From The Superintendent's Desk

Dean Andrews

Many of our students are enrolled in vocational education classes in the agriculture, homemaking and industrial arts program. I recently received the following information concerning vocational education that explains in detail the Master Plan for Vocational Education in Texas.

Vocational education in Texas has undergone several changes since the passage of education reform legislation in 1934.

As a result of the reforms, the State Board of Education developed a master plan for vocational education which was approved in January of 1987 and updated in the spring of 1988.

The Master Plan for Vocational Education sets forth the state's philosophy that a strong academic foundation must be made available to all students and that a broad range of career choices for students must be offered.

The reforms also changed the way the courses are funded and required that all vocational education programs be reviewed every five years.

In addition, the reforms emphasized that vocational education be an integral part of the whole educational process rather than a separate entity, according to Paul Mehner, assistant director of vocational education funding and compliance at the Texas Education Agency.

Fifty years ago, Mehner said, vocational classes were either in agriculture or home economics. Next came trade and industrial classes. Today, several hundred vocational education programs exist in Texas. The variety of classes ensures students a wide range of options designed to develop marketable job skills.

"The changes to vocational education reflect the shift in Texas away from a primarily rural state to an urban one," Mehner said.

More than 500,000 students in the state are enrolled in vocational education classes. Vocational education is comprised of the programs in the following areas:

- Agricultural Science and Technology
- Vocational Home Economics
- Health Occupations
- Industrial Technology
- Marketing Education
- Office Education
- Trade and Industrial Education

State law now requires that skill training be delayed until a student's junior year so that he or she can acquire necessary academic skills first. Before the junior year, a vocational education student may enroll in what are called "cluster courses," which provide instructional experiences relating to a group of occupations requiring similar skills, production techniques, etc., thus leaving open more career choices to the student.

At the eleventh and twelfth grade levels, students may enroll in vocational education courses which teach more specific job skills and techniques.

Vocational education, like the entire education program, is keyed toward providing Texas students with personal skills and career opportunities that will enable them to be successful, productive and self-supporting adults.

Farm Bureau Delegates Meet

Most farmers want an extension of the 1985 farm bill, with some fine tuning, the president of the Texas Farm Bureau told delegates to the 55th annual meeting.

S.M. True said other issues facing agriculture include environmental and animal rights issues, school financing, workers compensation, water rights and the federal deficit.

The cotton, grain and beef cattle farmer from Plainview said preliminary work on the 1990 farm bill will begin next year.

"And we could have to fight some of the battles next year," the state farm leader told the 1,300 delegates representing 216 organized county Farm Bureaus.

True said most farmers and ranchers agree that the present farm bill is working.

"I have given us the tools to make American farm products more competitive in world markets," he said. "It has shifted the focus away from growing crops for government storage, to producing for markets here and abroad."

The TFB president warned that environmental issues will become more and more important.

"The Endangered Species Act is a priority issue now and will be for some time to come," he said. "We must have some balance between the environment and the economy. We need amendments providing for economic impact statements before damaging regulations are implemented."

As for groundwater contamination, the farm leader said no one wants to drink unsafe water and no one wants to contaminate drinking water.

"Certainly, we in agriculture must take precautions and do everything we can to avoid being the source."

He added that farmers and ranchers must be included in shaping any regulations that are applied to the problem.

"What we don't want, is the Environmental Protection Agency coming in to take control of underground water because of quality," he said.

True told the delegates that the "animal rights issue is creeping up on us like a bad dream."

"If you keep up with the news, you know the promoters of animal rights are fanatical in their zeal to impose their ideas on all who deal with animals — from medical laboratories to caged laying hens," he said.

He said it is also evident that the environmentalists and animal rightists will be active in trying to insert their philosophy in the new farm bill.

True told the delegates that taxes will be agriculture's biggest challenge in the 70th Legislature beginning in January.

He said farmers and ranchers will have to oppose nearly all of the proposals put forth to solve the problem of school financing, an issue brought about by a court ruling that the present system is unconstitutional and unfair to poor school districts.

"We cannot support massive school consolidation. We're against a state income tax to provide the financing. And we certainly don't want to lose our agricultural use valuation," the state farm leader said.

True noted that the state Workers Compensation program in Texas is giving all employers, including farmers, a lot of trouble. He said that among all states, Texas is known for having the largest premiums and the lowest benefits for injured workers.

"Our number one objective will be to see that agriculture is included in any reforms (in Workers Compensation) that can be made," True said.

The TFB leader said water continues to be one of the big issues in Austin, and in the case of groundwater, the question is whether there will be local or state control.

"Our position is that landowners who capture the water beneath the surface also own that water," he said. "We are being challenged by others who believe that ground water, like surface water, is a matter of state control."

True said that solving the federal deficit is vital to all Americans.

"If it is not solved, we face a future of rising inflation and interest rates. Both of these conditions are deadly to agriculture," he said.

More taxes as a solution could lead to a recession here that would affect world and domestic markets for farm exports,

True said. He added that there is a better way.

"We can freeze spending at current levels," he said. "This would keep the economy growing. In time, economic growth would take care of the deficit."

Good Friends, Good Cheer!

All the best to you and yours in the New Year.

AHA Reports

"Using the knowledge gained from research the American Heart Association has helped improve patient care, educate medical professionals and increase public awareness of the threat of cardiovascular disease," said Texas Affiliate of the American Heart Association President E. Ross Kyger III, M.D.

Based on research, the American Heart Association has developed many programs targeted at the public to inform them of the importance of having a healthy lifestyle.

Here is one example that is helping Texans to care about their hearts.

In 1956, the link between dietary fat and serum cholesterol was discovered. This discovery was the basis for the AHA's emphasis urging Americans to change their eating habits. Since cardiovascular disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood, lowering cholesterol levels reduces the incidences of fatal heart attacks.

With this in mind, in 1985, the AHA ventured into supermarkets across the country with a nutrition education program called American Heart's Food Festival. The Food Festival, a weeklong event in September, focuses the public's attention on nutrition. The essence of this nationwide awareness campaign now combines activities in supermarkets, schools, and worksites with educational materials and media promotions to get the word out on the relationship between a high fat, high cholesterol diet and heart disease. This is the only national program that educates the consumer about the role of diet in heart health.

"AHA-supported projects have contributed to the overall reduction of cardiovascular disease," said Dr. Kyger. "The American Heart Association will continue to fund research and develop programs to further its success."

At year's end, many people make contributions to non-profit organizations for tax advantages. The American Heart Association, Texas Affiliate, recently released its 1988 Annual Report, showing 30 percent spent on public education and a total of 37 percent spent for research.
