 1800's.

Muscular Dystrophy affects an estimated one million Americans of all ages, and the contributions stay in each community, so that we are helping our neighbors by helping the Muscular Dystrophy Association," Jacobs said.
